Consumption.—It had been estimated that from one-fourth to one-fifth of the population of England died from consumption, and as a fact of its destructive prevalence, in the year of the ravages of the cholera, 3,200 persons died from that disorder, whilst the deaths from consumption were 4,499. From the accurate returns of the register, it appeared in 1838 that no less than 31,000 females died of consumption alone in England. Dr. Williams of the London University Hospital, states that of the deaths in the physician's ward of that hospital, no less than one-third were cases of consumptive patients.—London Herald.

Some short time ago, two colored men were arrested and lodged in jail in Cleaveland, Ohio, as fugitive slaves. Subsequently, the claimant, and a third colored man were likewise arrested, charged with decoying the first two negroes from Buffalo, by false pretences, for the purpose of arresting them.

The British government have purchased of the Spanish Government, the islands of Fernando, and Anna Boy, on the coast of Africa, for £50,000. These islands command the mouths of the Niger, and afford the utmost facilities for whatever can be done for Africa by means of that river Upwards of thirty of the bodies of those lost in the Erie have been found and buried; among which are those of Messrs. Lynde and Mr. Gelston.

Over three hundred Sea Bass were recently taken in a seine at one haul, on the beach at the south end of Newport; some of them weighing 60 lbs. each, and the value of the whole was over $400. This is the largest haul ever known there.

Baron Cotta, of Austria, Mr. Reimer, of Berlin, and Mr. Brockhaus, of Leipsic, are the most extensive publishers in the world. The first employs 400 editors, the last two 100 each.

In Northampton, Mass., there is not a place where spiritous liquors can be obtained. The county commissioners, agreeably with the public wishes, had refused a license to the hotels.

The Captain of a brig from the State of Maine, was a short time ago at St. Croix, and was there offered $1000 to bring home a cargo of rum, but refused, preferring to return in ballast.

Albert M. Lee, Esq., Chief Clerk of the Department of War, has been appointed by the President Acting Secretary of War, until the arrival of the Hon. John McLean.

The Toronto Colonist says that a commission is now sitting in that city, taking testimony in proof of an alibi, to be read at the trial of Alexander McLeod.

Six persons were fined $20 each for selling spiritous liquor, and gambling, at a regimental training in Norwich. A man in a state of intoxication, fell on the parade ground and ruptured a blood vessel, which caused his death shortly after.

Messrs. John Wray, and Levi Janvier, Presbyterian missionaries to North India, sailed from Philadelphia with their wives, in the ship Washington, Captain Taylor, on the 20th inst. An interesting farewell meeting was held in Rev. Dr. McDowell's church, on Sunday evening.

At the Anti-Slavery Convention held at Hartford, Ct., last week, it was 'Resolved, That this Convention respectfully request the President of these United States to emancipate his slaves.'

At a meeting held at the Royal Exchange, Dublin, Charles Lenox Remond, a colored citizen of the United States, was called to the chair amid enthusiastic applause,

Governor Seward has offered a reward of $250 for information which will result in the conviction of any individual engaged in stealing the two field pieces from Cayuga co., or the gunpowder from Lockport.

The Legislature of Sweden are about soliciting the king to abolish slavery in St. Bartholomew's.

A miser lately committed suicide in Switzerland. Although possessing 10,000 francs, he spent only a few coppers for the bread and milk which were his daily fare. He shot himself with a pistol purchased the day before, after haggling for a long time to obtain a diminution in the price of the weapon.

The Rochester Democrat says that in working a burr block brought from France, a few days since, two honey bees were found in a cavity, perfectly enclosed on all sides. They were torpid, but soon showed signs of life and flew away.

The Charlotte, (N. C.) Journal states that a rich vein of gold has been discovered near that place. The vein is said to be worth two and three thousand dollars per bushel.

The Syracuse Journal decidedly denies that the Canada patriots owned or had any cognizance of the powder which recently exploded there.

The recent message of the President to the Mexican Congress speaks in hostile terms against Texas, and proposes that a tax be levied upon all property, to raise the means to regain possession of it.

A lawsuit is now before one of the Courts of Albany, in which the claim is less than $100, and the costs that have already accrued, amount to $1000.

The American brig Silsbee, Capt. Morrell, arrived at Mayaguez, P. R., on the 1st inst. The captain died when fifteen days out, and the brig was navigated into Mayaguez by his wife.

The Prince de Joinville, youngest son of Louis Philippe, who has been here several days with his gallant ship La Belle Poule, was recently received with becoming attentions at the Navy Yard. He goes to Washington, after that makes a tour of the South Western and Western States.

A wanton outrage was lately committed at Maysville, Ky., in the demolition of a church erected by the blacks in that town, by a mob. The building was built principally by blacks themselves, and under the sanction of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The share of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, which will accrue to the District of Columbia, is directed to be applied to the purposes of education, in such form as Congress shall prescribe.—The children of the poor are to be particularly regarded.

Mr. J. K. Paulding, late Secretary of the Navy, lies dangerously sick at his residence in this city.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Montreal Courier computes that the number of negroes in Canada, who have escaped from slavery in the Southern States, is about 20,000.

The Ladies' Total Abstinence Society of Boston, have reclaimed about 120 females from the curse of intemperance within the last five months.

The British brig of war Acorn, recently fell in with the brig Gabriel, under Portuguese colors, and after a chase, in which the Gabriel carried away both her topmasts, boarded her and took off fifty-eight negroes, which were afterwards landed at Rio. The captain of the Gabriel jumped overboard when the crew of the Acorn boarded his vessel, and was lost.

An injunction has been served by the Vice Chancellor upon the Commercial Bank of this city, and its doors closed.—It was obtained at the request of the Bank Commissioners, who suppose that bad management has made serious inroads upon the capital.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Albany Evening Journal of 23d ult., announces the return of Deputy Sheriff Snyder, who, it was feared, had been murdered by the Helderberg tenants. He says he was seized, and his life threatened, but that he made his escape, was pursued and fired at, but not hit.

Most Horrible Murder.—On Friday, the 17th ult., Mr. Samuel Adams, a printer, at the corner of Ann and Gold streets, a highly respectable and pious man, was missed from his house. He had said, that on that day he was going to work at the office of the Missionary Herald, but never reached there. His disappearance being advertised, Mr. Wheeler, teacher of a writing academy in the large granite building, corner of Chamber street and Broadway, appeared before the Mayor, and made a statement to the effect that, on Friday afternoon, about four o'clock, he heard a scuffle in the room adjoining his own, which was occupied by Mr. J. C. Colt, author of a valuable work on book-keeping, which lasted a few moments, and was followed by the fall of a heavy body on the floor. All noise instantly ceased. Thinking it somewhat singular, Mr. W. left his room, and knocked several times at Colt's door, but received no answer. He tried to get in but found the door locked. He then looked into the key-hole, and saw two hats upon the table, and a man whom he thought to be Colt, busily engaged, but apparently washing the floor. He retired for a considerable time and on returning saw the same thing, Colt being still engaged. He requested one of his pupils, a boy, to keep watch. He did so all night. Early in the morning, he saw Colt set outside of his door a box about four feet square, directed to some person at "St. Louis via New Orleans." Colt went out and got a carman, who took the box off. A day or two afterwards, Wheeler got into Colt's room, and saw several places which had evidently been scrubbed and then smeared with ink. He also found a broken looking-glass, and a hatchet, the handle of which had been scraped and covered with ink. There were also upon the wall spots of the same liquid.

On Friday, the 27th, Colt was arrested; and on Saturday it was ascertained that the box had been carried on board the Kalamazoo, and that Colt had taken a receipt for its delivery. The ship was detained, and on Sunday the hatches were opened, the box was found, and on its being opened, was found to contain a dead body, packed in salt and chloride of lime. A post-mortem examination discovered that the head was horribly mutilated and broken, and several deep wounds were inflicted on the face, &c. The body was identified by Mrs. Adams as that of her husband. A watch belonging to Mr. Adams was also discovered in Colt's trunk. Colt is known to have been indebted to Adams for printing, and it is understood that the latter has had some difficulty in securing his pay. It is also supposed, that he had money with him, at the time of his disappearance.

Mr. Adams was originally from Providence. His parents are both dead, but most of his relatives still live in that city. He had a wife, but no children. Both were members of Dr. Spring's church, and likewise members of the choir. Colt's connections are highly respectable. His brother is the inventor of the patent revolving pistols and rifles, and keeps an extensive establishment at 155 Broadway. He had a sister formerly a teacher in Miss Beecher's seminary at Hartford, who committed suicide.

Proclamation against Treason.—The President has issued a proclamation, warning those living on the Canada frontier, who are connected with secret lodges, and who design to make lawless incursions into the British Territory, that the laws against such traitorous movements, will be executed, and that if any are apprehended by the British authorities while thus engaged, they will obtain no protection from this government.

The Madisonian of Tuesday says that "the state of facts upon which the President's timely proclamation with regard to the Border difficulties is predicated, would astonish the people of the United States were their details spread before them. To say the least, they indicate the necessity of great judgment to preserve the peace of the country."

Shameful Violation of Rights.—The Rev. J. Rankin, of Ripley, who has been distinguished as an Abolitionist, publishes in the Telegraph of that place, that on the night of the 12th ult., an attempt was made to fire his barn and to attack his house, by some six or eight men. Threats had reached Mr. Rankin's ears of an intended attack, and he had prepared himself with arms for defense. His son and nephew hearing a signal whistle rushed out of the house with pistols. The son came upon one of the ruffians and received a shot so close as to set his shirt on fire, and leave on his body several distinct marks of shot. The fire was returned, when the assailants cried murder and ran. Another man fired at the nephew, which was returned, and with a loud shriek his assailant fled, slower than the others. Six or seven shots passed in a few seconds—the young men pursued but without overtaking the mob—nor have the persons concerned since been discovered. The attempt to fire the barn failed, owing to the dampness of the night.—Cin. Gazette.

A Mighty Chain of Rail Road.—The rail road from Batavia to Buffalo will be very soon completed. On the Rochester and Auburn line but seven or eight miles remain to be finished; the cars already cross the Cayuga lake on the new bridge erected for the purpose, and will in a few weeks run over the whole line. The Boston road to Albany is nearly completed; in a very short time therefore the last link will be completed in the great chain from Boston to Buffalo, a distance of near six hundred miles! The whole world cannot exhibit a specimen of rail road enterprise to equal this. The longest one in England is not more than one-third the length of this.

Another of the Lost.—We regret to learn, says the Oswego Palladium, that among the number of passengers lost on board of the Erie, was Edmund Bramhall, of Lysander, Onondaga co., recently of Granby in this county. It has been ascertained beyond a doubt, that Mr. B. was on board the ill-fated vessel, though his name does not appear in the list. Mr. Bramhall was a highly respectable citizen—was for many years Supervisor of the town of Granby, and but few men shared more largely the confidence of the community. He has left a family and a large circle of friends to lament his untimely fate.—Buffalo Journal.

An Italian in Liverpool lately murdered a fellow lodger by pouring hot gruel over him while he was asleep!

The Portsmouth Journal says that a little girl, eleven years of age, from a neighboring town, who heard Mr. Hawkins lecture, when he invited those present to circulate Temperance pledges, went home, and in a week obtained about 150 names. Who is there that can do nothing?

Splendid Munificence.—It is stated by a London paper, that Mr. George Green, a ship-builder, has erected a very beautiful chapel at his own expense, in the East India Road, which was recently opened and dedicated by Rev. Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool, and Rev. Mr. Sherman of Surrey Chapel. The new chapel will seat 1500 persons. Its exterior is described as peculiarly elegant, the front being adorned with a portico of fluted Corinthian pillars and pilasters, surmounted by a tower, the angels of which present columns of the same order supporting the dome of the tower. The interior of the chapel is elegantly finished, the roof and galleries supported by bronze columns and capitals.—A new organ has been erected. The pulpit is a most splendid piece of work. The expense of the whole was £6000; in addition to this, a house is erected for the future minister of the chapel. In justice to the almost unbounded philanthrophy of Mr. Green, it may be stated that he has built, and now supports a school, where 350 children are clothed and educated; and the beautiful building, the Sailors' Home, recently erected by him for the accommodation of the crews of his numerous ships, has cost £14,000.—Christian Observer.

Progress of the Cherokees in Civilization.—A correspondent writing to us from "Flint District, Cherokee nation," under date of August 37th, speaks in very favorable terms of the progress which that people are making in the arts and institutions of civilized life. Among other encouraging facts which he states, he says—"An election has just taken place in the nation, for councilmen, committee men, and sheriffs, which passed off without drunkenness or the least difficulty."

The Cherokees are now making rapid strides in education. They are more liberal in subscribing to schools than the people of any section of Arkansas, and much more punctual in paying tuition. They are among them many persons of considerable intelligence, reading and reflecting men, who are now subscribers to the best periodicals in the Union.—Louisville Journal.

Affairs on the Frontier.—The trial of McLeod commences at Utica this week.—The Federal Administration, having received information of extensive secret preparations along the frontier to renew the disturbances, has issued a Proclamation which is subjoined. A new outrage is already reported. A correspondent of the Burlington (Vt.,) Free Press, writing from Alburgh, a town about four miles from the frontier, says that on the night of the 19th, a party of 12 or 15 men entered the house of a Mr. Brown in that village, seized and gagged one Crogan, who formerly resided in Canada, and was an actor in the rebellion, and hurried him off towards the lines. He fought valiantly, and was severely wounded in the struggle. He is suspected of having been engaged in the recent burnings on the frontier.

The Troy Daily Whig says there are strong reasons for believing that an armed force, consisting of several thousand men, have been for some time organizing within the State of New York, for the purpose of co-operating with the Canadian Patriots in another attempt at revolt. It is said that the organization of these men was never so complete as it is at present, and that it comprises a body of fifty or sixty thousand of persons, who are ready to march at a moment's warning across the frontier, and to carry fire and sword into the heart of the Canadas. It is very evident to observing men who reside near the Canadian frontier, that unusual preparations have been making for some time past among those who are friendly to the cause of the Patriots, and the most disastrous consequences are apprehended, unless this conspiracy against a nation with whom we are at peace, is broken up in time. The recent robberies of powder and arms were doubtless committed by persons in the employment of the conspirators, and similar seizures will be attempted by them hereafter from time to time—

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, it has come to the knowledge of the Government of the United States, that sundry secret Lodges, Clubs, or Associations exist on the Northern Frontier; that the members of these Lodges are bound together by secret oaths; that they have collected fire-arms, and other military materials, and secreted them, in sundry places; and that it is their purpose to violate the laws of their country, by making military and lawless incursions, when opportunity shall offer, into the Territory of a power with which the United States are at peace; and whereas it is known that traveling agitators from both sides of the line, visit these Lodges, and harrangue the members in secret meeting, stimulating them to illegal acts; and whereas the same persons are known to levy contributions, on the ignorant and credulous, for their own benefit, thus supporting and enriching themselves by the basest means; and whereas the unlawful intentions of the members of these Lodges have already been manifested in an attempt to destroy the lives and property of the inhabitants of Chippewa, in Canada, and the public property of the British Government there being. Now, therefore, I, JOHN TYLER, President of the United States, do issue this my Proclamation, admonishing all such evil minded persons of the condign punishment which is certain to overtake them; assuring them that the laws of the United States will be rigorously executed against their illegal acts, & that if in any lawless incursion into Canada, they fall into the hands of the British authorities, they will not be reclaimed as American citizens, nor any interference made by this Government in their behalf.

And I exhort all well-meaning but deluded persons, who have joined these Lodges, immediately to abandon them, and to have nothing more to do with their secret meetings, or unlawful oaths, as they would avoid serious consequences to themselves. And I expect the intelligent and well disposed members of the community to frown on all these unlawful combinations, and illegal proceedings; and to assist the Government in maintaining the peace of the country, against the mischievous consequences of the acts of these violators of the law.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the twenty-fifth day of Sept., A. D. 1841; and of the Independence of the United States, the sixty-sixth.

JOHN TYLER.

By the President:

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

Carrying Newspapers on Sunday.—We are sorry to find that the Board of Aldermen have non-concurred with the Assistants in an ordinance to prevent the crying of newspapers on Sunday. The practice which this ordinance was designed to prevent, is a grievous evil. It disturbs public worship, interrupts the quiet of families, and is a constant annoyance to persons passing to and from church. There is no sense or reason in tolerating such a nuisance. If newspapers must be delivered, or even sold on Sunday, so be it; but to tolerate the crying of them, is permitting the many to be sacrificed to the few, is preparing the way for a total disregard of the Sabbath in our streets. If newspapers may be cried on the Sabbath, why may not charcoal, straw, and every thing else?

We are aware that some of the Aldermen voted against the ordnance on the ground that the State laws applicable to the case, are sufficient, if enforced. Then why not enforce them? Why leave the people to suffer for want of a little energy in executing the laws?—Jour. of Com.

Judge Tenney.—We published a paragraph announcing a duel between him and a Mr. A. N. Rowley. The New Orleans Bee says: "The combatants were placed at 30 yards, armed with rifles, pistols, and bowie knives, and were allowed to fire when they pleased, and advance upon each other after the first fire. Judge Tenney pulled trigger soon after the parties had been stationed. His ball entered the body of his antagonist a little above the hip, producing immediate death. The difficulty between Judge Tenney and A. N. Rowley, Esq., originated by Judge Tenney's granting a divorce to the wife of Rowley, and a proposed marriage of the widow by the Judge. She was a rich widow of Concordia parish.

Supposed Murderer of Mary Rogers.—We learn from the Albany Atlas that several girls of bad character were arrested there on Monday, and that on their examination before the magistrate, one of them stated that one James Finnegan was with her on Sunday, and had in his possession a ring with the name of Mary C. Rogers upon it. He is one of the individuals arrested in Albany, as stated in the letter of our correspondent, and is said to be a notorious bad fellow. The Atlas says that he and his accomplice was arrested on the charge of being engaged in the outrage upon the other female at Hoboken on the same day that Miss Rogers was murdered.

Novel Occurrence.—In Baltimore county Court, on the 2d inst., a member of the Society of Friends was offered as special bail. It became necessary that he should justify, and to that end that he should make affirmation. This the quaker proceeded to do with his hat on, when the opposite counsel objected. The quaker declined taking off his hat, stating that it was unusual for members of his society so to do, and thus the matter was presented to the court. The judge decided that upon an occasion so solemn as that of a man appealing to his God, it was proper that the hat should be removed; and that, therefore, the person offered as bail must, before he proceeded to affirm, remove his hat. The quaker promptly replied that out of reverence to God, he felt no indisposition to remove his hat, and on that ground, was willing to do so; accordingly, he took off his hat and affirmed. The various modes in which men appeal to God for what they say, is curious enough; a Persian bows down to the sun; a Jew swears with his hat on.

The Frontier.—The trial of McLeod at Utica,—the recent attempt to blow up a lock or locks on the Welland canal,—the attempt to destroy two of her Majesty's steamboats in the Niagara river,—the seizure and abduction of Col. Crogan from Alburgh, Vt., by a party of British Dragoons in the dead of night,—and a general movement of the disaffected along the frontier, in the hope of embarrassing still more the relations between this country and England,—all these things, added to previously existing causes of excitement, must make the frontier rather a hot place just now. We look with much interest to the course pursued by the Provincial authorities in regard to Col. Crogan. If they justify his seizure and abduction, we do not see but all our frontier people are liable to be seized in the same way. Of course, such a state of things cannot be submitted to. Crogan claims to be an American citizen; at all events he was within our territory when seized. The violation of our territory was the same, whether he was a citizen, or only a sojourner. But we trust the act will be promptly disavowed by the Canadian authorities, and Crogan discharged. Such a course is due alike to themselves, and to us.—Jour. of Com.

The Prince de Joinville, with his suite, arrived at Washington on Wednesday, and immediately waited on the President of the United States.

Appeal on behalf of the Amistad Africans.—The appeals heretofore made for funds for the defense, support, and Education of these Mendi Africans, have been successful, and the money, so generously contributed, has been economically expended, and with the happiest results. The sums contributed and the expenditures made have been published in the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Reporter, and the New York Journal of Commerce, for the information of the donors and all persons interested. The time has now arrived when another appeal has become necessary.—Such facts have recently come to the knowledge of the Committee, respecting the native country of these Mendians, and the feasibility of their reaching their kindred and homes, if they can be sent to Sierra Leone, that it has been determined to send the whole body of them (now reduced to thirty-five in number,) back to Africa the present autumn. They will leave in a vessel for Sierra Leone as soon as the necessary funds shall be contributed. The Committee have in view two ministers of the gospel, one white and one colored, to accompany them to Mendi, and take up their abode with them as religious teachers, so long as the providence of God shall direct; and they are desirous of engaging one or two more, to be associated with these brethren as missionaries to Mendi.

Contributions are earnestly requested.—Remittances may be made by mail, or otherwise, directed to Lewis Tappan, No. 7, Dorr's Building, corner of Hanover and Exchange Streets, rear of Merchants' Exchange. Donors, if they choose, can specify whether their donations shall go towards defraying the expenses of the passage to Sierra Leone, &c., or for the support of the religious teachers. If not otherwise directed, the Committee will appropriate the money according to their discretion. All donations will be acknowledged, and a paper containing the acknowledgment sent to each donor. The expenditures will also be published as heretofore.

Ministers of the gospel are requested to take up contributions in their congregations, and the friends of these Mendians, and of the evangelization of Africa, are invited to form committees for the purpose of raising funds for the objects named.—It is scarcely necessary to add, that the committee fully agree with the Rev. Dr. Hawes, that "the wages of unrighteousness ought not to be used to propogate the gospel among the heathen," and they can not be received for this object. The prayers of God's people are solicited on behalf of the liberated Africans, and the contemplated mission.

The season is so far advanced, that the immediate action of the friends of these Mendians is necessary to insure the accomplishment of the object in view.

S. S. JOCELYN,
JOSHUA LEAVITT, } Committee.
LEWIS TAPPAN,

☞ Editors generally are respectfully requested to give the above one or more insertions.

Earthquake.—The island of Martinique was visited on the 17th ult. by two shocks of an earthquake. The first lasted about two seconds, and the second, which came immediately after, was almost as severe as that which visited the Island two years since.

A shock of an earthquake was felt at Seville, about half past 10 o'clock in the night of the 6th ult. Similar shocks were also felt at Cadiz, Puerto de Santa Maria, Xeres de la Fonteira, Ciudad Real, and Malaga.

Several severe shocks of earthquakes were felt at Leiria, in Portugal, from the 30th of July to the 3d ult., which had so terrified the inhabitants, that many of them went out at night to sleep in the fields; but no serious damage was sustained. A light shock was felt at Lisbon, about 10 P. M., on the 2nd inst.

To the Friends of a Free Press.—The presses of the Cincinnati Philanthropist, edited by Gamaliel Bailey, Jun., having been destroyed by a mob on Saturday night, 4th inst., an appeal has been made by the editor, which is thus noticed in one of the daily papers of this city:

"We have received a copy of the Cincinnati Philanthropist, (Abolition paper,) printed after the destruction of its press for the third time by a mob. The editor says he has been advised to suspend the publication of his paper for the present, but that he cannot do so, as it would be a sacrifice of the right of free discussion. 'So long as the friends of liberty shall aid, by the help of our Father in Heaven, we abide at our post. All we ask is the means. Our society is in debt. Our printer is a poor man, and has lost all but his type. Perhaps $800 will cover his loss, and $100 ours.' We hope this loss will be made up to them; and that others beside Abolitionists will contribute for this purpose. It is a mean and dastardly business to make war upon printing materials; and mob violence, in any shape, ought to be frowned upon by every friend of order and law."

Contributions for the editor, printer, or the cause, will be received, acknowledged and transmitted, by request, if sent to

LEWIS TAPPAN, No 7, Dorr's Building, corner of Exchange and Hanover streets, rear of Merchants' Exchange.

The seizure of Col. Grogan has created a deep sensation at Lockport, where that individual resided. A public meeting was called, at which, we doubt not, much feeling was manifested. The Canadian Government, by the detention of a man thus unlawfully arrested, is adding fuel to a fire which already burns too fiercely.—Eve. Jour.

A Newly-discovered Salt Spring.—A salt spring has been opened in the town of Galen, county of Wayne, about fifty rods from the Erie canal, on the land of the Rev. Dr. Judd, of Ithaca, with the fairest prospect of the best of brine, and even of the fossil salt, as is evidenced by comparing the borings in Europe, and the late boring near Abingdon, in Virginia, with the report of the engineer employed at Galen. The diameter of the tube bored is 4 inches, 230 feet deep. The vein is strong, and continues to run profusely over the tube, destroying all vegetation within its reach. It is uncommonly pure, producing the finest salt without the use of lime. The brine is forced up by the gas with a violence known no where else.—Roch. Dem.

By the Great Western which left Chicago on Sunday morning last, we learn that the large fleets of sail craft on the upper lakes, had a serious time of it during the equinox. Many of them have suffered in sails, spars and rigging. Omong others the brig Illinois, which was seen at Mackinaw patching up her canvass. The steamboat Chesapeake too, was out in the gale. She shipped a sea and lost one of ten deck passengers, a Jack, bound to Illinois. How the remainder of the passengers fared we are uninformed.

Seven days trips from the upper lakes, are becoming common among the sail craft of late. This morning, the schooner F. Biddle entered from Chicago with a cargo of wheat which was in the granary at that place on Thursday last. A thousand dollars a week for a vessel of her dimensions is doing well. The Navigator left on Sunday last with a still larger cargo, but she is not yet in port.

Drowning at Milwaukie.—On the 16th ult., four young men were drowned at Milwaukie, whose names and former places of residences we append.

Robert Young, a hatter by trade, who has a brother at Milwaukie. He was recently from Seneca county, N. Y., and about 20 years of age.

Mr. Pinney, son of E. C. Pinney, Esq., of Newport, Herkimer county, N. Y., and nephew of Solon Johnson, Esq. of Milwaukie. He was a worthy young man, of about 20 years of age.

James L. Shearer, about 22 years of age, and a son of Hugh Shearer, of Tompkins county, N. Y.

Ambrose Brown, about 23 years of age, and has friends at Pulaski, Oswego county, N. Y.—Buffalo Journal.

A First Mate.—We reported a few days since, the arrival at Mayaguez of the brig Silsbee, whose Captain (Morrill,) died when 15 days out. The Newburyport Herald informs us that the brig was navigated into Mayaguez by the Captain's wife!

The Oil Factory of the Staten Island Whaling Co., at Port Richmond, was destroyed by fire yesterday. About $30,000 worth of oil was consumed in the building, which is partly covered by insurance. The building was occupied by Geo. W. Smith & Co., and it is thought was set on fire by design.

New York and Erie Rail Road.—The N. Y. and Erie Rail Road Company are running a Daily Line of Passenger and Freight Cars between Goshen and New York.

Charles Pfaff, a keeper of a German Coffee House Boston, was tried last week before the Municipal Court for violating the License law. The trial caused much excitement. Mr. Hallet who was employed for the defence, undertook the same game for which he became so infamous under the license law, that of urging the jury to make themselves superior to the Legislative and Judicial authority, in deciding upon the law as well as fact. The Jury were out about six hours and returned with a verdict of guilty upon the first count, which subjects the defendant to a fine of $100.—Springfield Gazette.

Affecting Case.—A case came before Judge Kent's Court, on the 21st inst. which excited considerable feeling and interest. About two years since a gentleman moved from Utica to Brooklyn, bringing with him a little girl eleven years of age, the daughter of an intemperate woman, who recently strove to reclaim the child, alleging that, being herself a Catholic, she had conscientious objections to her remaining with a Protestant family. The gentleman having become greatly attached to the the child, refused to give her up, and the case came before the Court on a writ of habeas corpus, sued out by the mother. The little girl was greatly affected, calling upon the Court, loudly and with tears, to save her from her mother, exciting the warmest sympathy of all present. The excitement at length became very intense, the mother and her friends uttering violent threats and even offering violence. In this unpleasant state of affairs, Judge Kent ordered the little girl to be set at liberty. The mother then attempted to force her away, but this, by some interference, was prevented.—Brooklyn News.

Health of New Orleans.—The Picayune of the 12th inst. says:

The number of deaths reported to the board yesterday was 44, of which 28 were from yellow fever. Total number of deaths for the week, 245, of which 165 were from yellow fever.

At Vicksburgh too it was quite sickly at the last accounts. A gentleman under date of the 8th instant, writes this to a friend in New Orleans—

"We have much sickness now in our city, and some little yellow fever. There were 17 deaths on Saturday and Monday last."

Auburn and Rochester Railroad.—The cars were to run on this road on the 20th inst., across the Cayuga Lake, leaving but eight miles to be traveled in stages to Auburn in October. The receipts upon sixty-three miles completed, have been from $1000 to $1200 per day. Half the receipts are frequently derived from way passengers.

Naval Reception of the Prince De Joinville.—The reception of the Prince de Joinville by the officers of our Navy, has been marked with all the courtesy due to so distinguished a visitor. On the arrival of La Belle Poule a salute was fired—which was promptly returned by the U. S. ship North Carolina. The Prince soon after visited the North Carolina, and the visit was next day returned by Commodore Perry, who in the mean time had directed the civilities of the port, and the conveniences of the dock yard to be tendered for the use of the Prince's ships. On Saturday, agreeable to invitation, the Prince visited the Navy Yard at Brooklyn, where a salute of 21 guns was fired on his arrival. A full garrison of marines and a volunteer company, who had handsomely offered their services, were drawn up in the yard to receive him, the band playing a national air, and the tri-colored flag flying on the ships of war. After visiting the Commandant's quarters and receiving the hospitalities of the Navy, the Prince visited the ships in ordinary, and the steamer Missouri, the workshops, rope walks &c.—with all of which he expressed himself highly pleased, and with the general arrangement of the Yard. On leaving the yard, a salute due to the Naval rank of the Prince was fired, which was duly acknowledged on his arrival on board La Belle Poule.—N. Y. Express.

A Precious Confession.—The Louisville Gazette says:

"The most potent cause of the more rapid advancement of Cincinnati than Louisville, is the absence of slavery. The same influences that made Ohio the Young Giant of the West, and is advancing Indiana to a grade higher than Kentucky, have operated in the Queen city. They have no dead weight to carry, and consequently have the advantage in the race."

A Temperance pic-nic at Cambridgeport, Mass., on Friday, comprised 1000 persons! There was a procession, with banners and music, and the usual exercises in a church. A pleasant repast was subsequently enjoyed in a beautiful grove.

The Missouri river it is said by the St. Louis papers to be lower than it has been known before in a great number of years.

Mr. Bridgeman in a recent letter from China, expressed the opinion that the war now pending will open the door for the introduction of the gospel.

The Ladies Total Abstinence Society of Boston, have reclaimed about 120 females from the curse of intemperance within the last five months.

DIED,

In Otselic, on the 28th ult., Miss PHILURA, daughter of Alexander and Lucy [illegible], aged 18 years, [illegible] after a protracted illness of Bilious Fever.

[illegible]

In [illegible], September 1st, [illegible] Mrs. CYNTHIA M., Wife of [illegible] [illegible]

In [illegible], September 26th, Mr. W. M. TRUMAN, [illegible]

LIST OF LETTERS

A. H. Newcomb, P. M. [illegible] P. M. [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

REMOVAL.

DOCT. A. L. SAUNDERS would inform his friends & patrons that he has removed his residence to the House formerly occupied by the late LeBaron Goodwin, on UTICA Street, nearly opposite the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

He also [illegible] that he has taken an OFFICE at the head of the stairs that lead into the Printing Office, where he may be found at ALL times when not absent on business, except during the night.

N. B. He is READY and PREPARED to wait on those in DISTRESS and to ADMINISTER to their NECESSITIES.

De Ruyter, Oct. 1st, 1841. 32tf

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the verriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be closed at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequalled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.

De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the
Oct. 4. STONE STORE.

1 CASE Gentlemen's CLOTH CAPS, Fur Trimmed.
1 CASE Ladies Silk Hats,
ALSO,
1 splendid Silk LACE VEIL, at $4.50, for sale at
STONE STORE.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians or Families at prices, 10 per cent less than any establishment in this place, at the STONE STORE

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS Agent for the sale of the following valuable Medicines:—

Rev. I. Covert's Balm of Life
Moffat's Phenix Bitters
Moffat's Life Pills
Phinney's Pills
Phelps' Tomato Pills
Miles' " "
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.
Balm of China.
Parker's Pulmonary Balm.
Chessman's Arabian Balsam.
Hutchinson's Liniment.
With others too numerous to mention.
Oct. 4.

[illegible] Bar Iron.

Round and square American Iron, Swedes Horse Shoe Iron, Band and Hoop Iron, Nail rods, Swedes German, Cast and Spring Steel, Swedes Iron Nails, Cast Steel Shovels, Mill and X Cut Saws for sale very cheap at the STONE STORE.
October 4.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the
STONE STORE.
October 4.

L. W. BLISS' Window Sash
Bliss & Co. " Blinds.
Holme's Sampson & Salsbury Edged Tools, consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE.
October 4. Manufacturers' Agent.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed by J. N. ELMORE.
October 4

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, and Valises, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this kind, which I can sell as low as any shop west of Albany or Utica, and even De Ruyter not excepted, [illegible] durability.

Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, [illegible] and the remainder in Notes; also a [illegible] amount of Grain, Butter, Cheese, and every thing that is raised by the Farmer in this county. [illegible] Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible]

[illegible] also, any quantity of Lime. [illegible] and one half of a new Dwelling House to rent for one year or more.

J. K. RIDER.

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

NOTICE.

THE Co-Partnership heretofore existing under the firm of WILLIAMS & SAYLES, is this day dissolved by mutual consent of parties.

All persons indebted to Williams & Sayles, are requested to call and make immediate settlement [illegible]

M. W. WILLIAMS.
WM. B. SAYLES.
32w3

NOTICE.

FOUND, by the subscriber, a short time since, [illegible] of this village, a BAG OF GRAIN. The owner can have the property by calling on the subscriber and settling the expences of this advertisement, &c.

De Ruyter, Oct. 5th, 1841.
32w2 JAMES CRANDALL.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connection with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c. &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

ONE CENT REWARD,

AND NO CHARGES PAID.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 27th Sept. inst., an indented apprentice boy aged about 19 years, by the name of ISRAEL HOWARD STONE. This is to forbid all persons harboring or trusting him on my account, as I will pay no debts of his contracting after this date. Whoever will return said boy, shall receive the above reward.

De Ruyter Sept. 27th. 1841.
JESSE STILLMAN.

NOTICE.

THE partnership heretofore existing under the firm of Spencer and Saunders, is this day dissolved by mutual consent of parties.

De Ruyter, Sept. 1st, 1841.
A. L. SAUNDERS.
IRA SPENCER.

POETRY.

From the London Anthenæum.

The Jewish Pilgrim at Jerusalem.

Are these the ancient, holy hills,
Where angels walked of old!
Is this the land our story fills
With glory not yet cold!
For I have passed by many a shrine,
O'er many a land and sea,
But still, oh! promised Palestine,
My dreams have been of thee.

I see thy mountain cedars green,
Thy valleys fresh and fair,
With summers bright as they have been
When Israel's home was there;
Though o'er the sword and time have passed,
And cross and crescent shone,
And heavily the chain hath pressed,
Yet still thou art our own.

Thine are the wandering race that go
Unbles'd through every land,
Whose blood hath stained the polar snow,
And quenched the desert sand;
And thine the homeless hearts that turn
From all earth's shrines to thee,
With their lone faith for ages borne
In sleepless memory.

For thrones are fallen and nations gone,
Before the march of time,
And where the ocean rolled alone
Are forests in their prime,
Since Gentile ploughshares marred the brow
Of Zion's holy hill—
Where are the Roman eagles now!
Yet Judah wanders still.

And hath she wandered thus in vain
A pilgrim of the past!
No! long deferred her hope hath been,
But it shall come at last;
For in her wastes a voice I hear,
As from some prophet's urn,
It bids the nations build not there,
For Jacob shall return.

Oh! lost and loved Jerusalem!
Thy pilgrim may not stay,
To see the glad earth's harvest home
In thy redeeming day;
But now resigned in faith and trust,
I seek a nameless tomb,
At least beneath thy hallowed dust—
Oh! give the wanderer room!

Miscellaneous Department.

From the London Christian Observer.

RESTLESS ACTIVITY OF POPERY.

It has been said that Popery has of late been peculiarly active. This is true; but Popery has always been active where it has seen any scope for its fatal energies; and this it is that renders it so dangerous even in an apparent calm; for it crouches as a ravenous animal to seize its prey.—People say that forty years ago it was asleep; but this is a great mistake. I will quote a remarkable passage from the celebrated "Pursuits of Literature," which will show that it was then sowing the seeds of that prolific crop of mischief which we are now reaping; and that the little cheap tracts of which we hear so much are no novelty. The writer of that remarkable work says:

"It is a matter of some surprise and concern, to read the list of the almost incredible number of little books and tracts, at the smallest prices published and circulated, for the general dissemination of Popery in these realms. The papal genius never sleeps, no not for a moment; but directs, and animates, and acts, uniformly and constantly, at home and abroad, in cities, in towns, and villages; it takes aid from stupidity, and from ability, from above, and from beneath. I am not speaking to those, who are indifferent to any, or to all religion; but to those, who should understand the importance of the cause, the interests of Christianity, and its purity; the evidence of history: the nature and the essential and unaltered spirit of the Romish priesthood, and their subtlety and peculiar arts, by persuasion, or by terror, over weak consciences.

"There is such a connection between Superstition and Atheism, and their allies Cruelty and Tyranny, that the wisest and most experienced Statesmen and Moralists have declared it to be indissoluble.

"All, therefore, which I have written on this topic, is in the spirit of mercy, humanity, tolerance, and true Christianity. It is indeed true, that the Popedom is now fallen; but the spirit of it, I will maintain, is neither extinct, nor asleep."

Would that the British public had taken warning from this well-timed admonition! Would that even yet it would lay to heart these solemn and alarming truths!

JESUS ON THE MOUNT OF OLIVES.

It is impossible to conceive a spectacle of greater natural or moral sublimity, than the Savior seated on the slope of the Mount of Olives, and thus looking down almost for the last time, on the whole Temple and city of Jerusalem, crowded as it then was with near three millions of worshipers. It was evening, and the whole irregular outline of the city, rising from the deep glens, which encircled it on all sides, might be distinctly traced. The sun, the significant emblem of the great fountain of the moral light, to which Jesus and his faith had been perpetually compared, may be imagined, sinking behind the western hills, while its last rays might linger on the broad and massy fortifications on Mount Sion, on the stately palace of Herod, on the square tower, the Anthonia at the corner of the Temple, and on the roof of the Temple, fretted all over with golden spikes, which glittered like fire; while below, the colonades and lofty gates would cast their broad shadows over the courts, and afford that striking contrast between vast masses of gloom and gleams of the richest light, which only an evening scene like the present, can display. Nor, indeed, (even without the sacred and solemn associations connected with the holy city,) would it be easily to conceive any natural situation in the world of more impressive grandeur, or likely to be seen with greater advantage under the influence of such accessaries, than that of Jerusalem, seated, as it was, upon hills of irregular height, intersected by bold ravines, and hemmed in almost on all sides by still loftier mountains, and itself formed, in its most conspicuous parts, of gorgeous ranges of Grecian architecture, in all its lightness, magnificence and variety. The effect may have been heightened by the rising of the slow volumes of smoke from the evening sacrifices, while even at the distance of the slope of Mount Olivet, the silence may have been faintly broken by the hymns of the worshipers.—Milman.

THE ROSE.—I saw a rose, perfect in beauty; it rested gracefully upon its stalk, and its perfumes filled the air. Many stopped to gaze upon it, many bowed to taste its fragrance, and its owner hung over it with delight. I passed it again, and behold it was gone—its roots had withered and the enclosure which had surrounded it was down. The spoiler had been there; he saw that many admired it; he knew it was dear to him who planted it, and beside it he had no other plant to love. Yet he snatched it secretly from the hand that cherished it; he wore it upon his bosom till it hung its head and faded, and when he saw that its glory was departed, he flung it rudely away. But it left a thorn in his bosom, and vainly did he seek to extract it; for now it pierces the spoiler, even in his hour of mirth. And when I saw that no man, who loved the beauty of the rose, gathered again its scattered leaves, or bound up its stalk which the hands of violence had broken, I looked earnestly at the spot where it grew, and my soul received instruction. And I said, Let her who is full of beauty and admiration, sitting like the queen of flowers in majesty among the daughters of women, let her remember that she standeth on slippery places, 'and be not high minded, but fear.'—Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.

Riches should be admitted into our houses, but not into our hearts; we may take them into our possession, but not into our affections.

Temperance Department.

THE DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

BY ELIHU BURRITT,

THE LEARNED BLACKSMITH.

There are new developments of human character, which, like the light of distant stars, are yet to visit the eye of man and operate upon human society. Ever since the image of the Godhead was first sketched in Eden, its great Author and angels have been painting upon it; men have tried their hands upon it; influences like the incessant breath of heaven, have left each its line upon the canvass; still the unfinishing stroke of the pencil will not be accomplished until the last, lingering survivor of "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds" "is changed in the twinkling of an eye."

The hemisphere of the present age is studded all over with such pearls "and patines of bright gold," as never shone before in the heavens of the human soul. In these latter days, the waves of time have washed up from depths that angels never fathomed, "gems of purer light serene" than were ever worn before in the crown of man. We are now but half way advanced in the new circle of human history. The race is but just emerging from the long-reaching shadows of an iron age, and coming out into the star-light and sun-light of new influences. If, as we are assured, scores of new stars have taken rank with the heavenly hosts during the last two centuries, stars brighter than they, have, in the same period, kindled up new lights in the moral firmament. Among these new stars, one, a little lower than that of Bethlehem, has just appeared above the horizon. It is the Star of WOMAN'S INFLUENCE. Influential woman is a being of scarcely two centuries: up to that period, and almost hitherto, her influences have fallen upon human character and society, like the feeble rays of a rising winter's sun upon polar fields of ice. But her sun is reaching upward. There is a glorious meridian to which she shall as surely come as to-morrow's rising sun shall reach his in our natural heavens. What man will be, when she shall shine upon him then and thence, we are unable to divine; but we can found an anticipation from the influences of her dawning rays. Her morning light has gilded the visions of human sorrow. There has been no depth of human misery beyond the reach of her ameliorating influence, nor any height of human happiness which she has not raised still higher. Whoever has touched at either of these extremities, or at any of their intervening points, could attest that "neither height nor depth, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present or to come," could divert or vitiate the accents and anodynes of her love. Whether we trace the lineaments of her character in the mild twilight of her morning sun, or in the living beams of her risen day, we find that she has touched human society like an angel. It would be irreverent to her worth to say, in what walks of life she has walked most like an angel of light and love; in what vicissitudes, in what joys or sorrows, in what situations or circumstances, she has most signally discharged the heavenly ministrations of her mission; what ordeals have best brought out the radiance of her hidden jewels; what fruitions of earthly bliss, or furnaces of afflictions, have best declared the fineness of her gold.

Still, there is a scene which has escaped "the vulture's eye," and almost every other eye, where she has cast forth her costliest pearls, and shown such qualities of her native character as almost merit our adoration. This scene has been allotted to the drunkard's wife. How she has filled this most desperate outpost of humanity, will be revealed when the secrets of human life shall be disclosed "to more worlds than this." When the history of hovels, and of murky garrets shall be given in; when the career of the enslaved inebriate shall be told, from the first to the lowest degree of his degradation—there will be a memorial made of woman, worthy of being told and heard in heaven. From the first, she gave up her young and hoping heart, and all its treasures into the hands of him she loved, to the luckless hour when the charmer, wine, fastened around the loved one, all the serpent spells of its sorcery—down through all the crushing of her young born hopes—through years of estrangement and strange insanity—when harsh unkindness bit at her heart strings with an adder's tooth—thence down through each successive depth of disgrace and misery, until she bent over the drunkard's grave; through all these scenes, a halo of divinity has gathered around her, and stirred her to angel-deeds of love. When the maddened victim tried to cut himself adrift from the sympathy and society of God and man, she has clung to him, and held him to her heart "with hooks of steel." And when he was cast out, all defiled with his leprous pollution—when he was reduced to such a thing as the beasts of the field would bellow at—there was one who still kept him throned in her heart of hearts; who could say over the fallen, drivelling creature; "Although you are nothing to the world, you are all the world to me." When that awful insanity of the drunkard set in upon him, with all its fiendish shapes of torture; while he lay writhing beneath the scorpion stings of the fiery phantasies and furies of delirium tremens—there was woman by his side, enslaved with all the attributes of her loveliness. There was her tearful, love-beaming eye, that never dimmed but with tears when the black spirits were at him.

There she stood alone, and in the lone hours of night to watch his breathings, with her heart braced up with the omnipotence of her love. No! brute as he was, not a tie which her young heart had thrown around him in his bright days, had even given away, but had grown stronger as he approached the nadir of his degradation. And if he sank into that dark, hopeless grave, she enswathed him in her broken heart, and laid it in his coffin; or if some mighty angel's arm or voice brought him up from the grave of drunkenness, the deepest ever dug for man, he came forth Lazarus-like, bound fast and forever within the cerements of her deathless affection.

Such is her sceptre; such are the cords which she throws around the wayward and wandering, and leads him back to virtue and to heaven, saying, as she gives him in: "Here am I and he whom thou gavest me!"

Worcester, Mass., July 3, 1841.

Children's Department.

THE TENDER HEARTED GIRL.

There is a girl in Ohio, whose name is Ruhamma. She used to come to school to me. She was four years old. She was a very sober and thoughtful girl; sometimes she would sit an hour together without moving, engaged in deep thought. She had a great mind for such a young girl. She was not dull and stupid, for when she was at play she was as lively as the best of them. Almost every morning she would bring into the school room a flower-pot full of the most beautiful flowers,—the lilly, the tulip, and the velvet rose, and set them on the desk. Sometimes their sweet fragrance would fill all the room, and make us all happy—that is what God made the flowers for.

She loved to get up early in the morning, and go into the garden and work in the flower bed. Almost all the girls had flower beds, and used to see who would keep them cleanest from weeds, and have the finest flowers.

One morning, very early, Ruhammah came running up to me, almost out of breath, and said, "A naughty worm has been eating down one of my prettiest flowers, and O, I am so sorry!" She had one tall, handsome flower, that grew right in the middle of her bed, and had a full blossom right on top of it, and this is the one the worm eat off.

"Well," said I, "didn't you kill it?"

She looked at me a moment,—"No sir," said she, and her eye sparkled with innocence—no, I didn't kill it."

"What did you do with it?"

"I put it on a piece of board, so it should not eat any more of my flowers."

"Well, wont the sun kill it, by and by, when it shines hot?"

"No," said she, "I put some dirt on it, so the sun can't kill it.

And she skipped off to play, happy that she had done all things well.

Now, children, if all the little girls and boys are as kind to every thing God has made, as Ruhammah was to this little worm, do you think that they can kill each other when they get to be men and women? Do you think they will have to go to prison for doing each wrong?

She knew that the same God who made her, made that little worm, and its Creator was her Judge, and she would not hurt it; and I have no doubt, that if she lives to be a woman, God will bless her, and she will bless the world, for if she will not hurt a little worm, she will not hurt any body who is worth a great deal more than a worm.—She will be a "Peace-maker," and then she will be one of the "children of God."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ATTENTION!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on the accounts of Spencer & Saunders, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

N. B. The accounts are divided, and it is my own only that I ask for. Please attend.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30tf

A. L. SAUNDERS.

ELECTION NOTICE.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
Secretary's Office, Albany, August 25, 1841.

To the Sheriff of the County of Madison, SIR:

NOTICE is hereby given you, that the term of service of Avery Skinner, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, of this State, will expire on the last day of December next, and that a Senator is to be chosen in that District, to which the county of Madison belongs, at the General Election, to be held on the first, second and third days of November next.

At the same election the following officers are to be chosen, viz.: Three Members of Assembly, for the said County, and one Coroner, in the place of Ira Seymour, whose term of office expires on the last day of December next.

JOHN C. SPENCER, Secretary of State.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the notice received by me from the Secretary of State.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.

Dated August 28, 1841. 28tde

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the buisness will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 20m6

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

200
PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE HOLY BIBLE, CONSISTING OF VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.

BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office. The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.

Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.

JOHN N. ELMORE.
A. N. ANNAS.
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web.'s Dictionary, large,
" " small,
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,

Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.

De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWLER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

WANTED,

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841,

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!
EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. D. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found,

8,000 yds. Calicoes, from 4 to 25 cts. per yd.
6,000 " Sheeting, " 7 " 12 1-2 "
1,000 " Ticking, " 12 1-2 " 25 "
1,000 " French Mull, " 20 " 50 "

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

SELLING LOWER

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

TO FAMILIES.—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.
Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co's

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S

RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of Back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An invaluable remedy for the common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and [illegible] virtues of the Herb from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

☞For which the highest price will be paid.
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE 17.

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, at 50 cts pr lb. CASH. Old Hyson do. at 5s6 Cash. New Orleans MOLASSES at 30 cts pr Gal.

He has also just opened 3 packages of Crockery, directly from Liverpool, bought for cash, and at prices which he is confident are

50 per cent Lower, than those of any New-York purchase. He can furnish any style of Crockery which may be wanted, and offers either

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig,
Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower

than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr Phinney's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlæm Oil,
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey

Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organium,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

ROAD WARRANTS.

A quantity of Road Warrants just printed and for sale at this office.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.
Aug. 28. A. & A.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

PROCLAMATION.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, MADISON COUNTY, ss.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff of said county, hereby give notice, that a Circuit Court, and Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, will be held in and for said County, at the Court House in Morrisville, on the Third Monday of September next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

All persons who will prosecute against the prisoners then and there to be tried, or the criminal offenders, and all persons who are or shall be bound to appear by recognizance or otherwise, will be then and there to prosecute against them as shall be just, or to give evidence as shall be required by their recognizances; and all Justices of the Peace, Deputy Sheriffs, Coroners, Bailiffs, Constables, and other officers within the County of Madison, who have taken any recognizances of inquests, or the examination of any prisoners or witnesses, are required to be then and there in their own proper persons, at the opening of said Court on the first day of the sitting thereof, to return their recognizances, inquisitions and examinations, and rolls, records, indictments, and other remembrances, and to do such things as their offices in that behalf require them to do.

Given under my hand at Morrisville this 20th day of August, 1841.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.
26w5 By WM. B. BRAND, Under Sheriff.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Alfred—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Adams—[illegible] Maxson Greene, Sa[illegible]
[illegible] Paul Vincent.
B[illegible]—S. S. [illegible], P. M.
B[illegible]—[illegible] Silas Bailey, Asa B[illegible]
B[illegible]—[illegible] G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. T[illegible]man.
C[illegible]—N. [illegible] V. Hull.
C[illegible]—[illegible]
Durhamville—[illegible] Joseph Potter
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
[illegible]—[illegible] Maxson
[illegible]—[illegible] Samuel E. Lamphere.
G[illegible]—Asa [illegible] H. Wilson, P. M. David S. T[illegible]
Hounsfield—Wm. Greene.
[illegible]—[illegible] P. Livermore, P. M., S[illegible]
[illegible]—[illegible] H. S. Crandall.
New York City—[illegible] Stillman.
[illegible]
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburg—George Crandall.
[illegible]
[illegible]
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—[illegible] G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram B[illegible]
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Sherburne—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 33.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 85.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, OCTOBER 13, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Department.

VOICE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT CONCERNING THE JEWS.

The Rev. Mr. Marsh, of Birmingham, lately issued an address to Christians, reminding them of their duty to the posterity of ancient Israel. The succeeding paragraphs are extracted from that appeal, which is equally applicable to the churches on the western, as on the eastern side of the Atlantic.—Christian Intelligencer.

As the Jews are becoming more and more an object of interest to the world, it seems desirable to meet every objection that may be urged against the endeavor to promote Christianity among them, and likewise to bring forward every scriptural argument that can be adduced in favor of this important duty. In many pious and benevolent minds there seems to have existed an almost superstitious dread of coming forward in their behalf, lest it should appear like an interference with the purposes of God towards that peculiar people: but, however miraculous their national conversion may be, still there has always been a remnant from among them returning into the fold; and throughout the New Testament, as well as the Old, their claims are enforced.

It is a singular fact, that as the Jews overlooked the Gentiles, although they were included in the writings of Moses and the Prophets, so Christians have overlooked the Jews, although Christ and his Apostles continually refer to them.

From the writings of the Evangelists, the two following passages alone are sufficient;—the one in which our Lord asserts his own mission at that period; "I am sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and the other in which he gives a commission to the apostles: "Go not amongst the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Luke, in his history of the Acts of the Apostles, informs us that it was to devout Jews, who had come to the Great Festival, that the glad tidings of Messiah's resurrection were first announced; and that multitudes of that nation, by the preaching of Peter, believed on the Savior, and were added to the Church. Thus was the door of faith first opened to the Jews; and though Paul was afterwards set apart as apostles to the Gentiles, yet we find him visiting the synagogues in every place, and gathering fruit from amongst the Jews.

In the Epistle to the Romans, the Apostle, triumphing in the Gospel of Christ, declares it to be the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek;" and he states that their rejection is neither total nor final. Our attention should be particularly directed to the following addressed to the Gentile Church:—"For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree, which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature in a good olive tree, how much more shall these which be natural branches be graffed into their own olive-tree? I would not have you ignorant of this mystery, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved. As it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

In the Epistle to the Corinthians, when announcing the great subject of the apostolic ministry, "We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness," Paul adds; "but to them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ is the power of God, and the wisdom of God;" and when speaking of the superiority of the Christian dispensation, and of the blindness of the Jews, he yet holds out a hope that the heart of a Jew shall "turn to the Lord, and then the veil shall be taken away."

There seems to be a striking allusion here to the history of Moses ascending the mount unveiled, but when he descended from that mount the veil is on his face; so when the Jews shall again turn towards the God of their fathers, the veil of unbelief shall be taken from their hearts, and they shall, with unveiled face behold the glory of the Lord.

In the Epistle to the Galatians, when urging the great doctrine of justification by faith alone, and insisting upon the liberty of the believing Gentiles, that they should not be compelled to live as do the Jews, he pronounces peace upon those Gentiles who were new created in Christ Jesus; and also upon the converted Jews, or "the Israel of God."

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, he speaks of both Jew and Gentile as having "access through Christ by one Spirit, unto the Father;" and expressly declares, that it was the great mystery of that age, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and partakers of God's promise in Christ by the Gospel.

In the Epistle to the Colossians, Paul asserts that both "Jew and Greek are one in Christ;" and in the Thessalonians he speaks of the "churches of God, which in Judea are in Christ Jesus."

In the First Epistle to Timothy, Paul refers to his own conversion as "a pattern" or type "to them who should hereafter believe on Christ to life everlasting;"—none of whom could exceed him in their enmity to Christianity.

In the Epistle to Titus it is declared, that "the grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men;" that is, to Gentiles as well as Jews.

The Epistle to the Hebrews ought to decide the question, as it is exclusively addressed to the house of Israel, and gloriously unfolds the priesthood of Messiah, as typified in the levitical dispensation.

The Epistle of Peter, who was the apostle of the Circumcision, is written to converts from his own nation, "scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bythinia." He refers them in his Second Epistle to the great "promise" revealed to their prophet, Isaiah, that there would be "new heavens and a new earth," when "Jerusalem" would be "a rejoicing, and her people a joy."

James avowedly addresses his Epistles to the twelve tribes.

John says, in his First Epistle writing as a Jew, and evidently addressing Jews:—"We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sins, not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

If the Old Testament prophets perpetually referred to the Jews, and the New Testament apostles to the same, is it probable that this last book of Holy Writ should pass them by?—especially when it winds up all prophecy, with the fulfilment of which they are intimately connected. Surely, therefore, it must be inferred, that the "one hundred and forty four thousand sealed from the twelve tribes" are converted Jews, and that the great "multitude, out of every tongue, and nation, and kindred, and people, are converted Gentiles; thus accomplishing the remarkable prophecy of Caiaphas, that "Jesus should die for that nation only, but that he should gather together in one the children of God which were scattered abroad." Now, if it be satisfactorily proved that the Christian Scriptures never overlook the Jews, is it right in the Christian Church to overlook them.

For centuries the Jews were the Lord's peculiar people. Their law was written by the finger of God himself, and for the space of forty years he guided them through the trackless desert; by day in a pillar of cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire. He drove out the nations from before them, and brought them to the Promised Land. There he visited them with mercies and with judgments; but they continually rebelled against him, and finally filled up the measure of their iniquity by their rejection of the Messiah. Then, indeed, as a nation, they lost their civil and ecclesiastical privileges, but they were not cast off for ever. God had still purposes of mercy towards them; and thus he addresses the wild scions who were grafted in:—"For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy, through their unbelief, even so have these also now not believed that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy." Is there no meaning to be attached to these words? do they not imply that these natural branches are left as a legacy to our fostering care, who partake of the root and fatness of the Olive tree? Have we hitherto acted as faithful guardians of that people? Have we prayed for them? have we preached to them?—have we set them a good example? as the trustees of the covenant, have we done our utmost to meliorate their condition, subdue their prejudices, and enlighten their minds?

There is another view of this subject which may affect our interest, not as individuals only, but as a Church and nation.—In Sacred History we invariably find the truth of that prophetic declaration: "Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee." Nor am I sure that if the records of heaven could be read by us, whether the reason of many a scourge in modern times would not be discerned in the unalterable truth of this declaration. Not improbably we might find the oppression of the Jew on one column, and the judgment of the oppressor on the other. Laban, the Syrian, received Jacob into his house and was forced to acknowledge that the Lord had blessed him for His servant's sake.—Balaam, who enticed the Israelties to sin, was slain amongst the enemies of God.—The widow of Sarepta's barrel of meal wasted not, neither did her cruise of oil fail, because in the time of famine she had fed the prophet Elijah; whilst Jezebel the persecutor of that prophet came to an untimely end. Saul was permitted to spare the Kenites because they had showed kindness to the children of Israel. Egypt oppressed them and became the "basest of kingdoms." Cyrus, the friend and protector of the Jews, had for his friend the God of Israel, who opened before him the "two-leaved gates," and poured into his coffers the "hidden riches of secret places," and this He did for "Jacob his servant's sake, and Israel his elect." The Moabites and Ammorites were excluded from the congregation of the Lord, because they met them not with bread and water when they came forth out of Egypt. Babylon, who sat as a Queen was brought down to the dust, because she helped forward their affliction.—Hence, the threatening has never been annulled, nor the promise withdrawn. Too long have we lingered on Mount Ebal denouncing the threatened judgment, it is high time that we ascend Mount Gerizim and proclaim the promised blessing. We have seen the withering effects of judgment, and may we not expect to see the renovating effects of the promise that "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit?" Already the fig-tree is putting forth her green leaves, and summer may be nigh at hand. The voices of the prophets cry—"Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem. Awake, shake thyself from the dust, O captive daughter of Zion." The voices of the apostles cry aloud as the voice of one man that, to them "pertain the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the Father's, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever more."

Then if the Christian Church would discharge an important duty, and enjoy a high privilege, let her afford every facility, remove every difficulty, and give every encouragement to the people of Israel. Let her execute the commission given to her: "Go through the gates, cast up the high way, gather out the stones, lift up a standard to the people, behold the Lord hath proclaimed unto the ends of the earth."—Say ye to the daughter of Zion, "Behold thy salvation cometh." Oh! that our country may be the favored one to bring this acceptable present to the Lord of hosts.—Oh! that our Church may faithfully discharge her duty, and thus together bring to pass the apostolic declaration, that "Through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HERITAGE.

Oh, how consolatory is the thought! If the spirit has been justified, regenerated, and sanctified, it will return to the eternal fruition of God in heaven—return to be forever happy. It will be a dissolution from that body of corruption which has been a clog, a weight, a hindrance. How little we know of the disembodied spirit! How little do we know of the susceptibilities of the spirit that has emerged from this world! We have often followed in thought the flight of the spirit. But we feel that > "The dead are like the stars by day,

> Withdrawn from mortal eye;
> But not extinct they hold their way
> In glory through the sky.
> Spirits from bondage thus set free
> Vanish amidst immensity."

They are in glory, they are with Christ, they are separated forever from all the temptation and trials of this mortal scene. The journeying spirit returns; he arrives at home. Yes, after the toil, and peril, and fatigues of his journey—for here he is a pilgrim—after the toil of his journey, he enters his Father's house, he takes his seat at the table; universal joy circulates through the happy family:

> "Mortals cry, 'A man is dead!'
> Angels sing, 'A child is born!'
> Born in the world above,
> They our happy brother greet,
> Bear him to the throne of love,
> Place him at the Savior's feet."

Yes, it is the soldier, the hardy veteran who has endured the fatigues of successive campaigns, who has worn his armor constantly, and used his sword manfully, and kept the shield of his faith steadfastly, and finished his course gloriously. It is the triumphant soldier stepping on the neck of his last enemy, and shouting as he rises, "O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" He returns to God; he lays by his sword; he takes the victorious palm, and waves it before the throne; he takes off his armor, he unbuckles his breast-plate, he removes his helmet, he lays by his shield; God clothes him with a robe of salvation, and he walks with those who are before the throne.

Yes, it is the weather-beaten mariner; he has endured many hardships, many dangers; now at length he has weathered every storm; he is now entering the port, no more to be dashed on the surface of the troublous ocean, no more to feel the surges beat against him. Angels welcome him, he lands on the shores of immortality to be forever with Jesus. It is the spirit returning to God.—Lessey.

From the New York Evangelist.

"GATHER NOT MY SOUL WITH SINNERS."

They are to be lost. They are to be shut out of heaven; excluded from the companionship of the holy, and exiled from the intercourse of the good. We cannot be happy unless we have society. Place me in solitude, where I could not have the intercouse and reciprocity of affection, and however exciting or felicitous my circumstances in other respects, I should pine in melancholy, and sicken even at my mercies. There are affections which long to go forth and exercise themselves, and which can find no rest except in society. Heaven will be filled with delightful intercouse and friendship. There will be the angels—the host of the redeemed—the sweeping trains of the sons of God, exulting in the ennobling and satisfying fellowship of each other. The wise, and the good; the great, and the pure; the benevolent and the active, of every age and every clime will be there. What revealings will there be of enshrouded wisdom!

But none of this will sinners have!—Exile is their doom. No music will charm them—no eloquence thrill—no discourse purify—no friendships delight—no sympathies satisfy! No Isaiah, or David, or Paul, will admit them to the intimacy of cordial friendship. Eternal exclusion from all the heart can crave is their lot! O! who would be gathered with sinners!

Sinners will be without any protection. There is no government in hell. That holy restraint which preserves the bliss of the redeemed, and prevents the confusion of the universe, will not be exerted there. Every passion will be unbridled. Loosed from the authority of God, and the control of law, and O! the shouts of Satanic execration, O! the looks of unutterable contempt, O! the boilings of infuriated lust! Who, but a madman, would desire to live in a world which had broken loose from the restraints of law, and launched its destinies upon the dark surges of eternal anarchy?

Sinners will be shut up to their own horrid society. With no bond of union—without affection, confidence, respect, friendship, or delight, they will be crowded together into a close and festering contact They will be banded together, though mutually repulsive. They will be doomed to the eternal exhibition of the shamelessness, and the horror of the most abandoned creatures the world has ever seen. Shut up with the vile, the corrupt, the filthy, and the profane, and linked in everlasting alliance with the most disgusting and loathsome objects, that ever brooded in the dens of darkness. The drunkard, the gambler, the assassin, the thief, the abandoned, the vile, the hideous, the cruel, all brought together—all doomed to the society of each other, and to hear the shrieks, and the blasphemies of each other for ever! Who would not shrink from such society! I will never cease to cry, Deliver me from such disgusting associations, and from the curse of such a clotted contagion: "Gather not my soul with sinners."

From the Christian Mirror.

MY MINISTER DOES NOT VISIT ME.

What then? I do not wait for those I long to see, but I go and see them. And I am sure he owes me no visit. I think, however, that I have a good excuse for this seeming neglect, and I ought perhaps to believe that he has as good an one. But he has been several times to see brother A. and B., and if he can find time to visit them, he might find time to come and see me. And is this a just cause for provocation? Am I afraid that he has more affection and regard for them than for me? If I had truly Christian and gracious affection should I not rather rejoice that they are benefited and honored by his visits, or would they be beneficial to him? Are not such feelings calculated to destroy all good feeling in the church? And are such feelings produced by that charity which thinketh no evil? But if I really want to see him so much, why do I not manifest such a desire by going to see him? But perhaps he will not want to see me, and he is not very sociable sometimes. But brother S. says he never stops to think whether he wants to see him or not; but always improves every good opportunity. For he has a string of inquiries to make, and always finds it more difficult to get away, than to make him converse. I am afraid that the most profitable and important subjects were not always brought forward; and this is a good reason why he is not so free. And can he, judging from my conduct, believe that I want to see him, when I pass his door so frequently, and never call? I am afraid that I more desire that he should treat me with respect, than that he should be useful to others.—And if so, I am growing large in my own esteem, a sad feeling for a christian. Would it not be as profitable for me to visit him in his family, and see how he carries out at home, those principles which he lays down in the pulpit. I am afraid the truth is, he is not paid in any degree according to agreement, and if so he must, of course, stay at home more to take care of his own affairs, as it is not in his power to employ others. But unless I dismiss these reflections, I shall find that the cause of complaint is all on the other side, and get myself deeper and deeper in the mire. I am resolved therefore to go and see for myself.

A LAYMAN.

Children's Department.

From the Juvenile Rambler.

THE SLEIGH-RIDE.

Young persons are sometimes, from mere thoughtlessness, guilty of conduct, which, if they stopped to reflect, they would see to be wrong. When they treat the aged with incivility, such conduct appears especially unamiable. The hoary head should be respected, wherever it is found; and neither poverty and rags, nor the vices of the individuals, are any apology for making him the subject of sport and ridicule.

In one of the most populous towns of New England, a short time since, a party of lads, all members of the same school, got up a grand sleigh ride. There were about twenty-five or thirty boys engaged in the frolic. The sleigh was a very large and splendid establishment, drawn by six gray horses. The afternoon was as beautiful as any boy could desire.

On the day following, the story of the ride became, of course, a subject of interest, and in the recess, which is usually given, during school-time, the instructor of the school inquired of the boys as they clustered round the stove in the school-room, about their excursion. One of them gave a narrative of the whole affair.

As he drew near the end of his story, he exclaimed, "Oh, sir, there was one little circumstance which I had almost forgotten to tell you. Towards the latter part of the afternoon, as we were coming home, we saw at some distance ahead of us, a queer-looking affair in the road. We could not exactly make out what it was. It seemed to be a something of the monstrous kind, half sleigh and half wagon. As we approached it, it proved to be a rusty old sleigh fastened behind a covered wagon, proceeding at a very slow rate, and taking up the whole road.

"Finding that the owner was not disposed to turn out, we determined upon a volley of snow balls and a good hurrah.—These were soon sent and produced the desired effect; and a little more. The wagon turned out, and the horses began to run. As we rushed by, some one who had the whip, gave the old jilt of a horse a good crack, which made him run faster.

"With that, an old fellow in the wagon, who was buried up under an old hat, and beneath a rusty cloak, and who had dropped the reins, bawled out, 'Why do you frighten my horse?' 'Why don't you turn out then?' says the driver. So we gave him three rousing cheers more; his horse was frightened again, and ran up against a loaded team, and I believe almost capsized the old creature—and so we left him."

"Well, boys," replied the teacher, "this story sounds well for your civility and kindness to some aged stranger, at any rate. But take your seats, and I will tell you a story." When they had resumed their seats, he proceeded—"Yesterday afternoon, a very venerable and respectable old man, and a clergyman by profession, was on his way from Boston to ———, to pass the residue of the winter at the house of his son.

"That he might be prepared for journeying, as he proposed to do, in the spring, he took with him his light wagon, and for the winter his sleigh, which he fastened behind the wagon. He was, just as I have told you, very old and infirm; his temples were covered with thinned locks, which the frosts of eighty years had whitened; his sight, and hearing too, were somewhat blunted by age, as yours will be.

"As he was proceeding slowly and quietly along, almost forgetting himself in the midst of his thoughts, he was suddenly disturbed, and even terrified, by a loud and repeated clattering upon the top of his covered wagon. In his trepidation, he dropped his reins, and, as his aged and feeble hands were quite benumbed with cold, he found it impossible to gather them up, and his horse began to run away.

"In the midst of the old man's trouble, there rushed by him with loud shouts, a large party of boys, in a sleigh, drawn by six horses—'Turn out, turn out, old fellow—give us the road, old boy.' 'Pray do not frighten my horse,' exclaimed the infirm driver. 'Turn out, then, turn out,' was the answer which was followed by repeated cracks and blows from the long whip of the 'grand sleigh,' and three tremendous huzzas from the boys who were in it.

"The terror of the old man and his horse was increased, and the latter ran away with him, to the imminent danger of his life.—He contrived however, after some exertion, to secure his reins, which had been out of his hands during the whole affray, and to stop his horse just in season to prevent his being dashed against a loaded team.

"As he approached ———, he overtook a young man who was walking towards the same place, and whom he invited to ride. The young man alluded to the 'grand sleigh' which had just passed, which induced the old gentleman to inquire if he knew who the boys were. He replied that he did—that they all belonged to one school, namely, that of Mr. ———. 'Ah!' exclaims the former, with a hearty laugh, 'do they, indeed? their master is my son, at whose house I shall be in a few minutes, and to whom I shall tell the whole story.'

"That son, boys, is your instructor, and that aged and infirm old man, that 'old fellow, and old boy' (who did not turn out for you, but who would have gladly given you the whole road, had he heard your approach,) that 'old boy' was your master's father."

It is not easy to imagine the effect produced by this new translation of the boys' own narrative. Apologies, regrets, and acknowledgments without end, were offered immediately to the instructor, who, of course, forgave all, cautioning his pupils, however, to be more civil for the future, to inoffensive travelers.

Natural History.

From the London Religious Tract Society.

ANECDOTES OF THE OURANG OUTANG.

The celebrated Buffon gives an account of an ourang outang that he had known personally, which uniformly walked on two feet when carrying things of considerable weight. He was mild, and somewhat melancholy in his air and manners, and exhibited neither the impatience of the Barbary ape, the maliciousness of the baboon, nor the extravagance of the monkey. "It may be alleged," he continues, "that he had the benefit of instruction; but the apes which I shall compare with him were educated in the same manner. Signs and words were alone sufficient to make our ourang outang act; but the baboon required a cudgel, and the other apes a whip, for none of the rest would obey unless thus treated. I have seen this animal present his hand to conduct the people who came to visit him, and walk as gravely along as if he had formed a part of the company. I have seen him sit down at a table, unfold his napkin, wipe his lips, use a spoon or fork to carry the victuals to his mouth, pour his liquor into a glass, and make it touch that of the person who drank along with him. When invited to drink tea, he brought a cup and saucer, placed them on the table, put in sugar, pour out the tea, and allowed it to cool before he drank it. All these actions he performed without any other instigation than the signs or verbal orders of his master, and often of his own accord. He did no injury to any person. He even approached company with circumspection, and presented himself as if he desired to be caressed. He was very fond of dainties, which every body gave him, and as his lungs were diseased, and as he was affected with a troublesome cough, this quantity of sweet things very probably contributed to shorten his life. He lived one summer in Paris, and died in London the following winter. He ate almost every thing, but preferred ripe and dried fruit to all other kinds of food. He drank a little wine, but of his own accord, left it for milk, tea, or other mild liquids."

A gentleman, whose loss virtue and science will ever deplore, was on one occasion out with a party of men in Sumatra, when in some trees, removed from the dense forest, a female ourang outang, with a young one in its arms, was discovered, and a pursuit commenced. In the ardor of the moment, and excited by the hope of possessing an animal so rare, the gentleman forgot every thing but the prize before him, and urged on his men by the promise of a reward, should their exertions prove successful.

Thus stimulated, they followed up the chase; the animal, encumbered by her young one, made prodigious efforts to gain the dense and intricate recesses of the wood, and spring from tree to tree, endeavoring by every means to elude the vigilance of her pursuers. Several shots were fired, and at length one proved fatal, the ball penetrating the right side of the chest. Feeling herself mortally wounded, and with the blood gushing from her mouth, she from that moment took no care of herself, but with a mother's feelings, summoned all her dying energies to save her young one. She threw it onwards over the tops of the trees, and from one branch to another, taking the most desperate leaps after it herself, and again facilitating its progress, until the intricacy of the forest being nearly gained, its chances of success were sure. All this time the blood was flowing: but her efforts held on unabated, and it was only when her young one was on the point of attaining a place of safety, that she rested on one of the topmost branches of a gigantic tree. True to her ruling passion, even in death, she turned for a moment to gaze after her young one, reeled, and fell, head foremost, dead to the ground. The sight was so touching, that it called forth the sympathy of the whole party. The eagerness of the chase subsided; but so deep an impression did the maternal tenderness and unexpected self-devotion of the poor ourang outang make on the gentleman alluded to, whose heart was indeed formed in nature's gentlest mould, that he expressed the utmost remorse and pity, declaring that he would not go through the same scene again for all the world; nor did the tragical death of the animal cease to haunt his mind for many weeks; and he never afterwards recurred to it without emotion. The preserved skin of this devoted ourang outang is now to be seen in the Museum of the Zoological Society in London, an invaluable specimen.

"THE WAKULLA."

One of the remarkable curiosities of Middle Florida—is described by a writer in the Knickerbocker. After passing through marshes and wet hammocks, the visiting party at length reached the river and embarked in a boat upon its waters. He then goes on to say—

Picture to yourself a river leaping out of the earth at a single bound, and running off like mad in a current a quarter of a mile wide, and at the rate of four knots an hour! And although your imaginary painting will come far short of the real scene, yet it will excite in you something of the wonder with which one actually beholds the WAKULLA.

Our first sensation when we shot out of the reeds and bushes which skirt the margin, were those of great dizziness. The water is so pure and so clear, that we felt suspended in the air, and clung to the boat very much as we may suppose an æronaut finds himself clinging, when in his sublimest flights. The air above you is scarcely more transparent than the water below; the thin shadows of the clouds are thrown a hundred feet below you, and spread out at the bottom of the spring; and the image of your boat is carried down with perfect fidelity, and with its oars and rudders, looks like some huge animal crawling with outstretched legs along the ground. The modest fishes have no sort of privacy; and what is worse for them, though better for the fisherman, they have no safety. You can watch the hook as it sinks, and can accurately place the tempting bait within an inch of the abstracted and innocent nose. The smallest silver coin is perceptible at the very bottom, and some say that the date of the coin is discernable—but that I did not see.

The aperture through which the river rises is about fifty feet in diameter, the sides being formed of rough and jagged edges of limestone. It is supposed that the water comes in under these rocks from the north, and some think that it is the outlet of Lake Jackson, a large body of water that lies about twenty miles to the north. Nothing was certainly to be determined by an examination as superficial as was ours. The shadows cast by the rocks were too deep to be pierced by the eye, and all that we could make of it was a well about fifty feet in diameter, and a hundred and twenty feet in depth, pouring forth a flood of the purest water that ever blessed my eyes.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, October 13, 1841.

"Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

God has made it the duty of his children to ask the blessings of him which he designs to bestow. He has purposed to bring back a revolted world, and bring all men to obedience. And, therefore, he instructs his children through an Apostle that supplication, prayers, intercession, and giving of thanks should be made for all men, and in connection with this, has instructed them to labor for the conversion of sinners and the extension of his truth. If, therefore, the prayers offered for this object are not accompanied with consistent efforts for the same, they will be of little avail, and the person offering them must have the reflection that his prayers are offered in vain.—And if his eyes become enlightened by divine truth, he may be led to reflect that his prayers in the sight of God are hypocritical. And if he enter more deeply into the emotions of his own heart, he may find that, in truth, he has but little or no anxiety for the thing for which he has prayed. God can not consistently answer requests that are not in fact desired.

Many prayers have been offered for the purity and triumph of the church. In order for such prayers to be effectual, they must be accompanied with consistent efforts. In matters of every day's occurrence, if we wish men to believe us honest, we must give evidence of the fact by acts consistent with professions. If we say one thing is right, and do another the reverse of it, we contradict ourselves, and our professions must be regarded as hypocritical. So if we desire the prosperity of the church, we shall give evidence of this when our professions and practices agree, and not before. And those who hear our professions, and witness our conduct, will soon learn what importance to attach to any professions made. When we see men in public make long and zealous prayers for the triumph of truth, and in private or public see them lay plots for its destruction, we judge that they ask and receive not, because they ask amiss.

Again, men ask amiss in their prayers when they have some selfish end in view. The prosperity of the cause of truth may affect the personal convenience of some individuals. It may increase their reputation, or substance, more than their spirituality. By it, they may, perhaps, accomplish some of their selfish schemes, or gain some advantage over an enemy. And in making long and sanctimonious prayers, they may deceive the simple and win them to their interests; or, like the Pharisee, they love to pray when they can be seen and heard of men, while the secret places where the pious pour out their complaints to God never witness one tear or heart-felt prayer.

Men pray amiss when their prayers for the church are not preceded by a thorough examination of their own hearts and conduct, accompanied by devout confession of sin, and earnest entreaties for its forgiveness. The heart is unprepared for laboring or praying for the success of truth while it does not love the truth. One man is not prepared to pray for another till he himself has felt the divine influence on his own heart. Let a man first get his heart and feelings right,—let him bathe himself in the ocean of the Saviour's love—let the value of immortal souls be riveted on his mind—let him look at the influence the church is designed to have in the salvation of a ruined world—let him consider the evil tendencies of the introduction and continuance of error or strife in the church of the living God, and place these beside his own private convenience and selfish purposes, and see and feel the contrast, and he will be able to offer fervent and effectual prayers. And until he can lose himself in his zeal and love for the truth, and feel that all things else are as nothing when compared with the interests of religion, he is illy prepared to labor successfully in the vineyard of the Lord.

Every child of God, at times, if not always, feels desirous* of becoming more holy and less conformed to the world, and in his anxiety breathes forth the prayer for grace to make him thus, and on examination finds himself worse than before. He asks to be delivered from temptation, but is tempted still. He asks for counsel to guide his wayward steps, but wanders more. He asks for a pure heart, virtuous affections, and an entire conformity to the law of love, and still groans in bondage. All these things God has promised to those that love him, and is waiting to bestow them upon all men. But he can not consistently, unless connected with the prayers as an effort for the attainment of them. If a man would be holy, he must labor to suppress wrong emotions and cultivate right ones. If he would be delivered from temptation, he must not run in the way of it. If he would be entirely subject to the law of love, he must cultivate holy feelings in his heart, and cherish the holy flame in his soul. Otherwise he will ask and receive not.

"None of these things move me."

It sometimes happens to Christians in the present day to be reviled and persecuted for religion's sake. The spirit of persecution, which first raged against Christ and Christians, sometimes breaks forth against those who live Godly in Christ Jesus now. The Apostle to the Gentiles, in view of what he might suffer for the sake of Jesus, felt a perfect composure—primitive Christians took the spoiling of their goods patiently, thereby giving evidence of their confidence in the veracity of God. Under persecutions and trials the Christian has Christ for an example, and his word assures them that if they will reign with him in glory they must first be partakers of his sufferings.—The fundamental principles of the gospel are in contrariety to those that govern men of worldly minds. And if a man will submit himself to the former, he will suffer from the malice of those who adopt the latter. And if a man can not with composure suffer for truth's sake—if he cannot patiently bear the slanders and persecutions of ungodly men—if he cannot exult in the truth and in his own integrity, while his enemies are seeking to destroy his reputation or defame his character, he exhibits a lack of that piety that is so beautifully expressed in the language of an Apostle: "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto me that I might win Christ, and be found in him."

Happy is that man whose love and zeal for the truth makes him a mark for the arrows of Satan and his emissaries. If he fall a victim to their rage, he enjoys a martyr's crown. If he withstand all their buffetings, he will come out as gold purified, and refined. And if he patiently endure whatever the enemies of truth and righteousness cast upon him, he will find that the grace of God is sufficient for him, and that "all things shall work together for good to those that love God, and are the called according to his purpose." While he stands on the truth, trusting in the veracity of the great Jehovah, he can bid defiance to all his enemies. And while he is suffering all that their malicious ingenuity can invent, he can triumph over them, knowing that their evil designs shall prove their own ruin, while they will bring him into closer communion with God, and make his "peace as a river, and his righteousness as the waves of the sea."

TRIAL OF McLEOD.—This trial commenced at Utica on Monday of last week. The examination of witnesses, and reading testimony taken by commission in Canada, occupied the entire week. The arguments of counsel were to be given on Monday of this week, and the verdict of the Jury was expected on Tuesday. The evidence in the case is very contradictory. Several witnesses swore positively as to his presence at the destruction of the Caroline, and of his having "Yankee Blood" on his sword. On the other hand, several swore positively that he was not present, and that he lodged at Stamford, some four miles below Chippewa. The following is a list of the Jury:

Charles O. Curtis,	of Paris.
Edmund Allen,	" Augusta.
John Mott,	" Sangerfield.
Elisha Brush,	" Rome.
Ira Byington,	" Camden.
Wm. Carpenter,	" Kirkland.
Isaiah Thurber,	" Utica.
Peter Sleight,	" Westmoreland
Asher Allen,	" Augusta.
Seymour Carrier,	" Steuben.
Esek Allen,	" Floyd.
Volney Elliott,	" Kirkland.

Hon. Willis Hall, Attorney General of this State, S. C. Hawley, of Buffalo, and J. L. Woods, of Lockport, were counsel on the part of the prosecution. Joshua A. Spencer, of Utica, A. C. Bradley, and H. Gardner, of Lockport, were counsel for the prisoner.

RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT.—The trains of cars on the Western Rail Road, in Russel, seven miles west of Westfield, in a part of the road so circuitous that the track could be seen but a short distance, met with a dreadful concussion. Both trains were thrown into a mass of ruins, and several passengers were severely mutilated. Six or eight of the sufferers it is thought must die. From a card published by the passengers, great blame is attached to the managers of the cars going west.

Hon. John C. Spencer has been appointed Secretary of War, vice Hon. John Bell, resigned. He has accepted the appointment and gone to Washington to enter upon the duties of his office.

For the Register.

The Commencement of the Sabbath.

NUMBER 4.

In this No. I am to inquire into the practice of the Jews respecting the commencement of the Sabbath. And in the investigation of this part of the subject, I shall state what I have found to have been the practice, as related by sacred and profane writers, without stopping to give authors, taking it for granted that if I do not speak the truth I shall be confuted by my opponents.

And first, the Jews reckoned their days from the commencement of one evening to the commencement of another, as mentioned in Gen.; "The evening and the morning were the first day." The time of the sun being above the horizon, was divided into twelve equal parts, called hours. This period of time, being longer in one part of the year than in the other, those hours would differ in length in different seasons of the year; being longer in summer than in winter. The middle of the day was, however, called the sixth hour, the antecedent and subsequent hours being longer or shorter, according to the season. Hours are not mentioned, I think, until after the captivity. Before that time we read of the morning, heat of the day, mid-day, noon, cool of the day, and evening. The evening consisted of two parts. The first commenced about the ninth hour, corresponding with our 3 o'clock; the second about the going down of the sun. The paschal lamb was to be killed between these two evenings. The night (before the captivity) was divided into three parts, called the first, middle, and morning watch. In the time of our Savior it was divided into four watches, the first was from sunset to nine, the second from nine to twelve, the third from twelve to three, the fourth from three to day.

The week dates its origin from the beginning of time, when God rested the seventh after the creative operations of the six preceding days. The week seems not to be a natural division of time, but one of positive precept, and from the fact, that the greater part of the world even in the days of Christ had some distinct traditions, not only of the weekly division but of the seventh day being sacred, is a strong argument against any change of the day on account of the great confusion it would cause. Having made these remarks, which appeared necessary, I return to notice the Jews' practice of commencing the Sabbath.

In the afternoon of the sixth day, preparations were made for the Sabbath. They ceased from labor at the offering of the evening sacrifice, which was a little past three o'clock, and all were employed in getting ready to commence the Sabbath at the setting of the sun. They washed their faces, hands, feet, &c., trimmed their beard and prepared victuals for the Sabbath, (as no cooking might be done on that day,) so that the day of rest might be commenced at the appointed time, which was at sunset on sixth day. A little before sunset the Sabbath candle was lighted in each house as a token that the Sabbath was just to commence. At dark a supper rather better than usual was served, when the head of the family, taking a cup of wine, and after repeating Gen. ii. 1, 2, 3, and blessing God, drank its contents, while the family followed his example. In this manner, and at this time, the Sabbath began; and at the same time, and nearly in the same manner, it ended on the seventh. Thus we see that the Jews commenced the Sabbath on the eve following the sixth day.

In accordance with the Sabbath, also, did the feast of the Passover begin. Soon as it was dark after the end of the 14th day, and when the 15th commenced, the Passover-table was spread, and from that time to the setting of the next sun was holy time—unlawful to do any work. But one thing should be noticed: As the 14th day of the month might happen on either of the days of the week, consequently the Passover might happen on the weekly Sabbath, and when it did thus happen, the people were not allowed to carry the lambs home until the Sabbath was over, but waited with them in the courts of the temple until darkness commenced, or the 15th, or another day had began. Here then we have additional evidence of the important truth that the Sabbath does begin at the setting of the sun of the 6th day of the week. We have the concurring testimony of the Bible and the practice of the Jews. Surely, then, we should not think lightly of so important a subject.

But farther, we have the testimony of Jews now living that this was, and now is the practice, and can we deny it? If we were called upon to prove which was the 7th day of the week, we should go to the Jews and offer their practice as sufficient reason that we believe we were in the possession of the right day. Now if they have handed down the right day, they have doubtless its right commencement, both of which were given to them by God.

And the same proof we have to offer both for the right day of the week, and the time of its commencement. And now believing that I have adduced sufficient proof to substantiate the point that the 7th day, or Sabbath, begins at the setting of the sun after the 6th day, I shall leave the subject for the present, wishing, however, if in error I may be convinced, and that some more able advocate may step forward to defend and maintain this very important point of our holy religion.

SHERMAN S. GRISWOLD.
Shiloh, N. J., Oct. 6, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

ARRIVAL OF THE ACADIA.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Acadia, at Boston, we have London dates to the evening of Sept. 18th.

Daniel Bixby, Esq., of Lowell, passenger in the Acadia, was bearer of despatches from the American Minister at the court of St. James.

Sir Charles Bagot has been appointed Governor General of Canada, in place of Lord Sydenham, resigned, and since deceased.

England and the United States.—In the British House of Commons, Sept. 17th, on motion for going into committee of supply, Lord John Russell, (one of the Ex-Ministers,) addressed the House, and in the course of his remarks, alluded to the pending differences between England and the United States. He said,—

The question in dispute between this country and America, does bear in some of its aspects a character which I should gladly see changed. When my friend, the late Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, offered his opinion on the subject to the American Secretary of State, communications arose between them which left it clear that the Executive Government of this country, and the Government of the United States, were agreed as to the character and extent of the difference subsisting between them, and sure I am, that no impartial and intelligent person, looking at the circumstances of the case, can do otherwise than come to the conclusion that the matter in question must be regarded in the light of a difference between nation and nation, and in no respect of private wrong. It, however, happened that the tribunals of the State of New York viewed the question in a different light, and such a view as, if persevered in, could not fail, in my opinion, to prove destructive of all amicable relations between independent countries. If questions of that nature are to be left to the ordinary tribunals which administer justice internally amongst the subjects or citizens of a state,—if the two Governments of the countries, where such unhappy occurrences arise, are not to settle the matter according to the received principles of international law, then, I conceive there must be an end to that understanding upon which amicable relations can alone be founded.

I have no hesitation in saying, that if any court of law assumes to itself the power, or the right of determining such questions, a proceeding of that nature must have the effect of placing the amicable relations previously subsisting between the two countries, in the utmost peril. Considering, then, that this question is one which ought to be settled by the two Executive Governments, and by them alone. I hold it to be highly improper that any thing of this sort should be brought under the decision or consideration of any of the ordinary tribunals of either country. If at the commencement of the Spanish war Sir Graham Moore—previous to the formal declaration of hostilities—had captured, suppose a Spanish frigate, and that he was arrested, it would be equally as competent to the Spanish tribunals to consider him amenable to their authority, and try him for piracy, as it was to the New York tribunals to hold a British subject answerable to them for the conduct pursued with reference to the Caroline steam-vessel.

Between my noble friend the late Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Webster, there happily existed an entire accordance of opinion as to the capture of the Caroline, and I am sure that the President of the United States will soon see the necessity of preventing the occurrence of similar events in future. If there be any intention of maintaining amicable relations with this country, I am sure it will be felt as fully by the American Government as it has been by the Government of England, that proceedings of the nature of that to which I have just been alluding, can not be repeated, and ought not to be persevered in. The Governments of both countries being thus agreed, there cannot, I imagine, arise between them any cause of war.—There cannot, I should hope, be any cause of difference between two countries where there so evidently exists a strong desire to maintain peace.

Sir Robert Peel, the new Prime Minister, replied to Lord John Russell.

With respect to our relations with the United States, (he said,) I view the existing state of them, as the noble lord, with great anxiety. It appears to be so manifestly the interest of these two great countries, united together by so many ties, by the community of language, and the community of interest to maintain peace,—so little can be gained by war, that the wound which one inflicts upon the other, is reflected back on the hand that makes it, and I cannot but hope that the prevailing good sense of the community will influence the Government of each; (if the Government of each wants such adventitious aid,) and that, upon the whole, the result will be the maintenance of amicable relations. I say no more; that is my sincere desire. Yet at the same time, I feel also the obligation of making no concession affecting the independence or the honor of this country, for the purpose of purchasing temporary tranquility. (Loud cheering.) Now I approach the consideration of those questions in respect to which the controversy arises between the noble lord and me.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE ONE OF THE SONS OF LOUIS PHILLIPPE.

Paris, Sept. 13.—An attempt was made to assassinate the Duke d'Aumale to-day. He was at the head of his regiment, proceeding along the faubourg St. Antoine to Neuilly, where a grand banquet was prepared by the King and Queen for him and his comrades in arms, when a man dressed in a blouse started from a cabaret and discharged a pistol shot at him. It is said that the shot was directed at the Duke d'Aumale, because he was a little in advance of his royal brothers; but the Dukes of Orleans, Nemours, and Montpensier were with him, and the assassin might have aimed at the Duke of Orleans as the heir to the throne. Fortunately the shot did not take effect, but the horse of General Vaillant was killed, and it is said that the General was wounded in the knee.—The assassin was about 30 years of age, and no doubt a member of the secret societies that have lately been creating disturbances in Paris, but as yet no particulars have transpired respecting him.

Groups of low characters paraded the Place de Chatelet and several streets of old Paris, uttering seditious cries, on Saturday and Sunday nights. Cries of "A bas Louis Phillippe, [illegible] Guizot, we must have blood!" were heard. [illegible] was employed [illegible] the sergens de ville [illegible] the mob was dispersed without [illegible] taking place.

Count de [illegible] ordered to proceed to [illegible].

The name of the assassin is [illegible].

CHINA AND INDIA.

The overland Mail from Bombay arrived at London on Saturday [illegible]. The papers are [illegible] extracts from Canton papers to the [illegible] of May, only three days later, however, than the news received here by the [illegible], but somewhat different. At the instance of Lin, Keshen was sent to Pekin in chains, there to be put to death by the most excruciating tortures. His family and relations were to be exterminated, and the country for miles around his birth place, to be laid desolate. A ship [illegible] with provisions for the expedition, [illegible] direct for Chusan. [illegible] Stead, R. N., being [illegible] was murdered by the Mandarins. The [illegible] had been [illegible] being sold for less [illegible] above the customary prices, and no goods being purchased in return. Nearly thirty thousand of the flower of the Chinese troops, said to be much superior to those which had before met the [illegible], were quartered in Canton, and [illegible] of a fort [illegible].

Sir Henry Pottinger and Sir W. [illegible] left Bombay [illegible] on the 17th of May. [illegible] As the [illegible] year, the port of Canton will first of all be blockaded, Amoy will be taken possession of, Chusan or Ningpo occupied, and as soon as the navigation of the Yellow Sea is open, which it will not be for six months, the plenipotentiary will proceed in person to Pekin, accompanied by the greater part of the squadron as far as the ships of such burden can be navigated in safety, and will probably have his first interview with the Emperor under the sixty-eight pound batteries of the Nemesis, Phlegethon, Proserpine, and Pluto iron steamers.

There appears to be an absolute certainty of the trade being suspended for a very long time, and, as this must have a considerable influence on prices of tea in this country, we annex a statement of the quantity of this article exported under the extraordinary convention of Captain Elliot with the local authorities, including the shipment made since the 1st of October last:—Black 15,914,721 lbs.; Green, 2,262,799.

This, with about six to eight millions more, being what the tonnage available in England would carry, appears all that we are likely to get until the final settlement of the dispute, be that when it may.

News of the Day.

OFFICIAL.

TO THE HON. S. R. HOBBIE,
Acting Postmaster General.

SIR:—Information having been received in a form entitled to attention, that the Postmasters at , Pennsylvania, and , Ohio, have so far violated the obligations which they impliedly assumed on taking office under my Administration, of abstaining from any active partizanship, or in any way connecting their offices with party politics, or using them for party purposes, I have to request that inquiries shall be instantly instituted into their conduct, and that if the charges against them be found to be true, they be immediately turned out of office, and citizens appointed in their places who will otherwise conduct themselves.—The Post Office Department, in all its operations, should be conducted for the single purpose of accomplishing the important objects for which it was established. It should in an especial manner, so far as is practicable, be disconnected from party politics. It was established for specified purposes of equal importance to every citizen. To convert it into an engine of party, to be used for party purposes, is to [illegible] it the instrument of the most alarming evils. It should be, as it is, and ever [illegible] every neighborhood, the purity of its administration, and necessarily of its agents, should be particularly guarded. For a Deputy Postmaster to use his franking privilege (a privilege bestowed upon him for the sole purpose of exonerating him from oppressive charges in the necessary correspondence of his office) in scattering over the country pamphlets, newspapers, and proceedings to influence elections, is to outrage all propriety, and must not for a day be tolerated. Let this be felt by the politicians. I should be happy if one or two examples shall be found sufficient to correct an evil which has so extensively prevailed.

I will take this occasion, also, to add for your instruction, that the appointment to, and continuance in the office of postmaster of any one editing a political newspaper, is in the highest degree objectionable. It involves most of the consequences above stated—it introduces politics in the post office—it diminishes the revenue—and confers privileges on one editor which all cannot enjoy. In a word, it is my fixed purpose, as far as in me lies, to separate the Post Office Department from politics, and bring about that reform which the country has so loudly demanded.

JOHN TYLER.

September [illegible], 1841.

New Orleans, Sept. 22, 1841.

The yellow fever continues to rage with [illegible] and carry off the majority of the persons which it attacks. The [illegible] has never been [illegible] which [illegible] are of no avail now.

The [illegible] of this dreadful malady [illegible] It is [illegible] to mark the ravages of the fatal epidemic [illegible] many of our most respectable citizens and old residents have been hurried to the tomb, and many are at this moment in a very precarious state. The disease [illegible] assumed a somewhat milder type during the last two days, but a sudden change of wind which took place last night will do much harm. [illegible] The total number of deaths for the past week was [illegible] were by yellow fever.—[illegible]

Mysterious Occurrence.—A valuable carriage, worth perhaps five or six hundred dollars, was, a few days since, discovered in the bushes near the farm of Mr. [illegible], situated several miles out on the [illegible] road. It was entirely empty [illegible] were no horses attached to it [illegible] and nothing was [illegible] the discovery of [illegible] it was left, or [illegible] except the name [illegible] which we did not [illegible] where it was manufactured [illegible]. The desertion of a [illegible] property in the most [illegible] without apparent [illegible] suspicion that [illegible] played with the owner [illegible]—[illegible].

Rapid Traveling.—[illegible] known that the New York S[illegible] during the progress of the McLeod trial, has [illegible] an extra train of cars to leave Utica at 1 o'clock, P. M. each day, with [illegible] of the trial. Messrs. [illegible] of this city employed [illegible] over the express [illegible] the latter part in season for the [illegible] boats.

On Monday, Mr. Otis Blundick brought over the express report in a sulky, over the turnpike, in 55 minutes. On Tuesday he drove the same route with a pair of horses before a light wagon in 50 minutes, and on Wednesday, in the same manner, in 43 minutes! The distance traveled, from the Cor[illegible] House in Utica, to the Boats is about 16 miles. Such speed leaves Rail Roads and Steam Boats in the lurch.—Ex. Journal.

A. C. Brown, T. J. Green, and W. C. Francisco, were severally arraigned on Tuesday last before the Herkimer County General Sessions, on the charge of robbing the Herkimer County Bank of $72,000 and plead guilty to the charge. They will receive their sentences at the close of the term.—Exchange.

A slave named John was executed on the 1st at Portsmouth, Va. for the attempted murder of two ladies, named Mrs. Lambert and Mrs. Cooper, for the sake of obtaining their money. The Norfolk Herald says he made a full confession under the gallows, which he prefaced with the following emphatic warning: "You see me here, and I will tell you what brought me here: It was Rum!"

Concluding his simple statement of the particulars of his crime, by admonishing the colored people to take warning from his example, to avoid the foul fiend, alcohol, and all violations of the laws. He repeatedly proclaimed the justice of his sentence, and declared his belief that his peace was made with the great Judge of all human actions.

A respectable merchant, named Lewis Cornelius, died a few days since at Milford, Pa. At the time of his decease, he was fifty-five years of age, six feet three inches in height, and weighed six hundred and eighty-five pounds.

Packet boats have commenced running between Syracuse and Utica, having reduced the fare to $1. On the railroad it is $2.

Ebenezer Jackson, a well dressed colored man, was recently forcibly ejected from the cars on the Boston and Lynn rail road. Three other passengers, Dr. Mann, J. P. Bishop, and C. P. Bossom, who undertook to remonstrate against the outrage, were treated in the same unjust and disgraceful manner.

A gentleman was robbed last week of his pocket-book, in the cars between Utica and Albany, containing $150. Travelers must have an eye to the pickpockets that now swarm the country.

It is said that the Jews of the Holy Land have increased during the last five years, from 2,000 to more than 40,000.

During the past slaughtering season, 50,000 hogs and 5,000 head of cattle, were packed at Alton, Ill.

It is reported that the President has agreed upon a plan of a bank, or fiscal agent, which he will submit to Congress in December, if desired or permitted.

The public debt of Texas is $5,827,007 57. The revenue is about $2,000,000.

Mr. David How, of Haverhill, Mass., long a merchant there, now aged 85, was in the battle of White Plains, and with the troops which captured the Hessians at Trenton. He has two Hessian guns which he took on that occasion.

It is calculated that there are in the United States 14,012 Lawyers, 1,680 Clergymen, and 10,322 Physicians exclusive of quacks.

Five synagogues for Israelites are now open in New York. They number nearly 10,000 in this city. Many of them are Germans, who have recently been exiled here, by the oppressive laws which exist against that race in some portions of their own country.

The Leopold Society in Europe, established for the purpose of Catholic missions in America, remitted to this country year before last, according to Popish authority, $63,000; in 1835, $70,000.

Free Blacks.—It appears by the late census returns that the State of Maryland has more free blacks within her borders, than any other State in the Union. The number of free blacks in seven of the States, are as follows: Maryland, 62,820; New York, 50,027; Virginia, 49,812; Pennsylvania, 47,854; Louisiana, 24,368; Ohio, 17,342; North Carolina, 23,732.

More Mormon Troubles.—The Warsaw (Ill.,) Signal states that at a recent military muster at Montrose, a difficulty arose between the Mormons and the citizens.—Both joined indiscriminately in the training, until the troops were paraded, when Joe Smith and Gen. Bennett came over from Nauvoo, and attempted to inspect them.—Upon this, one Mr. Kilbourne invited the citizens to withdraw from the ranks—which was accordingly done. The Mormons then insulted them, causing much excitement, and at the time our informant left, a row was anticipated.

A Veteran.—Gen. Edward Paine, one of the earliest settlers of Northern Ohio, died at his residence in Painesville, on the 28th ult., at the advanced age of 96. Gen. Paine was one of the first to engage in our revolutionary struggle, he led on the first company that broke ground off Dorchester heights, soon after which Gen. Gage evacuated Boston. He was stationed on Governor's Island when the American army retreated out of New York, and his company covered the retreating army.

Another 'Temperance Lecture.'—A Coroner's inquest was held over the body of Miss Ann Eliza Lisle, of West Utica, by A. A. Barnes, on the 19th ult., and the verdict found by the jury was, that she came to her death by taking laudanum, intentionally to destroy her own life, and that said destruction was in consequence of ill treatment by her intemperate mother.

The Cause.—The Boston Mercantile Journal says that after Britton had committed the horrible murder at Cambridge, which we noticed some days ago, a bottle belonging to him was found, which would contain a little more than half a pint, and containing about a spoonful of gin. This led to the suspicion that he had been drinking spirits before he committed the dreadful deed! It has subsequently been shown by his own voluntary confession, that he procured this gin, on the Saturday evening previous to the murder, while abroad on liberty—and that before he committed the deed, he drank it for the purpose of nerving himself up to the commission of the fatal act.

Murder and Suicide.—A horrible case of murder and suicide recently occurred at Delaware, Ohio. A German, named Gotleib Keen, a tailor by trade, shot his son in the most deliberate manner, making him stand up, and placing the muzzle of a gun close to his breast. He then reloaded his gun, and discharged it against his own bosom by means of the ramrod.

Iowa Snakes.—A gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Farland,) has so completely domesticated five large rattlesnakes, that he can handle them with perfect safety, and what is more astonishing, he will, with as much indifference as a horse jockey would open the mouth of a horse, take one of his snakeship pupils in his hands, and open its mouth. He does this, as he says, in order that the spectator can see that there is no deception, and to expose the serpent's fangs.—St. Louis Bulletin.

The School Question.—We are told that this question is mooted in the committees appointed to make nominations, and that the advocates of sectarian schools are rejected. This is as it should be. But whatever may be the result in the committees, we trust that the citizens, when they come to vote, will consider our excellent public school system as worth more than party names. Men who mean to take care of the great interest of the city and State, should vote for no supporter of the disorganizing measures of the Romish priests.—Jour. of Com.

A Successful Experiment with Oil.—Mr. John Burd, residing at No. 15 Chesnut street, was lately awakened from his sleep by an excruciating pain in his ear. It was evident that the cause of his agony was the intrusion of some insect into that delicate organ. A fellow-boarder, Mr. Converse, who had seen an account a few days before, of the successful application of oil in a similar case, in Baltimore, procured a quantity, and poured it into the affected ear. A good effect was almost immediately experienced: the painful sensation subsided, and in the course of ten or fifteen minutes a large sized mosquito was extracted from the ear. The pouring of oil into the ear in all such cases, is a never-failing remedy. It kills the insect by closing its pores, and as the oil flows out of the ear again, it generally carries the body out with it. A resort to the remedy will relieve the sufferer of most intolerable pain.—Phil. Led.

The Helderberg War.—The difficulties in this matter seem to have arisen from these circumstances. A large tract of land on each side of the Hudson, descended to the Van Rensselaer family by strict entail, until after the Revolution. The feudal tenure by which the occupants hold the land, continues and consists of a fixed annual rent, commonly payable in kind—as grain, fowls, hay, &c., with the right on the part of the patroon to a quarter of the purchase money, when the tenant chooses to sell.

The late patroon refrained from collecting the rent from unfortunate tenants, until large arrearages became due. At the time of his death, he, by will, charged his estate with a certain debt, and appointed trustees to collect the arrearages, and with them, to pay the debt. They were, however, to use a proper discrimination between the poor and those who were able to pay.

The only power which the present patroon possesses, is, to compromise with the tenants respecting the tenure by which they will in future hold the lands. For this purpose, he has offered to give a quit-claim of his right for a moderate sum, and thus settle the controversy; but the tenants, being persuaded that they have a right to hold the lands without the payment of rent, have refused this offer. And the authority of the State is called upon to execute warrants of distress, for the rents unquestionably due.—Jour. of Com.

The Mob at New-Albany, as we learn from the Philanthropist, like that in Cincinnati, in a most dastardly manner, selected the helpless colored people as their victims. The crime for which the vengeance of these patriotic conservators of decorum was inflicted upon them, as appears from the account, was that of associating, to the number of sixty or seventy, in a Sabbath school, under the instruction of white teachers! The colored church in which the school had been kept, was set on fire, and long and loud were the shouts of triumph. The very sound reason assigned for these doings was, that it was disreputable for white persons to teach blacks or mulattoes!!!

Does the public sentiment of New Albany, with its numerous churches, and its theological seminary, forbid the teaching of colored people in their Sabbath Schools?—Watchman of the Valley.

The Patriot Prisoners.—We make the following extract from a London letter in the Journal of Commerce, dated August 18th. We mentioned some months ago, that Sir George Arthur had recommended the indulgence to the "patriots" as some call them—"brigands" according to others—which appears to have been granted.

"The intelligence from New South Wales is chiefly interesting from the accounts derived relative to the fate of those citizens of the United States who took part in the late Canadian rebellion. The Hobart Town Courier of the 18th of April, says: 'His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, proceeded to Greenpond and communicated to the Canadian prisoners the substance of a dispatch which he had received from the Secretary of State, in answer to a recommendation for a mitigation of their sentence, which had been forwarded home soon after their arrival in the colony. We were wrong in stating that they were immediately to procure tickets of leave; they will not receive them until Friday next, which will be two years from the time of their being landed there.' It appears that Lord John Russell, the Colonial Secretary, submitted the proposition to the Governor General of Canada, who acquiesced in the indulgence, but was opposed to their return 'to their old haunts.' With a ticket of leave there will be no difficulty in getting on board some American vessel."

The concluding sentence may lead to a false conclusion. The "tickets of leave" were granted on the recommendation of Sir George Arthur, as we were informed by that distinguished gentleman. These will not, however, afford them any encouragement to escape, as they will be on their parole for one year, after which, provided their conduct be good during that time, they will probably have an unconditional pardon; whereas, if they escape, they will be subject to recapture, and of course to increased severity of punishment.

Speck of War.—The Westfield Chautauque Messenger of the 22d ult., says: "We noticed recently the visit of Capt. Knapp, of the Revenue Cutter, to this place. We understand that while here, he received information that his presence was needed at Cleaveland, whither he hastened with all despatch. On Monday of this week, the western stage brought the report that on his arrival at Cleaveland, Captain Knapp found the British new war-steamer engaged in taking soundings and surveying the passages to the harbor. Captain Knapp hailed the steamer several times, but receiving no reply, he fired a gun over the stern of the steamer, and another over her bow, hailing her after each discharge, but still receiving no answer. He then sent a ball right into her hull, when he was answered—not by a return shot, as might have been expected, but—by the application of steam to her engine, and her immediate departure. This looks as if the the British had an eye on Cleaveland, in the case of a war. The promptness and courage of Capt. Knapp, on this occasion, mark him as an officer of the right stamp for efficient service, and afford some ground for the belief we have heard expressed, that he is destined to be the second "Hero of Lake Erie"—if there shall be need for another. It should be remembered that the steamer is armed with Paixhan guns, a single shot from which might have blown the cutter "sky high."

The Alexandria Gazette says:—"Some week ago two of the negro slaves of Dr. Rust, of Fauquier Co., Va., ran off, taking with them his carriage and horses. It is supposed from the description, that the carriage found north of Brownsville road in Pennsylvania, (an account of which will be found in another column,) is the property of Dr. Rust, abandoned there by the runaways.

Blossburgh Coal.—The Chemung Canal as well as the Seneca and Cayuga, may now be considered no longer as "Paupers" or burdens to the Erie Canal. The transportation of the Blossburgh coal is already carried on so extensively as to redeem them from this reproach, and to render them a source of profit to the State. Upwards of three thousand tons have gone to New York city this season, and it is found so much superior even to the Liverpool bituminous coal, that it takes the preference.—Rochester Democrat.

TWO MEN KILLED AND SIX WOUNDED!—Fatal Accident on board the Steam Frigate Fulton.—Yesterday afternoon, a 64 lb. gun burst on board this steamer while off the Hook, killing two persons instantly, and wounding six others very badly. The names of the killed are Samuel Snowarm, seaman, and Joseph Philbrook, ordinary seaman. The wounded are, Russel Smith, carpenter's mate, Joshua Wyman, quarter gunner, Levi Lawson, Thos. Smith, Rich'd Bell, and John Cooper, seaman, all badly.

The explosion did great damage,—to the fore part of the vessel giving it the appearance of a perfect wreck. The starboard steam-chimney was blown down. She is now moored at the Navy Yard.

The gun broke in two pieces outside of the carriage, and split in the breech—the two parts of the breech taking different directions, one hurled on the starboard side—(the gun was on the larboard)—the other went forty feet aft carrying away the dispensary and Purser's store room, and iron stancheons, and then staving in both starboard steam chimneys, which added to the horror of the scene by filling the ship with steam. The spar deck is all knocked up. Lieut. Strong was thrown fifteen feet in the air, falling on the hammock netting without material injury.

The utmost care was taken by Captain Newton, Lieut. Chaton, (the first Lieut.,) and all the officers of the ship, to prevent an accident which the officers greatly feared.

The officers kept the men back, placing themselves between the gun and the men, and then fired the gun with a slow match. In examining the scene of the disaster, it is only astonishing that more were not killed, although there was not a man within 20 feet of the gun on its discharge.—N. Y. Express.

"How it puts money in the pocket."—"A certain butcher in Kennebec," says a correspondent of the Augusta Temperance Gazette, "a few weeks since, told me he had many good customers among the Washingtonians, who had never before been able to purchase meat; and that one had just paid him for meat had nine years since. He had dunned for it frequently, but at last gave it up, but now got it without asking."

Hogs vs. Whales; or the land against water, as we should say if we were writing the title of a book. It is a matter of no small importance to the monarch of the deep that a process has been discovered by which spermaceti oil and candles are made of beef's tallow and hog's lard, of as good a quality as can be made from his majestic's own blubber. The principle operation is performed we believe by means of hydraulic pressure.—J. of Com.

A Short Scene in the Drama of Life.—Yesterday when we were in the Court of Special Sessions, three little boys, aged 9, 11 and 13 years, were brought before Judge Copeland. They were charged by watchman Barkeloo with having been found by him when on duty the night previous, sleeping in a box in front of Mr. Cooper's store, in Fulton street.

The story which these little vagrants told if true, possesses much interest, and shows the necessity of vigilance on the part of our magistrates, to prevent evil of a young population growing up without any restraint, and therefore, more easily led into vicious practices. All said they had lost their parents by death. One of them, two weeks since, another about three weeks, the other, a year; and since that time, being without any home or friends to provide for them, they had slept at night under sheds—in boxes—on stoops—in stables, and had begged or worked during the day, as their necessities demanded or opportunities admitted. Young as they were, a sympathy in suffering appeared to have linked them together, with stronger bonds than wealth or the world's honor could purchase; and the manner in which each told his own tale, and at the same time, appeared to have an interest in the fate of others, made the whole scene thrillingly impressive.

The poor little fellows seemed not to be conscious of their position before the Court, and expressed their thankfulness in their looks when the Judge ordered them to be taken care of and provided for.—Brooklyn News.

Shocking Death.—On the morning of the muster of this Regiment at Pembroke, 28th inst., after one of the companies from this town had finished their breakfast at Tilton's tavern, Mr Calvin Simpson, of P. aged about 35, a man of censurable habits, in attempting to help himself at the table while alone in the room, failed to swallow the beef he was eating, and choked, and died almost instantly.—A physician was called in quickly, but he was dead before assistance could be given.—Concord Courier.

Cause for Fainting.—A young lady in Philadelphia fainted in the market. She was taken into the open air, and the customary applications of cold water, &c. were made, but she did not recover. An observing by-stander then noticed that she had a very small waist, and cut the lacing of her corsets, when she soon revived. If she had followed the last French fashion, she would have been safer. We hope our readers will caution the young misses of their acquaintance, not to continue the unfashionable, vulgar and dangerous habit of tight-lacing.—Youth's Cabinet.

A Cape Cod Squash.—We saw weighed and measured one day last week, the largest squash "IN ALL CREATION"—at least the largest one we "ever heard tell of," and we boldly defy any of the great farmers, north or south, east or west of the Old Colony, who judge so meanly of our fertile soils, to show a nobler, richer specimen of the Squash Family. Our squash is of the Marrow Fat species—was raised in the garden of our neighbor, Mr. Cornelius Crocker—and hark ye, it weighs one hundred and six pounds, and measures in circumference five feet six inches,—being three inches larger in girth than a flour barrel! Beat this if you can.—Barns. Pat.

Such a Little Man.—One of the most singular freaks or phenomena of nature, that we have ever seen, is now in Harrington's Museum, Boston. Mr. Washburn, from Vermont, a man 17 years old, 16 inches high, and weighs 23 pounds. He is truly a great curiosity in a small bundle.

Near Catching a Tartar.—We are informed that Mr Tomlinson, superintendent of the "Anti-Percussion Mill," at the Lower Falls, recently had a log brought to him, which appeared to be defective in the middle. To ascertain whether it could be made any thing of, he ordered it to be divided in the middle, when it was found there was a hole in the centre. Still anxious to make something of the log, Mr. T. thrust his arm into the hole for the purpose of testing its depth, when, on hauling out what he supposed to be decayed wood, he found himself clutching an enormous rattlesnake. It is needless to say that he dropped his snakeship immediately, and retired to a safe distance, till he could learn somewhat of his disposition. A box was brought finally, and clapped over the reptile, and he is now in safe keeping.—Rochester Advertiser.

They are a Stupid Race.—Of the many cunning contrivances to escape from slavery, we think the following is about the most shrewd we have heard yet. Two slaves in a certain County in Virginia, ran away with one of their master's horses. They started very early in the morning, in the following fashion. One of the slaves fastened a strong rope round the other's body, tied him to the saddle, and drove off. When met and questioned, the rider answered, "That black rascal undertook to run away from massa. I've caught him, and am taking him home, quick step. I guess he be for running away again in a hurry, after massa's had the cooking of him." This failed not to elicit warm approbation, accompanied with hospitable offers of refreshment for himself and his horse.

When arrived at a convenient place, the slaves exchanged places; the rider submitting to the rope in his turn, while the other performed his part to admiration; and, like him, received assistance and praise for his honest zeal in his master's service.

Thus they journeyed "in tye," till they reached Pennsylvania, when the rope was no longer necessary. Thence they passed over into Canada.—National A. S. Standard.

Arrest of a Great Forger.—It will be remembered that Brown, Brothers & Co. and Edgar Corrill, jr. were recently swindled out of upwards of $50,000 by the forging of a draft, in the name of John P. Caldwell. Col. Monroe Edwards was arrested at Philadelphia on the 2d inst. on suspicion of being the forger. His detection was procured by comparison of the hand writing of the draft and letters which were in the hands of Mr. Lewis Tappan. It appears that Edwards came to this city some fifteen months ago, and represented himself a Southern slaveholder who had brought his slaves, over 200 in number, to Cincinnatti, and emancipated them, and professed to be going to England in order to secure the interposition of the British government to prevent the introduction of slaves from Cuba into Texas. He applied to Mr. Tappan to raise $5000 for his expenses. Mr. Tappan had wisely sent to Dr. Bailey of Cincinnati to ascertain the truth of the emancipation story, which was found to be false, and of course no money was forthcoming. On being apprised of this fact by Mr. Tappan, he wrote a most abusive letter to that gentleman, and went off to London. This was the identical letter which finally secured his arrest.

There were found $14,000 in the trunks, and a clue obtained to more. Another person who mysteriously absconded from Philadelphia on the arrest of Edwards, is also being pursued on suspicion of being engaged in the scheme.

Grogan Liberated.—We have been permitted to see a letter received by a gentleman in this city yesterday morning, dated Kingston, October 6th, stating that Sir Richard Jackson immediately on hearing of the arrest of Grogan in the state of Vermont by British soldiers, instituted an inquiry into the transaction, and sent instructions to the law officers of the Crown, if it should appear that Grogan had been arrested within the territory of the United States, to set him at liberty forthwith. By a despatch received at Kingston from the Solicitor General on the evening of the date of the letter, it appears that the illegality of the arrest had been ascertained, & that Grogan was set at liberty on the 4th instant.—Oneida Whig.

Two strangers recently visited Bunker's Hill, and ascended to the top of the Monument. After they had asked a number of questions, which the superintendent answered very politely, he told them it was customary to pay a small sum for ascending the monument. At this they were highly indignant, and said they thought it was a free country, and this place should be free for all—they would not be gulled out of their money by a Yankee. "An Englishman ought to be allowed to go free to such public places." The superintendent bowed very politely, and said, "I wish that you had mentioned that before, for they are the only persons we admit free: we consider they paid dear enough for ascending this hill on the 17th day of June 1775!"

Four individuals recently in Chicot county, Arkansas, who took upon themselves to chastise one Solomon Crosby were tried for assault and battery, and the jury rendered a verdict $12,000. A few verdicts like this, will put a stop to Lynch law.

Notices.

PUBLIC CONCERT.

The members of the De Ruyter Band will give a Public Concert at the Presbyterian Church in this village, on Thursday evening, the 21st inst., commencing at 6 o'clock. The Stockholders of the "De Ruyter Band Association," together with the citizens of De Ruyter and the adjoining towns, are respectfully invited to attend on the occasion.

By order of the Band,
A. H. BURDICK, Sec'y.
De Ruyter, Oct. 13, 1841.

MARRIED,

In Verona, on the evening of the 15th inst. by Eld C. M. Lewis, THOS. P. WEST, and Miss ABBY S. KENYON, both of Verona.

DIED,

In Verona, of consumption, on the 23d inst., Brother ROBERT DORMAN. Brother D. has been lingering since last spring, and gradually wasting away but no sudden change until within a very few moments of his death, when it was discovered he was going quickly to another world. A moment more and as we humbly trust he was with Christ in Paradise.

It is due to his memory to say that though he formerly observed the first day of the week as a sabbath, convinced by the power of truth, he embraced the sabbath of the Lord, and finally died in hope of future blessedness. C. M. L.

LIST OF LETTERS.

C. M. Lewis, (it is fine,) S. S. Griswold, (yes,) Job Tyler, (thank you.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of Job Tyler, $3, cr. G. W. Hagaman, of James Hubbard, $1,13 cr. Henry Maxson, vol 1.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NO IMPOSITION!
NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

TEAS, SUGARS.
CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequalled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.
De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the
Oct. 4th. STONE STORE.

CASH
PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by J. N. ELMORE.
October 4.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.
De Ruyter. October 1st. 1841.
SUTTON & QUINBY,
HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Willson, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;
Which together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from [illegible] advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as
LOW PRICES,
[illegible] of New-York.
Their system of business will invariably be,
One Price and Ready Pay.
[illegible] are earnestly [illegible] and examine a [illegible] cannot fail to [illegible]
GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, [illegible] Families at prices [illegible] than any establishment in this [illegible]
STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE.
IS Agent for the sale of the following valuable [illegible]
[illegible] Balm of Life.
[illegible] Bitters.
[illegible]
[illegible] Pills.
[illegible] Pills.
[illegible]
[illegible] Balsam of Horehound.
[illegible]
Parker's Pulmonary Balm.
[illegible] Arabian Balsam.
Hutchinson's Liniment.
With others too numerous to mention.
Oct. 4.

Swedes, English and Russia Bar Iron. [illegible] American Iron, Swedes Horse Shoe Iron, Band and Hoop Iron, Nail rods, Swedes [illegible] Swedes Iron Nails, [illegible] Mill and Cross Cut Saws, for sale [illegible] STONE STORE.
October 4.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA
WILL find the article at all times at ELMORE'S.

MEN'S [illegible] Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, [illegible] Children's Shoes a little better [illegible] cheaper than elsewhere, at the STONE STORE.
October 4.

L[illegible]
[illegible] Edged Tools, [illegible] Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and [illegible] J. N. ELMORE.
Manufacturers' Agent.

[illegible] CLOTH CAPS, Fur Trimmed [illegible] & Hats.
ALSO,
[illegible] LACE VEILS, at $1 50 for sale at STONE STORE.

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.
TAKE NOTICE.
THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver, Brass mounted Harnesses, [illegible] Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, [illegible] Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all [illegible] Brussels Carpet Bags, [illegible] Brass Spring Stirrup irons, Spurs, [illegible] Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this kind, which I will sell as low as any shop west of [illegible] Even De Ruyter not excepted, according to quality and for durability.
Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wood, and some money, and the remainder in Notes; also wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese and every thing that is raised by the Farmer in this vicinity. Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, Pine Lumber, &c. &c.
[illegible] for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. 10,000 feet first rate Ash Flooring, and one half of a new Dwelling House to rent for one year or more.
J. R. RIDER.
De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

NOTICE.
THE Co-Partnership heretofore existing under the firm of WILLIAMS & SAYLES, is this day dissolved by mutual consent of parties.
All persons indebted to WILLIAMS & SAYLES, are requested to call and make immediate settlement [illegible]
Oct. 4. M. W. WILLIAMS.
22w3 WM. B. SAYLES.

NOTICE.
FOUND by the subscriber, a short time since, about two miles south of this village, a BAG OF GRAIN. The owner can have the property by calling on the subscriber and paying the expences of this advertisement, &c.
De Ruyter, Oct. 5th, 1841.
22w2 JAMES CRANDALL.

ONE CENT REWARD,
AND NO CHARGES PAID.
RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 27th Sept. inst., an indented apprentice boy aged about 13 years, by the name of ISRAEL HOWARD STONE. This is to forbid all persons harboring or trusting him on my account, as I will pay no debts of his contracting after this date. Whoever will return said boy, shall receive the above reward.
De Ruyter Sept. 27th. 1841.
JESSE STILLMAN.

FRICTION MATCHES.
THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.
ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
S. M. HOUSE,
RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the buisness will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.
Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.
N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.
One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.
De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

POETRY.

From Blackwood's Magazine.

Hope.

If Hope be dead—why seek to live?
For what besides has Life to give?
Love, Life, and Youth, and Beauty, too,
If Hope be dead—say! what are you!

Love without Hope! It cannot be,
There is a vessel on yon sea
Becalmed and sailless as Despair,
And know—'Tis helpless Love floats there.

Life without Hope! Oh, that is not
To live! but, day by day, to rot,
With feelings cold and passions dead
To wander o'er the world, and tread
Upon its beauties; and to gaze,
Quite vacant, o'er its flowery maze
Oh! think, if this be Life then say—
"Who lives when Hope has fled away!"

Youth without Hope! An endless night,
Trees which have felt the cold spring's blight,
The lightning's flashes, and the thunder's strife,
Yet pine away a weary life
Which older would have sunk and died
Beneath the stroke of their youth defied—
But, curst with length of days, are left
To rail at Youth of hope bereft.

And Beauty, too, when hope is gone,
Has lost the ray in which it shone;
And, seen without this borrowed light,
Has lost the beam which made it bright.
Now what avail the silken hair,
The angel smile, and gentle air,
The beaming eye, and glance refined—
Faint semblace of that purer mind—
As gold dust sparkling in the sun,
Points where the richer strata run!
Alas! they now just seem to be Bestowed to mock at Misery.
They speak of days long, long gone by,
Then point to cold Reality,
And, with a death like smile they say—
"Oh! what are we when Hope's away!

Then Love, Life, Youth, and Beauty, too,
When seen without Hope's bright'ning hue,
All sigh in Misery's saddest tone,
"Why seek to live if Hope be gone!"

Miscellaneous Department.

From the New York Evangelist.

American Society For Meliorating the Condition of the Jews.

At the Annual Meeting of this Society, held in this city on the 17th of May last, the annual report of the Board of Directors was read and adopted, and ordered to be printed, and at a meeting of the Board on the 13th ult., an abstract of the report was ordered to be published in the principal religious journals in this city.

The present officers of the Society are, Rev. Dr. Brownlee, President; Rev. Drs. Proudfit, De Witt, Knox, Philips, Spring, Rev. Messrs. Hutton, Lillie, Balch, Bokum, and Krebs, and Abm. Van Nest, Esq., Vice-Presidents; Rev. John Proudfit, Secretary for Foreign Correspondence; Rev. Dr. Vermilye, Secretary for Domestic Correspondence; Alexander M. Burrill, Esq., Recording Secretary; and Thomas S. Shepard, Esq., Treasurer, besides a Board of Twenty Directors.

Abstract of Report.

Soon after the last anniversary, the attention of the Board was strongly attracted, and their interest warmly excited by statements made to them by Messrs. Stern and Berk, two recent converts from Judaism, as to the condition of the Jewish population of this city, and also abroad. From these representations it appeard, that the difficulties which had hitherto obstructed the progress of Christian effort among this people, had arisen, in a great degree, from defects in the method pursued in communicating with them; that their ignorance of the true nature of Chistianity, (some deplorable proofs of which were mentioned,) ought to be removed before their prejudices against its doctrines could be expected to be successfully combatted, and that by a course of judicious instruction, combined with a system of kind and habitual intercourse, their minds might be enlightened, their affections conciliated, and their consciences gradually prepared for the more effectual reception of the truths of the gospel.

As a preliminary step to a course of measures having these objects in view, the Board determined to try the experiment of delivering lectures to the Jews in this city, and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for this purpose. From a report made by this committee shortly after, it appeared, however, that the immediate announcement of a public lecture would not be likely to attract a sufficent attendance of Jews, to make such a measure then desirable, but that, by private intercourse with them, and by insertion of proper intelligence and discucsion in some of the journals of this city, the attention of the Jews might be awakened, and the way prepared for the delivery of lectures with much better prospect of usefulness.

A circumstance soon after occurred, which had the effect of still further modifying the views of the Board upon this subject, and led to the adoption of the course of measures which has since been pursued. In connection with other interesting information communicated to them by the individuals already mentioned, they were given to understand that there were several cases among the Jewish converts and inquirers in this city, of great personal destitution and want, some indeed, of actual and severe sicknes and suffering, combined with evidences of undoubted merit. Several applications were soon afterwards made for pecuniary assistance, by individuals presenting the most respectable testimonials of character. The subject was maturely considered, and the cases separately investigated, and the Board finally came to the conclusion that a portion of the income of the funds of the Society, might be properly employed in relieving these distresses to a limited extent, at least for the present, and until some plan, having reference to the temporal benefit of the Jews, could be devised and matured. The appropriations were accordingly made, to the extent, in the whole, of one hundred and fifty dollars, and four cases were thus provided for. But, some of the members entertaining doubts as to the constitutionality of such proceedings, and being inclined to the opinion that temporal assistance could not be afforded unless through the medium of a settlement, as contemplated by the constitution, in order to satisfy these doubts, and to establish a safe and definite rule of action in future, it was referred to a committee to inquire into the practicability and expediency of forming a settlement in accordance with the charter and constitution of the Society, and to recommend any other course to be pursued, in reference to their provisions, to enable the Society to meliorate the condition of the Jews.

This committee subsequently reported their opinion, to the following effect:—that the constitution was plain and specific in declaring a settlement of some description to be the object of the Society; that the charter being based upon the constitution, must be construed with reference to its provisions; that both spiritual instruction and temporal aid were within the scope of the declared objects of the Society, provided they were furnished through the medium specified; that the information of a regular settlement, of the kind originally contemplated, was, however, at present impracticable, and that the Society must be content with as close an approximation to it as could be devised and sustained under existing circumstances; that if a suitable place could be provided, in which inquiring Jews could be furnished with the requisite instructions through the medium either of lectures, or a school, it might be the means of attracting the attention of that people, as well as of the Christian public, to the plans and operations of the Society, and thus prepare the way for more extended means of usefulness within the purview of the constitution.

In accordance with these sentiments, the Board determined to procure a suitable room for the purpose of conferring with such Jews as might be disposed to receive instruction, and Mr. George J. Adler of this city, was employed under the supervision of a committee, as an instructor. The attendance was, at first very limited, being confined to three persons only, but those three cases of such peculiar interest, as were not only extremely gratifying in themselves, but were calculated to stimulate the Board to still further exertions. By the help of the services of Mr. P. D. Schory, who spent much time in visiting the Jews at their houses, the number of pupils was soon increased to thirteen; and Mr. Adler having declined the office of teacher, Mr. Schory was subsequently appointed in his place. Could this school be sustained for a length of time, there is little doubt but that it might be made productive of much good, both by its effects, and by its ulterior influences. Two serious difficulties, however, have already occurred, which unhappily threaten the extinction of this benevolent project at the moment of its greatest interest.—These are, first and principally, the inadequacy of the income of the present funds of the Society to defray the expenses of the undertaking. Secondly, the frequent calls for temporal assistance by the Jews connected with the school, under distressed circumstances, which, however urgent and meritorious, the Board have found themselves debarred from satisfying. For the purpose of relieving the most urgent of these cases, a small temporary fund was raised through the efforts of a committee. But this difficulty will of course, recur continually, unless some permanent and systematic arrangement can be devised to obviate it.*

In January last, the Board received, through the Rev. Dr. Dana, of Newburyport, Mass., the gratifying intelligence of the formation of a female society at that place, for purposes akin to those of our own institution. They learned also, that its establishment was due, in a great degree, to the efforts of Mr. Berk, who had been travelling in that part of the country, and of whose zeal and fidelity in behalf of his Jewish brethren, the Board had already witnessed substantial proofs.

This incident they have regarded with much interest, as a cheering indication of the re-awakening of public attention to the objects and operations of the American Society, and to the claims of the great cause which it has so long been their aim and desire to promote.†

In reference to the legacy left to the Society by the will of Mr. McCall, late of Franklin, Ct., the Board have to remark in continuation of their last report, that the questions arising under the will, as to the competency of the several legates to take the property bequeathed to them, having been subjected to legal adjudication, the Court of Probate for the District of Norwich, decided against the claims of the Society, from which decision the Society have appealed. The appeal will probably be argued in the ensuing summer.

In March last, the President of the Society received information through Professor Goodrich of Yale College, that some property had lately fallen to the Society under the will of Mr. Samuel C. Camp, late of Durham, Ct., to the amount in value of about four hundred dollars. The Board have made the necessary arrangements for the recovery of this property, and they understand that it will probably be realized without much difficulty or delay.

The report closes with an allusion to the highly interesting position of the Jewish nation in reference to events which have lately taken place in Western Asia, and with an appeal to the Christian public to sustain the institution in their efforts to accomplish the object for which they were established—to meliorate the condition of the Jews.

---

*The school has since been discontinued.

†Since the date of the report, the Board have to acknowledge the receipt of seventy dollars from the Newburyport Society, through the Rev. Dr. Proudfit.

Classifications of Mankind according to their different Religions.

I. Jews, so called from Judah, the son of Jacob. They hold the religion instituted by Moses and the prophets. The principal sects among the Jews in modern times are—1. Rabbinists, who receive the Talmud. 2. Caraites, who receive the old Testament: and 3. Samaritans, who receive only the Pentateuch.

II. Christians, who hold to the religion taught by Christ and his apostles. They include, 1. Christians of the Oriental or Greek Church; 2. Christians of the Oriental or Latin Church: 3. Protestants, or those who have seceded from the Latin Church.

III. Mohammedans, so called from Mohammed, the son of Abdollah, who lived in the seventh century. They hold that there is one God, and Mohammed is his prophet. They are divided into, 1. Shonites, who received Sonna or tradition; and 2. Shiites who reject the Sonna.

IV. Druzes, so called from El Druzi, in the 11th century, who did much to establish this sect. They hold there is one God, and that Hakem is that God. The Nazarans Mutualees, appear to be schismatic Druzes, whom the rest of the sect regard as heretical.

V. Yesudees, or worshipers of Satan.—They inhabit the mountains near Singa in Mesopotamia. They appear to be a mixed sect.

VI. Wahabees, so called from Adbulwahab, an Arabian reformer in the middle of the eighteenth century. They hold the unity of God, and reject the invocation of saints.

VII. Parsees, so called from Persia their original country. They hold the tenets of the ancient Magians.

VIII. Brahminists, so called from their Brahmins or priests. They acknowledge Parabrahma as the supreme God; but he has delegated his power to Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, and a multitude of subordinate deities. They are divided into, 1. Vishnuites, or worshipers of Vishnu—and 2. Shivites, or worshipers of Shiva.

IX. Sikhs, so called from their being disciples or followers of Nanac Shah, (compare Sanscrit sischa, Penjabee Sikh, a disciple or follower,) who lived in the beginning of the sixteenth century. They renounce the Hindoo distinction of caste.

X. Budhists, or the worshipers of Buddha. They reject the distinction of caste.—They include, 1. Buddhists of Hither India and Ceylon; 2. Buddhists of Farther India: 3. The Buddhists of China and Japan, or forites; and 4. The Buddhists of Thibet and interior of Asia, or Lamaists.

XI. The sect of Ta-osee or of Doctors of Reason, founded by Laotseu, or Lokium, who lived about 600 B. C. They hold the worship of spirits, with a belief in magic and the existence of a primordial reason.—It is the most ancient religion in China.

XII. The followers of Confucius, who lived in the fifth century before Christ.—Their religion is based on a philosophic pantheism. They include the learned of China and of the neighboring countries.

XIII. Sintoists. Their religion is based upon the worship of genii or inferior deities, called Sin or Kami, who preside over all things visible and invisible, and are supposed to take more interest in human affairs of the higher gods. The worship paid to the Kamis consists of prayer and sacrifices. Their temples are called miya, and their festivals matsuri. This is the most ancient, although now the predominant religion in Japan.

XIV. Fetichists, or worshipers of the fetiches, a name given to any animate or inanimate, natural or artificial object, which rude and barbarous people pay religious homage. They include, 1. Fetichists of Asia and Europe, whose priests are sometimes called Grote; 3. Fetichists of America, whose priests are sometimes called Jugglers; and 4. Fetichists of Oceanica.

SWIMMING.

It has long been a wonder to us, that parents should take so little pains to have their children instructed in the art of swimming. During the warm season you can hardly take up a newspaper which does not record the loss of one or more valuable lives by drowning. Parents who take care to have every cent of their property insured against fire, will suffer their children to go into the water without giving themselves the least concern, whether they are properly made acquainted with the laws of motion in that element. The agony of meeting the drenched, livid corpse of a dear child is full often the penalty. All might be prevented by a few hours' scientific instruction.

There is one simple scientific rule, which, if suitably impressed upon the mind, would save life in all ordinary cases. And for want of a knowledge of this rule, very expert swimmers are sometimes drowned, as was one of the Mendians a few days since. The rule is this:—Clasp your hands behind your back, make your nose the highest point of your body, (or look towards the horizon over your forehead,) and do not stir a muscle and you will infallibly FLOAT. But a hand or foot must not be thrust above the surface—unless followed by a skilful stroke—for that will cause the nose to sink beneath it.

Thus, every human being has a life preserver against water, if only taught to use it. The brutes, from their different conformation, and especially from their want of the great rational development of the forehead, float by necessity, and swim by instinct. It is a pity and a parodox that men should lose their lives by a more liberal allowance of brains.—Free American.

THE SHAKERS.—The New York Observer gives a sketch of the creed of this singular people, from the lectures of Mr. Carter, who has lately deserted them. They believe in two persons in the Godhead—male and female—father and mother. They believe that Adam was the father of the old creation, and Eve the mother, both being created after the image of God; and that Christ is the father of the new creation, and Ann Lee the mother, and that the millenium commenced with the appearance of Ann Lee. They believe in the immortality of brutes—all venomous and ugly animals are symbolical of the evil creatures of the other world; all beautiful and agreeable ones, as gorgeous birds, &c., are symbolical of the tenants of heaven. They believe in visions, dreams, and trances, and see occasionally the patriarchs and prophets, &c.

WASHINGTON'S VICTORY.—The great and good Washington once provoked a gentleman, in debate, who struck him suddenly and felled him to the ground. Washington was a brave man, and it was expected he would resent it, as a man of honor. And so he did. He retired to his room. Washington, we know, was a man of prayer.—Perhaps he prayed for divine direction.—He then addressed a note to his antagonist, requesting him to call at his room. The gentleman did so, having prepared himself to fight. Washington met him at the door, and offered his hand. "Sir," said he, "I was in the wrong. I inflicted the first injury. You have had some satisfaction. Accept my hand, and let us exchange mutual forgiveness."

SAYINGS OF THE ANCIENTS.—When Ptolemy the Second, king of Egypt, looked forth one day from his palace window, afflicted as he was at the time with the gout, the consequence of his luxurious indulgences, and distracted with kingly anxieties, he observed a multitude of his poorer subjects reclining in festal ease on the banks of the Nile—"Miserable fate," said the monarch, "that my fate has not allowed me to be one of them."

"To send an uneducated child into the world," said Paley, "is little better than to turn out a mad dog or a wild beast into the streets."

The proudest man on earth is but a pauper, fed and clothed by the bounty of heaven.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ELECTION NOTICE.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, }
Secretary's Office, Albany, August 25, 1841. }
To the Sheriff of the County of Madison, SIR:

NOTICE is hereby given you, that the term of service of Avery Skinner, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, of this State, will expire on the last day of December next, and that a Senator is to be chosen in that District, to which the county of Madison belongs, at the General Election, to be held on the first, second and third days of November next.

At the same election the following officers are to be chosen, viz: Three Members of Assembly, for the said County, and one Coroner, in the place of Ira Seymour, whose term of office expires on the last day of December next.

JOHN C. SPENCER, Secretary of State.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the notice received by me from the Secretary of State.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.

Dated August 28, 1841. 28tde

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 20 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street uniting the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

200 PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE HOLY BIBLE,

CONSISTING OF

VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.

BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office. The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.

Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.

Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

ATTENTION!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on the accounts of Spencer & Saunders, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

N. B. The accounts are divided, and it is my own only that I ask for. Please attend.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30t

A. L. SAUNDERS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S. Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,

Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S

Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbents to the seat of disease or pain, without producing a disagreeable sensation. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure in all cases of disease, such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, [illegible] Affections, weakness of the stomach, the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be fully equal to the best ever offered to the public, and much superior to the "Jew Doctor, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption: composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other Vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The [illegible] and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made are too generally known to require any recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would further say, that he will not be undersold on any article which he offers for sale.

Wanted,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey.

☞For which the highest price will be paid.☜

De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE 17.

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, at 50 cts pr lb. CASH, Old Hyson do. at 5/6 Cash. New Orleans MOLASSES at 3/ cts pr Gal.

He has also just opened 3 packages of Crockery, directly from Liverpool, bought for cash, and at prices which he is confident are

50 per cent Lower, than those of any New-York purchase. He can furnish any style of Crockery which may be wanted, and offers either than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig, Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arabian "
Dr Phelps' Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion " of the Day "
Dr Parmer's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Bilious "
Harlem Oil,
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey

Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Storer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
" Hive Syrup,
" Laudanum,
" Paregoric,
" Oil Organum,
" " Spike,
" " Lemon,
" " Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold: but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place the inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

ROAD WARRANTS.

A quantity of Road Warrants just printed and for sale at this office.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Webster's Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar.

Novum Græcum Testamentum.
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.

De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th, 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman, who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Alfred—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Adams—Charles R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russell, P. M., Oran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
[illegible] Creek—Charles Saunders.
[illegible]—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zurial Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson, Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
[illegible]—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 34.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 86.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, OCTOBER 20, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Department.

From the Boston Recorder.

VALUE OF THE SABBATH.

We think it has been most satisfactorily proved that the physical nature of man does as much demand the weekly repose of the Sabbath as it does that of a daily rest by sleep. We cannot doubt God had this want of human constitution in view by the institution of the Sabbath. He had made that a moral law, and for great moral and religious purposes, which nature also asks in order that the physical machinery may be kept in the best order. No man can rob himself of daily rest with impunity. His system gives immediate indication of an outrage.

Nor can he deny himself of a weekly rest with impunity. There may not be the same open and immediate remonstrance by the physical system, but persistance in the wrong will bring it in due time.

Speaking of the death of Lord Castleragh, the English prime minister, by suicide, Mr. Wilberforce, who knew him well, remarks: "The strong impression of my mind is that his derangement is the effect of non-observance of the Sabbath, needful, both abstracting from politics, from the constant return of the same reflections and as correcting the false views of worldly things, and bringing them down to their true diminutiveness." The mind of the minister was constantly in a fever of excitement, without any opportunity to cool by the Sabbath's repose, which he discarded, and thus to gain strength for renewed exertion. The unceasing flame consumed him. His mental powers could not sustain this incessant action. Not guided by the law of God, which was wisely and benevolently adapted to the wants of nature, his desecration of the Sabbath was a violation at the same time of the laws of his own being. The wreck of his rational powers was the consequence of his defiance of the divine will, and neglect of the wise provision of an all-wise God.

Sir Samuel Romily, one of the brightest ornaments of the legal profession, died also by suicide, while under mental derangement. He was also an intimate associate of Wilberforce, who thus speaks of him in a letter to a friend: "I am strongly impressed by the recollection of your endeavor to prevail on the lawyers to give up Sunday consultations, in which poor Romily would not concur. If he had suffered his mind to enjoy such occasional remissions, it is highly probable that the strings would never have snapped as they did, from over-tension." It is thus that the violated laws of our physical natures resent the outrage. We cannot but view the law of the Sabbath, as a most powerful and efficient guardian of man's temporal happiness, by preserving from over action, and in their most healthy tone, his mental bodily powers.

The demand of our natures for a weekly Sabbath has been fully proved by careful inquiries on this point by distinguished scientific and professional men. An elaborate investigation by a Committee of the British House of Commons gave the following result: "The use of the Sabbath, medically speaking, is that of a day of rest. It is a day of compensation for the inadequate restorative power of the body under continued labor and excitement. The Sabbath institution is not simply a precept partaking of the nature of a political institution, but is to be numbered among the natural duties, if the preservation of life be admitted to be a duty, and the premature destruction of it a suicidal act. This is said without respect at all to the theological question."

But we love to look also at its theological aspect. We love to see the evidence, as we do on all hands, of the nice and wise and kind adaptation of divine precepts to the natural constitution of man. We find thus no clashing between the God that made, and him who is revealed as the Governor of the world. The harmony of his operations in physical and moral laws, affords striking evidence that he that spoke the earth into existence, "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

[No one, we are sure, can successfully controvert the argument contained in the above, relative to the obligation of all men to observe a day of rest. The fact is established that the human constitution requires as much time to rest as the law of the Sabbath requires. If, therefore, men can not violate the law of nature with impunity, how is it that they will take it upon them to violate the law of God? Men, by the express words of the Sabbatic law are required to devote the seventh day to rest; and it is as palpable a violation of the law engraven on stone to refuse or neglect to observe the precise time commanded as it is to refuse or neglect to keep any time sacred.—If, therefore, a man does not rest on the seventh day of every week as commanded by God, he is as surely a transgressor as the one that refuses to rest at all. We simply wish to suggest to those who urge the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest to the body, that there is a greater obligation contained in the Sabbatic law, viz:—God requires the time he has appointed for a Sabbath to be kept holy; and no man can deviate from this without violating one of the plainest and most reasonable requirements of him whose right it is to reign.—Verily, he that offendeth in one point is guilty of the whole. Ed. Reg.

TRUE HUMILITY.

There are some men who will do very well if they can have their own way; but cross their path, thwart their plans in the least, and they are so unreasonable, as to construe it into a mark of disrespect; and at once become unsocial, sour, crabbed, distant and reserved.

Such men are always self-conceited, and entertain vast ideas of their own consequence. Such men may be flattered, and not know that is mere flattery. In order to get along smoothly with them, more respect must be paid to them, than they really deserve. They will bear flattery—in fact they seem to demand it—it appears to be almost a necessary aliment for them. Such a character is always very troublesome in the church. If his propensity to inflated self-conceit has not been subdued by the grace of humility—if he has not learned to esteem others better than himself—if he claims the highest seat, and very particular marks of respect and attention—it will be difficult to maintain peace and harmony in the church. He will frequently take affront, when no disrepect was intended, and the troubled waters of strife will be apt to be in constant agitation.

Can a man, possessed of such a spirit, be truly possessed of the spirit of Christ?—Judge not, that ye be not judged. Hope for the best, and bear with the often infirmities of such an one. To forbear one another in love, is a good principle of action; and carried out, will produce the peaceable fruits of righteousness. This is the difference between humility, and self-conceit: the former will elevate its possessor in the eye of every one but himself, while the latter will debase its possessor in the eyes of every one, but the individual possessing it.

What a sad spectacle in the eyes of God angels and men, is a self-conceited, proud, unhumbled professor. The apostle Paul somewhere says, "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceit." And a greater than Paul, has said, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

How strange it is that men will practice directly the reverse of the precepts of him, who "spake as never man spake"—and especially professing Christians. We may here get some little glimpse of the fountain head of religious intolerance, bigotry and sectarianism. He who neglects the practical precepts of religion, and vaunts himself in the indulgence of his own self-conceit, with an imaginary consequence, is the first to brand the humble, sincere and devoted follower of the cross, with whom he may chance to differ, in any particular, as an errorist, schismatic and heretic.—Cabinet and Visiter.

From the S. S. Journal.

The Law of the Lips.

Speak kindly to thy fellow-man,
Lest he should die while yet
Thy bitter accents wring his heart
And make his pale cheek wet.

Speak tenderly to him; for he Hath many toils to bear;
And he is weak and often sighs—
As thou dost—under care.

Speak lovingly to him; he is
A brother of thine own:
He well may claim thy sympathies,
Who's bone of thine own bone.

Speak meekly to him; he may be
A holier man than thou,
And fitting it may be for thee
To him with reverence bow.

Speak solemnly to him; for thou
And he must surely meet,
To make account for idle words,
Before the judgement-seat.

Speak faithfully to him; thy word
May touch him deep within,
And save his erring soul from death,
And cover o'er his sin!

WHAT CHRISTIANITY HAS DONE.

Comparing the world as it now is with what it was before the promulgation of the gospel, we shall find the manners of mankind, in this respect, at least improved—that they are softened. Our vices are of a more tame and gentle kind, than those of the ancient heathen world; they are disarmed of much of their malignity, by the general influence of a spirit of philanthropy, which, if it be not the same thing in principal with Christian charity, (and it may indeed be different) is certainly nearly allied to it, and makes a considerable part of it in practice. The effect of this philanthropic spirit is, that the vices which are generally still harbored, are sins of indulgence and refinement, rather than of cruelty and barbarism—crimes of thoughtless gayety, rather than of direct premeditated malice.

To instance in particulars. We are not destitute, as the heathen were, of natural affection. No man, in a Christian country, would avoid the burden of a family by the exposure of his infant children. No man would think of settling the point with his intended wife, before marriage, according to the ancient practice, that the females she might bear should all be exposed, and the boys only reared—however inadequate his fortune might be to the allotment of large marriage-portions to a numerous family of daughters; nor would the unnatural monster, (for so we now should call him) who in a single instance, should attempt to revive the practice of this exploded system of economy, escape public infamy and the vengeance of the laws.

The frequency of divorce was another striking symptom in the heathen world, of a want of natural affection, which is not found in modern manners. The crime indeed which justifies divorce is too frequent; but the husband is not at liberty, as in ancient times, to repudiate the wife of his youth for any lighter cause than an offence on her part against the fundamental principles of the nuptial contract. Upon this point the laws of all Christian countries are framed in strict conformity to the rules of the gospel, and the spirit of the primeval institution.

We are not, as the heathen were, "full of murder." The robber, it is true, to facilitate the acquisition of his booty, or to secure himself from immediate apprehension and punishment, sometimes imbrues his hand in blood. but scenes of blood and murder make no part, as of old, in the public diversions of the people. Miserable slaves, upon occasions of general rejoicing and festivity, are not exposed to the fury of wild beasts for a show of amusement and recreation to the populace nor engaged in mortal combat with each other upon a public stage. Such bloody sports, were they exhibited, would not draw crowds of specators to our theatres, of every rank, and sex, and age. Our women of condition would have no relish for the sight; they would not be able to behold it with so much composure, as to observe and admire the skill and agility of the champions, and interest themselves in the issue of the combat; they would shriek and faint; they would not exclaim like Roman ladies in a rapture of delight, when the favorite gladiator struck his antagonist the fatal blow; nor with cool indifference give him the signal to despatch the prostrate suppliant. Nor would the pit applaud and shout, when the blood of the dying man, gushing from the ghastly wound, flowed upon the stage.

We are not in the degree in which the heathen were, "unmerciful." With an exception in a single instance. (that of the slave trade, at that time not abolished) we are milder in the use of power and authority of every sort; and the abuse of authority is now restrained by law, in cases in which the laws of ancient times allowed it. Capital punishment is not inflicted for slight offences; nor, in the most arbitrary Christian governments, is it suddenly inflicted, upon the bare order of the sovreign, without a formal accusation, trial, conviction, sentence, and warrant of execution. The lives of children and servants are no longer at the disposal of the father of the family; nor is the domestic authority maintained as formerly, by severities which the mild spirit of modern laws rarely inflicts on the worst public malefactors.—Bishop Horsley.

THE FALLEN FAMILY ALTAR.

It was fair and beautiful when it was standing; for it was a monument of man's regard for his Maker; may I not say of man's regard for those most near and dear to him. What an agency for good to the whole family circle, is the domestic altar! Its incense pleases him in whom all the families of the earth are blessed. How many mercies silently distil upon that household because its altar stands. How many evils are averted because that is an house of prayer! How powerful and happy the restraining influences over the whole circle of worshipers, are those scenes of domestic worship! How many temptations have they repelled! How many insiduous snares of Satan have been escaped through their influence! They have been like the pillar of fire by night, and the pillar of cloud by day.

But the altar is fallen! No incense burns there. That beautiful monument is prostrate in the dust. Surely none but ruthless hands could have made such desolation. Who is the destroyer?

That pious wife did not do it. It was her zeal, and love, and prayers that most powerfully contributed to its erection.—And she has upheld it with an unwavering and resolute hand. As it trembled to its fall, did she not tremble? And when it fell, did she not deeply mourn the desolation? There is not a spectacle of sadness more painful to her than that fallen family altar.

Did the loved little ones of that domestic circle pull the altar down? They? They were surprised and astonished when it fell! Their little hearts felt that something sad had occurred in their home. The stated hour of worship came—but there was no worship, for the altar was gone! They were sad. They felt bereaved. They ask their mother's explanation. She answered with her tears.

Did the reason and conscience of the husband and father pull that altar down? They never did such a dreadful work. They interposed. They sent a remonstrance that shook the soul of him that was proposing the altars overthrow. His soul has not forgotten the rebuke which, like injured friends, they poured upon it the day that he threw the altar down.

Will that altar rise again? If the tears of a pious wife could do it—if the spiritual wants of that lovely group of children could do it—if conscience might be heard, then would the altar be raised again. But these have all failed. Their voice of remonstrance and entreaty has poured forth long and loud the powerful appeal. But the altar rises not!

What responsibility is his who suffers it to lie in the dust! He robs God of his glory. Robs his domestic circle of the most powerful agencies of virtue and piety. He robs his own soul of substantial happiness. He cannot do all this and not arm a just and holy God against him. It will be sad for him to die reflecting upon the fallen family altar.—Bost. Rec.

An Illustration of Scripture.—In the book of Deuteronomy we have a very animated and beautiful allusion to the eagle, and the method of exciting her eaglets to attempt their first flight; and comparing her proceedings on that occasion to Jehovah's care of his people and method of instructing them how to aim at and attain heavenly objects. "As an eagle stirreth her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, so Jehovah alone lead them."

Sir H. Davy relates his having had an opportunity of witnessing the first flights of the eaglets from their eyerie. The old birds at first made small circles, and the young imitated them; they paused on their wings, and then took a second and longer compass, always rising towards the sun, and enlarging their circle of flight, so as to make a gradual spiral; the young still slowly followed, apparently flying better as they mounted; and they continued this sublime exercise, always rising until they were lost to sight. How powerfully ought this to excite Christian parents to teach children betimes to look towards heaven and the Sun of Righteousness, and to elevate their thoughts thither more and more on the wings of faith and love, themselves all the while going before them, and encouraging them by their own example!—Kirby's Bridgewater Treatise.

Mysteries in Religion.—"The folly of objecting to Religion, because it contains Mysteries will appear from obvious truth, that we have no right to expect from Divine revelation that which it not only does not engage to give, but even professes to withhold. 'Canst thou, by searching,' asked the patriarch, 'find out God?' Canst thou, by searching, find out the Almighty to perfection? And if it be objected, that this obscurity was peculiar to the partial and preparatory dispensation—the twilight of the Gospel dawn—we will appeal to the Apostle, acknowledging that, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness, and exclaiming, 'O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgements, and his ways past finding out!' But, further, to cavil at the mysteries of the gospel is, virtually, to charge imperfection on their Author. It is to stretch the divine wisdom upon the rack of human judgement. It is to assume the power of dictating to the Omnipotent how he shall make man, or redeem man; what form the Godhead shall assume, what instruments he shall employ, what signs he shall work, what effects he shall produce. It is to usurp the prerogative of explaining what our Master has left dubious, of harmonizing what he has left concealed. It is to charge him with having revealed too litle or too much; to arraign his wisdom and to impugn his goodness; to snatch his sceptre from his hand, rejudge his justice, and erect ourselves into the arbiters of God."—Rev. Mr. Dale.

Serious Testimony.—It is a serious matter to stand by the death-bed, and to listen to the last words of the dying. In the hour of nature's dissolution, when the clayey house is falling, and the spirit of our friend lingering a moment to give a parting word of advice, that we treasure up in the memory every thing spoken. In the mortal hour when all men will speak the truth, what unanimous testimony has always been borne to the blessedness or importance of Religion. With death-tones the righteous have proclaimed its blessedness and the unrighteous its importance.—Now, kind reader, this is serious testimony—and we shall do well to heed it. When our fellow mortals are just to step into eternity we may put implicit confidence in their sayings. Here no man equivocates. All such is serious testimony. This testimony from the prepared and the unprepared has always been to the truths of religion. Go to the chambers of sickness, ask the dying if you can too soon seek the Lord, and, before their answer dies away upon your ear, give your heart to God.—Morning Star.

"God's Host."—Angels are declared to be ministering spirits. Sometimes eminent saints have been permitted to see these spiritual attendants. Jacob was so favored when returning to the land of his father.—"And Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him. And when Jacob saw them he said, This is God's host."—So, too, when the king of Syria had sent horses and chariots, and a great host by night to take Elisha, the attendant angels were visible even to his servant. "And when the man of God was risen early and gone forth, behold an host encompassed the city both with horses and chariots.—And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do? And he answered, fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw; and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." Also, when Daniel prayed, and when the shepherds watched; not to name other instances. Christians, march boldly on, fear not;—God's host encompasses thee, if thou art in the work of thy Lord.—Morning Star.

From the Christian Observer.

THE CLOSE OF DAY.

There are many associations connected with the closing hours of day, calculated to inspire the mind with sublime and impressive thought. As the soft tints of the setting sun's last ray fade away, and the mountain's peak, the rugged crag, and mellow cloud—so lately gilded by its beams—are lost in the filmly mists of twilight, one seems to read his own sublunary end. The reflection is natural—"soon my sun will be set, my day of probation close, and the night of the tomb gather around me." How instinctively then is the mind led to the contemplation of Him who made and poised that mighty luminary, who formed our frame and breathed into us the breath of life.—What more delightful hour than "Setting day,

For humble, grateful prayer."

At this hour, all seek repose. Nature seems to recline upon her rich and variegated couch—the sultry globe recovers from the scorching rays of the burning sun—the gentle dew distils upon, and revives the tender plant—the busy bee, tired, and laden with the toils of the day, with tuneful wing seeks the shelter of the hive, the hum of business ceases, and the bustle of day gives place to the hour of meditation. The poet—till now shut out from the visible world—quits his corner, and casts away the dingy scrap and pen, and saunters forth to some sequestered bower to enjoy nature's universal calm, and catch the inspiration of the closing hour of day. The plough boy's whistle, and the milk maid's song die away, like distant murmurs, upon the evening breeze—the soft and uncertain sounds of which are in perfect unison with the flickering and fading scenes of twilight. The student's book and burning eye are closed—both claim respite; while, with eager gaze, the astronomer surveys the broad expanse of heaven, and names her lamps as they put forth their light. With sprig or leaf the lonely shepherd marks his rural seat, and pipes his horn to gather in his flock. The face of nature wears a milder look, and invites repose. How sweet is now the tinkle of the palm-bower'd brook, or murmuring rill—the torrent's rush, or ocean's roar; each seems to break upon their harmony save

"The echo's answer to the foot or voice."

Motionless is now the waveless lake—and, like a mirror, reflects the changing face of heaven—the setting sun's last rays, or the peeping twinkle of a truant star that gathers brightness with the retiring day.

"Now evening comes with locks bedrop'd with dew."

Children's Department.

From the Youth's Friend.

IS THIS PRAYER?

About twenty years ago a little boy was put to bed at dark by his sister. He kneeled down before a chair to say his prayers. A young lady, a visiter, was present, and she listened while he repeated them.—He knew that she was observing him, and so he said them in a very careful manner, with his eyes raised to heaven and his hands clasped. "How sweetly he prays!" whispered the lady. This was all she said; but he heard it, and his heart was filled with gratified pride. He had scarcely thought of God in his prayers; yet he went to bed glad and happy—not because he felt that he had pleased God; but because he himself had been praised! Was this prayer? I will tell you what he did afterwards and then you can judge.

One day he made a kite, but it would not fly, but turned round and round. After trying a while to make it rise in the air, he became angry, and dashed the kite to the ground, and stamped upon it with his feet. No one was near, and he cursed the kite—not aloud, but softly, lest somebody should hear him! He did it with the same tongue which the young lady said, had "prayed so sweetly!" He forgot God when he cursed as well as when he said his prayers! Had he prayed?

A few years passed away. He was now eight years old, and he often felt much troubled when he thought of his sins.—There were no simple, instructive little books published at that time, to teach young children the way to be saved. He knew that he ought to pray; but he did not rightly understand how Jesus Christ was a Savior. It is true that he had often heard the minister and his mother speak of Him, but no one had explained to him, in a manner that he could understand, that he should love and trust the Savior just as he would confide in his father. To quiet his conscience when it was uneasy, he resolved to say three prayers secretly every day. This plan he followed for a time: he then grew careless, and forgot to pray, until something alarmed him, when he began again; and to make up for lost time, he counted up the days in which he had forgotten his devotions, and remained on his knees until he had repeated three prayers for each neglected day. But it was very tiresome to stay so long on his knees: and he therefore hastened over them as rapidly as his tongue could move, little feeling that something more was needed than the mere repeating of words. Was this prayer?

Many more years passed away and he became a man. His father and mother died, and many of his friends besides.—There were very few left in the world to love him; and he wandered away to another city. He was sad and lonely: he felt that every thing worldly was vain and unsatisfying. He had no true happiness here, and he had no hope in looking to the life to come. He knew that God was not his friend; God could not be pleased with sinners, and he felt that he was a sinner. One Sabbath he went into a church, and there he heard of Christ in such a way as he had never before heard. Overcome with sorrow, he went to his bed-room, and in the agony of his soul, he threw himself on the floor, and asked the Lord to have mercy on him. He felt that he could not cast himself down low enough before his Maker. He repented that he had sinned so long and so much against the good and holy God, and resolved, by the help of the gracious Spirit, to do so no more. He became a Christian, and then experienced that one moment's enjoyment of the love and favor of the Lord was worth ten thousand worlds. This was prayer.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

DON'T INTERRUPT.

Mother had just come into the house after having been gone three or four hours, and all the children had something to tell her or to ask. They were not generally rude or impolite, for their mother had taught them better; but now they were so glad to see her, and had so much to say, that they all began talking together.

"Oh! mother!" said Mary, "cousin Helen has been here since you went away, and she wants me to come and see her tomorrow afternoon, if you are willing."

"Mother, won't you cover my ball for me?" said George, "see! the leather is almost all ripped off."

"Please look at my work, mother," said Ellen.

"May I go, mother?" asked Mary.

"Does'nt it look nice?" said Ellen, as she held up her sewing before her mother's eyes.

"Mother, mother, mother," cried little Willy, for although he had not much to say, he wanted to be heard as well as the rest.

Mother had seated herself in a chair without taking off her bonnet, waiting for a chance to speak. She looked round upon all the children, but made no answer to any of them, until they began to wonder that she did not notice them, and it seemed so strange, that in a little while they all stood quite still.

"Suppose you listen to me a few minutes now," said she, "I will tell you what you make me think of. Some farmers' wives went out one afternoon to visit one of their neighbors; and as it was some time since they had seen each other, they had a great many things to say. One told how much butter she had made—another, how many cheeses she had in her cheese-room—another, how much yarn she had spun for the winter—another had something to tell about her ducks and hens—and another had a long story about her barrel of apple sauce. So they talked, pretty loud and fast, and sometimes two or three spoke together. There was one nice little woman there, who wanted very much to tell them something about her goose, and whenever any body stopped talking for a minute, she would begin, 'My goose, she—' but before she could get on with her story, some one would interrupt her, and she would be obliged to stop. She tried all the afternoon, till it was time for them to go home to milking, but she got no farther than 'My goose, she—.'"

"Now," said mother, "you have been doing just like these women. You have all been talking together, so that I could not understand either of you, and sometimes you interrupted each other very rudely. I call that being selfish, for it is not doing to others as you would be done by. I wanted to tell you of something that was passing in the street, but you could not hear me, because you were making so much noise yourselves, and if I had tried to speak, I should have been like the woman who wanted to tell about her goose. Now wait a few minutes, till I have put away my bonnet, and then speak to me one at a time, and I shall be glad to hear what you have to say."

This was a good lesson for the children, and now, if they begin to interrupt each other, you will presently hear mother or somebody else, say, "My goose, she—" and that reminds them to be polite, and leave what they wanted to say till the one who was speaking has finished. C. C.

Minister's Department.

SOLILOQUY OF A CHRISTIAN MINISTER ON HIS WAY TO THE SANCTUARY.

I am going to the sanctuary—going to meet God—going to engage in his worship—going to preach his word; that word by which both myself and hearers must finally be judged. I shall soon be surrounded by a number of beings whose existence is never to terminate; but who, after millions of ages, will still be immortal. Either the Bible is untrue, or every man, woman, and child among them, will dwell in everlasting misery or joy. As soon as they have passed the narrow boundary of life, they must rise to the companionship of the highest order of beings, or sink to the doom of the lowest. I am to represent to them the character of a Savior, who is waiting to be gracious. I am to watch for souls; labor that I may be instrumental in their everlasting welfare; and when I have finished the short period allotted for me on earth, I am to appear before the tribunal of my Creator, to give up my account—to say how I have improved my talents; what effects have I made in the office I sustain, and what efforts have resulted from them. What if it should be said of any, that I have been accessary to their damnation—that I had not reproved, that I had not entreated, that I had not instructed them! What if they should in eternity be heaping curses upon my head, because of my lukewarmness and inattention?

Or, perhaps, before the arrival of another Sabbath; I may now be going to preach my last sermon. The opportunities I now enjoy of winning souls to Christ may be the last I shall ever have. May I enter the sanctuary under the deep impressions of his presence! May I be animated with ardent zeal—zeal according to knowledge! May I be very serious, and very much in earnest for my own salvation, and that of all those that hear me; and above all, may I be indulged with thy smiles, O, thou infinitely blessed God; and when my work on earth is done, rise to noble communion with thee, and thy Son, forever. Amen, and amen.—New-York Evangelist.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, October 20, 1841.

"Am I, therefore, become your enemy because I tell you the truth."

The Lord Jesus Christ suffered many indignities of men, because he reproved them of their sins. His forerunner was beheaded in prison because he dared to proclaim the truth to those in authority. A multitude of saints have sealed their testimony for the truth with their blood, because in the presence of fire, the rack, and the cross, they have dared to speak the truth. Some now suffer persecutions and slanders, because in the midst of a gainsaying, perverse people, they dare advocate the truth. The same spirit that first exhibited itself in the Garden of Eden, giving the lie to God, and which ever since has opposed the triumph of right, shows itself now in its malicious attacks upon those that are pledged for the defense of truth.—As soon as any strong-hold of Satan is assailed, his legions are marshalled for the defense. Hence, we find men defending licentiousness, drunkenness, slavery, and almost every evil that exists. If we open our mouths for the dumb, mercenary motives bring a mighty host against us. If we declare that the curse of God will rest most fearfully against the violators of the seventh command, an untold volley of slander and abuse is heaped upon us. If the sin of intemperance is set forth in its true colors, the foul fiend finds numberless ways in which to assail us. And, indeed, the lover of truth finds a world of opposition to whatever efforts he may make for the truth's sake.

It not unfrequently happens that the professed friends of Jesus are found engaged in this unholy cause. The Devil finds means by which to separate very friends,& the friends of the truth, and associate them with his acknowledged allies. And we sometimes see him who professes love to the truth, joining with the licentious, the profane, the sabbath desecrator, the intemperate, and the wicked of every class, in opposing the exercise of justice and right. And this, simply from the fact that they can not bear the truth when it speaks against them, and are therefore determined by whatever means they may, to oppose those who tell them the truth. Their proud, haughty hearts can not bear opposition. Justice, equity, truth, and righteousness must suffer because they think more of their good name than of the truth.—Their characters—their interests must be maintained if truth suffer. Alas for the church of the living God, where it must be rent with discord to sustain the worldly name of individuals! It becomes a bye-word—a reproach in the community where it is located, and spreads far and wide the seeds of discord and dissolution, because some of its members must sustain their good name in opposition to truth. How unlike the spirit of the Gospel—how unlike the example of Christ, and the conduct of primitive Christians who suffered wrongfully, who endured all things patiently rather than retort or seek revenge? Once, Christians could take the spoiling of their goods patiently, suffer and die for truth's sake. Now, some bearing the same name become the enemies of those who tell them the truth, and point out their errors, and wage an unceasing, unholy warfare, rather than acknowledge their wrong and amend their ways. In the conduct of such we are reminded of the wicked servant that made to himself friends of the mammon of unrighteousness. When we see men professing Godliness making friends of the ungodly to advance their purposes, we judge of them that the arts and intrigues of the world has a deeper, firmer place in their heart than the ingenuous—the honest—the ennobling, and forgiving spirit of the Gospel. And when we see them bending all their efforts to oppose, and injure the character of the Gospel Minister, or other servants of God, we judge it is because such have told them the truth.

If any of our readers suffer from such designing men, let them count it all joy that they are found worthy to suffer for the truth, and let them bear in mind that "they that will live Godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busy body in other men's matters. Yet, if any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf."

Misery of Lost Souls.

Whatever may be the cause of the damnation of the soul, it is sure that the punishment will be eternal. When the last trump shall sound, and wake the slumbering dead, some "shall come forth to the resurrection of life, and some to the resurrection of damnation," and the smoke of the torment of the wicked will ascend up forever and ever.—And "these [the wicked] shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." The same Greek word, αιωνιον, that in this passage is translated both everlasting and eternal, is derived from αει and ων, and signifies always being. Thus the word of God settles the question that the wicked shall endure the punishment due to their crimes eternally. Of their sufferings there can be no end. This will be one source of misery to them. Could they when suffering the demerit of their crimes look forward to the future, with a hope of being released from their wretchedness, it might nerve them to bear the overwhelming load. But alas! to the lost soul there is never a single ray of hope to dawn, or a word of mercy and pardon to greet his ears.

The cause of wretchedness to some will be that they presumed on the mercy of God, and deferred repentance and obedience till the day of grace had passed, and they were called to the judgment. Almost every person intends at some time to secure to themselves the favor of God. But the delusions of the world, joined with the arts of the deceiver, blind the eyes of sinners till the Holy Spirit, being often rejected, leaves the man to hardness of heart. Others will wail because they have deceived themselves in attempting to evade the commands of God. The carnal heart being averse to all the righteous principles of the gospel is ever ready to seize upon every manner of excuse for sin, and will not fail to cavil at the terms of salvation. Thus we have thousands of refuges of lies to which men flee to silence the monitions of an awakened conscience. They that will allow themselves to be led by the spirit and word of God, will be led in the way of life. But they who will seek present convenience at the expense of truth, must reap the reward of their transgressions in unavailing woe. How it will augment their wretchedness when beyond the reach of hope to remember that their effort to evade the truth has proved their ruin! The system of lies to which they have adhered, though it may have been sufficient to deceive men and ease their own minds, at last yields the keenest anguish.

All who perish at last will have to curse their own folly. None can mourn their fate as their misfortune, but as their crime. This will serve to augment their woe. The thrilling thought, "I had a day and prized it not," will in no way mitigate their sufferings. Oh, how many bitter reproaches will the lost heap upon themselves when too late! And with what keen remorse will they look back upon privileges slighted; mercies abused; repentance deferred; a Savior rejected; and a Holy Spirit driven away. In contemplating these, what horror must fill the heart at the remembrance that the fatal decision is made, and cannot be altered! Oh, who can dwell with devouring fire!—Who can suffer eternal death, and be banished forever from heaven and happiness!

We stated two weeks since, on our own responsibility, that Alexander Campbell, Wm. Maxson, &c., were elected Trustees. for three years, of De Ruyter Institute.—Since that time objections have been made to A. Campbell, and Wm. Maxson, as not being eligible on account of absence from the State. The Trustees therefore instituted a legal enquiry into the matter, which has resulted in confirming Wm. Maxson's seat as Trustee, and in awarding to Wm. B. Maxson the seat first awarded to A. Campbell. Wm. Maxson since his nomination has concluded to remove out of the state; he, therefore, tendered his resignation, and John R. Butts was unanimously elected to fill his place.

McLeod Acquitted.—Our readers have, ere this, doubtless, learned that the Jury, on Tuesday of last week, after being out about half an hour, brought in a verdict of acquittal for Alexander McLeod. Thus, one vexing question between England and the United States is probably settled.

The Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, at their meeting on the 14th inst., adjourned for 2 weeks at 6 o'clock, P. M.

Moral Obligation.

Every transgression of a moral precept, whatever may be its effect on men, is not so much a sin against man as God. If the violator robs a man of his earthly substance, or defames his character by malicious slanders, his principal sin consists in his disobedience to God, and not in the injury inflicted on his victim. Doing this, he transgresses the established law that God has ordained for the well-ordering of his government, and exhibits a total destitution of love to God, and the grossest depravity of heart. Without the moral government of God there can be nothing good. The world would become a moral lazar-house—men would be monsters, and every social tie would be dissolved. The hands of men would be fettered with infamy, and their hearts would be the fountain of the vilest emotions. Moral right is God's law. By this, men will be judged—by it, justified or condemned. The laws of men are frequently incapable of reaching the offender; justice is deferred, and the innocent suffer while the guilty escape.

The utmost that human laws can accomplish, frequently, in the punishment of crimes, is but to retaliate. A maimed body—blighted prospects, and a ruined character, can not be restored by any punishment that human laws can inflict. But even this small pittance of redress is often denied. The vile seducer who has covered with perpetual infamy his victim, and pierced the heart with the keenest sorrow, stalks a gentleman, regardless of right. Thus, while human laws protect the property of men, and defend their characters only by retaliation, the affections are left unprotected, and the keenest sorrows may be multiplied with impunity. But let not any glory on this account, for the judgment of God will fall with its righteous measure on such as sin. And, though human laws may protect them while they revel in iniquity, the vengeance of God will at last mete out to them a just reward.

Observance of the Sabbath.—A meeting was held at the Union Methodist church in Philadelphia on the 28th ult., to promote the observance of the Sabbath, particularly in reference to the conveyance of merchandize on the public works. The meeting seems to have been well attended, and spirited resolutions proposed and seconded by ministers of different denominations were unanimously passed, condemning travelling and transportation of merchandize on the Lord's day. The meeting also expressed approbation of a Sabbath convention being called in Pittsburg, this autumn.—Bap. Adv.

Conventions and resolutions will never effect much in religious matters while there is no "thus saith the Lord," to move the hearts and bind the consciences of men.—The worldly interests of men will not allow them to observe a day as holy time when there is nothing stronger than the "guess so" of men to sustain its claims. Let those who wish to promote the observance of a day of rest and worship, first establish themselves on the command of God, and urge this as the reason why a day should be kept holy, and then may they have some hope of success, and not before.

News of the Day.

Populatinn.—The Cincinnati Chronicle has been examining the six returns of the census taken at intervals of ten years each since the adoption of the Constitution.—The investigations show some curious facts:

1. The population of the United States increases exactly 34 per cent. each ten years, and which doubles every twenty-four years. This law is so uniform and permanent, that when applied to the population of 1790, and brought down to the present time, it produces nearly the very same result as shown by the census of 1840. And thus we may tell with great accuracy what will be the census of 1850. It will be nearly twenty-three millions.

2. But though this is the aggregate result, it is by no means true of each particular part of the country; for New England increases at the rate of 15 per cent. each ten years, while the north western States increase 100 per cent. in that period.

3. The slave population increased at 30 per cent., but since, at less than 25 per cent. The free population have, however, increased at the rate of 36 per cent. At this rate, therefore, the difference between the free and slave population is constantly increasing.

4. Another fact is, that the colored population increase just in proportion to the distance south; and that slavery is certainly and rapidly decreasing in the States bordering on the free States.

The Late Cabinet.—All the Secretaries that go out, will have to pay dearly for their honor. They have been in office about six months, and will draw $3,000 each; but this will not go far in breaking house-keeping at home, moving families, and providing new establishments, getting horses and carriages, furnishing large houses, &c. &c. Mr. Badger it is said calculates upon a loss of about $4,000, which is quite a sum in a North Carolina lawyer's pocket. Mr. Bell took a large house and elegantly furnished it from top to bottom. His loss must be yet greater. Mr. Crittenden moved into the furnished house of Mr. Madison, who will soon take it off his hands, and thus save him much loss. Mr. Granger will come off with less loss than either of the others, having been less committed in his outfits. The loss, however, is serious to all—their business has been broken in upon—their plans of life disturbed—their families disarranged.—Alexandria Gazette.

Second Crop of Silver.—We had the pleasure yesterday of examining another large mass of silver from the mine in Davidson county, North Carolina. It weighed forty-pounds, and was as enticing a "hunk" of mineral as we have seen for a long time. It has gone to the mint, where, true to the character of the newly rich, it will soon be taking "liberties."—Phila. (U. S.) Gaz.

Auburn and Rochester Rail Road.—The cars were to run on this road on the 20th inst., across the Cayuga lake, leaving but eight miles to be traveled in stages to Auburn. The road, it is expected, will be completed to Auburn in October. The receipts upon sixty-three miles completed, have been from $500 to $700 per day!—When the road is completed to Auburn, the receipts will probably be from $1,000 $1,200 per day Half the receipts are frequently derived from way passengers.—Troy Budget.

Oberlin Institute.—The commencement at this Institution took place on the 24th ult. The first degree of arts was conferred upon nine young men and three young "women." The Oberlin Evangelist states, "about fifty have been admitted to the Freshman class in the College, of whom seventeen are young ladies."

A Great Man Caught.—The Messrs. Browns and Mr. Corrie have had the good news to-day, that the villain who swindled them out of $52,000 had been arrested, and with plenty of money in his possession.—In July, 1840, there appeared a paragraph in the newspapers stating that Col. Monroe Edwards, of Louisiana, had with great philanthropy brought his two hundred slaves from his plantation up to Cincinnati, where he had set them all free. Col. Edwards about that time introduced himself to Mr. Lewis Tappan and other leading Abolitionists, and stated he was about to proceed to London, to procure the interference of the British Government, for the purpose of obtaining the release of a large number of slaves who had been illegally smuggled from Cuba into Texas.

Before he left this country, however, he became short of funds, and desired his abolition friends to furnish him some aid in this respect; but they in the meantime had received advices from Cincinnati that no one there knew any thing of the two hundred liberated slaves, and they had also come to the knowledge that the Colonel had with him a young negro, a native African, who was sometimes a black boy, and sometimes a black girl, as he had occasion for the services of either. They therefore declined to aid the Colonel. This poor black girl was last winter a tenant of our Alms House, where she was delivered of a mulatto infant. Col. Edwards went to London, and his plans there were defeated by a letter written to Mr. Buxton.

In conversation with the Mayor, Mr. Morris, last year, Mr. Tappan told the story of Col. Edwards, and in the pursuit of rogues, some suspicion was turned towards Edwards, and on comparison of the letters which Mr. Tappan received from him, with the letters of Cadwell to Messrs. Browns, the writing was found to be by the same hand. A mulatto man in Philadelphia was employed to hunt up the African girl, which he accomplished in a few hours, and very soon Col. Edwards was found under her directions. He was taken to the police, and on searching his lodgings his trunk was found, containing a very large sum of money. When the last advices came away, $40,000 had been counted, and more remained.

The Colonel is the son of a highly respectable gentleman in Kentucky who deceased in 1832. Whether he was the robber of the Messrs. Little and others, some months ago, remains yet to be determined. Some of the money received by him has passed through the hands of persons here, and several arrests have been or will be made here.

Mr. Jacob Little went to Philadelphia last evening for the purpose of determining whether Edwards is the man who swindled him.—Jour. of Com.

Melancholy and Fatal Accident.—On Saturday afternoon, an accident of a most mournful nature occurred on Bel Air road, a mile and a half from town. Thomas Grimes, John Fleming, each about 15 years of age, and John Bokee, of the age of 11 years, were all killed at the same time and place. They are the sons of Messrs. Charles Grimes, John Fleming, and John Bokee, who reside in the vicinity of each other in Gay street near High. The unfortunate boys, in company with several others, went out in the afternoon for the purpose of amusement, and having arrived at a spot at a little above Harford run, where the bank had been excavated in order to procure sand for building, they entered the cavity and remained for some time. They were at last advised by the other boys to leave the place, as danger was to be apprehended. This advice was scarcely given, when the bank above them came down, and covered them to the depth of two feet. When taken out they still manifested signs of life, but expired in the space of a minute or two. The melancholy spectacle was yesterday witnessed of the simultaneous interment of the three juvenile deceased at Green Mount, attended to their untimely resting place by the friends of their respective families.—Baltimore Sun.

The Wyandott Reservation.—A correspondent of the Xenia Torch Light, writing from Sandusky City the 20th ult. says:

"You have heard much of the negotiation now on hand between the Wyandott Indians, and Col. Johnson, agent for the General Government for the purchase of the Wyandott reservation of land. Col. Johnson, is now at Upper Sandusky, with a prospect of concluding a treaty. The Indians are willing to accept an annuity of $20,000 per annum, but the agent is willing to give them only $15,000 which they will probably accept. The Indians, by a general vote, have determined to sell if satisfactory terms are agreed upon. There is another proposal offered them. The lands to be sold, and the nett proceeds invested in General Government or other stocks, bearing 5 per cent. per annum interest. The quantity of land is about 115,000 acres, which is worth an average of $5 per acre. The result of the treaty will be known in a few days."

Justice.—The Vermont Gazette states that two young men were recently arrested in Manchester, in that State, for robbing a man, robbing a bookstore, attempting to rob and burn a bank, and for making an attempt to set fire to a tavern house. These crimes were all confessed by one of them. After their arrest the most guilty one of the two was set at liberty on giving bail in the insignificant sum of $200; the other is now in jail, and will probably serve a long term in the State prison. The reason assigned by the Gazettee for this even handed dispensation of justice is, that the family of one is rich, of the other poor.—Boston Post.

On Sunday night last Mr. Borus, of Staten Island, sent Christopher Dunegan, Jeremiah Lucy, and another man, unknown, in his employ, to look for a boat that was lost or stolen from Quarantine. At 8 o'clock a man named Joseph Silvey heard the cry of murder from some person off in the stream, and went off with J. Van Petter, and A. Nye, and found a man in a boat, with his head horribly cut in 2 or 3 places, left arm broken, with a severe gash in it. He said that he had thrown C. Dunegan, and J. Lucy overboard, to save his own life, all three being drunk at the time. A bottle of gin was left untouched. They took him ashore at Fort Hamilton and delivered him in charge of the officers there. The bodies of the others have not yet been found. They all have families.—Jour. of Com.

Pennsylvania Horticultural Society.—The Horticultural Exhibition closed on Friday evening, 24th ult. It was open three days, and it is estimated that 15,000 persons visited it. The profusion of flowers and rare plants could not be surpassed. Every thing choice or rare, or possessing beauty, seemed to have clustered there. The fruits were very rich, and notwithstanding the season has been unpropitious, the display was remarkable for the excellent kind and quantity of delicious specimens exhibited. There were eighty different parcels of delicious Grapes. There were thirty-four dishes of Peaches, not to be surpassed for size and quality in the Union. Apples were well represented by nineteen qualities, and there were fifteen parcels of Quinces. The Pears were particularly attractive from their size, beauty, and well known luscious qualities. The Plumbs were monstrous in size, and a few Pomgranates exhibited were astonishingly large. It is conceded the fruit was unusually fine, and much of it surpassed former exhibitions.

The vegetable department was certainly superior to any thing before seen. Many new varieties have been introduced within a few years. Their goodness and superiority may with justice be attributed to the influence of this Society. It has infused a new taste for horticultural pursuits, while its effects upon vegetables can hardly be estimated. Every person has been delighted with the Exhibition. Its superiority to many former ones is attributed to the interest taken by the seedsmen and florists. Under their special management, aided by some gentlemen horticulturalists and the refined taste of a few ladies, the whole Exhibition has been beautifully got up and admirably managed. The success of the Society's efforts is an evidence that they meet with public approbation. The crowds of people who successively thronged the halls day and night, is the best compliment which could be paid to the members and their various committees.

British Aggressions in Central America.—Captain Roberts, of the brig Frances, arrived from San Juan, informs that a few days before he sailed, the British sloop of war Tweed, Lieut. Douglass, arrived there, having on board a King of the Musquito Coast, that he ordered the Musquito flag to be hoisted, informed the people that they must prepare to leave there on the 1st of March, and finally, took the commandant of San Juan to the Balize to be tried for piracy. Some months since the English papers stated that the King of the Musquito shore had died, and by will, had bequeathed his dominions to the Queen of Great Britain.

From Mexico.—The following is an extract of a letter to the editor of the New Orleans Courier:

Vera Cruz, Sept. 1, 1841

Since our last there has been a revolution which bids fair to upset the present Government. It commenced about the beginning of last month in Guadaiaxara. On the 25th ult. Vera Cruz pronounced in its favor. Xalapa, parts of the State with the city of Guanaxuato, and most of the southern States of Mexico, have all declared for the plan of Jalesco, which is to put down the 15 per cent law—reform the piauta de Cmisos, and the tariff, with several other reforms.

It is thought that Santa Anna was privy to the whole of it, and more especially as he was gone to Perote, where they say he has 1200 followers, and there is little doubt he will go on to Mexico with but trifling, if any opposition, and will of course put down the present authorities, and will place himself and friends in their places. It is to be hoped that this revolution will create favorable changes; in fact, it is positively expected by the generality of the better classes of people, and we are inclined to think business must revive here in a very short time. Government must give some impulse to importations, which are the principal support of their administration. Personal or direct taxes will always meet with great opposition. Never before have things been in a worse state than they are now in Vera Cruz; and letters from Mexico assure us that the times are still worse there.

As it should be.—A Presbyterian in New Jersey has adopted a rule making it obligatory on every church to produce the evidence at the spring session of its having fulfilled its pecuniary contract with the pastor for the past year. The stipulated sum in most cases is barely sufficient for the present maintenance of a family, irrespective of sickness, misfortunes and old age; and when subductions are made from that sorry pittance by delay, or neglect, or refusal of payment, it is fraud in its most cruel form. A minister can never throw out his whole heart and energies in his appropriate work, while he is pressed down by secular cares, and most of all by the evidence that his people are unable to learn lessons of common honesty. Their interests as well as his would be consulted by a different course.—Con. Jour.

The McLeod case.—Capt. Drew, R. N. who commanded the expedition against the Caroline, has declined making a deposition for the benefit of Alexander McLeod, now on trial at Utica. The grounds of his refusal will be seen by the annexed letter to W. H Draper, Esq. agent for McLeod's counsel:

Woodstock, Canada, Sept. 14, 1841.

Sir—I have this day had the honor to receive your letter of the 9th instant, informing me that a Commission has been issued for the purpose of taking evidence on M'Leod's case, and requesting me to attend before the Commissioners at Hamilton on Friday the 17th instant. In reply thereto, I beg leave to say that I shall decline attending for the purpose of giving evidence, upon two grounds—first, I deny the right of the United States Government to bring any Subject to trial as a felon for an act of duty performed by order of Her Majesty's Government. Secondly—that if I were to give evidence upon the case—although my evidence might clear M'Leod, by reason that he was not present at the destruction of the Caroline—yet such an act would be a virtual acdnowledgment on my part that the Americans have a right to try me or any of the officers or men who served under me, and assisted at the destruction of the Caroline, should any of us be so unfortunate as to fall into their hands.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant.

ANDREW DREW Commander.
The Hon W. H. Draper, &c. &c.

Steam Tug Canal Boat.—We learn by the Albany Journal, that during the past week, "Leavenworth's Canal Steam Tugger" has been in operation upon the Erie Canal near Albany, using neither paddle, screw, or submerged water wheels, but is propelled by means of a rotary anchor. The machinery is put into a Lake Boat of the largest class, the engine, &c., occupying the forward cabin only. When propelled at the speed of seven miles an hour, although so large a boat, and drawing two feet six inches of water, she causes no surge to injure the banks of the canal.

She has taken two heavy loaded boats, of more than one hundred tons freight, over five miles an hour, and with two thirds of her power took three scows and two lake boats, with two hundred and fifty tons freight, four miles an hour, and is capable of taking eight boats with four hundred tons freight, four miles an hour, upon the enlarged canal, without extra exertion. By this method a train of boats may be towed for less than half the expense of towing with horses. She passes the locks without the least difficulty, and has no connection with the tow-path.

A Ship burned at Sea.—The Ship Republic, Dorr, from Calcutta, for Boston, was burnt at Port Louis. On the 21st of June, the Republic commenced leaking two or three days out and the leak increased so that it was thought advisable to put into Port Louis, where she arrived June 6th. At 5 o'clock A. M. on the 21st she was discoverd to be on fire. The officers and crew remained on board using every exertion to save her. She continued to burn till 12 o'clock, when the crew left her and she soon after blew up. About 400 tons of her cargo had been saved. The fire was supposed to have originated from spontaneous combustion in consequence of the water getting to the linseed on board.

A yonng lawyer of Buffalo, respectably connected, and just married, has been arrested for forgery. The cause which lead to the crime was pecuniary embarrassment, brought on by extravagant living.

Religious Tolerance.—The Court of Session in the city of New York, is composed of three Judges, one a Protestant, the second a Catholic, and the third an Israelite.

The Hollis street church, Boston, has been mortgaged for $3,000, to pay the expenses of the controversy with Rev. Mr. Pierpont. The Times says Mr. Attorney Rand's fees were $1,150, and Mr. Dexter's $1,075, Mr. Pierpont's salary is now $3,300 in arrears.

More Murders in Florida.—On Sunday 26th ult. eight miles from Gary's Ferry, a party of Indians killed Mr. Jonathan Twigpin and a Mr. Barber, and drove off some cattle.

On the 29th, near Black Creek, Messrs. Bleach and Penner were fired on, and the former killed; the latter escaped. On the 30th, about 8 miles from Fort Crane, two brothers named Hallads were killed.

Dreadful Shipwreck—Foty-one Lives lost.—We learn from the Quebec Gazette that the bark Amanda, Captain Davis, from Limerick, bound to Quebec, went ashore at Little Metis Point on the 26th ult. She had 40 passengers on board and a crew of 18. Of the former 29, and of the latter 12 were lost.

The Limerick passenger ships have been peculiarly unfortunate this season. It was only in May last, that we had to record the loss of the Minstrel from that port, with about 160 passengers, when 137 of them, with 11 of the crew unfortunately perished.

Suit in the U. S. Court.—A suit was brought recently in the District Court of the United States at Baltimore, to recover of H. H. and Geo. Williams, an amount due to the United States, on a custom House bond. The defendants did not deny the debt, but offered by way of a set-off, a draft or bill of exchange drawn in 1835, by James Reeside, on the Post Office Department, for $5000, and accepted by the Department through the Treasurer, which draft thus accepted was afterwards endorsed over to H. H. Williams. The Court gave as its opinion that the defendants could not set off the accepted draft in question against the plaintiff's claim, because the draft and acceptance was an acceptance of the Post Office Department, and drawn upon a particular fund in that Department, due to James Reeside, on his account for transporting the mail. Whilst the debt sought to be recovered was due to the United States for custom House duties, and was not a debt to the Post Office Department.

Books.—According to Professor Park, the total number of the different books printed, down to the present date, is estimated at 1,000,000 volumes in the German language; 800,000 in French; 600,000 in English, (including 25,000 American,) and 600,000 in all other languages—making a total of 3,000,000 different volumes, or say 2,000,000 different works.—Allowing only 1,200 copies of each work to have been printed, and supposing all the volumes to be an average size, they would form a solid pile larger than the largest Egyptian pyramid, although it is 500 feet high and 690 feet square at the base, covering 11 acres of ground. The annual number of new publications in Germany is said to be 7,000—in France is probably 5,000—in Great Britain 3,000—and in the United States about 500 works or 700 volumes, of which about three-fifths are original American productions.—Philad. Inquirer.

At the late Fair in New-Haven, Mr. Evarts, of Guilford, exhibited a specimen of Indian Corn, which he told us had yielded one hundred and forty bushels of shelled corn to the acre.

Two new war steamers have been ordered by Government to be built at Philadelphia.

Messrs. S. O. Ogden and K. H. Smith have commenced a libel suit against the editors of the Commercial Advertiser—Damages laid at $100,000.

We learn from the Louisville Journal that the citizens of Woodford have purchased the fine farm, in that county, on which the Hon. J. J. Crittenden was born, and made him a present of it. The price paid was $17,000.

The Rochester papers mention that the Genesee Valley Canal will soon be navigable to Dansville, the tunnel and sliding banks at Portage, the heaviest works, being in a forward state.

Munificent Bequests.—Shubael Lawrence Esq., of Falmouth, Mass., recently deceased, bequeathed $10,000 to the Falmouth Academy, and $10,000 to the Congregational Society in East Falmouth. Considering that he was not a very rich man, these are certainly munificent donations.

A cave of large dimensions has within a few days been discovered in the town of Colebrook, Ct., near the Massachusetts line. It was discovered by some boys who were playing among the rocks in a precipice. The cave has been explored to the distance of a quarter of a mile.

There are fifteen newspapers published in Mexico, all of a small size; price never less than $25 or $30 per annum.

A resolution in relation to Grogan, passed by a meeting of Americans on the frontier, says, "If this outrage is to be justified, 50,000 Green mountain boys, good and true, shall be ready for the crisis!"

The Common Council of Buffalo have applied to Government to have a war steamer on lake Erie. The English have two; we have not a gun.

Two more of the men injured on board of the Fulton, have since died, making four deaths in all.

Wm. Elliott, an Englishman, aged 40, was found drowned in the canal near Rochester on the 11th—the fourth case there within a week. Nothing of consequence was found in his trunk, save a bottle of whiskey, a pack of cards, and an obscene book.

Gen. Houston is said to have been elected President of Texas by a large majority.

Time for Painting Houses.—The Genesee Farmer says that repeated experiments show that paint put upon houses late in autumn, or in winter, will last far longer than that put on in warm weather. In cold weather the oil dries on the clap-boards, and with other ingredients form a durable body; but in hot weather the boards absorb the oil, and what remains on the surface has but little substance.

It is said that some 50,000 persons are effectually organized in the "Hunters Lodges," ready to precipitate themselves on Canada when occasion offers. These are the results of the disaffection of great numbers of Canadians now in the United States. Something is brewing.

It is said, that of the thirty-four millions of French population, there is a full third who know not what it is to eat butcher's meat, and who, among other civic rights to which our political reformers give little attention are deprived of one of the essential—that of recruiting physical strength by substantial and generous food.

The factory girls in Massachusetts are supposed to earn $4,000,000 annually.

Home Squadron.—We learn that this squadron is to be composed of the following vessels: "The Independence, razee; the frigate Columbia; the sloops of war Falmouth, and Vandalia; the brig Boxer; the schooner Grampus; and the two steam frigates, Mississippi, and Missouri.

Orders have been sent to our Navy Yard for the construction of two steamers of the medium size, carrying six hundred tons.—One of them is to be propelled on the principle of the Archimedes screw.—Philad. North Amer.

Attempt to Commit Suicide by Drowning.—A young, industrious girl of 16, named Mary Wright, whose drunken mother resides at No. 682 Water Street, owing to the gross abuse and continued ill-treatment of that mother, in a fit of desperation, went yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock to the foot of Walnut street, and threw herself into the dock. A humane person, whose name we did not learn, sprung into the water and kept her above the surface until Mr. Thompson, one of the day officers of the 7th Ward, hastened to their relief with a boat, and rescued them both from drowning. The latter gentleman then took the girl to his house, restored her to apparent health by appropriate means, clad her warm and dry, and conveyed her in his gig to the Police Office, where she was comfortably taken care of. It is the intention, we understand, to bring the unfeeling mother to account for her cruel treatment of her child.—Jour. of Com.

From the Cleaveland Herald.

Water Spout on Lake Erie.—On Friday evening last, between 5 and 6 P. M., our citizens enjoyed the sight of a rare and imposing exhibition in the natural world commonly known as a "water spout," which passed in front of the town within a mile of the Bacon Light.

It seems that what we call a whirlwind upon the land, causes a water spout at sea when the aerial forces are sufficiently powerful to raise water.

These whirls or whirlwinds in the atmosphere result from the meeting of different currents of air, and form a vortex in the same manner as eddies are made in running water by obstructions or counter currents. On Friday the wind blew strong from the N. E. until about 5 P. M., when it changed suddenly to West, still blowing a gale and bringing onward a dark and threatning storm.

A few minutes before the change of wind the whirl which caused the spout, came off the land two miles West of the pier, producing a great agitation of the water, raising and driving about the spray with great fury; the sea running high at the time. In a short time a portion of the water, descended in the form of a large sack, half way to the surface of the Lake. It was apparently of the size of a large hay stack, hollow, and the spray or vapor of which it was composed had a spiral and upward motion around the cavity of the column. It proceeded from the shore in a North Easterly direction, not in a regular track, but with constant and sudden deviations, perhaps two miles; the portion descending from the clouds, at times almost dispersed by the strength of the gale. If the sun had not been obscured, and the air darkened by the storm in the West, (immediately behind it,) the whole of the spout would no doubt have been distinctly seen. When opposite the harbor its direction became more Southerly, its color changed from the dark cast of a heavy cloud to the witness of a spray of falling rain, and it took the form of an inverted cone with regular elements, its vortex resting on the water, (not larger than a hogshead,) its base surrounded by moving clouds. Very little rain fell while it was in sight, and whether this proceeded from the water elevated by the whirlwind could not be ascertained.—As it traveled Eastward before the wind, it approached the shore a mile East of the city, changing shape continually and causing as it passed a great commotion in the already agitated waters. Here a fresh gust seemed to break up the column and it vanished. Fortunately no boats or vessels were in its route, or damage might have ensued.

Among the numerous displays of the grandeur of storms which our waters afford, we have witnessed none more varied or sublime than this. It was not considered a large spout when compared with those which occur on the broad ocean to the wonder and alarm of the mariner, but seems to have been perfectly formed through upon a limited scale.

We are informed that three of them occurred at the same moment about 25 miles west of this place a few years since, and passed among some vessels without coming in contact with any of them. It may be very long before another makes its appearance here.

A grant of 103,000 acres of land is said to have been made to the Papists by the Texan Congress.

An Education convention, in which 20 counties were represented, recently met at Clarksburg, Va., to promote the interest of common schools. It will be useless to try until slavery is abolished.

The yellow fever continues its terrible ravages at New Orleans. There were 51 deaths on the 29th ult., 41 of them from the epidemic. Over one-third of those attacked are cut down by it.

The trial of John C. Colt, for the murder of Samuel Adams, which was set down for Monday last, in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, was postponed on application of the prisoner's counsel, to Monday the 1st of November next.

Dr. Fitch, who was recently arrested at Philadelphia, on the charge of forgery committed a long time ago, has been discharged, there being no kind of proof to sustain the charge. It was the result of a plot to swindle him out of money.

A Public dinner was to be given to the Hon. Mr. Wickliffe, the new Postmaster General, by a number of the citizens of Bardstown and Nelson counties, on Saturday, the 2nd inst.

The veto power has been vested in the President 54 years, and in that time has ben exercised but fourteen times, or about once in every 700 acts passed by Congress.

Notices.

PUBLIC CONCERT.

The members of the De Ruyter Band will give a Public Concert at the Presbyterian Church in this village, on Thursday evening, the 21st inst., commencing at 6 o'clock. The Stockholders of the "De Ruyter Band Association," together with the citizens of De Ruyter and the adjoining towns, are respectfully invited to attend on the occasion.

By order of the Band,
A. H. BURDICK, Sec'y.
De Ruyter, Oct. 13, 1841.

MARRIED,

In Truxton, on the 14th inst., by Eld. R. G. Burdick, Mr. DYER COON, and Miss PRISCILLA RICHMOND, all of the former place.

DIED,

In Preston, on the 21st of Sept., HARRIS, the son of Jonathan D. and Jemina Rogers, aged 3 years, 3 months, and 14 days.

In Truxton, on the 13th inst., of the bilious intermittent fever, Mrs. ESTHER P., wife of Lorenzo D. Ayres, and daughter of Caleb W. and Mary Church, in the 20th year of her age.

Sister Ayres became a subject of renewing grace when about 20 years of age, and has ever adorned her profession in a christian like manner until her final dissolution. During her illness she spoke much of the goodness of God. Her soul was filled with a Savior's love. And though her bodily sufferings towards the last were great, yet she felt to praise the Lord for his goodness, and manifested the utmost composure of mind and resignation to his will. By this stroke of God's providence, her husband and relatives have sustained a loss which can only be made up to them by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Her remains were interred on the 14th inst., and an appropriate discourse was preached by Eld. Russel G. Burdick, from Jeremiah x. 23. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." COMM.

In Eaton, on the 8th ult., Miss LYDIA ANN FRY, aged 19 years.

She was born and reared in the same town in which she died, never leaving her home to reside elsewhere till the autumn of 1838. She then went to Scott, Cortland County, and spent about seven months with her grandparents, named Burdick.

Previous to her leaving home, she entertained many sceptical views with regard to religion; for, like all other minds unenlightened by the Holy Spirit, her's was in capable of comprehending the mysteries of Divine revelation; she was, therefore, tempted to discard the whole as an empty fable. But, while in Scott, she was brought to see her lost condition as a guilty sinner, and to feel her need of the application to her soul of the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin. And she soon heard the whisperings of a still small voice to her heart, saying, "Daughter, thy sins are forgiven thee." Soon after her return home, she was constrained by her conviction of duty to make a public profession of that religion which she had recently embraced.—She accordingly united with the Baptist Church in Morrisville, Eld. E. D. Reed being pastor, with which she continued in good standing until her death.

The natural temperament of her mind was enthusiastic in a high degree, and her mental feelings were deep and strong. But this fervor of feeling was regulated by a well ordered mind, and an excellent heart. Of an affectionate and cheerful disposition herself, she was well calculated to make others cheerful around her.

Her health had been usually good till Oct., 1841, when she was taken ill of the bilious fever which terminated her life.—During the first stages of her disease, her case was not considered alarming; but, after months of protracted illness, her friends began to fear that a curcless malady had seized her, which would lay her in an early grave. And as hopes of her recovery grew fainter and fainter, she began to withdraw her mind from worldly objects, and commenced a strict examination of her heart, to ascertain what was her positive standing in relation to her God. When she reviewed her past life and compared it with God's most holy law, and saw in how many instances she had failed to obey that law in all its purity, she was led to doubt her final adoption in the family of God.—She was afraid to pass over the dark stream of death, lest the Lord should forsake her in her hour of need. But these dark clouds soon passed away, and she felt to bless God for all the affliction and pain which He, in his wisdom, saw fit to inflict upon her. She did not repine at her sickness, even though it should terminate fatally, if God could be glorified thereby. For six months before her death she was unable, through weakness, to stand on her feet, during which time she was as cheerful and social as when in health; and although her sufferings were extreme, much of the time, not a murmuring word escaped her lips. She lingered on without much apparent change till the first of September, when she began rapidly to decline. But as her strength of body failed, the power of her mind seemed to expand, and her faith and confidence in her Redeemer to increase. She spoke of dying with as much composure as if it were only a journey of pleasure. For the last few days of her life she seldom spoke, although she wished to say much, but she was too weak.—Yet, when she did speak, she showed how completely grace had triumphed over the pale monster, Death. It had discarded him of his sting, and all the agony he could inflict on the dying frame was trifling in comparison to the bright anticipations of heavenly bliss. A few hours before she died, when we thought she was past noticing any thing, she opened her half closed eyes, and with a smile said to those around her, "I see visions of the future; my ideas are far more extensive than they used to be." Soon after, she requested that a prayer might be said, which was accordingly done by an aged man who was present, whom she had known and revered from her childhood. She gave signs of listening intently, and when he arose from his knees she said to him, "I love to hear you pray." These were about the last words she spoke, and at half-past twelve her happy spirit was released from its prison-house of clay, and was borne to the bosom of its God. The funeral was numerously attended, when Eld. E. D. Reed delivered a discourse from Phillippians i. 21. "To die is gain." COMM.

LIST OF LETTERS.

John Whitford, (the money was credited on book. We will give the desired information soon.) Mrs. Ann Campbell (we will attend to it as far as we can)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of J. A. Potter, $8, cr. N. H. Satterlee, Asa C. Potter, Benj. West, Joseph A. Potter, $2, each, of James Hubbard $2, cr. Daniel Babcock, of John Whitford, $2,25, cr. B. F. Randolph, of Ethan R. Curtis, $4, cr. Ethan Rogers, vol. 1 and 2, Elias Card, $1.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THIS SIDE UP.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ABIJAH N. ANNAS,

LATE of the firm of "Elmore Annas & Ayer," has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore (La Fayette Block,) where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in his line of business.

The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper,

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. Also,

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Climax Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK

☞Done well, on short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block No 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841. S. G. WALKER. 34tf

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

☞BOOTS & SHOES,☜

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than any ever sold before in this town (for the especial reason that I have "Peculiar advantages in purchasing") that is to say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34yl

MADISON COM. PLEAS
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, and Jane Goodwin, by John Maxson, the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition thereon, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, on the 26th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated in the village of De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of Le Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded, beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner thereof; thence south about one rod to lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence east on the said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by Marcus Bump; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutten, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm MAXSON

NO IMPOSITION!

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequalled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.

De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the Oct. 4th STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by J. N. ELMORE
October 4

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

ELECTION NOTICE.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
Secretary's Office, Albany, August 25, 1841.
To the Sheriff of the County of Madison: Sir—

NOTICE is hereby given you, that the term of service of Avery Skinner, a Senator of the Fifth Senate District, of this State, will expire on the last day of December next, and that a Senator is to be chosen in that District, to which the county of Madison belongs, at the General Election to be held on the first, second and third days of November next.

At the same election the following officers are to be chosen, viz. Three Members of Assembly, for the said County, and one Coroner, in the place of Ira Seymour, whose term of office expires on the last day of December next.

JOHN C. SPENCER, Secretary of State.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the notice received by me from the Secretary of State.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.
Dated August 28, 1841. 28tde

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.

JOHN N ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.
De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.
Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

ATTENTION!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on the accounts of Spencer & Saunders, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

N. B. The accounts are divided, and it is my own only that I ask for. Please attend.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30t
A. L. SAUNDERS.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the veriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians or Families at prices, 10 per cent less than any establishment in this place, at the STONE STORE

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS Agent for the sale of the following valuable Medicines:—

Rev. I. Covert's Balm of Life
Moffat's Phœnix Bitters.
Moffat's Life Pills.
Phinney's Pills.
Phelps's Tomato Pills
Mile's " "
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.
Balm of China.
Parker's Pulmonary Balm.
Cheeseman's Arabian Balsam.
Hutchinson's Liniment.
With others too numerous to mention.
Oct. 4.

Swedes, English and Russia Bar Iron. Round and square American Iron, Swedes Horse Shoe Iron, Band and Hoop Iron, Nail rods, Swedes German, Cast and Spring Steel, Swedes Iron Nails, Cast Steel Shovels, Mill and X Cut Saws for sale very low at the STONE STORE.
October 4.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots Ladies and Childrens Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the STONE STORE
October 4.

L. W. BLISS' Window Sash
Bliss' & Co. Blinds.
Holme's Simpson & Stuckey Edge Tools, consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE,
October 4 Manufacturers' Agent.

1 CASE Gentlemen's CLOTH CAPS, Fur Trimmed

1 CASE Ladie's Silk Hats,
ALSO;
The splendid $8 LACE VEIL, at $4,50, for sale at the STONE STORE.

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, and Valeces, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this kind, which I can sell as low as any shop west of Albany or Utica, and even De Ruyter not excepted, according to quality and for durability.

Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wool, and some money, and the remainder in Notes; also, wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese, and every thing that is raised by the Farmer in this vicinity. Bag Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, Pine Lumber, &c. &c. &c.

Pine Lumber for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. 10,000 feet first rate Ash Flooring, and one half of a new Dwelling House to rent for one year or more.

J. R. RIDER.
De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

NOTICE.

THE Co-Partnership heretofore existing under the firm of WILLIAMS & SAYLES, is this day dissolved by mutual consent of parties. All persons indebted to Williams & Sayles, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

M. W. WILLIAMS.
32w3 WM. B. SAYLES.

NOTICE.

FOUND, by the subscriber, a short time since, about two miles south of this village, a BAG OF GRAIN. The owner can have the property by calling on the subscriber and setling the expences of this advertisement, &c.

De Ruyter, Oct. 5th, 1841.
32w2 JAMES CRANDALL.

ONE CENT REWARD,

AND NO CHARGES PAID.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 27th Sept. inst., an indented apprentice boy aged about 19 years, by the name of ISRAEL HOWARD STONE. This is to forbid all persons harboring or trusting him on my account, as I will pay no debts of his contracting after this date. Whoever will return said boy, shall receive the above reward.

De Ruyter Sept. 27th. 1841.
JESSE STILLMAN.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the buisness will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.
De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

POETRY.

Autumn.

Though once enamored with the Spring—
Its pleasure and its bloom,
The pensive muse prefers to sing,
And touch the more congenial string,
Of Autumn's pleasing gloom.

She comes, with all her sober train,
To crown the changing year;
The juicy fruit, and shining grain,
Are scattered o'er the hills and plain,
To strengthen and to cheer.

Of late, the meadows, and the field,
And forest, waved in green;
The num'rous flowers the garden yields,
Though long in embryo concealed,
In perfect bloom were seen.

Then to the verdant, shady grove,
The tuneful race resort;
Chanting their sweetest notes of love,
The birds in amorous gestures strove
Their partners' smiles to court.

But now these sprightly scenes are gone,
And summer's joys are fled;
Nature, of all her flowrets shorn,
Her motely colored garb puts on,
Of yellow, brown, and red.

And now the feathered choir no more
Their notes in concert blend;
But in assembling flocks appear,
Prepared their southern course to steer,
Ere wintry storms descend.

Th' enlightened eye can still survey
The scene, without regret;—
Can view the sun's departing ray,
That gilds the last autumnal day,
And witness his retreat;—

The russet hue the meadows wear,
The fading, falling leaf,
The gathered products of the year,
Tho' num'rous tribes demand their share,
For man appears the chief.

For him the various seasons roll,
And in their time return;
Under the wise and firm control
Of Him who gave th' immortal soul,
And reason to discern.

So life's successive seasons fly—
Its winter, too will come;
And man is warned to turn his eye
To future scenes beyond the sky—
His long, eternal home.

Miscellaneous Department.

REMINISCENCES OF JERUSALEM.

Garden of Gethsemane—Chapel of the Virgin Mary—Sepulchres of the Kings—Grotto of Jeremiah—Mount of Olives—Chapel of the Ascension, Bethany—Tomb of Lazarus.

After leaving the Pillar of Absalom, in the King's dale, and the other ancient monuments near it, as we proceed up the valley a short distance, we arrive at the Garden of Gethsemane. Here is the place to which Jesus resorted, with his disciples, and here began the tragic scene which ended in the redemption of a world. Standing beneath the shade of the old olive trees which have withstood the wars and desolation of centuries, one can almost see the weary disciples yielding to the infirmities of the flesh, while "the suffering Savior weeps alone." The present garden is about sixty yards square, and is enclosed by a rough stone wall. A few olive trees remain, of great antiquity, and perhaps springing from the same root as those which stood there in the Savior's time. Though Titus cut down all the wood in the vicinity of Jerusalem, it is not probable that he destroyed the vitality of every stock.

Near the garden is an underground chapel, which covers the tomb of the Virgin Mary, and her husband Joseph. Though we have no authentic account as to where the Virgin died, yet the Greeks find it very profitable to have a chapel over her grave in this place. Chateaubriand talks amusingly enough on this point. He says,—"Though Mary did not die at Jerusalem, she was miraculously buried, by the apostles, at Gethsemane. Euthymius relates the history of this marvelous funeral. St. Thomas, having caused the coffin to be opened, nothing was found in it but a virgin robe, the simple and mean garment of that queen of glory whom the angels had conveyed to heaven!" Credat Chateaubriandus.

Sepulchres of the Kings.—These remarkable sepulchral chambers are situated on the plain, about one-fourth of a mile north-east of the Damascus gate. Much doubt rests upon the question, why they are thus named. Maundrell suggests that Hezekiah may have been buried here, and that these are the sepulchres of the king's sons, mentioned in 2 Chron. xxxii. 33.—From one passage in Josephus, the idea may be drawn that they were the work of Helena, Queen of Adiabene: and from another passage, that they were the work of Herod, were at the corner of the wall with which he enclosed Bezetpa. After descending into a large uncovered court, you descry on its west side an aperture nearly closed up with rubbish, over which is a sculptured frieze, representing clusters of grapes, crowns, and palm-branches.—Crawling through the nearly closed entrance, you find yourself in an anti-room, from which go off two other apartments,—the one single, the second having entrances to two others, by a descent of five or six steps. Each of these apartments, except the first, has five or six excavations or crypts in its sides, for the reception of bodies. The entire cover of one sarcophagus only remains, and not one of the remarkable stone doors so much noticed by travelers, remains standing; all have been broken and thrown down. The labor and expense necessarily required in the excavation of these chambers, in the hard limestone rock, prove them to have been the work of no mean person, although they have failed to secure what was perhaps the main object of the projector—a name.

Returning from the sepulchres of the kings, we find near the Damascus gate, a large natural grotto, the front of which is enclosed by a stone wall, so as to form a Moslem oratory, or praying place. This is called the Grotto of Jeremiah. Tradition says that here the prophet passed the years of the Babylonish captivity,—and his foot-print is shown upon a shelf of the rock, on the side of the grotto. If this be the print of a human foot, it certainly must have been made by a larger man than any who exist now-a-days, being about two feet in length, and about eight inches broad. Not far from the grotto, near to the city wall, is an underground cistern, which, by a little stretch of credulity may be supposed to be the dungeon into which the prophet was cast, and from which he was released by Ebed Melech. Jer. xxxviii. A sarcophagus stands by the side of this cistern, and is used as a watering trough, the admeasurements and ornaments of which correspond to those of the covers found in the sepulchres of the kings.

Road to Bethany.—Leaving the city by St. Stephen's gate, we descend into the valley of Jehoshaphat, or the Kedron.—Nearly half-way down the descent is pointed out the place where the pro-martyr was stoned. Passing the Chapel of Mary, and the garden of Gethsemane, we commence the ascent of the Mount of Olives, probably by the same path which David took, when driven from his throne by his rebellious son. "And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: and the king himself passed over the brook Kedron, and all the people passed over towards the way of the wilderness. And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered: and he went barefoot, and all the people that was with him covered every man his head: and they went up weeping as they went up." 2 Sam. xv. 23, 30. Climbing the rather steep ascent, we pass the place where tradition says the Savior taught his disciples to pray, saying "Our Father which art in heaven," &c.—On reaching the summit of the Mount, the waters of the Dead Sea appear in the deep valley formed by the mountains of Moab, whence Moses viewed the promised land on the east, and the hills of Judea on the west. There is here a Mosque—formerly the Church of the Ascension—erected by the Empress Helena, over what she took to be the place whence the Savior ascended; that this cannot be the place, is proved by the words of the Evangelist, who says, "And he led them out as far as Bethany, and lifted up his hands, and blessed them: and it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven." Luke xxiv. 51. Gradually descending the east side of the Mount, we come to Bethany, the city of Mary and Martha, and their brother Lazarus. Here is pointed out the tomb of Lazarus, whence he was raised from the dead. It is a cave, extending some ten or twelve feet under the hill, with a descent of six or seven steps. There is no certain proof of the identity of this place, but it may as well be here as any where else. The present village is small and dirty, and inhabited by lazy Arabs. Any traveler who is not afraid of vermin, may go and take a pipe and a cup of coffee with the sheikh Suliman.

The Savior coming from Jericho, on his way to Jerusalem, must needs pass Bethany. "And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the Mount called the Mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples, saying, Go ye into the village over against you," &c. The site of Bethphage is doubtful, but it seems probable that it may have been on the east side of the Mount, near the Mosque or Chapel of the Ascension. Along this path, from Bethany, the Savior rode, during the short hour of his earthly glory, when the multitude cried, "Hosannah—blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Coming to the top of the Mount, the whole city suddenly bursts into view. How different from that Jerusalem over which the Savior wept. How fearfully has been fulfilled that awful prophecy which the Savior spake! "For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knowest not the time of thy visitation." Luke xix. 43, 44.

On the south of the descent of the Mount is a small hill, called the Hill of Offense, as being the supposed place of Solomon's idol temples. A small valley, called by the Arabs Wady Zembok, from a plant which grows there, separates it from the main hill. This is a favorite place of resort for the wealthier class of Moslems in Jerusalem, during the early part of the summer. It has, however, been supposed that some ancient crypts found upon the summit of the Mount of Olives, were made by Solomon, for the worship of Astoreth, goddess of the Zidonians. "And Solomon went after Ashtoreth, goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites. Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem,—and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon." 1 Kings, xi. 5—7. V D.

Mercury freezes at 38 degrees, Fahrenheit, and becomes a solid mass, malleable under the hammer.

The greatest hight at which visible Clouds ever exist, does not exceed ten miles.

PROVINCE OF REASON.

It was the doctrine of Peripapetics, of Aristotle, and of Plato at their head; and descended, though with slight variations, yet substantially the same, down through the dark ages; that the original prototypes of all possible knowledge lie already stored up in the mind, universal ideas which contain all particular truths; and that the surest, as well as the easiest path to knowledge, is through the mind's intense contemplation of itself. In conformity with this opinion, men disregard facts, and launch boldly forth into a sea of boundless speculation. Hence, system after system, was builded and demolished in rapid succession—each visionary, unsubstantial, and baseless, as that which had preceded it; and from the materials which their own imagination supplied, they constructed an ideal universe, totally different from that which God made.

Hence, sprang the Alchemy and Ontology of the dark ages; and that bold and rational theology, whose deepest inquiries were, not what God has revealed in his word? what stands in the record? but, is God a Quiddity, or an Entity? Do angels, in passing from point to point, pass through space?

Now, the philosophy of Bacon has almost banished this presumptuous and trifling spirit from the domain of natural science. It is beginning to disappear, even from the shadowy regions of metaphysical inquiry; and all men profess, at least, to derive all their opinions on these subjects, from the original sources of knowledge, the observation of facts, in the world of matter and spirit. No man now, professes to erect an independent system of his own—philosophy is only a collection and classification of facts; and the truest philosopher is he who confines himself most rigidly to this simple operation; and who, forgetting all his theories and assumptions, and a priori speculations, sits down humbly at the feet of nature, to observe, to interpret, to wonder—not to torture, or to cavil. Now this is precisely the business of the Christian theologian, and the spirit of the Baconian philosophy—is the spirit in which his inquiries should be pursued. And this method of procedure would lay the axe at once to the root of half the controversies and all the heresies in the land. It would narrow the field of controversy, and bring our inquiries to a point. Men would not ask, is it mysterious? is it difficult, inexplicable? is it reconcilable with my philosophy? But, is it true? Not, how reasonest thou? But, how readest thou?—Not, what is it your taste would choose? But, what does God's word command?—What chemist would deny a chemical fact, because he cannot explain it, would reject the teachings of experience, because they were mysterious; inexplicable by the principles of his philosophy. And why? Because he is not the judge, but the minister of nature; and his philosophy must be moulded to nature, not nature to his philosophy. Now let the Christian theologian assume this same attitude of reverential deference to God's voice in his word, which the chemist manifests to God's voice in his works, and the result will be the same. Theology will be the interpretation of God's word, as chemistry is of his works.

But, is not this confining theological inquiries within very narrow limits? Annihilating, indeed, very much of what often bears that name? It is indeed to annihilate a world of idle abstractions; of airy, dreamy, visionary speculations; and to substitute in its place, a world equally large, of actual, substantial realities. It is to substitute the simple attraction of Newton, for Des Cartes' whirlpools of ether, revolving magnificently in the sky; to exchange the mysterious wonders of alchemy, for the substantial discoveries of the chemist.

But there is no danger, lest his genius should become cramped within the narrow boundaries thus assigned to the investigation of the Christian theologian. Perhaps on a nearer view, when we come to consider what is meant by the correct interpretation of the Bible—the large attainments it imperatively demands; the various faculties it calls into requisition, our scheme may assume a new aspect; and they who might at first find fault with its limits, may afterwards feel disposed to complain of its extent.—Rev. L. W. Green.

Air is about 816 times lighter than water.

Heat rarifies air to such an extent that it may be made to occupy 5 or 600 times the space it did before.

During the conversion of Ice into water, 140 degrees of heat are absorbed.

Water when converted into steam, increases in bulk 800 times.

One hundred pounds of the water of the Dead Sea, contains forty-five pounds of salt.

Natural History.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

THE GIRAFFE,

This is the tallest animal of all the boundless variety which the infinite Creator has scattered over the earth. It is unlike all other quadrupeds, yet has points of resemblance to many. Like the leopard it is covered with a beautiful spotted coat.—It has a tail like a lion's, and a neck like a camel's; and like the camel is also provided with hard insensible cushions on its breasts and knees, on which it quietly rests its great weight when lying down. It has legs like a horse, but divided hoofs like an ox. Though it lives on vegetable food, and chews the cud like the camel, it has a slender tongue like the ant-eater, which it can stretch out two and a half feet.

The Giraffe's tongue is wonderfully adapted to his favorite food, which consists of leaves and twigs of the thorny mimosa, or acacia. The tongue has a coat so hard that it can scarcely be pierced with a sharp knife. It is very rough, and can seize on leaves and twigs with such force that they can be hardly pulled from it.—With this well-defended instrument, the animal skilfully selects its food from among the keen thorns, without feeling the slightest pricking.

It has been conjectured that the Giraffe is meant by the Chamois mentioned in Deut. xiv. 5, as the same word is rendered ziraffe, in Arabic, and camelopardalis, in Greek. Camel-leopard, or camel-o-pard, is the old name for the Giraffe, but as they are found only in South Africa, we can hardly suppose they would be mentioned among animals to be eaten in Judea.

The largest are 20 feet high. The fore legs are ten feet long, and the neck rises ten feet higher. A man on horse back can ride under its belly, without stooping, while the majestic creature is browsing on the top of a tree four times the hight of a common man. It never attacks other animals, and flees from every assailant; but when it finds no hope in flight, it will turn and defend itself by kicking its pursuer.

Its eyes are prominent, like those of a rabbit, so that it can take in almost the whole circle of the horizon at one view.

It differs from all other animals, in the long projections on its forehead, which are really parts of its scull. Between these is another bunch, or budding horn, which appears as if it would become a central horn, like that of the rhinoceros, or unicorn. Its ears are beautiful, and are turned with quick and spirited motion towards slight sounds which it discerns with amazing quickness. Thus it seems fitted in all respects, for an independent, inoffensive life. The most noble animals are the most peaceful.

The Giraffes which were brought to this country nearly three years ago, by Macomber & Co., were caught in the great Kalliharra desert, in South Africa, about 700 miles north of the Cape of Good Hope. The following narrative will show what it costs to procure the means of gratifying our curiosty.

"Mr. Clayton and his party had persevered in their adventurous course far into the interior, within a few degrees of the southern tropic, before they entered any of those peculiar open plains abounding with the mimosa tree and the Giraffe. Small herds of the majestic creature were at length discerned, lifting their sprightly heads above the scattered clumps of these trees, and flying with excessive timidity at the first approach of the intruders. When thus surprised by the hunter, the Giraffe appears the most wonderful and beautiful of animals. Fleet and graceful as the antelope, bright and dazzling in the mottled sleekness, and light and lofty in their action, the timid groups, exquisitely gifted with sight and hearing, collect in large herds from their separate browsing places, and wheeling in their perchance unnecessary flight, suddenly stop, with uplifted heads, within the aim of the destroyer.—To shoot them, therefore, requires little skill; but to hunt them, so as to take even one of them alive, is a task for the best experience and adroitness. Like all other ruminating animals of a timid character, when pursued in their wild state, the Giraffes take their course to the windward, and aware of this, the experienced hunter directs his course a few points to the right or left of theirs, as if intending to pass them far ahead; and thus while they keep their eye upon him as a doubtful pursuer, they unconsciously keep on a line to which he is constantly converging, 'and thus,' says Mr. Clayton, 'he comes into the midst of the herd, notwithstanding their superior speed, because they have to run a distance equal to about one-third of a circle more than he has to perform in the same time.'

"At this crisis, the cool skill of the hunter, and the quality of his steed are put to the severest test. Suddenly spurring toward some particular Giraffe, and selecting the smallest of the herd, he throws his *lasso over the lofty head of his game, and instantly springing from his horse, and holding the long coil of cord loosely in his hand, prepares for a check which will bring either himself or the Giraffe to the earth. But the neck which is noosed is ever in ill chance—the first strain is a melancholy one, and the gentle captive, exhausted by the suffocating pressure, falls upon its haunches and to the ground. Still keeping the cord in moderate tension, the cautious captor approaches his convulsive victim, and leaping astride its head, uses its long neck as a lever to keep it on the ground. If the Hottentot avhter rider has been left far behind in the chase, the hunter has to maintain this ungerous position for a tedious period; and when the multiplied coils necessary to bind the powerful creature arrive, a new difficulty, of a very opposite character not unfrequently arises. If allowed but a moment to throw aloft its head, the vigorous Giraffe, though but a foal a few months old, will burst every restraint and spring from the earth—and then, though the gentlest of creatures, it becomes furious in defense of its freedom. It will not only strike at its assailants with its fore and hind feet, but actually pursue them, until again brought to the ground by the suffocating noose. In these struggles many Giraffes expire; and even after they are secured and placed in the wagons, they become so mutilated by struggling as to die within a few days."

"Thus the noble animal loses its freedom to increase our knowledge of God's works.

While considering the natures of a caravan of animals, if we think aright, we shall be ready to exclaim, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wisdom hast thou made them all."

---

*Lasso.—A long line made of stout leather, having a noose or slip at one end.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S

Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbents to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases, such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Laverwort, aad several other vegetable substances Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63:1

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE 17.

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, at 50 cts pr lb. CASH, Old Hyson do. at 5a6 Cash, New Orleans MOLASSES at 30 cts pr Gal.

He has also just opened 3 packages of Crockery, directly from Liverpool, bought for cash, and at prices which he is confident are

50 per cent Lower, than those of any New-York purchase. He can furnish any style of Crockery which may be wanted, and offers either

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig, Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower

than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr Phinney's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlæm Oil,
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey
Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organium,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be ound in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.
De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841,

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web.'s Dictionary, large,
" " small,
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,
Novum Græcum Testamatum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M., Oran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin. H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac D Titsworth
Salem.— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2.50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered, as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

T. Rogers

Lester T Rogers

VOL. II.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 35.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 67.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, OCTOBER 27, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

THE SABBATH.

The following Discourse delivered in Adams, last year, by Rev. E. S. BAILEY, was published in pamphlet form. It was called out by the Rev. H. MATTISON, who first preached on the subject of the Sabbath, in the S. D. B. Church in Adams, and agreed to meet any one in a public debate on the question. But after having been repeatedly urged to meet his engagement, he failed to do so, which elicited the rejoinder. The Discourse was first published by request of the congregation before whom it was delivered, and has since been solicited through the columns of the Register. We commend it to our readers. ED. REG.

Eld. Bailey's Reply to Eld. Mattison.

REV. AND DEAR SIR.—Your Discourse in defense of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath, delivered in the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Adams Centre, New York, June 28th, 1840, has recently fallen into my hands. After giving it an attentive perusal, and considering your arguments fallacious and inconclusive, I have deemed it my duty to review it; but previous to entering upon this work I conceive it important that we settle the question, what shall be the standard to which we both appeal for the decision of the controversy?—On this point I apprehend there will be little difficulty, provided you recognize the doctrine of your own church. In the Methodist discipline of 1836, page 10, we read the following: "The Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation, so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man; that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation." Again, page 11th we have the following declaration: "The old Testament is not contrary to the new, for in both the old and new Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man, being both God and man. Wherefore they are not to be heard, who feign that the old fathers did look only for transitory promises. Although the Law given from God by Moses as touching ceremonies and rites doth not bind Christians, nor ought the civil precepts thereof of necessity be received in any commonwealth; yet, notwithstanding, no Christian whatever is free from the obedience of the commandments, which are moral."

This is in accordance with Paul's declaration to Timothy, 2 Tim. xvi. 17, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect and thoroughly furnished unto all good works." To this standard you are bound by the discipline of your own church, and I on my part acknowledge myself bound by voluntary consent; so that in prosecuting this controversy the only inquiry should be, What saith the Scriptures? You have selected Matt. xii. 8, "The Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day," as your text. From this you argue that Christ had a right or power to abolish or change the Sabbath to another day, and say that from his decision there is no appeal. That Christ possessed the right or power to abolish or change the law of the Sabbath, I most readily admit. But that he ever exercised that power I have yet to learn, and I hold you bound to adduce direct scripture testimony to that effect, or abandon your position. It will not answer for you to infer that because Christ possessed the power, he must of necessity have exercised it. There are innumerable acts whose performance are within the range of possibility which have never been performed, and in all probability never will be. We believe that Christ has power to give us another sun in our solar system, but who will have the hardihood to say that he has actually done it. I suppose it will be admitted that Brother Mattison has power to meet me in a public discussion on the subject of the Sabbath, but I think that is no evidence that he will do it. I am happy to find that your views and mine harmonize with reference to the date of the institution of the Sabbath, and the extent and perpetuity of the obligation to observe it.

To your first general proposition, "That God has enjoined the perpetual observance of one day in seven as a Sabbath or day of rest," I heartily respond, with this qualification that it is not one day in seven indefinitely, but the seventh-day specifically. It is unequivocally denied that God ever set apart one-seventh part of time as sacred to himself any otherwise than as a consequence of his sanctifying the seventh-day. Remove sanctification from this, and your one-seventh part of time falls to the ground with it. My dear brother will you have the goodness to show me where God has said, "Remember one-seventh part of time to keep it holy?" Please to specify; we want the particular scripture pointed out. In all positive institutions the command ordaining them, is the measure of the duty enjoined. We have no right to modify or alter the command in any shape whatever without divine authority, and when this is claimed, the repeal or alternative must be shown as clearly and explicitly as the act enforcing the duty; with these remarks I dismiss your first general proposition.

Your second general proposition is, "That the observance of the first-day of the week as the Sabbath, fully answers to all the requirements of the Sabbatical institution; binding upon us as Christians; and therefore it is the day we should keep as the Christian Sabbath." There are several things embraced in the Sabbatical institution, to which the observance of the first-day will not answer.

1. God has commanded us to keep the Seventh-day; therefore the first-day will not answer.

2. God rested on the seventh-day, and wrought on the first; therefore it will not answer. It is not following the example.

3. God has enjoined the observance of the seventh-day to commemorate the work of creation, which he ended on the seventh-day and not on the first; therefore the first-day will not answer.

4. God has not enjoined the observance of the first-day; therefore it will not answer, as it is his exclusive prerogative to appoint what day he pleases.

5. Christ has said, "one jot or tittle" (i. e. one yod, the least of the Hebrew letters or points,) "shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled," Matt. v. 19; but in substituting the first day for the seventh, you strip out the whole words and entirely change the whole commandment.

In your fifth argument under your first general proposition, you have conclusively established the perpetual and universal obligation to observe the seventh-day, which argument I transcribe verbatim: "That the Sabbath is of perpetual and universal obligation, is also evident from the fact that the law which enjoins it is still in full force.—This law was written on tables of stone by the finger of God, and given to the Jews; and is first recorded in the 20th chapter of Exodus. To show that this law in its true intent and meaning is still binding upon Christians, I need only observe that our Lord declared that he came not to destroy the law, and directed the anxious young man to observe this very law." Matt. xix. 17. Paul says also, "do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea we establish the law."—Romans iii. 31. "If therefore the moral law is binding upon Christians, it follows of necessity that the law of the Sabbath which is a part of the moral code, is also binding; and the perpetual observance of the Sabbath is thereby enjoined."

I shall now examine your proofs in the order in which you have laid them down:

Your first argument under your second general proposition, is drawn from the different meridians; whereby it is claimed impossible for men to observe the same identical time, as when the sun is setting in one place, it will be midnight in another, sun-rising in another, and noon in another. Your argument may be specious but is without solidity. God knew all this when he issued the command, and made ample provision for it by fixing the time when the Sabbath shall begin and end. "From even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath." God created man in Asia, and here is the starting point; and as he emigrated east or west, the Sabbath would commence earlier or later. The Pacific ocean would be the opposite point to the one where God first planted man, so that those east of that ocean would begin their Sabbath later, those west of it earlier, but all would begin and end it agreeably to the command of God.

Your second argument is of the same character as your first, and does not require a different answer. We know that if men circumnavigate the globe in opposite directions, they will gain or lose a day according to the course they steer. When they return, they must regulate their week by those who remained stationary. I am a little at a loss to know why you did not when circumnavigating the globe, take us to the polar regions. It would have been equally in point, and would have afforded you equal grounds for caviling at the command of God. If the arguments possess any solidity at all, they will bear equally strong against a first-day Sabbath as against the seventh. To your third argument, which assumes that the present first-day is the creation seventh-day, I have very little to say as it is altogether hypothetical, and is entirely destitute of any support from the scriptures, which bear direct testimony to the contrary. It shows the weakness of the cause which requires such pitiful sophisms to sustain it. With these remarks I shall dismiss it, until something more plausible is brought forward in its support.

Your fourth argument is, "That the substitution of the first-day of the week for the seventh, kept by the Jews, is proven from the nature of the law which restricted the Sabbath to the seventh-day. That this clause was ceremonial," (typical I suppose as all ceremonial laws were,) "and not strictly moral, can easily be established." Just compare this with your fifth argument in your first general proposition. But as I am willing you should avail yourself of all the advantage of this argument, I will not call in question any of your proofs; but for the sake of argument will concede the point. If the law of the Sabbath is ceremonial, or typical, of what is the Sabbath a type? surely of the rest or sabbatism in heaven. My dear brother, when did you ever know a type to cease before its ante-type came? Never—and echo responds never. Then if the seventh-day be a type of the heavenly sabbatism, it must remain unaltered until that sabbatism is ushered in. See Heb. iv.

Your fifth argument is, "That the seventh-day Sabbath was designed solely for the Jews, can be abundantly sustained from the scriptures." If bold assertions could be substituted for scripture testimony, I frankly admit that you would abundantly sustain your position. But I have learned that while it is an easy thing to make pompous declarations, and positive assertions, it is quite another thing to prove them. If your argument has any solidity, it will go to disprove your fifth argument under your first general proposition; of course you are found at war with yourself, instead of the Seventh-day Baptists. Your quotations from the scriptures showing that God had presented to the Jews special reasons for their keeping the commands in general, and the Sabbath in particular; and that the Sabbath was to be a sign between him and the children of Israel, is frankly admitted, but without prejudice to the general law resting on all nations to keep the seventh-day. Your admission that the Sabbath was instituted in paradise, and that the fourth commandment is of universal obligation, must not be forgotten. There might be special reason why God should require the Jews to keep the Sabbath. The Sabbath was given in paradise, and of course is of universal obligation; yet man hath apostatized from God, not only neglecting his Sabbaths, but repudiating God himself. Man had changed the glory of God into an image, &c. When God brought the Israelites out of Egypt, he repeated his law to them and urged his particular favor towards them, as an additional reason why they should keep his commands and his Sabbaths. And as all nations had apostatized from the Sabbath, if the Jews kept it this would be a sign between him and his people; indeed it is even so at the present day. No nation was ever known to retain even the form of Christianity, after they had abolished the Sabbatic institutions.—Witness Infidel France! Would Brother Mattison deny that sinners are under obligations to obey God, because Christians are under special obligations to love him? If not you must give up your argument that all nations are not bound to observe the seventh-day, because special reasons were urged upon the Jews. I will give a few passing remarks upon Col. ii. 16, "Let no man therefore judge you in meats, and drinks, or in respect of a holy day, or of a new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come." This text, (say you,) "we are of opinion refers directly to the weekly Jewish Sabbaths."—That it refers directly to the Jewish Sabbaths, I have no doubt, but the seventh-day is no where in scripture called a Jewish Sabbath, and that the weekly Sabbath is not alluded to, is the opinion of many learned divines. But admitting that the weekly Sabbath is intended, it will not help your cause; for if the Sabbath was ever changed by divine authority, it must have been anterior to this time; so that if it has any bearing upon the weekly Sabbath, it must bear as hard against the first-day Sabbath as the seventh. But what is the amount of the Apostle's exhortation? Is it that the Collossians should not eat, drink, or Sabbatise? Certainly not, but let no man judge you in meat or drink, &c. Now if they ate or drank to excess they would be gluttons, or drunkards; if they ate or drank things forbidden, they would be judged as transgressors of God's law; or if they disregarded or desecrated the Sabbath, they would be judged as Sabbath breakers. This may not be the meaning of the Apostle, but it appears far more rational than the construction you have put upon it.

Your sixth argument is, "That the ancient Prophets seemed to have foreseen the change that was to take place in respect to the day." In proof, you quote 118th Psalm, 22d verse. "The stone which the builders refused, is become the head stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing—it is marvelous in our eyes—this is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." We have no evidence that any particular day was intended. It is most probable that the Gospel era was meant. As Christ said to the Jews, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad," John viii. 56. But admitting that a particular day was intended, we have no proof that first-day was the one. But admitting again, that first-day was intended, it would not prove it to be the Sabbath unless you could show that the pious never rejoiced upon any other day than the Sabbath.

Your seventh argument is, "That no institution passed from the Mosaic to the Christian dispensation, without undergoing some change." Before you can derive any support for the change of the Sabbath from this declaration, it will be necessary for you to establish its truth, which you have entirely failed to do. Nothing more is necessary for me than to deny your position until the proof is given.

Your eighth argument is, "The benefits [illegible] are the same, if not greater, [illegible] day of the week than the seventh." We are ready to admit that God has blessed the preaching of the Gospel to the conversion of souls on every day of the week; therefore upon your mode of reasoning every day must be a Sabbath: But we do not charge you with violating the law of God by your preaching and worshiping on the first-day, as you seem to insinuate, but in profaning the seventh. Again we remark, if God blessed none but the perfect, I fear the number would be less than even that of the Seventh-day Baptists.

Your ninth argument is, "We have no way to account for the change but by attributing it to the Apostolic authority." This we are willing you should do, and when you show from the scriptures, that the Apostles have changed the seventh-day to the first, we will acknowledge our error and change our practice. But let us have the proof. You have hitherto failed to produce any thing like it. We will not be satisfied with a string of hypotheses, superadded one upon another. Nothing short of the changing act will satisfy us. You seem to insinuate, that unless we can show that the Sabbath was changed by human authority, we must admit that it was done by divine authority. This we deny. We are under no obligation to show how it was changed. It is sufficient for us to deny that it was changed by Apostolic or divine authority; and as you have the affirmative of the question, you must show it or fall. But notwithstanding we are under no obligation to show how it was changed; yet we volunteer the service. In doing this, we must rely on uninspired history, as the Bible knows nothing about it. Ecclesiastical historians state, that soon after the Apostolic age, christians gradually adopted the practice of meeting on first-day morning, about the time they supposed Christ arose, and held meetings of prayer and exhortation, and then returned home to their labor. This practice came into very general use before the days of Constantine, but not to the neglect of the seventh-day. Constantine passed an edict, and sent it to all the governors of provinces, that they should observe the dominical day, and that they should honor holy days consecrated to martyrs. A. D. 321. Eusebius Life of Constantine, fol. 58—60. I quote from G. Carlow, and a tract entitled the A. T. Society, versus the New Testament, not having the original work before me. Henry Bullinger in his treatise to King Edward the VI., in page 143, 144, speaks of Constantine's decree thus: "Let all judges in courts of law, and citizens of occupations, rest upon Sunday and keep it holy with reverence and devotion; but they that inhabit in the country, may freely and at liberty attend on their tillage, for oftentimes it falleth out that they cannot upon another day so commodiously sow their seed, or plant their vines, and by letting pass the opportunity of a little time, they may hap to lose the profits given them of God for their provision." Quoted from G. Carlow, pp. 73, 74.

Your tenth argument is, "The nature of the Sabbath, as a commemorative institution, would require a change in order to commemorate the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ. At first the Sabbath was to commemorate the creation, Gen. ii. 3, and afterward to be "a sign" to Israel, and a memorial of their deliverance from the bondage of Egypt. Deut. v. 15. Now the redemption of the world is certainly an event of infinitely more importance to our race, than the deliverance of a single nation from bondage, or the creation of the material world. We should therefore expect it would be commemorated by the same Sabbatic institution by which other important events had been commemorated. But as the resurrection was the grand climax in the work of redemption, and that took place on the first day of the week, it would require that the Christian Sabbath be held on the first day of the week."

Notwithstanding the plausibility of the above argument, there is one thing wanting to make it convincing, and that is the divine sanction. Do we read any thing like it in the scriptures? Certainly not. God's ending his work of creation, and resting on the seventh-day would never have constituted the seventh-day a Sabbath, without a divine appointment. Nor can any other work however resplendent that work may be, have any influence to abrogate or change a divine institution without divine authority; and if that authority is claimed to have been exercised, it must not be sustained by far-fetched inferences; but the very act of abolition or change, must be produced. Have you my dear brother, produced any divine command for the change of the sabbath? If you have, it has entirely escaped my notice. You have assumed the facts you ought to have proved, and have made those assumptions data from which you have labored to establish your conclusions. You have assumed that the resurrection of Christ took place on the first day of the week—that this was the grand climax of redemption, and from these you infer that the first day of the week should be observed as the Christian Sabbath. I do not say these assumptions are not capable of being proved; but until they are, you have no right to demand my assent. I do not wish to invalidate the importance of the resurrection, but I am unable to discover that it is of more importance than several other events in the history of our redemption. The birth of Christ was an event as much honored by heaven, as that of the resurrection. Angels descended to bear the glad tidings to the children of men, and in exalted strains, gave glory to God in the highest. If any day has claims to be honored and commemorative of redemption, we cannot see why the day of his birth should not be thus commemorated.

Again, the day of his crucifixion, was a day peculiarly distinguished. The sun was clothed in sackcloth—the earth labored with convulsive throes, and gave signs that the God of Nature was suffering. The Apostles dwelt emphatically upon the doctrine of the cross, and relied on this as the most effectual means of converting the world. I determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified, was the language of St. Paul.

Again, his ascension is an event which might lay equal claims for the day on which it happened to be honored, as commemorative of that event. But strong as the claims of these several events may be, we are not authorized to celebrate either of them, by setting apart the day on which they happened as a weekly Sabbath, especially to the abrogation of the Sabbath of the Lord. As to the time when Christ arose, the scriptures are not very definite. The earliest accounts we have of his resurrection, speak of it as an event already passed. If it had been the divine pleasure that so important a change as that of the weekly Sabbath should hang pendant on his resurrection, we should suppose that the Holy Spirit would have more definitely specified the time when that event took place. I shall not follow you through your labored effort to prove that Christ arose on the first day of the week, or that he was crucified on the sixth day. After what I have stated above relative to the uncertainty when that event took place, I am willing (so far as the argument for the weekly Sabbath is concerned) to admit, if you wish it, that Christ was crucified on the sixth day of the week, was entombed on sixth day evening, lay three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, and rose first-day morning very early. But has God said, "remember the first-day to keep it holy?" If he has, show us the commandment; if not, judge you whether we should obey God or man.

Religious Department.

WHERE IS CALVARY?

As I was leaning over the railing at Calvary, with the prospect of Jerusalem beneath, quite absorbed in contemplating the scene of surpassing interest there pictured to the eye, a stranger broke my reverie by a sudden but serious question, "Will you tell me, sir," said he, "where Calvary is." I was startled at first by the inquiry, but recollecting myself, I immediately pointed out the spot. He was then gazing on it, and mused again.

The view [illegible] of objects to fix the attention, and awake deep emotions in the heart. The mosque of Omar rose in eastern magnificence, and reflected the dazzling radiance of the noon-day sun. Palaces and towers, minarets and arches, stood before the eye, and claimed and received the admiration of every beholder. A mixed multitude were spectators of the scene, but one spot was the centre of universal attraction. Why did they not look at that troop of wandering Arabs which formed a prominent feature of the view? Why did they pass by the governor of the city as he sat luxuriating in his tent, dispensing justice to the gathered people? Why is that shocking sight overlooked, where a criminal is stretched on the ground, with his feet upturned, and bared to receive the bastinado, which the executioner is brandishing above him? Why is mount Olivet, with its green foliage, and the more distant hills that surround the city and remind us of that striking declaration, "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people for ever"—why are these unnoticed for the time, that all eyes may be turned upon one unmarked spot?

Because that spot is Calvary! The time was when the eyes of the universe were fixed upon that spot. God from his throne looked down upon it. Angels ceased their songs awhile, and gazed upon it. The Son of God was dying there. The last act in the tragedy of man's redemption closed on Calvary, and the spot has been made memorable in the annals of the world. There are other scenes on earth that are beheld with lively interest and intense delight. But the mind that was ever touched with the dying love of the Lord of glory, will turn awry from all other spots, and dwell on Calvary. It loves to dwell there. And should the humble follower of the meek and lowly Jesus be taken up into an exceeding high mountain, whence he could could see the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, he would cast his eye abroad over the expanded view, and before he rested on a single point, would inquire, "Where is Calvary?"

There is no place out of heaven dearer to the pious heart. And am I wrong in saying there is no place in heaven more precious to the believer's soul than this same sweet spot? I would rather lie at the foot of the cross than at the foot of the throne. And though the heart is filled with sadness, when the sufferings of the Savior are in view, yet the same sad heart is filled with love that no other scene excites, and with joy that no other scene affords.—Extract from a work entitled Elizabeth Thornton.

THE SOUL.

——W[illegible]——

One [illegible] outweighs them all.

The soul! the value of one soul—what words can tell it! By what calculation can it be computed! To live forever, in the extreme of happiness, unclouded presence of the Deity, in fellowship of saints and angels, and to inherit heaven's infinite bliss—or die eternally, extreme of wo, banished from God with his eternal frown, to darkness of despair, the fire unquenchable, and the undying worm of remorse, companionship of devils and wicked souls. This accounts for the price which Heaven has paid for its redemption in the blood of Christ. O, what of consequence to man, but the salvation of his soul and the souls of his brethren of the human family! —Disciple.

CAIN IN HEAVEN.

A Universalist parent was telling his child the story about Cain and Abel. When they came to the murder, the child, who was only four or five years old, looked up with a tender countenance, and said: "Pa, where did Abel go, when he died?"

"Why, to heaven," said his father.

"And where did Cain go, when he died?"

"Why, I suppose to heaven," was the answer.

"Ah, then," said the little child, "would he not murder Abel again?"

He thought that if Cain went to heaven without having a change of heart and disposition, he would still have the same murderous propensity that he had while on earth.

Would you bless the church and the world? Do not overlook the young.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, October 27, 1841.

"Ye are not your own."

The word of God as well as the light of nature teaches this grand truth. Life, with all its joys is the gift of God. Every power, physical, mental, or moral, are likewise bestowed by God. The Gospel presents an additional reason to those of creation and Providence, viz: the purchase of the Savior's blood. These all combined, present the irresistible conviction that men are not in any sense their own. All men are alike, though few, comparatively, are willing to acknowledge the claim in theory, and fewer still in practice. None can with any consistency claim an exception, though they may refuse obedience and submission. As a consequence of this relation, all men are bound to love God with all the mental, moral, and physical powers, and bring them fully into his service. Hence it becomes all men to repent immediately, and give God their hearts, and then bring all their abilities into exercise for the promotion of his kingdom. Men differ widely in their abilities. Some being qualified to teach in word and doctrine, others to instruct in private. Some with keen perception are able to understand the deep things of God, and explain his law of governing; while others can only tell of the joys they feel in communing with God. Some can perform the office of Aaron and Hur and sustain the ministers of the Gospel in their labor of love, while others by their pious example can demonstrate the excellency of the Gospel of salvation. This, then, is a sphere in which each can labor with efficiency in the vineyard of God. A manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. Therefore, the question is settled that it is the duty of all to devote their best energies to the service of God. Nothing more effectually hinders the triumph of truth than the unwillingness on the part of some to labor in their sphere; thus, in a great measure paralyzing the efforts of those who feel their obligations and labor to discharge them. A more radical error can not be found than that opinion which obtains with many in the church of God, viz: that inasmuch as they are not called and qualified to preach the Gospel, they may live for their own personal interests.

The man who has business talents should remember that these can be brought as effectively into the service of God as the talents of the preacher, and so it is with the abilities of all men. Here, the great mischief lies. Here are the chariot wheels of salvation stopped, and the minister of the Gospel is compelled to labor assiduously for those who ought to be his yoke-fellows. Our benevolent institutions are inefficient because vast numbers forget the relation they sustain to God, and instead of turning all their energies to promote truth, labor for themselves.

The Israelites were commanded to give one-tenth of their income to God. In doing this they were prospered abundantly. Some, in modern times have adopted this as the standard of their benevolence, and found themselves none the poorer. It is true, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that benevolence of this kind will be amply rewarded, and he that gives one-tenth or more of his income each year, will be the richer for so doing.

In business transactions with men this is observed. If one man borrows of another a sum of money, he returns 6 or 7 per cent. for the use of it. Why then should not men who have all their substance from God, be as just or generous to him as to their fellow. Surely his claims are as good. This course would be reasonable, it is right. It ought to be done, and refusing to do it, men refuse that to God which they yield to their fellows.

Let the experiment be tried, and an impetus will be given to the cause of truth that cannot be withstood by the cunning of men, or the crafts of the adversary of souls. Let the denomination try it, and then will they see the cause of God triumphing in their hands. Our host, though small, would be as effective as Gideon's army. An effort of this kind for one year would bring more aid to our benevolent institutions, than all that has ever been brought, and our substance in nowise be diminished. We now number near six thousand souls. Two cents interest rendered to God by each member, every week, would bring nearly six thousand dollars into the Treasury of the Lord in one year. And who is there that does not feel that he receives more than ten times that amount every day. Six thousand dollars thus easily brought to aid our benevolent institutions, would almost incalculably advance the cause for which we labor. It would support a score of missionaries in their labors, and almost every returning day would bring the glad tidings of the onward march of truth

This is but a small part of every Christian's duty. The solemn truth that we are not our own, reminds us that we are not to live for ourselves. Every one is bound to live in obedience and holiness, and by his precept and example become an every day laborer in the vineyard of God; and instead of having a score of laborers in the field, we should have as many as we have members in our churches. Every one should and could become an efficient laborer, and be instrumental in the conversion of souls. O! how would the cause of God triumph if all should remember that they were not their own, and felt the obligation to do all things to the glory of God.

The following we cut from the Christian Index, published at Penfield, Ga. Read it, and compare it with the spirit of that Gospel that the Index professes to advocate.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.

Agreeably to an order of the Honorable Inferior Court of Greene county, will be sold, in the town of Greenesboro', on the first Tuesday in December next, a tract of Land in said county, containing two hundred Acres, more or less, on the waters of Little River, adjoining lands of H. H. Watts and others:—Also, the following Slaves—viz:—Ned, a fellow; Hannah and Lucy, women; and Albert, a boy—all sold as the property of Mrs. Mildred Paine, deceased, for the benefit of the heirs and creditors. Terms made known on the day of sale. ISAAC HOGG, Adm'r.
Oct. 1, 1841. 40 6t

The image of God—the purchase of the Savior's blood, souls enduring as the throne of God, are set up as merchandize in the same paper that professes to advocate that Gospel that breathes love and good will to all men. We can not believe that the love of God dwells in the heart of that person who makes merchandize of souls. And we can not see how a "Christian" Editor can lower down the standard of religion so much as to aid in the unholy traffic. The moment that this is done, the spirit and letter of religion is bartered, and an insuperable obstacle is thrown in the way of the triumph of the Gospel. The sheet headed CHRISTIAN INDEX thus virtually declares that there are some immortal spirits that must be held and acknowledged as chattels personal, liable to be bartered, sold, mortgaged, maimed, starved, and slain. A man that sets himself up as a teacher of righteousness, and gives sanction to such glaring departures from the Gospel as this, must either have sung "a lulla-by" to his conscience, or made up his mind to act the hypocrite.

So long as we have the word of God as our guide, we feel solemnly bound to speak against the inhuman, the unholy system of American Slavery. 'Tis wrong in its nature and tendencies. 'Tis wrong from beginning to end. In every way it is unholy and sinful, and unless deep repentance and reformation are soon exhibited, the vengeance of God must come. God once looked from heaven and saw the oppression of his people in Egypt, and in mercy brought them forth, while he slew their enemies in vast numbers. Though the vengeance of God sleep awhile, yet it must soon awake unless speedy repentance characterize the guilty Slaveholder, and his abettors.

The Hour of Death.

The last hour of man's earthly existence is fraught with thrilling interest. It terminates his earthly hopes, pursuits, joys, and sorrows. If he has made religion his chief joy and pursuit, his last hour is filled with triumph, and like the beloved Payson, he feels as if his soul had got a new pair of wings, with which it was impatient to fly away from its prison and rest in heaven.—How inexpressibly glorious to the pious soul is this hour. His battle against sin is now to close. He is no more to be pained at the prevalence of iniquity. No more to mourn over the desolations of Zion, a victor's reward awaits him, and all the joys of heaven are about to burst upon his immortal vision. He is about to be embraced in the arms of the Savior he has loved, and join the happy throng of the redeemed who have entered into rest. The veracity of God is pledged for his everlasting joys. All things earthly which he is about to leave are as nothing and vanity compared with what is in reserve for him in heaven. O who would not have Jesus to accompany them through the dark valley of Death!—Who would not wish to close his eyes in death with the full hope of soon awaking in the likeness of God, and feel "that dying is but going home."

How different the scene with the dying sinner? With what horror does he look into the grave just opening to receive him. Alas! "how his frantic soul raves round the walls of its clay tenement, runs to each avenue, and shrieks for help, but shrieks in vain." All things in which he has delighted cease to satisfy his immortal spirit. The future is filled with fearful gloom. His guilty conscience now awakens him to a full sense of his awful crimes. And he feels like the dying youth who was suddenly called to the verge of the tomb, that "the whole work of an immortal soul to prepare for eternity is crowded into one short hour, and that an hour of mental agony and distraction." And now commence those bitter reproaches for his sins that will haunt his guilty soul throughout eternity. Already does he begin to feel the gnawings of the worm that never dies. Wo to the soul that defers repentance till life's last hour arrives, and hurries him to the tomb.

A virtuous life devoted to the service of God will secure the Christian's triumph in a dying hour; while it will remove all fear of death, judgment and eternal banishment from God.

We published a few weeks since the appeal in behalf of the Mendians. We this week publish the letter of Cinque. The object is important. The providence of God in this matter has, doubtless, opened the way for the introduction of the Gospel into the interior of Africa. We trust the friends of liberty will look at the matter in its true light, and act for the well being of souls.

Elections.

Let every Christian bear in mind, that while he exercises the privileges of a citizen of the United States, he must not forget that he is a member of Christ's kingdom; and that all his actions in the former should be made to advance the interests of the latter. Remember your obligation to pray for rulers, and be sure that you do not render inefficient your prayers by placing those in authority that neither fear God nor regard men.

Astronomical Lectures of Messrs Carhart

The course of Lectures now being delivered in this village, is worth attending.—They are rich in science, and easy to be understood. All will feel themselves well repaid, who hear the Lectures and witness the accompanying demonstrations.

Anti-Slavery Lecture.

JAMES C. JACKSON, editor of the Madison County Abolitionist, will deliver an Anti-Slavery Lecture at the Presbyterian Church in this village, on Sunday eve. Oct. 31st.

Sears' Writing Fluid.

"I like it much—it is the best that I ever used. J. R. JOHNSON.
De Ruyter, Oct. 21, 1841.

For the Register.

Post Offices.

The National Temperance Convention at Saratoga, which consisted of five hundred and sixty delegates; it was a goodly company of noble souls. Of the 560 delegates, the state of New-York furnished 386; Mass. 50; Vermont 46; Ct. 23; New-Hamp. 4; Rhode Island 2; Maine 3; New-Jersey 7; Penn. 9; Maryland 4; Mich. 4; Lou. 3; Ala. 3; Wiskonsan 3; Ohio 3; Ill. 2; Geo. 2; Iowa 1; Sandwich Islands 1; and 3 without places designated. The resolutions which that enlightened Convention adopted, are now exerting a powerful influence throughout the country.

Among those thirty important resolves, the twenty-third demands no small share of attention:—"Post Offices. 23. Resolved, That whereas the continuing and establishing Post Offices in stores, taverns, and groceries, where alcoholic drinks are sold, is calculated to give said traffic a credit and countenance of which it is unworthy, as well as to endanger the safety and security of mails passing through such offices, that we respectfully solicit, by petition or otherwise, the Post Master General to discontinue and withhold offices from all places where alcoholic drinks are vended as a beverage." To the weighty reasons which the resolution suggests, we may add—that it is not very pleasant for our wives, sisters, and daughters, to call at those Post-Offices which are conjoined with the alcoholic reservoir, and surrounded by such company as alcohol in its diluted forms will convene, and will excite. To such offices we cannot send a child with any safety. Our young men, by going to the Bar-Room Post-Office, to transact their business with the mail, are in great danger of forming the habit of congregating at the Bar-Room for the sake of its news, and its inebriating pleasures, rather than to learn the intelligence which the United States Mail bears them, and to enjoy those refining pleasures which the friendly epistle, and that "folio of four pages," will confer upon those who love to "wheel the sofa round," at home—"sweet home."

If we respectfully and earnestly petition the Post Master General to discontinue Post-Offices from all places where alcoholic drinks are vended as a beverage, the work will be done,—such incongruous firms will be dissolved, and who then will think of asking that new offices may be established in such places? Or if such petitions are presented to the Post Master General, a few lines of remonstrance saying, Please, Sir, "withhold," must succeed to protect the good people of these states from being insulted by "the striped-pig," when they wish to hold conversation with the press, and with distant and endeared friends. It is a deep disgrace which no village or town should consent to bear, to have its Post-Office joined with the drunkard's office. Five hundred and sixty men at Saratoga said so, and I say so too. No matter how well adapted the Post Master himself may be to fill his responsible station, this is not my theme; but my theme is solely this, viz: the wrong of having any Post-Office connected with any establishment where alcoholic drinks are sold as a beverage. J. R. J.

News of the Day.

Rhode Island.—The new Constitution adopted by the Rhode Island Suffrage Convention, proposes to extend the right of suffrage to every white male citizen of lawful age, who may have resided in the State one year, and in the township where he offers to vote, three months. But in any question of raising a tax, or appropriating the proceeds of a tax, the voter must possess property, either real or personal, of the value of $150. The Senate to be composed of 12 members, elected by districts, and the House of 80 members, of whom Providence is to send 12. The Governor to have a Veto power, subject to be reversed by the decision of a majority of both houses.

The Constitution, of which the above are some of the outlines, is designed to take the place of the Old Charter granted by King Charles II., of England, under which the good people of Rhode Island have lived to this day.—Jour. of Com.

Obey Orders.—A brave veteran officer reconnoitering a battery which was considered impregnable, and which it was considered necessary to storm, laconically answered the engineers who were disuading him from the attempt. "Gentlemen, you may think what you please; all I know is that the American flag must be hoisted on the ramparts to-morrow morning, for I have the orders in my pocket!"

Buffalo Harbor.—A correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, in that paper of the 11th inst., gives the following account of the business and prospect of the Queen city.

"Our harbor to-day presents a most extraordinary jam of vessels. Almost the whole distance from Main to Commercial streets, the creek is entirely obstructed, and the continuance of a fresh westerly wind, bringing in other vessels in a rapid succession, which of course have to come too below, by morning may fill the harbor to the lake.

"Every citizen of Buffalo should see it in its present condition, and examine for themselves the vast number of boats and vessels which our trade even now requires, and for which we ought to furnish ample room. This can be done at a trifling expense by the enlargement of the creek, and by the excavation of the adjoining low lands into slips and basins, which lands are entirely useless for any other purpose.—Let our citizens see that our harbor can not accommodate the vessels that resort to it even now. Unless it is enlarged, a part of our present commerce must seek another port. Let them reflect that our commerce will double in four years, if we furnish the necessary accommodation to receive it."

News from the Exploring Expedition.—Cape of Good Hope papers to the 20th of July, apprise us of the arrival at Table Bay, of the U. S. Ships Vincennes and Peacock, Brig Porpoise, and Schr. Flying Fish; constituting the American Exploring Expedition. The paper of the 20th says. "An American frigate is signalized, standing out to sea again." Probably the Constellation, bound to China, which had been making repairs at Saldanha Bay. The Exploring Expedition remained at Table Bay till July 20th.

Lieut. Jones, U. S. Navy, has arrived at the Cape in the Medusa, from London.—Jour. of Com.

The Beginning.—Twenty tons of castings intended for the New York and Erie Railroad, were recently received at Dunkirk from the Vermillion furnace, Ohio.—This, we think, is the first instance where Ohio has furnished this material in such large quantities.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

The Aroostook Road.—The Bangor Democrat states that the Aroostook road is now turnpiked and completed to the Aroostook river.

From its termination at the Aroostook river, to the Fish river station, a distance of about forty-five miles, there is now a good winter road, and a passable summer road, constructed by the posse under command of Col. Jarvis.

So much of the disputed territory as lies south of the St. John, is now under our absolute jurisdiction.—Augusta (Me.) Age.

The officers of the Army at present in Washington, waited upon the new Secretary of War in full uniform on Tuesday, and made quite an imposing display.

After waiting upon the Secretary of War, the officers of the Army paid their respects to the Secretary of the Navy.—Nat. Intel.

Suicide.—A singular suicide was committed yesterday, at Mr. W. Granger's, on the Macadamized road. A young man named John Baily, in his employ, was directed to harness up a certain vehicle and convey a lady to this city. He followed the instructions so far as the errand was concerned, but disobeyed by taking a barouche with two horses instead of one.—The animals ran away, and dashed the carriage to atoms. This calamity so affected the young man that he went privately into the barn, unloosed one of the horses, and with the halter hung himself by the neck. When discovered he was dead.—Buff. Com. Adv.

Buried Alive.—Almost, not quite.—A scene strange as any founded on fiction, occured in this city on Sunday last. We will give it in the words of the gentleman who furnished us with the fact. His veracity and its truth may be relied on.

It appears that a young Spaniard was lying in the last stages of yellow fever.—The physician was sent for, but before his arrival the young man had ceased to live, according to the opinion of those in the house, so that when he arrived he found his patient covered with a white linen cloth, and reported as dead. That very evening they washed and cleansed the young man, and having put on his burial dress, they laid him on his bed until morning. In the morning a coffin was got, and all the necessary preparations were made. He was then taken and put in his coffin, but no sooner was he dropped in it, than he jumped up and asked where they were going to place him. They then conducted him in a carriage to a colored nurse woman's house. He is yet very sick, but may perhaps live. It appears that he was in a state of lethargy.—N. O. Picayune.

Another Revolutionary Hero Gone.—We regret to announce the death of John Crolius, Senr., which occurred this morning, in the 86th year of his age. Mr. Crolius took an active part in our revolutionary struggle for independence, and has lived long to enjoy the benefits and blessings of his labors. He was engaged in the sanguinary battles of Monmouth and White Plains, and elected to the Common Council from the Sixth Ward in 1799, of which body he was an active and efficient member.—Eve. Jour.

Another Slave Case.—We learn by the Oberlin Evangelist that a colored man, his wife and two children, were arrested in Lorain county, some weeks since, while waiting for a boat to convey them across the lake. On examination, it appeared they were owned by a Mr. Reeder, a citizen of Cincinnati. Blank affidavits had been made out by the Mayor of Sandusky City, and left at the lake ports ready to be used when they arrived. In this way they were arrested and brought before Judge Long of Elyria. After hearing the case the court set them at liberty, on the ground that the law requires that the claim shall be made by the owner of the slaves or his agent, and the man making the affidavit did not assert in it, nor offer any proof that he was the slaveholder's agent. The Evangelist has information that the slaves are now beyond the reach of their Kentucky master, or his Ohio agent.—Cleaveland Herald.

The first rule to preserve teeth with a beautiful white, pearly appearance, is to keep all tooth powders and quack dentrifices out of the mouth; and the second is to wash the teeth after each meal, and just before going to bed with a stiff brush and water. It is a luxury to wash the teeth, and their soundness contributes much to health and comfort.

There are now living in the town of Ipswich, Essex Co., Mass., Abraham Perkins, John H. Boardman, Jeremiah Ross, and Samuel Lankaster, all of whom were in the battle of Bunker Hill. In the same town are now living 18 soldiers of the Revolutionary war.

The Buffalo Republican says that Mr. Luke Bennett, of Alden, raised this season from four acres and a half of land, ninety-two bushels of corn, eighty-three of peas, one hundred of potatoes, and three or four hundred weight of hay. The corn averaged sixty-one bushels to the acre.

California is in the most wretched state: there has not been a drop of rain for over thirteen months, and all vegetation has in consequence ceased. On the whole coast there is not a month's supply of bread stuff or vegetables of any description.—No cattle will be killed this year, and of course all business in hides will be stopped. The distress will be dreadful.

Grogan.—The St. Albans Messenger gives the following account of Grogan's treatment while in the hands of his captors, as related by himself, since his discharge:

"He represents his struggle with the midnight ruffians before they got him into a wagon, as very severe, during which he was badly bruised, and received a bayonet wound in the hip. When his captors had got him into a wagon, he was laid on the bottom, without any clothes on, a couple of bayonets were drove into the wagon, one each side of his neck, and with three of the wretches sitting on, and one on the seat with the driver, with a musket pointed at his head, was taken to Clarenceville.—Here a pair of old pantaloons and a shirt were put on, and thence he was taken to Missisique Bay. On the way thither he was very roughly handled, and tormented every way imaginable. When he arrived at the Bay, handcuffs, fastened with a lock, were put on, (which, being too small caused much acute pain,) and he was then put into the guard house. Soon after was taken out and arraigned before some officers, apparently, under the government.—The only question asked him was his name. He was taken back to the guard house, and thence to St. Johns. On his way thither he got some clothes sent him by his friends on this side of the lines—also a little money, with which he tried to buy something to eat; but his keepers would furnish him nothing, even when offered to pay for it, nor did he get any thing that day or the day after, except a part of a fellow prisoner's allowance on the first night after being lodged in prison. At St. Johns he was lodged in a stall, as he imagines, where he passed a sleepless night—suffering severely from the bruises and wounds he had received. In the morning, weak and almost helpless, from the loss of blood and want of food, he was dragged out and hurried with much roughness to the rail-road cars—thence taken to Laprairie, and from there by steam boat to Montreal, where he was lodged in prison. He remained there a fortnight save one day, living upon bread and water. Saturday previous to his release he was visited and questioned in relation to his parentage, &c. (He was born in Petersburg, a few miles east of Troy, N. Y.) Mr. Grogan states that one of the persons who had him in charge from the Bay to Montreal, was connected with the gang that arrested him, and that he was dressed in the garb, (as were others of his keepers,) worn by the British soldiers.

Highway Robbery.—Mr. G. Bates, a drover, of Ohio, who had just completed the sale of a large drove of between three and four hundred head of cattle, for which he had received the money, and was on his way to this city to purchase goods, was waylaid and robbed of between seven and eight thousand dollars night before last, on the Strasburgh road, a short distance above Marshallton, some twenty-seven miles from Philadelphia. He was riding along on horseback, when two men suddenly rushed out from behind the thicket, by which the road is lined, and in their hasty effort to seize his horse so frightened him that he sprang out from under his rider, throwing him to the ground with much violence, and so stunning him, that he was not only unable to help himself, but was unconscious of what transpired.

Upon recovering his consciousness sufficiently to know where he was, Mr. Bates found that his overcoat, which was buttoned up close, had been torn open, and that he had been robbed of the above amount of money, which was all he had, save a trifle in change. Mr. B. does not know how long he lay in a state of unconsciousness before his recovery, but describes the affair as appearing to him like a dream, the reality of which he can hardly realize.—We hope the press and the police of the city and country will not let this high handed and daring highway robbery sleep until the guilty wretches are ferreted out and brought to justice. It is high time for us to act, when it is unsafe to travel in the vicinity of Philadelphia from danger of highwaymen.—Phil. Pub. Led.

McLeod.—We have the pleasure of stating, on the authority of Gen. John E. Wool, that McLeod, under the protection of the Sheriff of Oneida county, and two officers of the United States Army, was safely landed on the 16th inst., at St. Johns, Lower Canada. Thus an affair is ended, which has caused much trouble, and no little anxiety to the people of this country.—Troy Budget

The Self-Marrying Dutch Preacher at Boston, of whom mention was made in our paper a short time since, as having seduced a young German girl, by leading her to believe that her own consent was all that was necessary to make their marriage valid without the presence of another minister, was put on trial on Thursday last. After his counsel had closed his argument in his defense, Hohnholz essayed to soften the hearts of the jury by his own sweet voice, and said—"Dis here be all von plan—trick—shame to take away mine own sweet jewel—mine vife, as is mine by all the law of God."

His speech, however, was soon cut short by the Judge, and in a few minutes the jury returned a verdict of "GUILTY," and no mistake.—N. Y. Com. Adv.

A "Philadelphia Lawyer" in a Snarl.—A singular incident occurred at the Philadelphia Court of Sessions on Saturday.—A man named Maxwell, it seems, had been convicted for the larceny of a promissory note, and when brought up to receive sentence, the Court told him that if he would give up the note to the lawful owner, his sentence should be mitigated from three years to six months. The prisoner was willing to do so, but said the note was in the hands of his counsel, Daniel McLaughlin, Esq.—Mr. McLaughlin was then called upon, but he had concluded to hold on to the note to satisfy some demands of his own, and refused to give it up. The Judge then ordered him to give bail for his appearance on a charge of receiving stolen property, and also a rule to be entered by the clerk to show cause why Daniel McLaughlin should not be stricken from the roll of practising attorneys.—Express.

Labor of the Chinese.—On the following morning we were witnesses to a strange process—perfectly Chinese in all its prodigality of human exertion. The river was now so exceedingly shallow that a line of men stood with great iron hoes on each side of the channel for the boats, and deepened it by scraping aside the sand and gravel before we could pass. The same men then put their shoulders (not to the wheel,) but to the stern of the boats, and actually shoved them through by main force! They stood at times not more than ancle deep in the water. It was astonishing to think that the greater portion of the thirty millions of pounds of tea sold at Canton to the English, (not to include other nations,) was conveyed up this trout stream, and down another like it, on the opposite side of the Moilling Pass."—Davis's Sketches of China.

The Bunker Hill Monument has become an imposing object. It has risen to the height of 165 feet, and may be seen at a distance of many miles. The contractor is allowed until October 1843 to complete it.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

Rochester, Oct. 17th, 1841.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock this morning, the large flour mill in this city, owned by your neighbors, Messrs. William and John James, of South Street, was discovered on fire, and although every exertion was made by the well organized fire department of this city, ten thousand bushels of wheat, valued at more than $10,000, were destroyed, besides a considerable quantity of flour, the exact amount of which I can not learn. The grain and flour were the property of the occupants, Messrs. Sage and Kennedy, who were only insured for $6,000. It is believed that the building and machinery were insured by the owners in New York.

The walls are left standing, and perhaps are of sufficient strength to stand; the machinery from the length of time the fire burned, I suppose is either destroyed or too much injured to be of essential service. I never saw so much smoke issue from any one building, nor did I ever see so grand a display as it presented, as volume after volume rolled up to an immense height. Its variety of forms were beautiful, looking sometimes like the cataract of Niagara, and then, when the flames burst forth, adding a brilliancy to the scene which might truly be called magnificent. It being Sunday, I have not ascertained the origin of the fire; but it could not have been set on fire by friction, as none of the large mills have been at work since Friday last—having stopped by mutual agreement.

Curious Relics.—Among the articles now exhibiting at the Fair in this city, is a specimen of carving from the establishment of John Weeden, of this city, interesting from its being made entirely from pieces of wood which once composed portions of several gallant ships, mentioned in the history of our country. One part is carved on a fragment from the Alliance frigate, the first enrolled in the American Navy, and commanded by Paul Jones. The other portions are made from the United States, the ship of Decatur, the Macedonian, captured by him; the Philadelphia, destroyed at Tripoli; Perry flag ship on Lake Erie, the Lawrence; Com. Barclay's flag ship, the Detroit; the sloop of war, Alert, captured by Com. Porter, and lastly a piece of the Wm. Penn tree. The whole of these relics were collected by John Weeden, while employed in the Navy Yard, at Norfolk, Va.

Rail Roads for Sale.—The Comptroller of this State advertises to sell at auction on the 3rd Monday of April next, Two Rail Roads and their appurtenances—the Ithaca and Owego, and the Catskill and Canajoharie—default having been made in payment of the interest on the stock loaned by the State to aid in their construction.

Wonderful Preservation.—As Amelia Jones, a colored woman, was walking over the roof of the high marble building No. 12 Wall street, on Wednesday last, the roof being wet, her foot slipped, and she fell from the eaves to the flagging in the back yard—an unbroken fall of six stories. At 12 o'clock, she was alive, easy, had her senses perfectly, and complained of little pain. She is a rather heavy woman, about fifty years of age, and was brought up in the family of the late Dr. Fisher. Those who saw her after her fall, say she was apparently quite dead when found, and did not utter a groan for some ten or fifteen minutes. From the physician's report, it seems that a dislocation of her shoulder is the only external injury. That a human being could fall from such a dizzy height and not be instantly killed, is passing strange indeed.—Jour. of Com.

Boston and Buffalo.—Within a year, there will be between Boston and Buffalo, a rail road six hundred miles in length.—It will be possible to go the whole distance by daylight. Had such an event been prophesied, it would have destroyed all belief in revelation.—Cleavland Morning News.

The Mammoth Iron Steamer.—The great iron steamer now being built at Bristol, in England, will, no doubt, when completed, be regarded as one of the most extraordinary mechanical wonders in the world.—She will carry five masts, and her tonnage will reach the enormous extent of 3600.—Her length on deck is 324 feet. She will have four engines of 300 horse power each, and she is expected to be completed by the 1st of May next. She is designed, in the first place, for the Archimedes screw; but should that fail, she is so constructed that paddles may be readily resorted to. Her hull is divided into compartments, so that if one should become injured, the accident would not affect the safety of the vessel.—Her workmanship throughout is described as of the very highest style of art. She will be filled with water before launched, and thus her tightness tested. The iron (all wrought,) is more than half an inch thick. She will cost something like $500,000 and as is supposed, will be commanded by Captain Hosken.

Mr. Schoolcraft.—This distinguished gentleman, after passing more than half his life among or near the Indians of the Northwest, has come at last to dwell in this city, and we learn with pleasure, that his purpose is to arrange for publication the immense mass of valuable information he has collected in relation to the aborigines. It is said, and no doubt truly, that the results of his researches will throw a flood of light upon many things pertaining to the history, character, literature, and customs of the red man.—N. Y. Com. Adv.

Judge Gridley.—The Utica correspondent of the Courier gives the following anecdote in illustration of Judge Gridley's passion—as it may well be called—for despatch of business:

"Immediately upon the officers being sworn to attend the jury to their room, and before they had left the Court room, he commanded silence, and addressing the Clerk, said: "Call the next case, Mr. Clerk—empanel a jury," and that too, just at the close of the eight day of a trial, during which he had presided 16 hours each day. The lawyers were perfectly unprepared for such a course of conduct, but as they knew he was not to be trifled with, they hastily despatched messengers for their papers and witnesses, and in less than 20 minutes, the Court was again occupied with a case involving some $80 or a $100.

Negro Hunting.—We learn from Captain Baker, that when the Champion left Mobile, an expedition, consisting of two companies, was departing in quest of a body of runaway slaves, 40 or 50 miles above the city. It is believed that these fellows have for a long time been in the practice of theft and arson, both in town and country, having their general rendezvous in a secluded swamp. A force from above was scouring down with blood-hounds, &c. to meet the Mobile party.—N. O. Bee.

A Sabbath-Keeping P. M. General.—A correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser writing from Washington, speaks of the present P. M. General as follows: "While he evinces in a mild but firm manner, his determination to have all do their duty faithfully, I know you will hear with pleasure that he has directed the doors of his department to be closed on the Sabbath day, in respect both to the public sense of propriety, and to the higher obligations of the day itself, and not in any spirit of fanaticism. There can be no better security for official industry and moral discipline, through all its subordinate ranks, than when the head of a department exhibits an example of both in his own person; and this example the public may be assured will be found in the theory and practice of C. A. Wickliffe."

Cuba.—By the subjoined extract from the New Orleans Bulletin, of the 5th inst., we have further rumors of the designs of Great Britain on Cuba. Cuba will be a very pretty position for Great Britain to occupy on the South flank of the United States, with the slaveholding portion of our citizens under her eye. But to the extract:—

"A commercial gentleman who has spent some weeks in Havana, informs his correspondent in this city, that he has become satisfied, from information he has obtained in the best quarters, that England is negotiating with Spain for a cession of Cuba. Some of the steps he has learned the British Government have taken in the matter, he states thus:—The English demand the liberation of the negroes introduced here since the Treaty of 1820, as being called for by the spirit of that document. The Government of Madrid referred the question to the Governor here, who called a junto of rich people; they answered (with one exception.) "We can not allow it."—Now, England has said it must be done. If the Regent of Spain says to Cuba, "Do it," and the people of Cuba persist in saying, "No," what will be the result? Submission to such a demand seems to be out of the question. A proud Spaniard asked me the other day, if I thought the United States would accept of the Island? I answered—"I believe the Island would be received, but you must first achieve your own independence—then she will acknowledge you, and take you in as a partner."—But the grand question is—Will Uncle Sam allow Bully Bull to take possession here, even if old Spain consents? If he does, adieu to peace; our Southern institutions will at least be jeoparded, and a valuable trade closed against us."

The appraisers of the U. S. Bank have returned the value of the property conveyed by the Bank to its assignees in its late general assignment, at $5,109,700.

The quantity of flour and wheat delivered from the Erie canal during the second week in October, at Schenectady, West Troy and Albany was, flour 62,000 bbls. and 65,934 bushels of wheat.

The Burlington Buck Eye of the 30th ult., contains a long communication from D. W. and Edw. Kilbourne, dated at Montrose, in which they set forth thirteen cases of robbery of their store, which they allege to have been committed by the Mormons.

Upon the death of Mr. Samuel Ewalt, an old and respectable gentleman near Pittsburg, Pa., his executors found among other specie in his possession, and kept in the drawer of a common desk in his dwelling, a lump of gold, valued at $3,000.

Law of Advertising.—A decision has recently been made in England, which we doubt not, would be strictly followed in a similar case in this country. From this is apparent the necessity that advertisers should accompany their communications with explicit directions. The case is as follows:

Court of Requests—O'Connell versus Stokes.

This was an action, (brought by the plaintiff, a newspaper proprietor, against the defendant who had occasion to advertise in his paper,) to recover the amount of an advertisement which had been inserted forty-five times, on the ground that the advertisement had been intended for one insertion only. The manuscript order was produced and appeared indefinite. The case had been some time under the consideration of his Honor, who, in his anxiety that strict justice should be done between proprietors of newspapers and the public, had taken the opinion of two of the judges on the subject, and agreed with them in deciding that newspaper proprietors were justified in continuing the insertion of advertisements, not ordered for any specific number of times, until the same were ordered to be withdrawn. His Honor said, it was desirable that the public should be made acquainted with this decision, in order that persons having occasion to advertise may be aware of the necessity of stating on their orders the number of insertions they may require. If they neglect to do so, it was unreasonable to expect newspaper proprietors, to attend to that which was clearly the advertiser's own business: verdict was then entered for the plaintiff.

Providential Escape.—The following providential escape is related by Bishop Mc Ilvaine in his late address to the Convention of his diocese:

From Canfield I set out for Gambier, to be present at the commencement of Kenyon College. It becomes me, in thankfulness for God's preserving care to record another of the many instances in which I have been saved from great injury, through the Lord's merciful providence. Suffice it to say, that a gentleman was conveying me to New Lisbon, and while watering the horse the animal broke from his hold, having taken fright; seeing no prospect of escape if I remained in, I leaped from the open buggy while it was at full speed and fell upon the hard ground; at first I was sensible of scarcely any injury, but ever since, my right shoulder has remained much crippled, and is still nearly incapable of use. The carriage was broken to pieces and turned upside down in a few seconds after I left it. Thus the Lord is gracious.

TRIAL OF 112 MEN FOR MURDER

The correspondent of the Illinois Free Trader gives an account of the trial of the persons charged with the murder of the Driskalls, John and William, from which the Editor of the Era has made the following extracts:—

He says, "the September Term of the Ogle Circuit Court has just closed, and its session has been marked by a trial, which, in the number of the accused tried in one indictment for the crime of murder, is without a parallel. One hundred and twelve men were indicted for the murder of John Driskall and William Driskall, in June last, near Washington Grove, in this county. And one hundred plead not guilty, and put upon their trial. Judge Ford, whatever might have been his feelings, (the accused were his neighbors, Judge F. residing in Ogle county) exhibited upon the bench a stern determination that the accused should be fully and faithfully tried. However, the very fact of the great confusion occasioned by so many names in the indictment, left the accused without any evidence to contend against. The two or three first witnesses, whose names were endorsed upon the indictment, (and by the laws of this State none, except those whose names are so endorsed, can be called to prove the substantive part of the accusation) only knew some of the preparatory steps taken, which led to the supposed offence."

The facts connected with the killing of the Driskalls are as follows: That the Driskalls were a part of an organized gang embracing a large number of persons in the county of Ogle and the adjoining counties, who carried on a systematized scheme of operations against the lives and property of the inhabitants. That murders, robberies and larcenies had been carried on by them for a number of years; and that, owing to the extent and perfection of their combinations, it had become impossible to convict them by the ordinary process of law. Perjured members of their gang swearing to alibis or such defence as were adapted for the occasion, had, for a long time, defied and defeated the course of justice. That a few days previous to the execution of the Driskalls, a Mr. Campbell, a citizen of the highest respectability, had been wantonly shot in his own yard, for his presumed exertions against this gang, and that there was sufficient evidence to leave no reasonable doubt, that the Driskalls planned and incited, and probably perpetrated his murder. Further, that the Driskalls were the chief and most dangerous of the gang. They were shot after an examination which satisfied several hundred of the most respectable citizens of Ogle and the adjoining counties of the truth of the foregoing facts.

The case was submitted to the jury who, without leaving their seats, rendered a verdict of Not Guilty. This verdict was partially from a want of evidence, and from what the jury considered the absolute necessity of the case. The writer says the laws could not protect the community where the banditti committed their many enormities—the occasion was too urgent to wait for their uncertain amendment and adaption to the emergency—individually they could not protect themselves—mob law they repudiated—they therefore resorted to a counter organization, ordained new rules of evidence, and a new mode of proceeding, such, and such only, as in their judgement were effectual to protect them. There may be those who are disposed to cavil, perhaps to condemn. The judgments and perceptions of such, would be essentially invigorated, could they have dwelt for a short time here, and suffered the murder of their friends, the burning of their dwellings, and the plunder of their property; and when they called on the law to redress these wrongs, to see those whom they knew to be the perpetrators, escape with impunity."

LETTER OF CINQUE.

FARMINGTON, Oct. 5, 1841.

"You have done a great deal for us. Now we want to go home very much, very soon, as soon as you can send us. We want to land at no other place but Sierra Leone. When we get to Sierra Leone we get home very soon. When we get home we find a good place for our teachers and then we tell our parents, come and see them. We want plenty of pieces calicoes, not cut, and plenty of cloth for men's clothes—for pantaloons, coats and vests—not cut. For we think we wear 'Merica dress as long as we live, and we want our friends who come to live with us to wear 'Merica dress too. And we want plenty to give our friends and have them give us elephant teeth palm oil, cam-wood and other things to send you to 'Merica. We will take good care of our teachers. We will not leave them. When we are in Mendi we never hear of such a thing as men taken away and carried to Cuba and then return home again. The first thing we tell them will be that the great God bring us back. We tell them all about 'Merica. We tell them about God and how Jesus Christ, his only beloved Son, came down to die for us, and we tell them to believe, for this your son was lost before now, and is found, for not any thing make him found but God. Now we want you to give your children to us—give to the teachers to try to teach them. We will try to teach them to pray, and not to pray to any thing but GOD.

Some wicked people here laugh at Mr. Tappan and all our committees for spending so much for Mendi people. They say we are like dogs without any home. But if you will send us home you will see whether we be dogs or not. We want to see no more snow. We no say this place no good, but we afraid of cold. Cold catch us all the time. We have a great many friends here and we love them just as we love our brethren.

We want to go very soon, and go to no place but Sierra Leone.

Your friend,

CINQUE.

The Governor and Council of Massachusetts have appointed Thursday, the 25th day of November next, for the annual Thanksgiving in that State. The same day has been appointed in Connecticut.

MARRIED,

In Unadilla Forks, Aug. 18, by Enos W. Peck Esq., Mr. ELISHA NELSON, of Plainfield, and Miss HULDAH SPRAGUE, of Edmeston.

At the same place, by the same, on the 25th ult., Mr. HENRY WELCH, of Bridgewater, and Miss JOSEPHINE JOSLIN, of Brookfield.

In Westerly, on the 13th inst. by Rev. Alex. Campbell, Mr. HOSEA CHAMPLIN, of Waterford, and Miss SUSAN M. BARBER, of Westerly R. I.

DIED,

In Stonington, Ct., Oct. 7, 1841, of a lingering illness, EUNICE, wife of Zebulon Stillman, aged fifty-three years, three months and 16 days.

Sister Stillman has been a worthy member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church about 33 years, during which time she manifested her love to the Savior and his cause by walking in newness of life. She had been in feeble health for some years previous to her death, and during her last illness, though she suffered much pain, and distress, yet she endured it with christian patience and fortitude.

She manifested an entire resignation to the will of God and departed this life in hope of a blessed immortality.

In Westerly, R. I., Sept. 27th, 1841, of a bowel complaint, SUSAN AUGUSTA, daughter of Wm. D. and Abby Wells, aged 19 months.

In Georgetown, on the 21st inst., JULIA ANN, daughter of Elnathan and Melissa Ellis, aged 4 years, five months.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Jesse Brown P. M., (we will attend to it.) Maxson Green, (thank you.) A. Campbell, (we have written,) Dennis Hardin P. M., Anna Campbell.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of T. E. Babcock, $1, cr. D. M. Carpenter, of A. Campbell, $2, cr. Adam Stillman, of M. Green, $3,25, cr. R. Monroe $1, Samuel Pierce, $2,25.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS taken a shop in the basement of the three story building, one door north of Sutton & Quinby's Store, where he will manufacture to order Boots and Shoes of any kind or style to suit his customers

Ladies Kid or Morocco Slips and Shoes, Prunello and Gaiter boots, of the first quality and style, very cheap.

N. B. Customer's leather manufactured on short notice, cheap for good pay. Please call and enquire the prices and satisfy yourselves.

De Ruyter, Oct 23, 1841. 35tf

THIS SIDE UP.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ABIJAH N ANNAS,

LATE of the firm of "Elmore Annas & Ayer," has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore (La Fayette Block,) where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in his line of business.

The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper.

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. Also,

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Climax Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK.

☞Done well, on short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block No 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

☞BOOTS & SHOES.☜

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than [illegible] ever sold [illegible] this town [illegible] "Peculiar advantages in purchasing" [illegible] say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34tf

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin and Jane Goodwin, [illegible] Guardian of the said Henry and Jane
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order of the [illegible] Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition [illegible] will sell at [illegible] the 26th day of November next, at [illegible] Wm. C. [illegible] premises in the Partition [illegible] lot in the village of De Ruyter [illegible] the estate of [illegible] bounded, beginning at the centre of the [illegible] ing north [illegible] said village [illegible] corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north [illegible] east corner thereof; thence south [illegible] lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence [illegible] the said Mitchell's north [illegible] Marcus Brump; thence north on said B[illegible] line to lands owned by [illegible] west to the east line of Lot No. 27; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving [illegible] from two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton [illegible] er to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, Oct. 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34tf

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 29, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER

FOR SALE.

A VERY VALUABLE House Lot, [illegible] Cazenovia, situated [illegible] Lot, south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house [illegible] Apply to Lauren H. Babcock [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841. Wm. MANSON

NO IMPOSITION!

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality [illegible] will find just the place by calling at [illegible] MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTS, [illegible] ces at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are [illegible] at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequalled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.

De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth, CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the
Oct. 4th. STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by J. N. ELMORE.
October 4

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

ELECTION NOTICE.

State of New-York,
Secretary's Office, Albany, August 25, 1841.
To the Sheriff of the County of Madison, Sir:

NOTICE is hereby given you, that the term of service of Avery Skinner, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District of this State, will expire on the last day of December next, and that a Senator is to be chosen in that District, to which the county of Madison belongs, at the General Election to be held on the first, second and third days of November next.

At the same election the following officers are to be chosen, viz: Three Members of Assembly, for the said County, and one Coroner, in the place of Ira Seymour, whose term of office expires on the last day of December next.

JOHN C. SPENCER, Secretary of State.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the notice received by me from the Secretary of State.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.

Dated August 28, 1841. 25tde

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.
Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

ATTENTION!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on the accounts of Spencer & Saunders, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

N. B. The accounts are divided, and it is my own only that I ask for. Please attend.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30
A. L. SAUNDERS.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING [illegible] Goods, and taken [illegible] W. [illegible] BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT [illegible] W. SUTTON'S, [illegible] of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye-Stuffs;

[illegible] complete [illegible] they can [illegible]

LOW [illegible]

[illegible] New-York. [illegible]

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible]

[illegible]

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A [illegible] STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE.

IS [illegible] valuable [illegible]
Rev. [illegible] Balsam of Liverwort
Moffat's [illegible]
M[illegible] Pills
Phinney's Pills
[illegible] Tomato Pills
[illegible]
Wistar's Balsam of Horehound
Balm of China
Parker's Pulmonary Balm
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible] Stoves [illegible] Saws [illegible] STONE STORE.
October 4

[illegible]

W[illegible]

M[illegible]

L[illegible]

[illegible] STONE STORE.

TO [illegible] AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber [illegible] Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

NOTICE.

THE Co-Partnership heretofore existing under the firm of WILLIAMS & SAYLES, is this [illegible]

All persons indebted to Williams & Sayles, [illegible]

M. B. WILLIAMS,
Oct. 1 32tf W. [illegible] SAYLES.

NOTICE.

F[illegible] OF GRAIN. [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841.
32tf JAMES [illegible]

ONE CENT REWARD,

AND NO CHARGES PAID.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the [illegible] by the name of ISRAEL HOWARD STONE. This is to forbid all persons harboring or trusting him on my account, as I will pay no debts of his contracting after this date. Whoever will return said boy, shall receive the above reward.

De Ruyter Sept. 27th 1841.
JESSE STILLMAN.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the buisness will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

POETRY.

A POEM—BY JOHN Q. ADAMS.

Washington, Aug. 31, 1841.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS is one of the intellectual prodigies whose characters distinguish eras of time. An hundred years hence, I doubt whether the American annals will show more than two names—BENJAMIN FRANKLIN and GEORGE WASHINGTON—brighter than that of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Mr. Adams is now 74 years old. But years have made no impression upon his intellect; that is still fresh and vigorous. He is, as has been so frequently stated, always in his seat; always watching the course of business, and always ready to shed light upon the question before the House.

The Hon. Mr. Morgan, whose seat is next to that of Mr. Adams, has obtained for me, with permission to publish in the Journal, a copy of the poem, which I enclose. It was written in July, 1840, under these circumstances: Gen. Ogle informed Mr. Adams that several young ladies in his district had requested him to obtain Mr. A's autograph for them. In accordance with this request, Mr. Adams wrote the following beautiful poem upon "THE WANTS OF MAN," each stanza upon a sheet of note paper. What American young lady would not set a precious value upon such an autograph from the illustrious statesman?

The Wants of Man.

"Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long."
GOLDSMITH.

"Man wants but litttle here below,
Nor wants that little long."
'Tis not with me exactly so—
But 'tis so in the song.
My wants are many, and if told
Would muster many a score;
And were each wish a mint of Gold,
I still should long for more.

I want a garden and a park,
My dwelling to surround,
A thousand acres, (bless the mark,)
With walls encompassed round,
Where flocks may range, and herds may low,
And kids and lambkins play—
And flowers and fruits commingled grow,
All Eden to display.

I want a cabinet profuse
Of medals, coins, and gems;
A printing-press for private use
Of fifty thousand ems;
And plants and minerals and shells,
Worms, insects, fishes, birds;
And every beast on earth that dwells
In solitude or herds.

I want—(who does not want?)—a wife
Affectionate and fair;
To solace all the woes of life,
And all its joys to share.
Of temper sweet—of yielding will,
Of firm, yet placid mind;
With all my faults to love me still,
With sentiment refined.

And as Time's car incessant runs
And fortune fills my store;
I want of daughters and of sons
From eight to half a score.
I want, (alas! can mortal dare
Such bliss on earth to crave?)
That all the girls be chaste and fair—
The boys all wise and brave.

I want a warm and faithful friend
To cheer the adverse hour;
Who ne'er to flatter will descend,
Nor bend the knee to power.
A friend to chide me when I'm wrong
My inmost soul to see;
And that my friendship prove as strong
For him as his for me.

I want a kind and tender heart,
For others' wants to feel;
A soul secure from fortune's dart,
And bosom armed with steel.
To bear Divine chastisement's rod,
And mingling in my plan,
Submission to the will of God
With charity to man.

I want a keen observing eye;
An ever listening ear,
The truth through all disguise to spy,
And wisdom's voice to hear.
A tongue to speak at virtue's need
In Heaven's sublimest strain;
And lips the cause of man to plead,
And never plead in vain.

I want uninterrupted health
Throughout my long career;
And streams of never failing wealth
To scatter far and near,
The destitute to clothe and feed;
Free bounty to bestow;
Supply the helpless orphan's need
And soothe the widow's woe.

I want the genius to conceive,
The talents to unfold
Designs, the vicious to retrieve,
The virtuous to uphold.
Inventive power, combining skill;
A persevering soul,
Of human hearts to mold the will,
And reach from pole to pole.

I want the seals of power and place;
The ensigns of command;
Charged by the people's unbought grace,
To rule my native land—
Nor crown nor sceptre would I ask,
But from my country's will,
By day, by night, to play the task
Her cup of bliss to fill.

I want the voice of honest praise
To follow me behind;
And to be thought in future days
The friend of human kind;
That after ages as they rise
Exulting may proclaim,
In choral union, to the skies,
Their blessings on my name.

These are the wants of mortal man,
I cannot want them long—
For life itself is but a span
And earthly bliss a song.
My last great want, absorbing all,
Is, when beneath the sod,
And summoned to my final call—
The MERCY OF MY GOD.

And oh! while circles in my veins,
Of life, the purple stream,
And yet a fragment still remains
Of nature's transient dream;
My soul, in humble hope unscared,
Forget not thou to pray,
That this thy WANT may be prepared
TO MEET THE JUDGMENT DAY.

WASHINGTON, 14th June, 1840.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

THE STUPID ROGUE.

A story founded on fact, with fictitious names, and invented incidents, too slight to impair the truth of the narrative.

Frederic Allen, a native of Massachusetts, left the old Bay State with half her soil untilled, and, like thousands of others, went off to the West, "to seek his fortune." A gentleman, connected with him by marriage, invited him to spend a few days at his house, in Lexington, Kentucky. Every thing was calculated to please the young stranger. He was delighted with the hospitality and cordial frankness of his host; all the convenient appurtenances of wealth surrounded him; the slaves looked sleek and well fed; and his youthful self-importance was not a little flattered by their servile politeness, and frequent repetition of "young massa."

The servant who brought his boots, polished like a mirror, was a particularly handsome, bright looking mulatto, with a slight expression of mischief lurking in the corner of his eye. Seeing him at work with great slight of hand, the New Englander one day said to him, "What a smart fellow you are, Harry! You must be able to earn a great deal of money. I almost wonder you hav'nt made off for Ohio, before now."

The chamber-maid was standing near, broom in hand; Harry looked at her, and she looked up at Harry. The glance seemed to be involuntary, and was exceedingly brief; yet the stranger thought he detected in it something quizical and significant. Fearful that he was working mischief for his host, he hastily added, "Don't think that I advise you to go to Ohio, Harry. They tell me a good many of you smart fellows run off, thinking they can do better at the North; but with such a place as you have got, you'd be a fool to try it. You've got a first rate master, hav'nt you?"

"Oh yes, massa."

"I'm glad you know when you're well off. I don't suppose you want your freedom?"

"Oh no, massa; if there's any thing I do despise, it's a free nigger."

"Poor creatures," replied the young man, "they don't know what it is to have a kind master, to provide for them all the year round."

He closed the door of the room after him, as he spoke. Harry looked at Ann, raised his eye-brows, put his fore finger to the side of his nose, and gave a low, chuckling laugh. Ann did not laugh, but she looked very queer.

The next morning, Mr. Allen's boots were not brushed. "Where's Harry?" said one; and "Where's Harry?" asked another; but nobody could tell. Ann, his wife, being questioned, answered very demurely, that she had not seen him since daylight, when he went out to take care of the horses."

On searching the stables, it was found that he had taken care of one horse, at least; for the animal was no where to be found. The master raved, and swore that Ann should be flogged, if she did not tell, forthwith, which way Harry had gone.—Whereupon, Ann began to cry, and said very demurely, "How could she tell! She did'nt ask Harry where he was going;" and her mistress began to cry also, begging that Ann might not be whipped.

"D——n it," said the angry master, "this is a fine piece of business! The best servant I had. I was offered $1200 for him, only last week. And the rascal has taken my horse, too."

Frederic Allen colored to the temples—"Could it have been I, that put Ohio into his head?" thought he; "Surely not; for the plan must have been longer than one night ripening. But I now remember the cunning rascal has asked me a great many questions. I'll be hanged, if he did'nt get out of me the whole history of my route from the North!"

He questioned Ann, with a scrutinizing gaze; but she looked down, very innocent and stupid, and answered with respectful brevity, baffling investigation. Having a great regard for "property," his mind was ill at ease; and he took opportunity to confess to his hostess that he feared he had, quite unconsciously, been an accomplice in Harry's escape.

To his great surprise she answered cheerfully, "I am glad of it, Mr. Allen; and I wish in my heart they would all walk off. As for the horse, what consequence is it? The poor fellow would have been overtaken, if he'd gone afoot. My husband is rich; and we owed Harry more wages than the horse would come to. I'm only sorry he did not take his wife and children with him."

The husband was of a different opinion. He instituted a diligent search, and offered a large reward, but all in vain. He was, however, of a placable and easy disposition; and after swearing for a few days, blaming his own foolish indulgence, and the cursed abolition tendencies of his New England wife, he appeared to forget all about the matter. Moreover, after five or six glasses of wine one day, he swore with a round oath, that "Harry was no fool; and that he had done just as he would, if he were a slave."

Months passed on, and no tidings came of Harry. A new husband was provided for Ann; but she refused to live with him. Her master considered this a very unprofitable arrangement; and as usual swore at her for her obstinacy. But when he tried to convince her that Harry would never come back, she cried; and though he threatened to have her flogged, he could never bring his mind to give the orders.—His slaves knew very well that they had a friend in his own household, and a secret pleader in his own unhardened heart.

Before a year had elapsed, to the astonishment of all but one, Harry came back, ragged and dirty, with a long beard and bare feet. He knelt to his master, begging forgiveness. "I did not know how well off I was," said he. "I was deceived with the lies they told me about freedom. I thought I could get a good living, if I was free; but that Canada is a miserable place. I've worn out the good clothes you give me, massa, and I could'nt get a dollar to buy any more. I've been starved and frozen; and I'm sick enough of freedom. If you will only forgive me, massa, I'll be proud to work for you the longest day I have to live."

Of course the master did forgive him; and he had a bright new suit of clothes, forthwith; and his master gave him a silver dollar; and Frederic Allen gave him a silver dollar; and the neighboring planters praised him, and gave him tobacco and small change. Moreover, the generous Kentuckian gave a servant's ball on the occasion, to all the slaves on the plantation; and they had plenty of cake and grog; and they were all told to look up to Harry, and hear what Harry had to say, and follow Harry's example. And Harry was repeatedly instructed to take every opportunity of talking with them; and not be sparing of pains to let them know all about his experience of freedom.

The intelligent slave obeyed these orders with a zeal, which, had it been duly appreciated, would have raised him as high as Hamam; that is, fifty cubits higher than he wished. For three months he labored with unbounded diligence, and was treated with a degree of consideration that excited the envy of all his class. Even his mistress began to think it was indeed better for the poor creatures to have somebody to support and protect them; forgetting the self-evident fact that the masters are the ones that "can not take care of themselves."

But one night, as she lay awake, she heard at midnight the shutting of doors, and the suppressed murmuring of voices. For a moment she was alarmed, but then came the conviction that some of the servants were ill; so she turned upon her pillow and slept quietly till morning.

Ann did not appear as usual to assist at her toilet. She had gone; and Harry was gone; and the children were gone; and Ann's brother and sister, and Harry's two brothers had gone along with them; and about that time seventeen slaves in the neighborhood disappeared strangely.

Harry had been ordered to tell them all he knew about freedom, and he had taken care that no opportunity should be lost.—Many a sly glance had passed between him and Ann, when praises were showered upon him; and when she expressed any doubts about the projected expedition, he answered, "Never you fear. You know I went a purpose to find out about things; and I tell you we can get a good living; and nobody can catch us after we get into Canada; and I know the road now, just as well as I know the way to bed; and I know folks that'll let us have fresh horses every fifteen miles. I've got money enough to pay 'em for it, too. Did'nt I bring my wages stitched in my ragged coat? And has'nt master given me a silver dollar, and many a shining sixpence? And hav'nt the gentlemen, all round, given me a power of cash? Because, you see, I like to be a slave so well!" The mischievous fellow made a significant motion with his finger, and looked out of the corner of his eye, with inexpressible roguery; and Ann thought, what she often said, that "her Harry was about the cutest chap ever raised in old Kentuck."

This last effort completely astounded the Kentuckian. He did not even swear about it, but manifested a most decided aversion ever to hear the subject mentioned. In fact, both himself and his wife were in that state of mind, that one hour's conversation with such an one as John Woodman, or Elias Hicks, would have produced the entire emancipation of all their slaves.

Had the moral sentiment of New England been sound on this subject, and had Frederic Allen carried thence to Kentucky true principles of freedom, a few words from him, seasonably spoken, would have redeemed them all.

But the moral sentiment of the free States is corrupt; and therefore the thoughtless young man found nothing better than to utter reproaches on the "ungrateful negroes." Reader, are you quite guiltless of co-partnership in forming and sustaining this unhealthy public sentiment? I fear not. L. M. C.

BRONCHITIS OR THROAT AIL.

Professor Hamilton, of Rochester N. Y., in an article in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal upon this subject, mentions the following among the causes of the disease. His remarks are worthy of attention. It cannot be denied that the modern practice of bandaging the neck so unmercifully, is an evil of no small magnitude, and it cannot be too soon abandoned.

The principal local predisposing cause is the cravat or neck handkerchief. Most of our clergymen wear high stocks, or cloth handkerchiefs tied tight and thickly folded. The former being hard and unyielding, irritates and embarrasses the larynx in its necessary motions while speaking, and being open above often admit a chilling current of air when the neck is perspiring; the latter swathes the neck, and keeps it constantly, during warm weather, heated and moist as if immersed in a vapor bath; and, in consequence, the muscular fibre of the larynx and trachea becomes lax and enfeebled. We declaim incessantly, in public and in private, against the tyranny of fashion over the female sex, and denounce the corset employed to diminish their waists, as an instrument of torture and death. Meanwhile our own necks are bundled with a quadruple amount of sour linen, solely to conciliate fashion and to fill out a deficiency in the contour of our figure, which we fancy disproportionate and unseemly. A cravat we do not consider an essential part of the male attire, but a supplemental appendage which is better dispensed with than worn. Until 1660, when they were first introduced into France by a regiment of Croats, the neck was left uncovered by all nations, and "it is still discarded by people of different climates —the Orientals, Poles, Kalmucks, and various Tartar tribes. But in America, even unfledged boys, soon as they strut upon the stage of life, are seen tightly collared and cravated; and, by the constant pressure upon the pomum Adami, its full development is prevented, and the voice, instead of acquiring that manly strength and volume which is produced in a capacious larynx, ever retains a weakness and effeminacy by which Nature designed to characterize only the other sex. Cravats, also, of whatever material, and however applied, impede the free return of the blood through the external jugulars, the least obstruction of which is sufficient to produce a sensible cerebal congestion:—hence, arise vertigo, tinnitus aurium, mental imbecility. Witness the confirmed fop, whose neck, daily ligated as with a hangman's noose, is stretched wide from the shoulders, his eyes projecting from their sockets, his brain soaked and saturated like a wet sponge, and quite as senseless, and constantly harrassed with pain, vertigo, stupor, &c. We have long believed that most of our public speakers who have fallen suddenly in the halls of Congress, or elsewhere, while declaiming vehemently, have died martyrs to the same practice; the pressure upon the torgid vessels producing a fatal apoplexy. Even a closely buttoned colar or chemise may produce the same compression.

A PARABLE.

1. A certain man going from Youth to Manhood, fell among grog-shops, where he was stripped of his money, his character, and his friends, and left poor, ragged, and half dead with disease.

2. And by chance there came down a certain Moderate Drinker that way, and when he saw him, he scorned him, and passed by on the other side.

3. And likewise a Friend of Temperance came where he was, and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

4. But a certain Temperance Man, as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and wept over him, and besought him with tears to repent and reform.

5. And he persuaded him to sit upon his own beast, Total Abstinence, and brought him to his own family, and took care of him. And on the morrow he spake kindly to him, and offered prayers for him and departed. Which of the three was neighbor to him who fell among the grog-shops?

Distilleries have become poor property since the late Temperance movement commenced. Recently, one of the distilleries in Waterville, N. Y., failed to the amount of $35,000. Another at Oriskany Falls, a short distance from Waterville, failed for about $30,000. And another near Clinton, N. Y., for about $15,000, making $80,000, which, when the property is sold will not more than half be covered. Distillers must look out for these cold water armies; they go en masse against "people's rights." —Northampton Courier.

In consequence of the Temperance Reform in the United States, it is calculated that there will be ten millions of grain less manufactured into whiskey this year than there was last year. Therefore, there will be less business for grog-sellers, also for sheriffs, constables, jailers, hangmen, lawyers, and doctors. People will enjoy better health, and more comfort and happiness.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c. &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good barter as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,
10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE 17.
Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, at 50 cts pr lb. CASH, Old Hyson do at 5s6 Cash; New Orleans MOLASSES at 30 cts pr Gal.

He has also just opened 3 packages of Crockery, directly from Liverpool, bought for cash, and at prices which he is confident are

50 per cent Lower, than those of any New-York purchase. He can furnish any style of Crockery which may be wanted, and offers either

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig,
Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower

than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arabian "
Dr. Phelps' Tomato "
M. Graffer's Lion of the Day "
Dr. Pamner's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlam Oil,
British "
Pectoral Balm Honey.

Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organum,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c ☞A certain cure in all cases ☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWLER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.
De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841,

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Webb's Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon.
" Legendre.
" First Lessons.
" Arithmetic.
Comstock's Chemistry.
Phelps' Philosophy.
Brown's Grammar.
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy.
Town's Analysis.
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations.
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,

Novum Græcum Testamatum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper.
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.
JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call — He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel [illegible], P. M., Oran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. [illegible], P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
[illegible]—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
[illegible]—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Eld. Joseph Potter.
[illegible]—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Eld. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. David S. [illegible].
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Lincklaen—Eld. Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Eld. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson, Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers, Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Genesee—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Salem—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

·VOL. II.

WANTED,
good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exe for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at Mammoth Boot.
uly 14th, 1841,

& STATIONERY.

ber has made arrangements by which able to furnish Classical and Misceland Stationery, at very low prices.
g, among others, may now be found

ary, large. | Novum Græcum Testa-
small, | mentum,
n, | Colloquial Phrases,
re, | Greek Reader,
Lessons, | Greek Lessons,
etic, | Jacob's Latin Reader,
emistry, | Polyglott Bibles,
phy, | Quarto "
mar, | Medium Drawing Paper,
Intellectu- | Demi " "
y, | Cap " "
is, | Drawing Pencils,
aphy, | Ruled, Plain and Fancy
| Letter Paper,
ers, | Plain and Ruled Fools-
ek Gram- | cap, &c. &c. &c.

AMES BAILEY, Register Office.
uly 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.
iber having connected a BINDERY rinting establishment, is now ready kinds of Binding in a neat and durable easonable terms as at any other es-this section of country.
JAMES BAILEY.
une 8th 1841.

LORING ESTABLISHMENT.

M. LETTS, eturn thanks for the patronage he has l from his numerous friends and cuswould say to them that he has taken e first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. as a Druggist Store,) together with pied before, where he will be happy to se who will favor him with a call.— retofore, WARRANT his work to be rior manner.
g and Summer Fashions just received.
Exchange.
as engaged an experienced Journey-pay particular attention to making up very variety, in a neat and superior yter, June 23, 1841.

S FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.
H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
es R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Sam-
M., Oran Vincent.
S. Streeter, P. M.
-Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin
ewis G. Baldwin. Dr. Wm. M. Tru-
Nathan V. Hall.
—Charles Saunders.
—Dea. Joseph Potter.
y—A. Parker, P. M.
Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lan-sa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M.
—William Greene.
—John P. Livermore, P. M., Still-—Dennis Hardin. H. S. Crandall. ty—Paul Stillman. aniel Truman.
—Charles Lewis.
—George Crandall.
a. Clark Rogers.
a. Hosea Whitford.
Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
kiel G. Potter, James Hubbard,
—Abel Ward.
—W. M. Beauchamp.
e Babcock.
ks—Welcome Stillman.
ar Williams.
ells K. Greene.
RHODE-ISLAND.
Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander
CONNECTICUT.
Lester T. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
ge—T. S. Greenman.
NEW-JERSEY.
Lucius Crandall.
—W. B. Gillett.
D. Titsworth
vid Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Jos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
—B. F. Bond.
—W. H. Hydron, P. M.
VIRGINIA.
Levi H. Bond.
Thos. B. Bond.
Jepthah F. Randolph.
Joseph Jeffrey, P. M. s Lowther, Esq.
OHIO.
Paul Crandall.
Charles Clarke.
—Simeon Babcock.
n.—Lewis A. Davis
avis Loofbourrow.
MICHIGAN.
Tyler.
Bethuel Church, P. M.
WISKONSAN.
Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

nth-day Baptist Register
S PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
YTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.
BY ES BAILEY.

o village subscribers who have the eir doors, $2 25, in advance, or piration of the year.
mail subscribers, $2 if paid in ad-
if payment is delayed six months, of the year. Subscriptions paid or to any authorised Agents within of the receipt of the first number,
d in advance.
ication, involving facts and intend-n the paper, must be accompanied name.
ption received for a less term than bers who do not give express notice will be considered as wishing to bscription, and their paper will be ordingly. No paper will be disconrearages are paid except at the dis-blisher.
ents inserted on the most reasona nd communications to addressed to the publisher

T. Rogers

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.---NO. 36.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.——A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 88.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 3, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

THE SABBATH.

Eld. Bailey's Reply to Eld. Mattison.

[Concluded.]

But you, nor no other man, has ever attempted to show a command of God for first-day keeping; but you have taken a circuitous route to arrive at the knowledge of the divine pleasure. You have assumed that the Apostles, acting under the divine influence, have changed the day. Well, dear brother, we will be satisfied that the first-day is the Sabbath, by divine appointment, if you will show where any of the Apostles have said any such thing. But even this has never been shown, and we presume it never can be without a new revelation. But we are referred to the examples of the Apostles to sustain this position. Example without precept imposes no obligation. Even God's resting from his work of creation on the seventh-day, would not have laid man under obligation to have rested on that day, had he not sanctified it or set it apart. The example of the Apostles without a command, cannot be justly urged as binding on christians.

The most that can be claimed, is, that the practice of the Apostles might justify another person in adopting the same course under similar circumstances. Will brother Mattison feel himself bound to be circumcised, because Paul circumcised Timothy? or will he insist that Christians shall sell their farms and throw their avails into one common fund, because this course was adopted by the apostles and primitive christians under certain circumstances? or will he be willing to work at tent-making during the week and preach on the Sabbath because this course was adopted by Paul on a certain occasion? If brother Mattison will not adopt any of these practices, in imitation of apostolic example, he must excuse me for refusing to profane the Sabbath of the decalogue, and to sanctify the first-day of the week, upon no other authority than his alleged apostolic practice.

With these remarks, I dismiss your tenth argument, and propose to examine the proof of your eleventh.

Which is, "The first-day of the week was kept by the Apostles and early christians, as a Sabbath," &c. In confirmation of this, you say the disciples devoted the very day on which Christ arose to sacred purposes. It might be sufficient for me, to interpose a flat denial of the assertion, and call for proof. I will, however, with candor examine your evidence, and see whether it will sustain you. You introduce John xx. 19. "Then the same day at evening being the first-day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst." Now I ask, does this bear you out in your high pretension, that the disciples devoted the very day on which Christ arose, to sacred purposes? No sir, it does not even point that way. It will be found (Acts i. 13,) that at the time of Christ's ascension, the eleven dwelt together in an upper room at Jerusalem. And it is highly probable that they had continued this practice from the time of the crucifixion. This view of the subject will show that instead of meeting to celebrate the resurrection of Christ, they merely closed their doors for fear of the Jews. Permit me to invite your attention to Mark xvi. 9—14 inclusive. Here you will discover one of your strongest fortresses annihilated. Instead of their honoring the first-day as a Sabbath, to commemorate the resurrection, they (at least two of them,) secularized it, and the whole of them did not believe the fact that Christ had risen, and he upbraided them with their unbelief, and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after his resurrection. Now, sir, can you with these facts before you, demand the assent of any man that the Apostles kept this very day as a Sabbath?

I pass to your second proof, which is, "That after eight days again his disciples were within," &c. You say this was the next first-day. I know that this is claimed, but your rule is much like gum elastic; it can be stretched so as to embrace eight days in a week, and it can be so contracted as to reduce three days and three nights within the compass of thirty-six hours.—I will say that, at most, it is doubtful about its being the next first-day. But let the day be what day it may, there is not a word said about the change of the Sabbath, or worship of any kind. A man must be hardly pressed indeed, who is compelled to resort to such arguments to sustain his cause. You next refer us to Acts ii. 2.—"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." "Now" (say you,) "it should be remembered that the observance of the Pentecost, was one of the Jewish ceremonies, and by no means the duty of Christians. It was kept in memory of the giving of the law from Sinai, and was fifty days after the Passover. Why the disciples should be with one accord and in one place on this day, unless it was sacred to them as christians, is more than we can tell. But on calculating the time according to the Law, we find that this pentecost was on the first-day of the week." Without following you through your proofs, I will simply state, that men of erudition and piety have been divided on the subject. Some with you have claimed that Pentecost was on the first-day of the week, others of equal talents have claimed that it was on the seventh. To me it is a matter of total indifference, what day of the week it was. I feel abundantly able to solve your problem, why the disciples should be all with one accord in one place; it was to keep the feast of Pentecost. Had not this been the case, we should have been told of some other reason. It was not as seventh-day, nor as first-day, that the disciples kept it, but as Pentecost only. If you claim to follow them in this example, you are more of a Judaizer than I profess to be.

You next refer us to Acts xx. 6, 7. "And we sailed away from Phillippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them at Troas in five days, where we abode seven days, and upon the first-day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his speech until midnight." "On this text observe" (say you,) "firstly, the first-day of the week is mentioned as the day on which the disciples usually assemble to partake of the Lord's supper." This is your construction; Luke says no such thing.—One thing I am frank to admit, that you have at length found one example of the disciples meeting on the first-day of the week for worship. But this, we conceive, cannot afford you the least help in proving a change of Sabbath. What are the facts in the case? First it was an evening meeting, and unless Luke calculated time entirely different from the Bible rule, it must have been the evening immediately following the seventh-day, and Paul must have journeyed on the light part of the first-day. I presume you will not deny that the Scriptures begin the day at evening. There is nothing said about Paul's exercises during the preceding week. But are we therefore to infer that Paul rested in idleness the whole time to wait for the arrival of the first-day? No sir. Upon the supposition I have adopted, the Apostle concluded to spend the last evening of his stay with his brethren in public worship; this is perfectly natural; christians generally would adopt the same course without thinking they were establishing a new Sabbath. The German seventh-day Baptists continue this practice of the Apostles until the present day; they meet to break bread on the first-day according to their reckoning, (which accords with that of the scriptures.) They meet the evening after the seventh-day, in imitation of the disciples of Troas. If you deny the above position, and contend that the meeting was on the evening following the first-day, you make the meeting to have been on the second-day, and Paul broke bread on Monday morning. If this one instance of the disciples meeting on the first-day be binding on future christians, Why do you not carry out your principles? You are bound to meet every first-day, and to celebrate the supper or break bread after midnight, and continue your meeting until the break of day. So much you must do, or give up that Apostolic practice, without command, binds Christians. We are next referred to 1st Cor. xvi. 2. "Upon the first-day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come."

You remark, "If then the church at Corinth had a collection for the saints, on the first-day, and the church at Galatia, the same by Paul's directions; it is evident that both of them kept the first-day of the week as the Christian Sabbath." Here again you have a string of suppositions to prove Apostolic first-day keeping. The things you have assumed as facts, should have been proved before they were made the basis of so important a concern as a change of the Sabbath.

You say, "if, then, the church at Corinth had a collection," &c. "why then the first-day must be the Christian Sabbath." But suppose they did not, what then? Why, nothing more than that your superstructure has tumbled into ruins with its sandy foundation. The Apostle has not said a word about a public collection, nor about a meeting on the first-day of the week; but has simply directed every individual to lay by him in store, as God had prospered him, that his contribution might be in readiness when the Apostle came.

You next refer us to Rev. i. 10. "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." You remark "in the text above quoted, he speaks of the Lord's day, as a day well known among Christians, in the churches to whom he wrote, and" (you suppose,) "the day of our Lord's resurrection must be intended." You have no direct proof to that effect, it being a title nowhere used in the scriptures; of course it is altogether conjectural what day it must be, if reference was had to any particular day. Before this can afford any aid in support of a first-day Sabbath, two things will be necessary to be proven.

1. That the first-day was intended.
2. That Lord's day must be Sabbath day: neither of which can be shown.

You state that Mr. Burnside admits that the first-day of the week is here spoken of. I very much regret that you should have suffered yourself to make such an assertion without giving the necessary explanation. I gladly would have spared you the unpleasant exposure, and did call on you for that purpose, in part, and gave you the opportunity of correcting in this review, the erroneous impressions you had made on the public mind in reference to Mr. Burnside's opinion. The blame of exposing your want of candor must rest upon yourself, as you would not accept the opportunity I afforded you of correcting that error. Mr. Burnside contends, that if the passage under consideration was genuine, and was written by St. John, it must mean the seventh-day; and at P. 176, American Edition, he says, "That it is remarkable that our Lord did once attach his sacred title of Lord to the seventh-day," when he said, "the son of man was Lord even of the Sabbath day." After all, Mr. Burnside is of opinion that the passage is spurious, and was not written by St. John—that it is an interpolation, and that a very late one—perhaps about the time of Constantine the Great." P. 183. It was in this connection that Mr. Burnside considered that first-day was intended. Mr. Burnside presents powerful reasons in support of the spurious character of this passage, which my limits will not permit me to transcribe. I believe I have noticed all the passages of scripture urged to prove that the Apostles observed the first-day of the week, as the Christian Sabbath. But before I dismiss the subject of Apostolic example, I shall notice some passages which go to show that the Apostles and primitive christians, Jews and Gentiles, observed the seventh-day as the Christian Sabbath. "But when they departed from Perga they came to Antioch, in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and sat down." Being invited by the rulers of the synagogue, Paul preached to them. At the close of his discourse, when the Jews had gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath. Acts xiii. 14 and 42. What a favorable opportunity for Paul to have instructed them into the doctrine of the Christian Sabbath! Upon your hypothesis, I should have supposed Paul would have addressed them in language something like the following: "I have met with the Jews in the synagogue to-day because I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to preach to them, but you need not wait until the return of the Jewish Sabbath, but may meet with the disciples when I meet with them to-morrow, on the Christian Sabbath." How can you account for this neglect? But instead of this, they waited until the next Sabbath—a conclusive evidence that a first-day Sabbath was unknown both to the Apostles and the Gentiles.—Likewise Acts xvi. 1.—"And it came to pass in Iconium that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake that a great multitude, both of the Jews and also of the Greeks, believed."—In Acts xv. we have the result of the council which sat to decide the question, whether the Gentiles were bound to observe the ceremonial law; which was decided in the negative. James here speaks of the Gentiles having Moses preached unto them, being read in the synagogue every Sabbath day. If the Gentiles did not observe the Sabbath, or seventh-day, the allusion was altogether irrelevant. Acts xvi. 13.—"And on the Sabbath-day we went out of the city by a river-side where prayer was wont to be made, and we sat down and spake unto the women which resorted thither."—If the Sabbath was changed, and the Apostles only met on the seventh-day that they might preach to the Jews, how shall we account for this meeting on the seventh-day? Here we have no account of any Jews but Paul and Silas, and probably Luke, the narrator. Neither was there a synagogue, but they retired to the water-side. Acts xvii. 2.—"And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures." Acts xviii. 4.—"And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded Jews and Greeks." Here, again, we find Gentiles listening to the Gospel on the seventh-day. Here Paul tarried a year and a half, working in the week time and preaching on the Sabbath. When we bring forward testimony to show that the Apostles kept the seventh-day, you retort that it was in conformity to the Jews. This you have no authority to say—the scriptures give us no such information; but, on the contrary, they give us to understand that it was in obedience to the command of God.

Your last argument is drawn from Ecclesiastical History. If your quotations from the scriptures have established the first-day as the Christian Sabbath by divine authority, you did not need the testimony of the fathers; if you have not, they can not help you, as the scriptures are the acknowledged standard of Protestants. (See Methodist Discipline.) Although I am unwilling to admit the testimony of the fathers as authority for either faith or practice, yet I am willing to allow it all the weight to which it is entitled. Let it be remembered, that the question is not whether early Christians paid regard to the first-day of the week, but whether they substituted it for the seventh-day as the Christian Sabbath. Your first quotation is from Ignatius: "Let us not Sabbatize, but keep the Lord's day, on which our Life arose." Mr. Cornthwait, remarking upon this passage, observes, "that the sense of this passage, out of the genuine epistle, is not fairly given: for Ignatius having said in the preceding paragraph, "that the prophets of God, who were before Christ, lived according to Christ," proceeds thus: "If, therefore, they (the prophets,) who conversed with old things, came to a newness of hope, not Sabbatizing, αλλα κατα κυριακεν ζωην ζωντεσ, how shall we live without him?" So that, if the Lord's day be here intended by the word κυριακη, then Ignatius supposed that the prophets who were before Christ observed it, which we are sure they never did, if by the Lord's day we are to understand the first-day of the week; and as the corresponding passage cited from this interpolated epistle is, allowedly, an interpolation, I am excused from taking any notice of it; but will observe, first, that the Jews used to call the Sabbath king of days. And second, that Archbishop Usher's Edition is followed by those who suppose that the larger Epistles which go under the name of Ignatius, to be the genuine ones, and not the smaller: and consequently they read, μετα τω Σαββατισαι; not instead of Sabbatising, but "after keeping the Sabbath let every Christian keep as a festival the Lord's day," &c.—"So that Ignatius seems to prefer the seventh or Sabbath day, to the first-day of the week; nor are the citations from Justyn. Martyr, Tertulian, or Clemens Alexandrianus, as far as I can observe, inconsistent with this doctrine."

The amount of the testimony of your quotations from the fathers is no more than has been already admitted, that early Christians kept the supposed day of Christ's resurrection as a religious festival. But the testimony of the fathers goes to establish the fact that they also observed the seventh-day as the Sabbath.

Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, says, "We assembled on Saturday, not that we were infected with Judaism, but to worship Jesus the Lord of the Sabbath."

Socrates, the Ecclesiastical Historian, says, "Touching the communion, there are sundry observations and customs, for almost all the churches throughout the whole world, do celebrate and receive the holy mysteries every Sabbath, yet the Egyptians bordering upon Alexandria, together with the inhabitants of Thebias, of a tradition, do celebrate the communion on Sunday.

Sozomenus, makes the same exceptions, and says, "all, or most of the other churches carefully observe the Sabbath."

Gregory Nyssen, expostulates thus,—"With what eyes can you behold the Lord's day, when you despise the Sabbath? do you not perceive they are sisters, and that in slighting the one you affront the other?"

Eusebius, as quoted by Dr. Chalmers, says, "That before him, and even in his time, (fourth century,) the Sabbath was observed as well as Sunday."

More testimony of the kind might be introduced if necessary, but I conceive these to be sufficient. They go to show that for a long time, the keeping of the first-day, as a religious festival, did not interfere at all with the claims of the seventh-day to sanctification as a Sabbath.—Nor have the early fathers ever claimed divine authority for the first-day as the Christian Sabbath; nor has any body of christians, before the time of the reformation, ever resorted to the scriptures in support of the first-day of the week as the Christian Sabbath. Until this time they relied on the authority of the church alone.

Grotius says, "The Christians kept holy the Sabbath, and had their assemblies on that day, in which the law was read to them, as appears from Acts xv. 21, which custom continued until the time of the council of Laodicea, about A. D. 355, who then thought meet that the Gospel should also be read on that day." "These things considered, (says he,) refute those who pretend that the first-day of the week, or Lord's day, is substituted in room of the Sabbath; for there is nowhere any mention made of any such thing by Christ or his apostles; and whereas the christians met on the first-day as well as on the Sabbath, they did not this from any divine or apostolic precept, but from the liberty granted them by voluntary consent."

"The institution of the Sabbath, (says Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux,) preceded the law of Moses, and had its foundation in the creation; and yet these gentlemen (the protestants,) dispense with the observation of it as well as we." "In vain do they pretend that the first-day of the week is consecrated by the resurrection of Jesus Christ and noted in the writings of the Apostles as a day of assembling for Christians and even called the Lord's day, in the Revelations; for, besides that, rest is nowhere joined to Sunday throughout the New Testament; it is moreover manifest that the addition of a new day, could not suffice to take away the solemnity of the old one, nor to make us change the precepts of the decalogue with the traditions of men."

Morer, distinctly and candidly acknowledges he "can not imagine the first-day Sabbath a divine institution."

John Calvin, says, "The old fathers put in the place of the Sabbath, the day we call Sunday."

King Charles the I., in a query propounded by him to the Parliament's commissioners, at Holmley, 1617, says, "I conceive the celebration of the feast of Esther was instituted by the same authority which changed the Sabbath into the Lord's day on Sunday; for it will not be found in scripture where Saturday is discharged to be kept, or turned into Sunday. Wherefore, it must be the church's authority that changed the one, and instituted the other."

I believe I have noticed all your arguments, by which you attempt to sustain the claims of the first-day to be the Christian Sabbath. You have totally failed to show a change of the Sabbath from the seventh-day to the first—you have not shown that God, Christ, or the Apostles have ever changed the Sabbath, or that the Apostles ever observed the first-day as a Sabbath, or that the term Sabbath has ever been applied by the scriptures to the first-day of the week.

We say, then, in conclusion, that if God blessed the seventh-day, and sanctified it in paradise—that if the Sabbath is of perpetual and universal obligation—if God has commanded all men to remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy—if Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfil, or fully to teach—if he said whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven—if the uniform practice of the Apostles can be claimed as evidence of the divine will—if the practice of the early fathers is entitled to respect, then are the claims of the seventh-day to be the Christian Sabbath triumphantly sustained.

You that have found mercy, show mercy.

If the world be our portion here, hell will be our portion hereafter.

Temptations are instructions.

Religious Department.

From the Conference Journal

"UNTIL THE SPIRIT BE POURED OUT FROM ON HIGH."

The minister will toil on with a discouraged and aching heart. The church may be harmonious and affectionate; the congregation large and attentive; the pecuniary ability for the support of the institutions of the Gospel ample, with a corresponding liberality of disposition on the part of its possessors; every thing in the exterior of the society may look prosperous and inviting, while the minister [illegible] contemplating the great end of the Gospel, the renewal of the heart; that the mission on which he is sent is utterly unavailing [illegible] unless his preaching is not "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," will be dissatisfied and restless with all the [illegible] strength of the society, and with all the popularity of his ministrations. By the absence of the Spirit, he is shorn of his power, is baffled in his counsels, is [illegible] in his efforts; he has not [illegible] the people who are entwined about his heart in all the tender pastoral relation, [illegible] one [illegible] perishing and [illegible] weep in secret places.

Until the Spirit be poured out from on high, the church [illegible] and invigorated by the means of grace they enjoy and ever commend. A dearth enters the heart which no showers renew, which no dews [illegible] when good [illegible]. The word, the sacraments, and social worship, once so much sought, and so quickened, fail of their accustomed power and [illegible], often plunging the mind into deeper despondency from the consideration that the only means Heaven has appointed are enjoyed and yet are fruitless. In the gloom and depression of such seasons, the soul finds its only relief in looking back to former times with feelings and expressions of regret.

"What pea[illegible]
How swee[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

But the absence of the Spirit is not only attended with gloom and discomfort of heart; this is the hour of the powers of darkness; the chosen season for Satan to work, and the passions of [illegible] feeling are to break forth. Jealousies spring up; evil speakings [illegible]; parties are formed; [illegible] worldliness controls the heart; the ministry is [illegible] by the [illegible] and [illegible] of a [illegible] and [illegible] church; and this, more than all other causes, breaks up the churches, displaces the minister, and writes "Ichabod" upon all the [illegible] people.

Until the Spirit [illegible] from on high the impenitent [illegible] the appliances of argument, of prayers, tears, and persuasion. [illegible] that man's spirit [illegible] by might or by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord." Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but God giveth the increase." None inquire [illegible] God [illegible] the penitent tear is not shed in the [illegible] eye, the solemn countenance is not seen; the inquiry meeting is suspended; no candidates seek admission into the church; communion seasons come and go with no accessions to the number of those who believe; the fathers [illegible] instead of the fathers" are not "the children." unless Heaven interpose, [illegible] the church becomes [illegible] the most favored place in regard to [illegible] institutions and privileges [illegible] ignorance, vice, and [illegible]. Such was the history of many a church in New England. there was an elegant house of worship; the whole [illegible] congregation; the articles of orthodoxy had a place in the Confession of Faith, the ministry manifested no particular defection; all things seemed to move on harmoniously; but the Spirit was not given, and destruction came without a warning.

Let every Christian reader, as he mourns over the desolateness of his own heart, and contemplates the dangers of Zion in the absence of divine influence, breathe out the supplication of one of God's dearest but most afflicted children:

"Return, O Holy Dove, return
Sweet Messenger of rest,
I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
And drove thee from my breast."

GEMS OF PIETY.

They that do nothing, are in the ready way to do that which is worse than nothing.

If we hide our talents in the earth, we shall lose our treasure in heaven.

It matters not what a man loses, if he save his soul; but if he lose his soul, it matters not what he saves.

We must hear the warnings of conscience, or we shall feel the woundings of conscience.

The notion of free-grace may make persons dissolute, but a sense of it restrains from sin.

Love the men of the world, but not the things of the world.

The church can not live without faith, and faith can not live without the promises.

We have less power to stand than our first parents, but we have greater promises.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, November 3, 1841.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet; but it tendeth to poverty."

We last week suggested that men were more willing to give interest to their fellows than to God, &c. Our reflections on that subject have more than ever settled the conviction in our minds, of the application of the text at the commencement of this article to such characters. And we are fully persuaded that the cause of God and the temporal convenience of man, are both promoted by adopting the rule that was given to the Jews, viz: to give one-tenth of their income to the Lord. While the Jews continued that practice their substance increased. When avarice possessed their hearts, they were diminished in their possessions. God, by the mouth of Malachi, complained of the Jews because they had robbed him, even that whole nation, and admonished them to bring their tithes and offerings into his storehouse, and try him, and prove him therewith, to see if he would not open to them the windows of heaven, and pour them out a blessing, that there should not be room to receive it.

In this, and other passages of divine inspiration, the question is settled beyond the art of the verriest caviller. If then the matter is settled, so far as the Jews are concerned, who were in their day the church of God, why must it be altered when another race assume that character? Christians are now declared to be the light of the world, and through them the gospel is to be preached to the ends of the earth. They are God's chosen inheritance. And the same great principles apply to them that heretofore applied to the Jews. That is they are under obligation from the nature of the relation that they sustain to God, to bend all their energies for the advancement of his kingdom. God fixed one-tenth as the amount that the Jews should bring into his treasury. What reason is there why this ratio should be decreased when Christians are to act as God's chosen instruments in evangelizing the world? Is the work less arduous?—Are the consequences less important?—Surely, all things pertaining to Christ's kingdom, and the part Christians are to act in it, induce the belief that even more is required of them than of the Jews. The well-being of countless myriads of souls in the eternal world is intimately connected with the course christians take.—They are commanded to preach the gospel to every creature. All nations and tongues, and people are dependent on them for the word of life. And now suppose that each member of the church militant should remain inactive. God must change his means of converting the world to himself, or the benighted must die in their sins. If one withholds, all may. If one gives sparingly, all may. If one man lets his penuriousness, or avarice decide his duty to God and his fellows, all may. And thus the means God has ordained for the extension of his kingdom, must first be depreciated till scarcely a tithe of a tithe is brought into his treasury.

Christians who are governed by a worldly policy, forget two great truths which are necessary to be borne in mind, viz: That they are not their own, and that they are stewards of whatever earthly possessions they have. The fact that men are not their own, should lead them to devote their energies to him who has a right to claim them. The command given them by inspiration, is that whatever they do should be done to the glory of God. And an apostle exhorts that in view of the mercies of God, men should present their bodies a living sacrifice to God. Now it is impossible for that man to yield to these claims who governs his conduct by a worldly policy.

The earth, with all the fulness thereof, belongs to God. Hence it becomes those who are professedly the children of God, to use the earthly substance that God has lent them, so as to advance his cause. It is not the province of the christian to add farm to farm, unless he does it that he may the more effectually advance the truth. If after giving into the Lord's treasury the tithe that belongs to him he finds a surplus on hand, let him remember, that he is not to riot in this, but as a faithful steward he is to account for it to God.

After our readers have settled this truth in their minds, that God requires the exercise of all their energies, and a tithe of their substance in his service, let them look at the field that is white and ready for the harvest. See now how souls perish for want of some to teach them the way of life. See how professing christians have turned from the command of God to follow the innovations of the "man of sin." These are all to be converted by the use of those means God has placed in our hands, or perish in their way. Men must be taught to observe the Sabbath of the Bible. The Jews are to be brought under the influence of the gospel. The isles of the sea and all that grope in the darkness of heathenism, are to be converted to God. Alas, how few the laborers in these vast fields. Let Christians take heed lest the ruin of souls should be occasioned by their neglect.

All of our benevolent institutions are languishing for the lack of that aid that we might bring. If that system of giving into the Treasury of the Lord that the Jews had is adopted, these would at once be freed from embarrassment, and become potent in advancing the truths of the gospel. Every year and day would tell of the onward march of truth and the triumph of the Redeemer's kingdom. We wish men to provide for their households, but we would suggest that "there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty," while "there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

"Love your Enemies."

A man's character is determined by his actions and principles. "By their fruits ye shall know them." A profession is sometimes a true index of a man's principles; sometimes it is a hypocritical pretension. In no class is the distinction more clearly seen than with those who profess the christian name. The great law which Christ has instituted to regulate the conduct of his disciples, is love. It would be natural for christians to love each other. All classes love their like. The robber loves his fellow. The drunkard and the libertine act upon the same principle. But the Gospel requires more than this; Christ says, "love your enemies." Short of this, men fail of proving their discipleship and likeness to Christ. "If a man say he love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar." How surely, then, must he be "a liar" who professes love to God and hateth both his friends and enemies. A man, in the exercise of Christian feelings, will exercise no other feeling to all men than the purest love. He will love his friends and enemies and seek to do them good. In this language of Jesus Christ we have the test of discipleship, and whoever fails of standing this test, must renounce his claims.—He who hates his enemies exhibits the characteristics of the unregenerate.

If a man love his enemies he will be patient under persecution, and never seek revenge; for he remembers it is written, "vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord." He will never take from the hands of God the power of revenging. How beautifully is this christian characteristic exhibited in the conduct of primitive christians who "took the spoiling of their goods patiently." How sublime the example of Christ, who, "when reviled, reviled not again," who meekly bowed his head to his enemies and drank the bitter cup of the wrath of God that they might live.

If a man love his enemy he will seek to do him good, and win his friendship by acts of kindness. He will not be overcome of evil but overcome evil with good. For cursing, he will return blessing. For stripes, he will return kindness. For railings and slanders, he will return the purest acts of friendship. Revenge will never win an enemy's heart. There is no way so easy to reclaim an enemy as to love him. The hardest heart can not long remain unmoved under such an influence.—And if Christ died for us while we were enemies to him, how can we claim union with him when we exercise feelings entirely the reverse of those he exercised. Love can accomplish what strife, and hatred, and contention never can. By contention we may subdue an enemy, and gain a signal advantage over him, but can never win his heart and gain his friendship.

Christian, if you would have all men love you, you may secure this by adopting the rule the Lord Jesus Christ has given, viz: "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to those that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." This course of conduct, while it will secure the good will of men, is the best evidence of discipleship and union with Christ.

A correspondent suggests that the Register might be made to accomplish some good ends by discussing the affairs of General Conference and Missionary Society. We are quite willing that our correspondent should occupy our columns for this purpose. All that we claim, is the privilege of withholding anything that we think too personal. We would be grateful for whatever help we may receive from those able to impart information that will be profitable.

Thanksgiving.—Gov. Seward, by proclamation, has recommended Thursday, the 9th of December, to be observed throughout the state as a day of Thanksgiving.

Errata.—In the second line of the article, "Post Offices," in our last, erase the word "which." It occurred in the MS., and was not detected in "Proof-Reading."

Also, a few copies of this week's paper were worked off under date of "December" instead of November.

The Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute will meet at their room in the Institute, on Thursday, the 11th inst., at 1 o'clock P. M., per adjournment.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR:

(Designed for OCTOBER, 1841.)

NO. X.—BLESSINGS ON THE BLIND.

Matt. xi. 5.—The blind receive their sight.

John in prison; the errand on which he sent two of his disciples; the reply which they received: the text is one important item of that reply. Your attention will be directed to three propositions, and to a few concluding reflections.

Propositions.

I. This was a miracle.

Jesus did not confer sight on the blind by the efficacious influence of medicine; nor by the aid of any natural cause whatever; but the work was accomplished solely by the exercise of miraculous power.

II. It was a prominent and noted manifestation of miraculous power.

The instances of his giving sight to the blind, which are on record, we suppose to be mere specimens of numerous instances. In whatever instance this miracle was performed, it would excite great attention. It would be the all-absorbing theme of conversation among all who had known the blind man: every body would talk about the wonderful cure.

III. It was a miracle of most benevolent character.

Of inestimable benefit to the individual himself—to all his relatives—to society in general.

Concluding Reflections.

1. We have before us conclusive evidence of the Divine origin of the Christian Religion.

2. It was fit that such as received their sight should be grateful for the blessing.

3. Then we should be grateful who have always enjoyed our sight.

We should be astonished beyond measure at the stupidity and wickedness of that man to whom sight was miraculously given, after he had been blind forty years—if he manifested no gratitude for what had been done for him. But we have always been blessed with sight, and yet how ungrateful! Do we not forget to thank God for the use of our eyes? We must repent of this sin. In this matter,

> "Let past ingratitude > Provoke our weeping eyes."

and while God grants us our sight, for this rich mercy,

> "Let hourly thanks arise."

4. Our subject suggests that we should cherish much sympathy for the blind.

5. Also, that we should praise God for what is now done for the blind.

Sight is not now granted them by the interposition of miraculous power, but next to that is done for them, by improvements in optical science, and by the means which are devised for imparting instructions to the incurably blind. The blind are taught to read. All this is of God.

6. We infer—our obligation to use our sight in the service of God.

Let us not use our eyes for Satan, but for God. I entreat those youth not to abuse the eyes which God has given them, by reading pernicious books. The full strength of your eyes is needed for the study of God's open Book of Nature, and that other "Book Divine!" his written word, in companionship with those human compositions which do homage to God's supreme authority.

—

A Village Pastor having, of late, been severely afflicted with inflammation of the eyes, is the reason why the October No. of his sermon has been delayed; and his eyes being now but partially relieved, must be his apology for giving the mere plan of a sermon.

De Ruyter, Nov. 1st, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New York Evangelist.

LATE AND IMPORTANT NEWS FROM CHINA.

The ship Narragansett arrived at this port on Saturday last, by which we have news from China up to the 19th of June.

It will be recollected that our previous news was up to the 20th of May, at which time the Chinese were making extensive preparations for hostilities. On the 21st, Capt. Elliott issued a circular recommending the British and all other foreigners remaining in the factories, to retire from Canton before sunset.

In pursuance of this notice, all the foreigners left before six o'clock of the same day, except two Americans, Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Morse, who escaped subsequently with some difficulty. Four Americans from the ship Morrison, were fired upon in a boat and captured by the Chinese; but were afterwards set at liberty on the demand of the American Vice Consul. One of them, Mr. Miller, was so severely wounded that his life is despaired of.

Soon after six, H. M. S. Modeste and Algerine moved from their anchorage in the Macao passage, and anchored as close to the town as the water would permit, nor did this seem for the time to attract much attention. At a little past 10, however, a blaze of light in the direction of Fatee was observed, and was soon found to proceed from several fire rafts, or junks, floating down fast with the tide upon the cutter and schooner which were in considerable danger, the tide still ebbing, and weighing anchor would have them nearer to the range of the guns from the Company's garden and others, which had by this time opened upon them, and kept up a smart fire, by which the cutter was hit twice, and the schooner once.

The two small vessels were therefore obliged to remain at anchor, exposed to the fire from the battery at Shaming, the cutter returning the fire gallantly, and forcing by her fire six large cargo boats, that bore down on her in the wake of the fire ships, and probably filled with soldiers to board her, to sheer off, when the steamer Nemesis came down upon the fire ships and towed them out of danger, opening at the same time a tremendous fire from her two thirty-two pounders. H. M. S. Modeste, Algerine and Pylades, had meanwhile also opened their fire, and a brisk cannonade ensued, maintained chiefly against the new fort at Shaming. The fire was kept up during part of the night, and the cutter and schooner were at last, by the tide turning, enabled to move out of range of the shot, into the Macao-passage.

In the morning early of the 22d, the work of destruction at Shaming was recommended by H. M. S. Modeste, Pylades and Algerine, and steamer Nemesis; the fort was, after a heavy cannonade, silenced and destroyed, and eight very fine new brass guns found in it. Meanwhile a number of war junks were seen issuing from a creek opposite Fatee, and the steamer Nemesis went to meet them: but they retreated again to the creek, and the steamer again gave her assistance at Shaming; which no sooner was perceived by the junks, than they came out a second time.

This time, however, the steamer was not content with merely driving them back, but followed them into the creek; what passed there was, from their position, hid from view, but loud reports and immense volumes of white and black smoke rising into the air at short intervals, too plainly told that the work of destruction was actively going on there. In less than three hours upwards of forty war junks were set fire to and blown up. The loss of life in this exploit is said not to have been great, the Chinese having had ample time to save themselves by flight before the vessels blew up.

From this, the time was occupied by the English, in concentrating their forces near the city, until the 24th, at 4 P. M. The Hyacinth 18, Modeste 18, Pylades 18, Nimrod 18, Columbus 16, Cruizer 16, and Algerine 10, having taken their position in front of the city and suburbs, opened their fire upon every offensive point of the Chinese, who returned it with considerable spirit at first, but was soon compelled to desert their guns. At 5 P. M., a body of soldiers, about 400, were landed at the foreign factories, in the vicinity of which they found the Americans, who had been taken prisoners two days before, examined by the authorities and released.

The firing was continued until about 9 P. M., when the suburbs were on fire in several places, and nearly all the batteries on shore in possession of, or destroyed by the English.

While this was going on in front of Canton, Gen. Gough was landing his troops, 1800 men, at the foot of the heights, in the rear of the city, and on the morning of the 25th, he commenced operations. Four batteries were taken from the Chinese, and great numbers of their officers and soldiers killed, the heights commanding the city taken, and the British forces entrenched upon them.

The loss of the Chinese on this occasion is variously estimated at 3 to 5,000, and even as high as 10,000 men.

On the 26th, the vessels of war were engaged in quieting and destroying the few remains of opposition, and in the evening Mandarins called on Capt. Elliott with flags of truce to negociate for the preservation of the city, which was effected by the following arrangements, made between H. M. Plenipotentiary, and the three Imperial Commissioners:

1st. That all troops, except those of the province, quit the city within 6 days, and proceed 60 miles.

2nd. $6,000,000 to be paid as a ransom for the city within one week, commencing the 26th of May. $1,000,000 to be paid before sunset of that day. If the whole sum is not paid within 7 days, to be increased to $8,000,000; if not paid within 20 days, to be increased to $9,000,000.

When the whole sum is paid, then the British forces are to proceed outside the Bogue, and all the fortified places on the river to be restored, but not to be re-armed until all the affairs between the two countries are settled.

Losses occasioned by the destruction of the Spanish brig Bilbaino and the factories to be paid.

The Quong-chow-foo shall produce full powers to conclude these arrangements on the part of the three Commissioners.

The troops had returned to their ships previous to the 14th inst., after having suffered a great deal from exposure in the marshy grounds back of the city. When the troops were being drawn off, one company was found to be missing, but after a short search were descried up to their knees in a marsh, defending themselves against superior numbers at the point of the bayonet, not being able to discharge their muskets on account of the rain which was then falling. They were rescued from their perilous situation by a detachment sent to their assistance with percussion locks.

Sir Le Fleming Senhouse, who commanded the naval forces in the absence of Sir Gordon Bremer, died at Hong Kong on the 14th of June, and was buried at Macao, at his own request, in preference to the former place. It is supposed that his death was occasioned by heat and over-fatigue attending upon the attack of Canton. Great sickness also prevailed among the troops and seamen at Hong Kong. Capt Elliott had been sick a week. Messrs. Morrison and Fearon, interpreters, had also been very ill.

$6,000,000 had been paid—five in silver, and one in securities.

The forces had left the river, except the Calliope and Herald, at Whampoa. The Nimrod had sailed with despatches for Bengal. Capt. Bulow was to proceed from there to England with despatches for the Admiralty.

Persons who have suffered losses by the destruction of the factories, were requested to hand in an inventory of the same to H. M. Plenipotentiary.

Her Majesty's ships are warned that it is unsafe to proceed to Canton, or send ships to Whampoa; and recommended to go to Hong Kong, and assured that any attempt on the part of the Chinese, to interrupt freedom of trade and intercourse with Hong Kong, would be answered with a strict blockade of Canton.

Although our dates from China are up to the 19th of June, we have no indication of hostilities on the part of the Chinese later than the 13th, at which time they were again preparing great quantities of fire rafts; and large supplies of men, straw, and money, had been sent to Canton from the different provinces.

It was said that the sickness was so great at Hong Kong, that it had carried off five principal officers in one day.

Further intelligence from China will be looked for with considerable interest.

News of the Day.

Laws of Alabama.—The following is a synopsis of the criminal code of Alabama, which takes effect on the first day of October, 1841.

Treason against the State, penitentiary for life.

Murder in the first degree, death, or penitentiary for life.

Aiding slaves in insurrection, penitentiary for life.

Killing a slave by cruel or inhuman treatment is murder in the first degree, and punished with penitentiary for life. If any owner or manager of slaves, cause the death of one by [illegible] intention to kill, he goes to the penitentiary for ten years.

Great Britain.—The Theological students of Aberdeen University, and St. Andrew's University, in Scotland, and twenty-two Theological colleges and schools in different parts of Great Britain, have published a solemn [illegible] remonstrance against American slavery, addressed to those who are preparing for the ministry in this country. A copy has been sent to every University and College in the United States.

Population of the British Empire in all parts of the world, compiled from the most authentic documents:

Great Britain, Ireland, and the neighboring islands,	[illegible]
Colonies in Europe, such as the Ionian Isles, Malta, Gibraltar, &c.	[illegible]
North America,	[illegible]
South America,	[illegible]
West Indies,	[illegible]
Africa,	[illegible]
Australasia, (N. Holland, &c)	[illegible]
New Zealand,	25,000
Asia, East India Company's dominion,	135,000,000
Affghanistan and Cabul,	14,000,000
	179,535,000

The whole of the above territories cover about 1,800,000 square miles.

The word dun first came into use during the reign of Henry VII. It owes its birth to an English bailiff, by the name of Joe Dunn, who was so indefatigable and skilful at his business of collecting debts, that it became a proverb when a person did not pay his debts, "Why don't you Dun him?" that is, "Why don't you send Dunn after him?" Hence originated the word which has so long been in universal use.

Western Virginia.—A writer in the Lutheran Observer, (Baltimore,) makes out a strong case against Western Virginia. He says, that according to the late census, there are, within this district, 799 distilleries, 28,724 white persons above 21 years of age, who can neither read nor write, and that there are nine distilleries within a small church of 20 or 25 members.

Yeast.—Boil one pound of good flour, a quarter of a pound of brown sugar, and a little salt, in two gallons of water for an hour; let it afterwards stand till it becomes milk warm, bottle it and cork it close. One pint of this will make eighteen pounds of bread.

The Englishman, Fitzsimmon, sentenced to five years at Sing Sing, for executing his trade of picking pockets in this free country, walked boldly out of prison, by his keepers, and escaped last week.

It is calculated that ten millions of bushels less of grain have been converted into malt for distillation, &c, this year, than there was last year, owing to the Temperance reform in the United States. So much gained for domestic happiness.—Zion's Watchman.

Col. Worth has gathered 350 Indians, ready for embarkation. The news from Florida continues to be flattering, and the termination of the war is now reasonably expected. Col. Worth is worth more to the country, than all who have gone before him in this Florida business.

Shocking Accident.—The Hinsdale, (Cattaraugus,) Gazette of the 11th inst. says:—"On Sunday last an Irishman engaged on the Railroad, at Great Valley, in this county, commenced cutting down a large oak tree, standing about one rod from his shantee, and directly opposite; he chopped it about one quarter off on the side from the shantee, and then commenced cutting on the opposite side; the tree leaned heavily from the building, and no danger was apprehended. He had chopped upon it a short time, when the tree split up about 50 feet, the top lodging in the top of a tree standing near it; it there balanced for a few moments, when the but gave way and shot back over the shantee and fell across it, literally smashing the same to atoms, and instantly killing his wife, and dangerously wounding one of his children.

Strange Proceedings of a Jury.—On Saturday last a jury was empannelled in the City Court, now in session, and given charge of a case of the State vs. Sophia Wilson, colored girl, indictment for felony. The jury, after having remained in retirement until after one o'clock on Sunday morning, and not able to agree, sealed a paper, handed it to the bailiff and dispersed. This paper, upon being opened this morning in court, conveyed the intelligence that the jury had agreed to disagree! and asked to be discharged from a further consideration of the case. The court was bound to grant their request, and the jury was accordingly discharged—not being competent, according to law, after such a decision, to hold any further deliberation upon the specific case with which it had been intrusted.—Balt. American.

Nine States a Day.—Some gentlemen on board the steamer [illegible] the other day, were conversing about the wonderful powers of steam, the great facilities it had given for traveling, &c. One gentleman remarked that a man might leave New York in the morning, and arrive the same night at Baltimore, thus being in five states in one day.

"Only five, it is ye say?" said an Irishman present, "and its meeself who was in nine states on Monday last."

The company were incredulous, and called on Paddy to explain how such a thing could be possible, which he did as follows:

"Well, ye see, gintlemen, I was married in New York last Monday at six o'clock, and went with my dear Bridget to Baltimore the same day, and sure before I got there, I was [illegible] as drunk as a baste, so ye perceive I was in the state of New York, the state of Sobriety, the state of Single Blessedness, the state of New Jersey, the state of Connubial Felicity, [illegible] the state of Pennsylvania, the state of Delaware, the state of Maryland and the state of Intoxication, all in one day, and the whole of which was owing to the powers of the same."

Indiana Marble.—The Indianapolis Journal says, we have the agreeable task of recording the fact of the existence of a quarry of fine marble in Fayette county, near the White Water Canal. We have examined and compared a sample [illegible] Mr. Dunn with a piece of Potomac marble, and we give it as our humble judgment that it is superior in many points. That it is more solid and compact than the Potomac article, is a fact discernable by the slightest comparison. Its colors are not so bright, but are decidedly more beautiful, and would be more admired and approved in situations of use or ornament by nine-tenths of casual observers. In admitting of a high state of polish, the White Water marble is superior to the Potomac.

From the Cour. and Enquirer.

A Broken Promise.—There was a very touching case of "breach of promise" tried in Indiana a short time since. One Doctor Fate—very sad fate, poor fellow—brought his action at law against the widow Lavally, house-keeper of the deceased Indian Chief Richardville, for refusing to marry him, the said Dr. Fate, as per agreement between the parties. The broken hearted plaintiff estimated the damages done to the sensibilities of his heart at the sum of two thousand dollars federal money. The jury however, after looking into the account current between them, liquidated matters a little lower. Taking every thing into consideration, his twelve peers were of opinion that $150 would repair all the rents in his affection and be about enough for the widow Lavally to lay out in reshingling the shattered roof of his upper story, and mending all the broken gallypots of his reputation. We think the pecuniary compensation was ample enough, and more than we would have awarded to so poor a creature; but the jury ought to have recommended the defendant to mercy, and a commutation of the fine. She ought to have been allowed to pay each dollar by a pound a piece with his own pestle upon the head of the plaintiff. This business of sueing a woman for refusing to marry a man, would never be resorted to by any one having soul enough to keep his body together by laboring at journey work for a knitter of cotton garters.

The Oxford (N.C.) Mercury of the 14th inst., adds another to the list of foul tragedies which have recently disturbed the quiet of our land.

On Tuesday night last as Richard Bullock, Esq., was standing near a piano on which his daughter was playing, he was shot through the window and in a few seconds expired. It is supposed that the mouth of the gun could not be more than two or three feet from him, as all the shot entered his body within a small space of each other. A Coroner's inquest was held over the body the next day, and a verdict "murdered by an unknown hand" returned.—Suspicion as yet rests on no one.

The Old Fly, now Fulton Market.—Many years before the revolution, the piece of land at the lower end of the present Maiden Lane, was a swamp called the Fly.—The burgomaster who owned it at that time offered to sell it to old Mr. Van Tassel, formerly of Maiden Lane, for a horse, and after some delay the offer was accepted.—Between the offer and the acceptance, however, the horse had been "shod all around." Mr. Van Tassel insisted that the burgomaster should pay for the shoes—he refused, and the contract was broken off.—Many years after the city bought the swamp for a market. The plot of land is now worth half a million of dollars.—Evening Star.

Disastrous Fire.—A dreadful fire occurred at Georgetown, S. C., on the 16th inst. The fire commenced near Mr. Benjamin King's wharf. All the buildings from the market to J. G. Hennings & Co.'s wharf, are destroyed on the water side of the street. The principal sufferers are E. W. Chapman, B. Cing, R. Frisbrie, J. C. Porter, John Ralston, S. Kirton, Colwell & Lathers, G. C. & W. J. Munro, Jacob Wayne, J. Farrow & Son, C. A. Magill, B. J. Cuttino, — McKenzie. The loss is estimated at about Three Hundred Thousand Dollars.

Hon. Daniel Webster.—This gentleman is not likely soon to leave the Cabinet, if we can believe the following from a New York paper, professing to be in the Cabinet-secrets.

In regard to Mr. Webster there is a general conformity of views between him and the President on all subjects of importance, except the currency, and upon this the difference is not believed to be cardinal or irreconcilable. Their personal as well as official relations are equally friendly and confidential. The story that the Secretary of State is about to resign, has its foundation in the hopes of certain individuals, who desire for purposes of their own, to see a separation between him and the President.

The Indianapolis Journal states that Jno. B Richardville, the principal chief of the Miami nation, died on the 13th inst., at his residence on the St. Mary's river, near Fort Wayne, in that State. He was about 80 years of age. He left about $200,000 in specie, besides immense quantities of very valuable real estate. By will, he left his vast fortune equally divided among his relations.

The Little Rock (Ark.,) Gazette of the 29th ult., contains the following paragraph, which it says is founded on information derived from a letter written by Mr. R. A. Calloway, the sub-agent of the Osage Indians:—"The Camanche Indians, it is believed, are contemplating an attack on the frontiers of Texas so soon as the leaves fall from the trees. They have made propositions to the Osages to join them with four hundred warriors, which the Osages have refused. They have also sent the pipe to all of the neighboring tribes."

We learn from the N. Y. Herald, that a man named James Dawson, residing on a farm near Nashville, Illinois, has been arrested on suspicion of being connected with the stupendous forgeries on the Western banks, and on Little & Co. of New York, last spring. He has been held to bail on $35,000.

The funeral of Hon. John Forsyth, which took place in Washington on Saturday last, was attended by all the Representatives of Foreign Governments now in Washington, by the Heads of our Executive Departments, the General-in-Chief of the Army, and many other officers of the Government, civil and military, as well as many private citizens. The religious services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Hawley, and the Rev. Mr. Butler, of the Episcopal Church.

One hundred and ninety-two Vessels are reported as injured by the late disastrous storm. Many more will probably never be heard from, every vestige thereof being "in the deep bosom of the ocean buried."

Temperance Procession!—A more gratifying sight was never exhibited in our city, than the array of Temperance men, in the procession on Wednesday, with bands of music, flags, banners, and cars. It was about a mile in length, and nineteen twentieths were Americans, though the Popish journals here, say that the Irish papists take the lead and form the largest number in the temperance cause! C. Delavan, Esq., marshalled the forces, and well was it done.—Zion's (N. Y.) Watchman.

Escape.—Young Semmes, indicted for the murder of one of the Professors of the University of Virginia, is, it appears, to escape trial. He had been liberated on his giving bail in the sum of 25,000 dollars, and failing to appear, in discharge of his recognizance, at the present term of the Superior Court of Albemarle, now in session, his default was entered on record, and a rule entered against him, and the securities returnable at the next term to show cause why the recognizance of bail should not be prosecuted to a judgment. He never should have been admitted to bail.

It is said that there are now nearly one hundred attornies in St. Louis, and one hundred and thirty M. D's. Pretty well for a city of 30,000 inhabitants.

A plague exists in the interior of France, and all business is stopped in consequence.

Mormonism.—The Cheltenham (English) Chronicle states that its editor had just seen the wife of a small farmer who sailed with her husband and six children last February from Liverpool. That she, and about one hundred others, landed at New Orleans, went several hundred miles up the country, passed St. Louis, and arrived safe at the "promised land,"—the New Jerusalem—on the 1st of May last; a three weeks' residence was sufficient to let them into the secret, and they arrived safe back in the old country about a fortnight ago.

They had frequent communications while on the banks of the Mississippi with the renowned prophet Joe Smith, and his brother imposters, who took every means in their power to get hold of our informant's money, by offering to sell large plots of land, take them into partnership, &c. &c., but the Gloucester yeoman was proof against their wiles, and used his little capital in bringing his family back again.—What most staggered the faith of the party was, that this great prophet, Mr. Joseph Smith, could not show them the "plates of gold" on which it was pretended the book of Mormon was written. Joe evaded the question by saying the angel merely showed them to him, and after he had taken a fair copy, took them back again.—Troy Daily Mail.

Mrs. Jarvis, the wife of Rev. Dr. Jarvis, and daughter, it is said, have joined the Roman Catholic church at Brooklyn.

General Winfield Scott was nominated for President by a public meeting at Lancaster, Pa., on the 12th.

The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye states, that a treaty would be held with the Sac and Fox Indians, by Gov. Doty of Wiskonsan, Gov. Chambers of Iowa, and T. H. Crawford, Indian Commissioner. The object is to purchase all their lands in Wiskonsan and Iowa.

The Mayor of Brooklyn has issued a Proclamation, forbidding the crying of newspapers on the Sabbath.

The Indians and negroes reported that Sam Jones, the great Seminole, has two thousand men women and children, with him in the swamp, including two hundred and fifty-warriors.

Marcus T. C. Gould will speedily publish the trial of McLeod, in a volume of 400 pages.

An elegant marble sarcophagus, prepared by direction of citizens of Washington, was received in Baltimore a few days ago, and forwarded to Pittsburg. Its destination is North Bend, where it will constitute the depository of the remains of the lamented Wm. Henry Harrison.

The Grand Jury of Essex co., N. J., have promptly responded to so much of the charge of Chief Justice Hornblower as related to the lottery business in that State, by presenting the same as a nuisance, and calling upon the magistracy and the people "to aid in prosecuting those who are engaged in committing the offences alluded to, and endeavor in all suitable ways to stop such unlawful practices."

Gen. Henry Dodge is the new delegate to Congress from Wiskonsan Territory, and his son, Augustus C. Dodge, the delegate from Iowa.

The funeral of the Hon. John Forsyth took place at Washington on Saturday, and was attended by all the Foreign Ministers. Heads of Departments, &c., in Washington.

Samuel Houston is elected President of the Republic of Texas, by a majority exceeding 5000. Burleson as Vice-President, is elected by a majority of over 2000.

The Erie railroad is doing a much better business than was anticipated. The cost of running to Goshen is $175 per day, while its receipts have been $500 in a day.

Alexander McLeod was entertained at a private dinner party in Montreal on Thursday of last week. He made a speech full of venom against the Yankees, in which our Lynch-law propensity was handled as it deserved.

A rumor reached Baltimore on Sunday evening, that an attempt had been made in Petersburg, Va. to assassinate President Tyler.

The Quincy, (Ill.) Herald says that a drove of young buffaloes, thirty-three in number, recently passed through that city on their way to New-York.

About ten o'clock on Monday night, a man who was employed to carry away oyster shells from an oyster cellar in Ann street, filled his basket with oysters instead of the shells, and proceeded to the foot of a stairs leading to the first floor, close to which was a flight of stairs leading to the basement and falling down the latter he dislocated his neck, and died almost immediately.

The Albany daily Advertiser says, "It will devolve upon the Legislature to be chosen next month, to arrange the Congressional Districts in this State according to the new census."

A daily line of packet boats is now established between Syracuse and Utica. Fare $1.

Thanksgiving takes place in five of the New-England States (Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and New-Hampshire,) on the same day, the 25th of Nov.

A young friend of ours, observes the Salem Gazette, who is master of more leisure than we can find, has examined the shipping lists, since the late storm, and he finds one hundred and ninety two vessels reported as injured by that disastrous storm.

Locke the teacher of the Boston Farm School, who was lately prosecuted for inhuman treatment of his boys, has been sentenced to four months imprisonment and costs of trial. He is now under civil prosecution for damages, by the boys whom he punished.

Conviction for murder.—Cornelius U. Hardenburgh, indicted for the murder of Anthony Hasbrouck, in Sullivan co. last fall, was tried last week at Monticello. Judge Ruggles presiding. The case was submitted to the jury, and they in twenty minutes returned a verdict of guilty. The killing was admitted; the plea for the prisoner was insanity.

Sentence is suspended until next term, to give time for a bill of exceptions, on the ground that certain evidence of hereditary insanity was improperly excluded.

Unparalleled Dispatch.—The brig Lycoming, Capt. Perez Judkins, jr., arrived at Boston on Thursday morning from Constradt, having been absent (counting hours,) less than ninety-five days. The brig was detained four days at Cowes, England, on her outward passage, and was fourteen days from the Grand Bank, when homeward bound. This is said to be, by nine days, the shortest voyage ever made from Boston to Russia and back. Capt. J. has thus performed a voyage from Porto Rico to Boston, thence to Russia and back, landing and receiving full cargoes, in one hundred and twelve consecutive days.—N. Y. Sun.

War Steamers.—Instructions have been issued for building at our Navy Yards the following steam vessels:

At Norfolk, one medium size, say between six hundred and seven hundred tons; and one of three hundred tons, to be propelled by Lieutenant HUNTER's paddle wheels. The engine of the latter is to be made at the Washington Navy Yard, where it is understood work equal to any in the country has been turned out.

At Philadelphia one of six hundred tons, to be propelled on STOCKTON's plan; and one of medium size.

At New York, one of medium size, six hundred to seven hundred tons.

The description of engines for the medium steamers has not yet been determined upon. The Commissioners of the Navy have opened a correspondence with the most experienced and scientific gentlemen in the country, as to the best models, and have collected a large amount of information upon the subject, which will be increased by further communications before the time arrives for making a decision. They will by these means have the aid of the best experience the country can afford

Capt. STOCKTON and Lieutenant HUNTER will each have, as a matter of course, a general superintendance of the building of the vesels on their respective plans.—Army and Navy Chron.

Cincinnatti.—In 1800, its inhabitants were 720; in 1820, 9,602; in 1830, 24,821, and now, 50,000! There are 1135 miles of canals, railroad, &c., concentrating in the city. Thirty-three steamboats were built there last year, with 5361 tonnage, and cost $592,500.

All ready.—Our Chinese squadron heard that war was declared between the United States and Great Britain, and immediately got "ready for action." Such was the expedition and readiness, that in three hours the Constitution sailed to give battle to an English 74 off the harbor, by which however, the rumor was contradicted.

The whole number of slaves in the United States, according to the last census, is 2,487,213—males 1,186,467; females, 1,199,778. Free colored persons in the U. S., 386,285—males, 186,467; females, 199,773.

A Yankee was convicted and fined £10 last week in U. C., for enticing away British soldiers. Either they were not very patriotic, or the captain was not.

Three boys were sentenced by Mr. Justice Cross, of Amesbury, Mass., on Monday last, to fourteen days imprisonment, for stealing grapes from a garden. They will probably conclude the grapes were very sour before they get out of prison.

A farmer in the vicinity of Michigan City, raised 20,000 bushels of wheat this year! ins't that profitable buisness?

A revolutionary soldier, 90 years of age, died on the 2nd inst., in Greenwich, Conn. The continental guard was quartered at his house five years. Thus one after another drop off of the heroes who connect us with times that tried men's souls.

The bank of Louisiana has lost more than $174,000 by absconding clerks.

The yellow fever prevails at Vicksburg, and other places on the Mississippi.

A portion of the U. S. army has been ordered by General Scott, to occupy posts on the New York and Michigan frontiers.

Capt. Jones has been appointed to the command of the U. S. Pacific squadron.

The yellow fever in New Orleans is abating. There were 30 cases on the 1st, and on the 2d only 8.

The frigate Belle Poule, now in our harbor, was the first of the French vessels to fire a gun in behalf of the Americans in the revolutionary war.

Protestant Hall in Dublin.—Steps are in progress for erecting in Dublin a Protestant Hall, to serve the protestants of Ireland as "a metropolitan platform; a hall in which they may constantly meet in large numbers, to bring before the authorities and the public, their wants, their grievances, their principles." The building is intended to contain four thousand people, and will be immediately commenced, the ground for it having been taken.

The Savannah Republican of the 9th states, that a slave plot for insurrection was discovered near Purysburgh, S. C., a few days since.

MARRIED,

In Lebanon, on the 25th ult., by Rev. Henry B. Kenyon, Mr. LUKE G. MAXSON, Principal of the Coudersport Academy, Pa., and Miss CORDELIA ANN, youngest daughter of Jacob Hartshorn, Esq., of the former place.

In Castile, on the 3d inst., by the Rev. M. Norton, J. L. BARLOW Esq., Editor of the Western New Yorker, and Miss ROZINA HULBARD, of the former place.

In Brookfield on the 23d Sept. by Rev. S. B. Crandall Mr. SAM'L H. C. MAXSON, and Miss CORNELIA, daughter of Stanton Burdick, all of Brookfield.

In Unadilla Forks, on the 20th ult., by S. B. Crandall, Mr AMBROSE C. SPENCER, of Sangerfield, and Miss HENRIETTA, daughter of Mr John B. Stillman.

DIED,

In Providence, R.I., Oct. 6th, of dysentery, MARTHA, infant daughter, and only child of Charles and Martha Saunders, aged 13 months and 12 days.

"How calm are thy slumbers, my sweet little daughter,
Unmindful of sorrow—regardless of danger!
Thy mild spirit left thee as pure as it found thee,
Ere the cold cares of life spread their darkness around thee!

Thy spirit own'd not this world of confusion
It's joys deign'd no relish for "fancy's illusion"
Thine eye clos'd upon them, thy pilgrimage ended,
Thy soul mounted upward, by angels attended.

Sleep on lovely cherub! No more shalt thou waken,
Thy body lies tenantless, cold and forsaken.
No more shall the arms of thy mother enfold thee.
No more shall the eye of affection behold thee.

Though now the frail body in death is reclining,
Thy bright, spotless spirit with angels is shining
For our Savior, to us, an assurance has given,
That "of such" as thou art, "is the kingdom of heaven."

LIST OF LETTERS.

Charles Saunders, Alexander Campbell, (we will attend to it immediately,) E. Stillson, "J. W." (We cannot publish, 1st, because we know not the author, 2d, private character should be held sacred.) H. B. Kenyon, "H." (it shall appear soon.) J. B. Wells (we will do what we can in the matter.) M. Willard, P. M., Lucius Crandall, (alteration is made.) B. B. Stillman (too late.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Abner Warner, $2, cr. Samuel Fifield, vol. 2, rec'd some time since.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS taken a shop in the basement of the three story building, one door north of Sutton & Quimby's Store, where he will manufacture to order Boots and Shoes of any kind or style to suit his customers.

Ladies Kid or Morocco Slips and Shoes, Prunello and Gaiter boots, of the first quality and style, very cheap.

N. B. Customer's leather manufactured on short notice, cheap for good pay. Please call and enquire the prices and satisfy yourselves.

De Ruyter, Oct 23, 1841. 35tf

THIS SIDE UP.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ABIJAH N. ANNAS,

LATE of the firm of "Elmore Annas & Ayer," has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore (La Fayette Block,) where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in his line of business.

The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper,

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. Also,

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Climax Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK

☞Done well, on short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block No 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.

34tf S. G. WALKER.

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

BOOTS & SHOES.

[illegible] CHEAPER [illegible] this town [illegible] "Peculiar advantages in purchasing" that is to say I paid CASH [illegible] advantage enough

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34tf

MADISON COM. PLEAS.

[illegible]

Mary L. G[illegible] IN PARTITION

[illegible]

[illegible] BENJAMIN ENOS, [illegible] EPHRAIM ARNOLD, [illegible]

Z. T. B[illegible] 34w6

NO MONOPOLY!

THE [illegible] BOOTS & SHOES [illegible] CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" [illegible] establishment in town.

De Ruyter [illegible] 1841.

34tf S. G. WALKER

FOR SALE.

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, [illegible] S. D. Baptist Meeting-house [illegible] front—Apply to [illegible] 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. [illegible], 1841. W. MAXSON.

NO IMPOSITION!

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE [illegible] BOOTS and SHOES [illegible] work, [illegible] MAMMOTH BOOT

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, [illegible] prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE

Oct. 11

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL [illegible] at the NEW YORK CASH STORE

Oct. 11

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected [illegible] He would [illegible] friends to [illegible] for variety, at [illegible] cheapest!

De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the Oct 4th. STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by

J. N. ELMORE.

October 4

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the

October 4th. STONE STORE.

ELECTION NOTICE.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
Secretary's Office, Albany, August 25, 1841.

To the Sheriff of the County of Madison, Sir:

NOTICE is hereby given you, that the term of service of Avery Skinner, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, of this State, will expire on the last day of December next, and that a Senator is to be chosen in that District, to which the county of Madison belongs, at the General Election, to be held on the first, second and third days of November next.

At the same election the following officers are to be chosen, viz: Three Members of Assembly, for the said County, and one Coroner, in the place of Ira Seymour, whose term of office expires on the last day of December next.

JOHN C. SPENCER, Secretary of State.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the notice received by me from the Secretary of State.

ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.

Dated August 28, 1841. 28tde

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.

Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

ATTENTION!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on the accounts of Spencer & Saunders, are requested to call and make immediate settlement by note or otherwise.

N. B. The accounts are divided, and it is my own only that I ask for. Please attend.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30

A. L. SAUNDERS.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUIMBY,

HAVING purchased [illegible] ESTABLISHMENT [illegible] would respectfully [illegible] this village and [illegible] now receiving from New-York [illegible] Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs

Which, together with [illegible] the most extensive [illegible] this village [illegible]

LOW PRICES.

[illegible]

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible]

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE [illegible]

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS Agent [illegible] Medicines:—
Rev. I. Covert's B[illegible]
Moffat's Phoenix B[illegible]
Moffat's Life Pills
Phinney's Pills
Phelps Tomato Pills
[illegible]
Winslow's Balsam of [illegible]
Balm of C[illegible]
Parker's Pulmonary Balm
Cheeseman's [illegible]
Hutchinson's [illegible]
With others [illegible]
Oct. 4.

Swedes, English [illegible] Shoe Iron, [illegible] German, Cast [illegible] Cast Steel, [illegible] very low at [illegible]
October 4

LOVERS OF [illegible]

W[illegible]

MENS [illegible] Ladies and [illegible] and cheaper than [illegible]

October 4

L. [illegible] Boots and [illegible] consisting of Boot [illegible] Cases, at [illegible]
October 4

1 CASE [illegible]

1 CASE Ladies' [illegible]

The splendid SS LAC[illegible]

TO FARMERS AND [illegible]

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber [illegible] Corn [illegible] Bags, [illegible] Bags, Silver and Brass [illegible] Cotton and Worsted [illegible] Yokes, Trace and Halter [illegible] cles that are ever [illegible] Albany or Utica, [illegible] according to quality [illegible]

Wanted in exchange [illegible] cles, Wood, and [illegible] in Notes; also, [illegible] Cheese and every kind [illegible] Pine Lumber, [illegible]

Pine Lumber for sale [illegible] 10,000 feet first rate [illegible] a new Dwelling House [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. [illegible], 1841. 32tf

NOTICE.

THE Co-Partnership [illegible] the firm of WILLIAMS [illegible] day dissolved by [illegible]

All persons indebted [illegible] are requested to [illegible] by note or otherwise.

Oct. 4. [illegible]

32w3 [illegible]

NOTICE.

FOUND, by the subscriber [illegible] about two miles [illegible] OF GRAIN. [illegible] by calling on the subscriber [illegible] of this advertisement, [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 5th, 1841.

32w2 [illegible]

ONE CENT [illegible]

AND NO CHARGES PAID.

RANAWAY from [illegible] Sept. last, [illegible] about 19 years, by the [illegible] ARD STONE. This is [illegible] boring or trusting him on my [illegible] no debts of his contracting after [illegible] ever will return said boy, [illegible] reward.

De Ruyter Sept. 27th, 1841. [illegible]

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making [illegible] of the best quality, [illegible] the most reasonable terms, wholesale or [illegible] He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 20m3

POETRY.

Heaven.

Oh! talk to me of Heaven! I love
To hear about my home above;
For there doth many a loved one dwell
In light and joy ineffable.
Oh! tell me how they shine and sing,
While every harp rings echoing,
And every glad and tearless eye
Beams like the bright sun gloriously,
Tell me of that glorious palm,
Each hand in glory beareth;
Tell me of that celestial calm
Each face in glory weareth.

Oh! happy, happy country where
There entereth not a sin,
And death, who keeps its portals fair,
May never once come in.
No grief can change their day to night;
The darkness of that land is light,
Sorrow and sighing God hath sent Far thence to endless banishment;
And never more may one dark tear
Bedew their burning skies,
For every one they shed while here,
In tearful agonies,
Glitters a bright and dazzling gem
In their immortal diadem,
Oh! lovely, blooming country there
Flourishes all that we deem fair.

And tho' no fields, no forests green,
Nor bowery gardens there are seen,
Nor perfume load the breeze,
Nor hears the ear material sound,
Yet joy's at God's right hand are found.
The archetypes of these,
There is the home, the land of birth,
Of all we highest prize on earth.
The storms that rock this world beneath
Must there forever cease;
The only air the blessed breathe,
Is purity and peace.

Oh! happy, happy land! in thee
Shines the unveil'd Divinity,
Shedding through each adoring breast,
A holy calm, a halcyon rest.
And those blest souls whom death did sever
Have met to mingle joys forever,
Oh! soon may heaven unclose to me;
Oh! may I soon that glory see!
And my faint, weary spirit stand
Within that happy, happy land.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE SHOWER OF FLESH AND BLOOD.

The citizens of Nashville, (Tenn.) were recently much alarmed by the fall of what appeared to be a shower of flesh and blood. An explanation of the phenomenon is afforded in the following communication, addressed to the editors of the National Intelligencer, by the principal of the Alexandria Academy:

Alexandria Boarding School.
9 mo. 2d, 1841.

Friends Gales & Seaton:—I notice in the Intelligencer of to-day, under the head of "Atmospherical Phenomenon," an article from the Nashville Banner, describing what is stated to have been a "shower of flesh and blood" in the vicinity of Lebanon, Tennessee. The same account, or a similar one, has been published in several other papers. There are many other persons of that peculiar temperament that is unfavorably affected by intelligence of so unusual and awful a character; to such it may be a relief to learn that the phenomenon alluded to finds its ready explanation in a well ascertained fact in the economy of insects. In the interesting and instructive work of Kirby & Spence, on the "Natural history of insects," are the following remarks, which explain the whole subject:

"Many species of Lepidoptera (Butterflies) when they emerge from the pupa or chrysalis state, discharge a reddish fluid, which, instances where their numbers have been considerable, has produced the appearance of a shower of blood; and by this natural fact, all those bloody showers, recorded by historians as preternatural, and regarded, where they happened, as fearful prognostics of impending evils, are stripped of their terrors, and reduced to the class of events that happen in the common course of Nature. That insects are the cause of these supposed showers is no recent discovery; for Sleidan relates that, in the year 1553, a vast multitude of butterflies swarmed through a great part of Germany, and sprinkled plants, leaves, buildings, clothes and men, with bloody drops, as if it had rained blood. But the most interesting account of an event of this kind is given by Reaumur, from whom we learn that, early in July, 1608, the suburbs of Aix, and a considerable extent of country round it were covered with what appeared to be a shower of blood.—We may conceive the amazement and stupor of the populace upon such a discovery, the alarm of the citizens, and grave reasonings of the learned. All agreed, however, in attributing the appearance to the power of darkness, and in regarding it as the prognostic and precursor of some direful misfortune about to befall them.

Fear and prejudice would have taken deep root upon this occasion, and might have produced fatal effects upon some weak minds, had not Mr. Peirese, a celebrated philosopher of that place, paid attention to the insects. A chrysalis, which he preserved in his cabinet, let him into the secret of this mysterious shower. Hearing a fluttering, which informed him his insect was arrived at its perfect state, he opened the box in which he kept it; the insect flew out, and left behind it a red spot. He compared this with the spots of the bloody shower, and found they were alike. At the same time observed there was a prodigious quantity of butterflies flying about, and that the drops of the miraculous rain were not to be found upon tiles, but chiefly in cavities and places where rain could not easily come. Thus did this judicious observer dispel the ignorant fears and terror which a natural phenomenon has caused." —Vol. 1, page 35.

Those wishing further information on the subject will find it in Comstock's Physiology, and in No. LXXIV of Harpers' Library.

The instance mentioned in the Nashville account, of flesh appearing with the blood, no doubt was the result of the insect having perished in the process of transformation.

BENJAMIN HALLOWELL.

GUMPTION.—This is a fine old Scotch word, not generally to be found in the dictionaries, though it is worthy of a place in the best. It has a great deal of meaning in it, and often expresses what nothing else can.

When I see a girl reject the addresses of a respectable young man, who owns a good farm, goes to meeting, and pays his debts; for one who wears a dickey, visits the theatre, and spends his money faster than he earns it, I think to myself she has not much gumption.

When I see a young mechanic, who wants a good wife that can make a pudding, and spit a turkey, dangling after a piece of agectation, because she has been to a dancing school and can play on a piano, I guess he has not much gumption.

When I see a farmer paying taxes for twenty acres of land half-fenced and half-tilled, when he might raise more on six acres under cultivation, I conclude he is not overstocked with gumption.

When I see a man who has good business, sufficient to support his family respectably, neglecting his affairs, and running into debt, in order to obtain a political office, I fancy that, whatever may be his talents, he is not burdened with gumption.

When I see a man, call his boys from school, and spending two hours every afternoon for a month, to tar his trees, that the canker-worm may not ascend them, when he might effect a remedy in a single day, by exchanging the earth for three feet around them, I conclude that he has more industry than gumption.

When I see a man purchasing three cords of wood for the winter, when by listing his doors, and mending a broken pane, he might save two of them, I think he has but litle gumption.

When I see a young man, just set up in business, keeping a horse and chaise at an expense of two dollars a day, and failing in six months, when he might walk for nothing, and continue his busines with safety, I conclude that he has not much gumption.

When I see a man atending diligently to his own concerns, sending his children to school, paying his debts, and keeping clear of law suits, quarrels, and politics, I set him down as a man possessing a reasonable share of gumption.

When I see a woman mending her children's, clothes and receiving her husband with affection, I conclude that she has no ordinary share of gumption.

I find, when I see a man who deals justly loves mercy, walks humbly, and pays for his newspaper, I conclude that of all others in this world he possesses the greatest portion of gumption.

From the New Orleans Picayune.

DRAWING A CHALK-LINE; OR, RESERVING THE RIGHT OF PASSAGE.

AN INCIDENT FOUNDED ON FACT

This is a strange world, or, if you please, many strange things occur in this world—either way suits us,—and amongst the strange things which happen in this strange world, some are ludicrous and some are serious, some are one thing, and some another. Many things, too, which take place, are shrouded in the dark pall of mystery, and remain unknown and inexplicable, till some chance of fate or fortune draws aside the veil from our vision, and we behold objects which before we had not thought of. Thus has it been with the present story, which we are about to unfold. Like a sweet flower blushing unseen it has long remained concealed. But chance has given it to us, and we shall now give our readers the story of "Drawing a Chalk-line, or Reserving the Right of Passage."

"Once upon a time," there came to this city a young Kentuckian, for the purpose of learning the science of medicine and surgery. He was tall and athletic, shrewd, apt and intelligent, with a "little sprinkling" of waggishness. He was inducted into the Charity Hospital; a room in the third story given him as a study. On entering into his new quarters, he was introduced to a young French gentleman, occupying the room also as a student. The young Frenchman, it seems, was very frank in his manners—courteous yet cold—and he thus addressed his new companion:

"Sir, I am indeed pleased to see you, and hope that we may prove mutually agreeable; but in order that this may be the case, I will inform you that I have had several former room-mates, with none of whom could I ever agree—we never could pursue our studies together. This room contains two beds; as the oldest occupant I claim the nearest the window."

"Now," says the Frenchman, "I'll draw the 'boundary line' between our territories, and we shall each agree not to encroach upon the other's rights," and taking a piece of chalk from his pocket, he made the mark of division midway from one side of the room to the other. "Sir," he added, "I hope you have no objection to the treaty."

"None in the world, sir," answered the stranger, I am perfectly satisfied with it."—He then sent down for his baggage, and both students sat down with their books.

The Frenchman was soon deeply engaged, while "Old Kentuck" was watching him, and thinking what a singular genius he must be, and how he might "fix" him.

Thus things went on until dinner time came. The bell was rung—the Frenchman hopped up, adjusted his cravat, brushed up his whiskers and mustachoes and essayed to depart.

"Stand sir!" said the stranger, suddenly placing himself with his toe to the mark, directly before the French student, "if you cross that line, by—, you're a dead man!"

The Frenchman stood pale with astonishment. The Kentuckian moved not a muscle of his face. Both remained in silence for some moments, when the Frenchman exclaimed—"Is it possible I did not reserve the right of passage?"

"No sir, Indeed you did not, and you pass this line at your peril."

"But how shall I get out of the room?"

"There is a window, which you reserved to yourself you may use that, but not that, my door, which you generously left me."

The poor Frenchman was fairly caught. He was in a quandary, and made all sorts of explanations and entreaties. The Kentuckian took compassion on him, and thinking that going out of a third story window was not "what it's cracked up to be," said to his new friend—"Sir, in order that we may be mutually agreeable I'll rub out that hateful chalk-line and let you pass."

The Frenchman politely thanked him, and since the settlement of that "boundary question" they have been the very best of friends.

LAODICEA.—There are four cities of the name of Laodicea, two in Asia Minor, and the other two in Syria. The present is one of the [illegible] situated on the confines of Lydia and Phrygia, about forty miles east from Ephesus. It took its name from the wife of its founder, Antiochus, the [illegible] of Stratonice.

It was a long time before it became a place of any note; but it gradually rose to importance toward the commencement of the Christian era, it became the principal town of Phrygia, and even vied in wealth and power with the great maritime cities.— In the end, it partook largely in the common calamities of the country; and it suffered more than any other place from the earthquakes by which the cities of this region were so repeatedly desolated. There is, in fact, not one of the seven churches, the overthrow of which has been so severe, and the desolation of which so entire, as that of Laodicea. It is indeed little other than a heap of ruins; from which, however, ample evidence may be collected of the magnificence for which it was anciently celebrated. These ruins cover three or four small hills, and are of very great extent.— The principal are those of the aqueduct, an amphitheatre, theatre, and other public buildings; besides which the whole surface within the line of the city wall is strewn with fragments and pedestals. In the amphitheatre an inscription has been found, and by comparing the date it gives, we find it must have been in the course of erection when the following message was sent to the church of Laodicea, and that it was not long after finished:

"And unto the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God: I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth: Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my FATHER in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."—Rev. iii. 14—22.

WHISKEY AND THE MONKEY.

At a recent temperance meeting in New York, Mr. Pollard, one of the devoted and efficient apostles of the good work, sent forth by the Washington Temperance Society of Baltimore, related the following anecdote.

Mr. Pollard concluded the meeting. He said he was a kind of old butcher to bring up the rear. So much had been said he scarcely knew what to talk about. But there was one thing he would talk about, and always intended to. For fifteen years he was in the gutter, the watch house, the jail, and if he had justice done him, he had once been in the penitentiary. He had seen as much of the miseries of drunkeness as perhaps any man, and he was now determined, if possible to put down and drive it out of the country. Men boasted that they were not drunkards, but only moderate drinkers. He did once, but he believed that if six glasses made a man a drunkard, he who drank one glass was one sixth of a drunkard. Men would get drunk once or twice and not call themselves drunkards, and then these would get drunk again. They had not the abhorrence of the thing, and they had not the self control of the beast. In his drinking days he was the companion of a man down in Ane Arundel country, who had a monkey which he valued at a thousand dollars. We always took him out in our chestnut parties. He shook all our chestnuts for us, and when he could not shake them off, he would go to the very end of the limb and knock them off with his fist. One day we stopped at a tavern and drank freely. About half a glass of whiskey was left, and Jack took the glass and drank it all up. Soon he was merry, skipped, hopped, danced, and set us all in a roar of luaghter—Jack was drunk.

We all agreed, six of us, that we would come to the tavern next day, and get Jack drunk again, and have sport all day. I called in the morning at my friend's house. We went out for Jack. Instead of being as usual on his box, he was not to be seen. We looked inside, and he was crouched up in a heap. Come out here, said his master. Jack came out on three legs, his forepaw was on his head. Jack had the head-ache; I knew what was the matter with him. He felt just as I had felt many a morning. Jack was sick and could not go. So we put it off for three days. We then met, and while drinking, a glass was provided for Jack. But where was he? Skulking behind the chairs. Come here Jack, said his master, and drink, holding a glass out to him. Jack retreated, and as the door opened, he slipt out, and in a moment was on the top of the house. His master went out & called him down. He would not come.— He got a cow-skin and shook it at him.— Jack sat on the ridge pole, and would not come. His master got a gun and pointed it at him. A monkey is much afraid of a gun. Jack slipped over the back side of the house. His master then got two guns, and pointed one on each side of the house, when the monkey seeing his bad predicament at once whipped up on the chimney and got down in one of the flues, holding on by his fore paws. That man kept that monkey twelve years, and I could never get him to taste one drop of whiskey. The beast had more sense than a man who has an immortal soul, and thinks himself the lord of all creation.

Mr. Pollard addressed himself to the youth, and in the view of his example, urged them all to sign the total abstinence pledge, while they were yet young.

MAXIMS OF WILLIAM PENN.

Frugality is good, if liberality be joined with it. The first is leaving off superfluous expenses; the last, bestowing them to the benefit of others that need. The first, without the last, begins covetousness; the last, without the first, begins prodigality. Both together make an excellent temper. Happy the place where that is found.

Love labor; for if thou dost not want it for food, thou mayest for physic. It is wholesome for thy body and for thy mind.

Act not the shark upon thy neighbor, nor take advantage of the Ignorance, prodigality, or necessity of any one; for that is next door to fraud, and at best, makes but an unblest gain.

PERSEVERANCE.—I recollect, says Sir J. Barrington, to have seen in Queen's County, a Mr. Clerk who had been a working carpenter; and when making a bench for the session Justices at the Court House, was laughed at for taking such particular pains in smoothing the plank for the Judge's seat. The carpenter, nothing else excited, continued his work with special attention, and as a reason for being so very nice in finishing the seat, jocosely expressed his intention of one day occupying that very seat himself. Time passed on, and the carpenter, ever assiduous and attentive both to business and to mental culture, was afterwards seen as presiding judge on the very bench which he had a few years before been so nice in planing.

BEST MODE OF SUICIDE FOR LADIES.—Wear thin shoes, lace with a bed wrench and rope, and you will kill yourself without being suspected.

God allows any thing but sin.
Keep the body under, but the spirit up.

Natural History.

VELOCITY AND MAGNITUDE OF THE WAVES.

The velocity of waves has relation to their magnitude. Some large waves proceed at the rate of from thirty to forty miles an hour. It is a vulgar belief that the water itself advances with the speed of the wave, but in fact the form only advances, while the substance, except a little spray above, remains rising and falling in the same place, according to the laws of the pendulum. A wave of water, in this respect, is exactly imitated by the wave running along a stretched rope when one end of it is shaken; or by the mimic waves of our theatres, which are generally the undulations of long pieces of carpet, moved by attendants. But when a wave reaches a shallow bank or beach, the water becomes really progressive, because then, as it cannot sink directly downwards, it falls over forwards, seeking its level. So awful is the spectacle of a storm at sea, that it is generally viewed through the medium which biasses the judgment; and lofty as waves really are, imagination makes them loftier still. No wave rises more than ten feet above the ordinary level which, with ten feet that its surface afterwards forms below this, give twenty feet for the whole height from the bottom of any water valley to the summit. This supposition is easily proved by trying the height upon a ship's mast, at which the horizon is always in sight over the tops of the waves; allowance being made for accidental inclinations of the vessel, and for her sinking in the water too much below her water-line at the instant when she reaches the bottom of the hollow between the two waves. The spray of the sea, driven along by the violence of the wind, is of course, much higher than the summit of the liquid wave; and a wave coming against an obstacle, may dash to almost any elevation above it. At the Eddystone lighthouse, when a surge reaches it, which has been growing into a storm all across the Atlantic, it dashes even over the lantern at the summit.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT
S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28. 1841.

BUNDLES of [illegible] cases of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with [illegible] assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c. &c. &c. [illegible] and which he [illegible] pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases having been for cash, Goods will be sold [illegible] as any other Store [illegible] cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual [illegible]

To F[illegible] [illegible] of saying that his stock is now complete [illegible] request them at least [illegible] per cent less than they [illegible] the same articles at N[illegible] [illegible] or Syracuse.

Terms of sale 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
[illegible]

DR. WAKEMAN'S
Rheumatic and Scrofulous Plaster.

[illegible]

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible] Prepared only by [illegible] WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

[illegible] BALSAM OF HOREHOUND [illegible]

In conclusion he [illegible] will not be undersold [illegible] for sale

WANTED,
10,000 Rags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

[illegible]

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

B[illegible] MOLASSES [illegible]

50 per cent Lower,

[illegible]

Plain White [illegible] Ware.

25 per cent Lower

[illegible]

He also [illegible] MEDICINES,

[illegible]
Dr. McMunn's Elixir
[illegible]
Moffat's Vegetable Life [illegible]
Gregory's Balsam [illegible]
[illegible]
Pectoral Balm Honey [illegible]

The above [illegible] few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC.

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. a certain cure in all cases [illegible] Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heels occasioned by over-reach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.

47m6 S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A. & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED,

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841,

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web's Dictionary, large.	Novum Græcum Testamatum,
" " small.	Colloquial Phrases,
Davies' [illegible]	Greek Reader,
" [illegible]	Greek Lessons,
" First Lessons,	Jacob's Latin Reader
" Arithmetic,	Polyglott Bibles,
Comstock's Chemistry,	quarto "
Phelps' Philosophy,	Medium Drawing Paper
B[illegible] Grammar,	Demi " "
A[illegible] Intellectual [illegible]	Cap " "
[illegible]	Drawing Pencils,
[illegible] Geography,	Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
[illegible]	Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY [illegible] is now ready [illegible] in a neat and durable [illegible] as at any other establishment [illegible] country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

W[illegible] thanks for the patronage he has [illegible] his numerous friends and customers [illegible] that he has taken [illegible] recently occupied by Dr. [illegible] Store, together with [illegible] where he will be happy to [illegible] favor him with a call.— [illegible] WARRANT his work to be [illegible]

[illegible] Summer Fashions just received. [illegible]

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman, who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible] Eli S. Bailey.
[illegible] Maxson, Greene, Sam-
[illegible]
[illegible] S. Stillman, P. M.
[illegible] Babcock, Silas Bailey, Alva
[illegible] Dr. Wm. M. Tra-
[illegible]
[illegible] Potter.
[illegible] P. M.
[illegible] Maxson.
[illegible] Campbell, Samuel E. Lee-
[illegible] H. Willson, P. M.
[illegible] Greene.
[illegible] P. M., Stil-
[illegible] H. S. Crandall.
[illegible] Stillman.
[illegible]
Pit[illegible]—Geo. P. Burdick
[illegible] Potter, James Hubbard,
[illegible] Ward.
[illegible] Beauchamp
[illegible]
[illegible] Stillman.
Verona—[illegible]
[illegible] Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible] Maxson. Rev. Alexander [illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

[illegible] Maxson.
[illegible] Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

[illegible]
[illegible] Gillett.
[illegible] Titsworth
Salem—[illegible] Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

[illegible] Lewis Dunham.
[illegible]
[illegible] Hydren, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Salm—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 37.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. [illegible]

TERMS.—Two dollars in advance.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1841. [$2,50 at the end of the year.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

An Ungrateful Daughter.

Mr. ——— was formerly a merchant in the city of New York, possessed of a valuable estate and doing a lucrative business; but owing to the dishonesty or bad management of his partner was reduced to poverty. His wife died and left him with several children, one of whom, a daughter, was committed to an aunt, under whose fostering care she at length attained to womanhood. She received the addresses of a young man from the South who had inherited some six or eight thousand dollars from his father's estate, and soon became his wife. Elated with the change which had taken place in her condition, forgetting that "Riches make to themselves wings and fly away as an eagle towards heaven," and anxious to conceal her former poverty, she disowned that father who sustained her in the period of infancy and childhood, and reported that her father resided in the city of Utica! When he called to visit his child, he was treated as a stranger, but without those expressions of kindness which even strangers usually receive at the hands of their fellow-men.—His heart was frequently pained with the unkind treatment of a daughter over whom he had watched year after year with parental anxiety, and for whose welfare, to use his own language, he was conscious of having "done all that he could." In the progress of a glorious revival which occurred last spring, she was hopefully converted to God, and the day was fixed for her union with a Pedo-baptist church. The joyful intelligence was communicated to her father, whose heart exulted in the thought that if she had become a new creature in Christ Jesus, she would pursue a new course of conduct towards himself.—Though she was going to unite with a different denomination from that with which he was connected, he resolved to be present when she should enter into covenant with the visible church. As soon as convenient, after having entered the meeting-house, he said to his wife, I wish you would go and speak to my daughter, and see whether she appears willing to be sociable. She pressed through the crowd, accosted her in the language of affection, and was treated quite civilly. The father, who had carefully watched every motion, left his seat and approaching his child, took her by the hand and asked if she was well; to which she replied in the use of the monosyllable "YES," and instantly turned her face in an opposite direction. His feelings on beholding this instance of unkindness and contempt on the part of his daughter, were peculiarly distressing. His chin quivered, the tears trickled down his cheeks, and it was with difficulty he could avoid weeping aloud. The thought that she was about taking the oath of allegiance to that God who, amid the thunderings and lightnings of Mount Sinai, and in the most solemn and impressive manner uttered the injunction "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee;" and the inquiry which involuntary arose in his mind whether one who had no regard for her father whom she had seen, could have any regard for God whom she had not seen, invested the moment with a fearful interest. But why, it may be asked, is she unwilling to acknowledge him for her father, whom she knows to have been the husband of her mother? Why, simply because he is a poor man. Were he now the merchant that he once was, no doubt she would be proud to acknowledge the relation subsisting between them. And yet it may be difficult to perceive how this can operate as a reason of such conduct now, for on the ground of property she had nothing to boast. Though but a very few brief years have passed away since she became the joyful bride of him who was then in the possession of thousands, and on the wave of prosperity she was elevated high above herself, yet the succeeding waves have years since swept away all their possessions, and they have descended from their lofty elevation into the vale of poverty.—Though while rioting in abundance, and living in splendor, they seemed not to have dreamed that the fountain of their treasures could ever be exhausted; yet extravagance, and prodigality, those mighty channels for draining off wealth, have borne away upon their rapid current their last dollar, and left them immersed in debt. The probable reason why she continues to treat her father thus unkindly, is, that she has been led on by the Devil to lie about the matter so often, and persist in it so long, that her conscience demands an humble confession which the pride of her heart forbids her to make! Her father has been accustomed to move in the higher walks of life; and though destitute of property, there is much of the real gentleman in his manners; he sustains the reputation of an honest, industrious, and worthy citizen, and by the blessing of God on the labor of his hands, he procures for his family all the necessaries and some of the conveniences of life. As I have carefully concealed the names of persons and places, in relating the above facts, I hope no one will accuse me of desiring to inflict unnecessary pain upon any human being. My only object is to admonish the rising generation who may be tempted to imitate so unholy an example, and draw down upon themselves the judgments of a holy God. For if those who honor their father and their mother have reason to hope their days will "be long on the earth," those who pursue the opposite course have reason to fear his avenging rod; and should Providence permit me to live, I shall doubtless feel an interest in becoming acquainted with the subsequent history of her whose ungrateful conduct is the subject of these remarks. Should she cast her eye upon this paper, I would propose for her consideration the following question: When the lovely babe whom you now press to your bosom shall be married and settle in life, would you like to have her walk in your steps and treat you as you have treated your father?

If your heart recoils at such a thought, I would advise you to embrace the first favorable opportunity to make that confession which your conscience and your God require you to make; and by kind and respectful treatment in future, strive to heal the wound which you have inflicted on a parent's heart. H.

Children's Department.

From the Sunday School Monitor.

SABBATH BLESSINGS.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL DIALOGUE.

Mary and Jane. } Cousins attending the same S. S.

Little Ellen, Mary's Sister.

Jane is sitting at a table, and studying the Sunday School lesson on Saturday afternoon. Mary and Ellen enter with their bonnets hung on their arm, as if from walking. Ellen has some wild flowers in her hand, among them a rose. Jane rises as they enter.

Jane.—Mary, I am so glad you are come; I was thinking you had forgotten that we had promised to study the lesson together this afternoon.

Mary.—No Jane. But little Ellen and I have been taking a run in the fields over the river, with a friend of mother's, and I thought we should have been home sooner, but we missed one boat, and had to wait.

J.—Well, I have found the answer to all the questions but one, and I knew you could easily find that; so I was wishing for you when you came in.

M.—And what is your hard question then, Jane?

J.—It is, "why is the Sabbath called the Lord's day?"

M.—O, couldn't you find the text?

J.—I found about the day of the Lord, 2 Peter, iii. 10,—"The day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night;" and that in Malachi,—"The day of the Lord shall burn as an oven;" but then, that means the judgment day.

M.—To be sure, and there is only one place, where the text you want, is found.

Ellen.—I know, sister Mary. Let me tell cousin Jane. I remember it, because when we said it once at the Sunday School, my teacher stopped and said, "O, what a blessed day! A day the Lord has made and given to us;" and then she taught us a little hymn about it.

J.—Well then, little Ellen, what of the blessed day, as your teacher called.

E.—Revelations i. 10; "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day;" that is it cousin Jane, and then my teacher said it was a blessed thing, to be in the spirit on the Lord's Day. [Handing her book.] There, I have it marked in my little Testament.

J.—O, thank you dear. Only see now how useful it is to say texts at Sunday School, when such a little girl as you, can help cousin Jane and sister Mary.

M.—The rest of the text, Jane, is, "And I heard behind me a great voice."

E.—Yes, and my teacher said that was the great God, our Lord and Savior, who was speaking to his beloved disciple, John, to comfort him on the Lord's day.

J.—The Lord, I think, was pleased to show that John was in the Spirit on his Holy Day, ready to worship Him and meditate on His glory.

M.—No doubt, Jane; and how it must have cheered that holy man, in his desolate place, to hear the Lord say, "He would tell him of the glories of the world to come."

J.—And is it not still the same, when the minister of the gospel tells us of the glories of heaven, and the love of the Savior, that will cheer the heart still, if in the Spirit on the Lord's Day. But now to answer the question, Mary, since we have found the text. Why is it called the Lord's Day?

E.—I can tell you again, cousin Jane, for it says why, in the little hymn my teacher taught me at that time. I will say it for you.

This is the day when Christ arose,
So early from the dead,—
Why should I keep my eyelids closed,
And waste my hours in bed.

To-day, with pleasure, Christians meet,
To pray and hear the word—
And I would go with cheerful feet,
To learn thy will, O Lord.

I leave my sport to read and pray,
And so prepare for Heaven—
O, may I love this blessed day,
The best of all the seven.

So my teacher taught me, when she spoke about the blessed day.

J.—Thank you, little Ellen; now I think I know it all, it is in honor of the resurrection of our glorious Lord, when He burst the gates of death, and finished His work of Redemption, and surely we too may rejoice with the pious David, and say, when we go to the Lord's house, on the Lord's Day, "This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

M.—Yes, Jane, and when God at first made the world, and rested from his labors, He blessed the Sabbath Day, and hallowed it. But the Savior finished a more glorious work in the redemption of sinners, and when He rose on the first-day of the week. He entered His state of rest; see Hebrews iv. 10; "He that is entered into His rest." He also has ceased from his own work, as God did from His, and He is Lord also of the Sabbath."

J.—And that is our Christian Sabbath. Now I remember how it is said in Acts:—"And Jesus meeting his disciples on the first-day of the week, when they had come together, so He honored the first-day, and approved their meeting, and that too was the day of Pentecost, when He blessed them with heavenly gifts." O, how many were in the Spirit on that Lord's Day!

M.—And then it was that the Apostle told his brethren to lay up for the collection for the Saints, when they come together on the first-day of the week; so it was a time of coming together to break bread, to worship and to preach; for on one occasion, Paul is said to have tarried with them seven days, and then met with them and preached to them. This, then, was their Sabbath, and this was the Lord's Day.

J.—Then is the Sabbath a day of blessings, or as little Ellen's hymn says, a blessed day, the best of all the seven; rest to the soul, and rest to the body; a day when men may wait on the Lord, and renew their strength, and restore also their wasted bodily vigor.

E.—And the poor cattle, too, cousin Jane; and the servants and poor laborers. How glad they must be for the rest they can have on the Lord's day.

M.—So indeed it would be, if kept holy as the Lord requires, when He says:—"Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work, and the seventh-day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates."

J.—How particular the Lord is, to mention all; and yet how many there are in the wicked world, that waste these precious golden hours, and abuse all the mercies of the Sabbath.

"Oh! what would dying sinners give,
To have one Sabbath more to live."

M.—Yet God has promised prosperity and comfort to such as keep holy the Sabbath, and reverence His sanctuary. O, that Christians would lay to heart that promise by Isaiah, Chap. 58: "Not doing thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words, on my Holy day; and shall call the Sabbath a delight, the Holy of the Lord, honorable; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord."

J.—Then, Mary, that is the best way to enjoy religion, to hallow the Sabbath; for the Lord says so in that beautiful text,—and when John was in the Spirit, on the Lord's Day, then no doubt He delighted himself in the Lord.

M.—How many comforts it brings in a worldly sense! Only think, how clean and nice every thing is, and that is better for the health of all; it is more quiet for the sick.

J.—And it brings the family together, and father and mother, and all the children, and the big boys, who are away all the week, are sure to come on Saturday night, and stay over Sunday night, and stay over Sunday. So it makes brothers and sisters glad too.

E.—And then grandmother comes and stays all day, to go to meeting.

M.—And then at night, father or mother stay at home from church, and we all have our Bibles and read verse and verse about, in some of the sweet Psalms, or a New Testament story; and then we sing our hymns.

E.—O! if I should go now away off to live in the woods, where there was no church, I never should forget Sunday. But you forget the blessing of the Sunday School. What would become of all the wicked children; and when would they read their Bibles, if it was not for the Sunday School. I guess they will all be glad when they grow up, if they will only come steady, and be good. Here's a rose, cousin Jane, I got it in the wood. It is to use when I speak my piece at the anniversary of our school.

J.—O, those beautiful flowers; and this rose, the sweetest of all,—do you mean "The Thornless rose." Speak it dear, and Mary and I will set down. [They are seated.]

E.—I'll try if I can remember it. There, you take the other flowers, I want only the rose:—

"See yonder flower: it is the rose, with its beautiful tints of deep red and pink, mixed with shades of white. How pleasant to view the opening bud. How fragrant the full blown flower; it is the symbol of joy and blooming prosperity; fragrant and delightful, but soon withering away; and see under its pretty green leaves, sharp thorns are concealed. Let us be reminded from this, that the sweetest enjoyments of life, are often mingled with pain and sorrow; and as the rose is scarcely found without a thorn, so joys, free from cares, are seldom found in the changing scenes of this fading world. But as there is a thornless rose, so is there a world without sorrow,—

That world so pure is far on high,
The holy go there when they die.

In life's garden, sweet the flowers,
Soon the blooming time is gone—
Life has bright and gloomy hours,
And roses have their piercing thorn.

But yet there is a thornless rose,
And a bright world where none shall weep,
And blessed are the joys of those,
Who there Eternal Sabbath keep.

J.—That is beautiful and true, little Ellen; and that Eternal Sabbath will be a blessed day, and the thornless roses of the Heavenly Paradise. But come, let us go and gather some of our own roses in the garden, and take them to our Sunday School teacher, for I want to tell her that I have found out all the questions.

M.—Come, sister Ellen, and you shall speak your piece for her.

E.—[As they are passing out hand in hand.] May I sister Mary? O, I'll be glad if it pleases her, for I love all the teachers. Blessed day, and blessed Sunday School. S. W. S.

Here, children, is an interesting story for you. Do you see how happy these little girls appear to be in studying about the "blessed Sabbath"? And just see how they love their teacher who has made them believe that Sunday is the Sabbath, and that "Lord's day" in Rev. i. 10, means Sunday. How do you suppose their honest hearts would be pained if they should find that their teacher had told them wrong things about the Sabbath and "Lord's day"? Well, don't you see that there is not a word said about the Sabbath in the text that little Ellen quoted, and which Mary said is the only one in the Bible. Mary's story is true in part, because there is no other passage in the whole Bible that says a word about Sunday being the Sabbath, and you see that passage don't. So their teacher has made them believe something that is not true. You see, too, they quoted several other passages from the New Testament to prove that Sunday was the Sabbath, but there is not one of them that say a word about it.

Now what do you think of such teachers. "They are blind leaders of the blind." God commands all men to keep the seventh-day, which He says "is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." And the Lord Jesus says, "whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven." There is a great responsibility resting on teachers. They ought first to know what the will of God is, and be careful that they do not teach for doctrines the commandments of men, and make the young believe that it is the word of God. Christianity can never triumph throughout the world till professed Christians can lay aside their wrong notions, and obey God who commands them to keep his Sabbath (the seventh-day,) holy. These girl's teacher was doubtless a very good one, for she made them love the Bible and Sunday School, and what she said, God required. But after all, she made some mistakes which are very bad.—Ed. Reg.

A True Friend.

Is he my friend who tells me so,
Perhaps some private end to gain!
Whose heart, just like a gem of snow,
But sparkles in its frosty reign!

'Tis he who makes no loud pretence,
But like the silent dews of heaven
Can blessings all unmasked dispense,
In noiseless acts of kindness given.

'Tis he who through life's checker'd ways,
When sun-bright scenes or clouds appear,
With warm affection, still displays
A heart unchang'd a soul sincere.

Religious Department.

AM I A CHRISTIAN?

To all men this is a question of unspeakable interest. The questions which relate to a man's temporal condition, and the solution to which is so anxiously and generally considered, can bear to this no comparison of value. The lapse of a few years diminishes the importance of temporal objects which once occupied a large share of attention: and as the grave is opened to receive the mortal remains of an individual, it matters little whether or not he was favored by fortune, and stood prominently before the world for his wealth and honors. But, is he a Christian? is a question which increases in interest, the nearer we approach the eternal world; and as we commit the unconscious corpse to the tomb, the reply, he was a Christian, throws a sacred light over the very gloom of the grave. Am I a Christian? If I am, I will evidence it by unquestionable signs, for as the man of the world is distinguished by his temper and conduct, so will the Christian be known by his. One test is set forth in the word of God to which we must subject ourselves if we would arrive at a positive certainty on this point; and it is this, "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Now it would seem to be a matter of no great difficulty to ascertain if our ruling spirit bears any similarity to that which actuated the Savior. Thus we might ascertain the likeness or unlikeness, by instituting a comparison between some leading traits of character. Jesus Christ was certainly not worldly minded; and if we are worldly minded, we are none of his. He was, as his whole history proves, not a lover of money; and if we love money, we are none of his. He was meek and forgiving; and if we are revengeful, we are none of his. He was of a devotional spirit; and if we restrain prayer before God, we are none of his. He was intent on doing his Father's will; and if we are rebellious and disobedient, we are none of his. He was immaculately pure in heart; and if we foster any unhallowed imagination or desire, we are none of his. His whole life evinced his earnest desire for the salvation of men: and we are surely none of his, if we feel uninterested in the diffusion of the life giving gospel. In this way we may proceed to try ourselves in a great variety of particulars, in each one of which we may obtain an insight into our true character, and be enabled to see whether we have the spirit of Christ. Although we can not possibly be as perfect as Christ, yet we must bear a resemblance to him, or we are none of his.

Thus it appears that to be a Christian, does not simply mean to bear the Christian name or profession; nor does it mean merely the adoption of certain formularies of faith and zeal in defending truth against error; nor does it mean to be moral in our conduct, in the world's acceptation of the term; but it means such a faith in Christ as will lead us to imitate him in all the imitable traits of his character—to be imbued with his spirit—to be like him. As is the Master, so must be the disciple.—Presbyterian.

It is good to be Alone.—[illegible] good," even in a religious [illegible], "that man should be alone." But it would be worse for him to be never alone. In proportion as a man mixes with others, he loses his peculiar stamp, changes his own for the character of the many, thinks with the mind of others, and ceases to be properly himself. But in order to become a Christian, a man must be himself,—he must be his own to give himself to God. If, in mingling with the world, we come to lose that native character of soul which makes us ourselves, the truth in attacking us would search in vain where to find a hold, and having allowed the mind of the many by little and little to substitute itself for our own, we should find ourselves wanting in that which could feel the truth, recognize and receive it. Never, my brethren, has this danger been greater than in our day; we encounter it every where in the church as well as in the world; all conspire even under the most holy appearance, to take us away from ourselves, and we are continually in danger of mistaking the voice of the multitude for that of the Spirit of God. A strange insipidity of soul, and factious kind of life, threatens incessantly to take the place of that soul and that life which are properly our own, an unaccountable magic power makes us receive as the native inspiration of our conscience, and defend, with the warmth of conviction, systems and creeds which have been generated without us by the shock of opinions, and the course of events. Men observe, imitate, repeat, and call themselves philosophers.

Ever ought the prayer of Prophet King to find an echo in more hearts: "Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away and be at rest!" Let this prayer be ours, my brethren, let us seek some place of rest; far from the dust and bustle of the world—far, if possible from its associations—let us go and seek for ourselves; let us each find our true original under the thick mass of the prejudices of sect, and the spirit of the age; let us listen with devout attention to the warnings so long unheard, of our conscience; yes, with devout attention, for when the world is silent, it is God himself that we shall hear, it is God who will speak by the voice within us,—"I will bring her into the wilderness,"* says God in the prophet, "and speak to her heart."—Rev. A. Vinet, of Lausanne.

---

*Authorised version, "[illegible]" (Hosea ii. 14.

An Angel standing by.—We read of a youth in the early days of Christianity, on whom his persecutors had put in practice a more than common share of cruel ingenuity, that by his torments they might compel him to deny the Lord and Savior. After a long endurance of these pains, they released him in wonder at his obstinacy. His christian brethren wondered, too, and asked him by what mighty faith he could so strangely subdue the violence of the fire, as that neither a cry or a groan escaped him. "It was indeed most painful," was the noble youth's reply, "but an angel stood by me while my anguish was at the worst, and pointed to heaven." Oh, thou, whoever thou art, that are tempted to commit sin, do thou think of [illegible], and that thought will be an angel unto thee!—The hope of heaven will raise thy courage above the fiercest threatenings of the world; the fear of hell will rob its persuasions of their enchantments, and in the very extremity of the trial may [illegible] to animate thy exertions by the thought that the greater the endurance now, the greater will be thy reward [illegible].—Bishop Heber.

A Last Day.—To every thing beneath the sun there comes a last day—and of all futurity this is the only portion that can, in all cases, be infallibly predicted. Let the sanguine, then, take warning, and the disheartened take courage; for to every joy and every sorrow, to every hope and every fear, there will come a last day; and man ought so to live by foresight, that, while he learns in every state to be content, he shall in each be prepared for another, whatever that other may be. When we sow an acorn, we expect that it will produce an oak; when we plant a vine, we calculate upon gathering grapes; but when we lay a plan for years to come, we may wish, and we can do no more, except pray, that it may be accomplished, for we know not what even the morrow may bring forth.—All that we do know beforehand of any thing is, that to every thing beneath the sun there comes a last day—prompting to immediate and unsparing self-examination. From this there is nothing to fear, from the neglect of it, every thing; for however alarming the discoveries of evil unsuspected, or perils unknown, may be, such discoveries had better be made now, while escape is before us, than at that day when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, and escape will be impossible—that day, which of all others is most emphatically called "The Last Day."—[illegible]ery.

Signs of Backsliding.—Whenever professors of religion absent themselves from prayer-meetings, for months at a time, (without sickness or death in the family,) and hang about home during preaching on the Sabbath, you may set it down for a certainty, that they have backslidden; and such persons ought to be examined and admonished, and if they still continue to "neglect the assembling of themselves together" with the saints, and show by their trifling and loose conduct, that they will not obey God's word, they ought to be put out of church-fellowship. [illegible] or backslidden professors, who still claim fellowship with the saints, bring more reflection and dishonor on the church of God than the open and professed backslider—and as they are doubtless many such stumbling-blocks in the church, the ruling elders ought to do their duty by "setting in order the things that are wanting." By keeping the church clear of such hypocrites, the cause of God will prosper. May God purge the church of all its dead weights.

A Friend of Zion.

Speak the Truth.—Always speak the honest truth. Never equivocate. You will then relate things with confidence, feeling assured that you are believed. You will never find occasion to say for effect, "It certainly is so,"—"I am in earnest now.—You may depend upon what I say,"—"I declare it is the truth,"—and the like. No, you will never have occasion to add to the truth. You will sustain good characters among your friends—and they will feel a confidence in all that you do, which will greatly add to your usefulness. They will look up to your opinion and advice, on occasions when their most intimate acquaintances are not consulted. Your words will have weight with them. They will feel safe when by your side; knowing that no deception is in your eye—no malice is in your heart. Whenever you speak you will command attention, and people will attentively listen to catch the words as they drop from your mouth.

GEMS OF PIETY.

If a man lives and dies a mere professor, it had been better for him if he had lived and died a mere heathen.

The duty of religion flows from a principle of religion.

It is not talking, but walking with God, that gives a man the denomination of a Christian.

Four things a Christian should especially labor after, viz: to be humble and thankful, watchful and cheerful.

Keep the body under, but the spirit up.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter. November 10, 1841.

We omit our usual quantity of Editorial this week to make room for the Minutes of the S. W. Association. It will be seen that a question has been settled that has been a source of much evil among them, viz: the Temperance question. Our South Western Churches now present a strong Temperance front, and will, we trust, be able to do very much in their sphere to drive the demon Intemperance from the land. Our brethren in the South West are but little known to the other parts of the denomination, from the fact that they came to the observance of the Sabbath when they were not conscious that any others kept it, and since that time there has been but little intercourse with them.

It will be seen, also that Br. B. C. Church was ordained to the work of the ministry, by the Association; and we learn from another source that there is some prospect that he will locate with the churches in Clark co. O. We also learn that the session was characterized with much interest.

A Proposition.

"A correspondent of the New York Baptist Register proposes to the advocates of sprinkling to translate the following English sentence into good classic Greek: "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he immersed him." Who will do it?—Christian Watchman.

"And we propose to those who object to transferring into other languages the word BAPTIZO, when used to designate the religious rite, to translate the above into good classic Latin, as they suppose the apostle Paul ought to have done when he preached to the Romans that they must believe and be baptized. 'Who will do it?'"—Vt. Chronicle.

And we propose to any Baptist or Pedo-Baptist, to translate "first day of the week," found in Matt. xxviii. Mark xvi. Luke xxiv. John xx. Acts xx. 1 Cor. xvi., into good classic Greek, and then compare it with the original Greek, and ask themselves, in view of the JUDGEMENT, whether it is better to obey GOD, or man? "Who will do it?"—S. D. B. Register.

ELECTION.—The Election returns give the Opposition a decided majority. The Abolitionists have polled a much larger vote than before. In this county the vote is about 450

One of the College buildings of William's College, Mass., was consumed by fire a short time since.

At the October term of the Supreme Court, now sitting in the city of Rochester, 55 gentlemen were found upon examination to have so far complied with the rules of the Court as to entitle them to practice as Attorneys, and 33 others were admitted as Counsellors,

---

MINUTES OF THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST SOUTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION,

Held at Northampton, Pike Township, Clark Co., Ohio, October 7th, 1841.

The Seventh-day Baptist South-Western Association convened agreeably to appointment, in the Meeting-House at Northampton, Ohio, Oct. 7th, 1841. The introductory discourse was preached by Br. Lewis A. Davis, from Luke xv. 3—7. And he spake this parable unto them, &c. After an intermission of half an hour the Association met. Prayer by Eld. S. Babcock. The Association then organized for business by appointing Br. JOHN FORSYTH Moderator, and LEMON LIPPINCOTT, and JOHN BABCOCK, Clerks.

Resolved, That the brethren of Jackson, Port Jefferson, and all the S. D. B. brethren present, be invited to a seat with us in our deliberations.

The Letters from the several Churches were called for, and read, from which the following statistics were taken:

LOST CREEK, VA.—Richard C. Bond, Licentiate; Abel Bond, Sen., Abner Batten, Levi H. Bond, Deacons; Richard C. Bond, Thomas B. Bond, Clerks; Hoffman Ayles, Messenger. Added 1, Deceased 1, Dismissed 0, Rejected 1, Total 50. Constituted 1805. Communion, 2nd Sabbath in March and once in three months.

NEW SALEM, VA.—John Davis, Pastor; Peter Davis, Elder; Ezekiel Bee, Licentiate; Jonathan F. Randolph, Dea.; Jeptha F. Randolph, Jesse J. Davis, Clerks. Added 1, Total 58. Constituted 1745. Communion, 3rd Sabbath in February, May, August, and November.

WOODBRIDGE, FAYETTE Co., PA.—No returns.

PIKE, CLARKE Co., O.—James B. Davis, Licentiate; Samuel Lippincott, Sen., Joseph Davis, Sen., Deacons; Jesse M. Babcock, Clerk; Amos Sutton, Jacob Davis, Joel Babcock, James B. Davis, Messengers. Total 37. Communion, 2nd Sabbath in March, and once in three months.

NORTHAMPTON CHURCH, CLARK Co., O.—Simeon Babcock, Elder; John Forsyth, Caleb Ayers, Deacons; David R. Platts, Clerk; Caleb Ayers, Simeon Babcock, Samuel Lippincott, Jr., John Forsyth, Messengers. Added 1, Dismissed 1, Rejected 1, Total 30. Communion, 3rd Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Address, Northampton P. O.

SOUTH FORK OF HUGH'S RIVER, LEWIS Co., VA.—No returns.

NORTH FORK OF HUGH'S RIVER, WOOD Co., VA.—No returns.

Resolved, That Br. John Forsyth be Treasurer.

The Corresponding Letter was brought forward and read,—

Resolved, That Br. James B. Davis, Joshua Hill, and Hoffman Ayles, be a committee to make such alterations as they deem proper to make it more applicable.

The Circular Letter was then brought forward, read, and approved.

Resolved, That Br. Levi H. Bond be the Corresponding Secretary for the ensuing year.

Resolved, that Br. Lemon Lippincott, and Joshua Hill be a committee to report on the State of Religion.

Resolved, That Br. James B. Davis, and Hoffman Ayles be a committee to arrange the preaching hours through the course of this meeting.

Resolved, That we adjourn until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, then to meet and spend one hour in prayer. Concluding prayer by Br. J. Hill.

Sixth-day morning.—Met agreeable to adjournment. After spending one hour in prayer, went into the business of the Association.

Resolved, That we invite Br. Bethuel C. Church to a seat with us in our deliberations.

Resolved, That we receive the Corresponding Letter as it now stands amended.

Resolved, That Br. Richard C. Bond write the Corresponding Letter for the ensuing year.

Resolved, That Br. Simeon Babcock write the Circular Letter for the ensuing year.

Resolved, That we receive the report of the Committee on the State of Religion, which is as follows:—

That in looking over our beloved Zion, we have much occasion for gratitude for the harmony and union apparent in most of our churches. The churches generally express an ardent desire to stand fast in the truth, and to see the work of the Lord prosper. They have been wading through discouragements and trials, yet hope that they may finally reap a rich harvest if they faint not. There is not apparent, however, that lively zeal and holy fervor that should characterize the followers of the Lamb; and we have great need to humble ourselves before God, in hope that in due time he will exalt us, and visit us with a gracious revival of pure religion.

Resolved, That Br. Joshua Hill be our delegate to the Western Association at their next annual meeting, and that Br. Thomas Babcock be his substitute.

Resolved, That this Association give their delegate an order on the Treasurer of the Association to draw the available funds of last year, and that this Association contribute five dollars more for his benefit.

Adjourned until 2 P. M. Prayer by Br. Church.

Met agreeable to adjournment. Prayer by Br. L. Lippincott.

Resolved, That Br. Gilbert N. Swinney be appointed to revise and prepare the Minutes of this Association, and send them for publication in the Seventh-day Baptist Register.

Resolved, That we adjourn until Sabbath evening.

Sabbath Evening.—Met according to adjournment.

Br. B. C. Church presented himself as a candidate for ordination. After investigating the matter,—

Resolved, That we believe he ought to be ordained, and that the case be referred to the Presbytery of this Association, who shall examine and ordain him if they think proper.

Adjourned until to-morrow morning, at 8 o'clock A. M. Benediction by Br. L. A. Davis.

First-day morning, Oct. 10th.—Met agreeable to adjournment. Prayer by Br. L. A. Davis.

A resolution was brought forward, as follows:—

Whereas, Intemperance is a prolific source of evil, moral and physical; therefore,

Resolved, That this Association sustain the cause of Temperance as advocated by its friends in the United States.

After a considerable friendly discussion on the above resolution, it was unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That Br. Joshua Hill be our delegate to the General Conference the ensuing year.

Resolved, That when this Association adjourn, it adjourn to meet with the Seventh-Day Baptist Church, at Port Jefferson, Shelby Co., Ohio, on fifth-day, 10 o'clock A. M., before the 3rd Sabbath in Oct., 1842.

Resolved, That Br. Joshua Hill preach the introductory discourse, and in case of failure, that Br. B. C. Church be his alternate.

Resolved, That the request from the Church at Port Jefferson, for the ordination of Br. J. Hill, be referred to the Presbytery.

Adjourned. Prayer by Br. Church.

First-day, after preaching, the ordination of Br. B. C. Church took place. Appropriate discourse by Eld. L. A. Davis, from Acts vi. 4. But we will give ourselves, &c. Consecrating prayer by Eld. S. Babcock. Charge, and Right Hand of Fellowship by Eld. L. A. Davis, and benediction by the same.

Preaching through the course of the meeting as follows:—Fifth-day evening, by Br. Joshua Hill from Rev. iii. 20. Behold, I stand at the door and knock, &c., and followed by an exhortation by Br. Wm. Babcock. Sixth-day evening, by Br. Bethuel C. Church from Matt. xxiii. 37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, &c., and followed by Br. Davis Loofbourrow from the Epistle of Jude, and the 21st verse. Keep yourselves in the love of God. Sabbath morning, 10 o'clock, by Eld. Simeon Babcock from Hab. iii. 2. O God, revive thy work, and followed by Br. J. Hill from 2 Cor. v. 20, 21. Now we are embassadors, &c.—5 o'clock, P. M., Br. Church from 2 Cor. viii. 9. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. First day, 11 o'clock, by Br. Church from Isaiah lv. 6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, &c. In the evening, Br. Church from Heb. xi. 21—26. By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, &c.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

To the Churches that compose the Seventh-Day Baptist South-Western Association:

DEAR BRETHREN:—In looking over our beloved Zion, we have much cause of joy and encouragement in the general firmness and steadfastness of the churches; yet the general apathy and inactivity which seems to predominate, should fill us with the deepest humility before the great head of of our churches. While we cannot too much deplore such a state, suffer us to address you on a few things, which, in our view, exert a pernicious influence on the interests of religion. The great political agitation which our country has experienced for some time past, and which has been productive of the most unpleasant feelings between individuals of different parties, has been too largely participated in by professors of religion, to the great injury of their religious interests.

Secondly, worldly-mindedness in the desire to secure the good things of this life, and to indulge our propensity of excelling our neighbor in possessions and appearance, to the great hindrance of our souls in our heavenly calling, and to the neglect of closet and prayer meeting duties. And Thirdly, the partial manner in which our churches are supplied with the preaching of the word, growing out of the deficiency, or, rather, the want of a proper system of arrangement for ministerial labor. Our preachers are, mostly, men having families dependant on their personal industry for the comforts of life, and are, necessarily compelled, without proper assistance, to confine their labors to a very limited sphere, and the inevitable consequence seems to be, that both preachers and people sink down into a state of comparative supineness, and thus our churches are deprived of efficient ministerial labor, which they so much need, and consequently must be deprived of great blessings which otherwise might fall in rich effusions on our churches, through the instrumentality of a proper co-operation of ministers and churches. We recommend these things as being of momentous importance to the consideration of the churches of the Association. And in conclusion we exhort you to be instant in season, and out of season, and always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as you know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord, for ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price; therefore, glorify God in your spirit, and your body, which are his. And our earnest desire is, that God may strengthen and comfort you all, and preserve us by his grace while traveling through this vale of tears, till he shall be pleased to say, it is enough, "come up hither, enter into the joys of the Lord."

JOHN FORSYTH, Moderator.
LEMON LIPPINCOTT, } Clerks.
JOHN BABCOCK. }

News of the Day.

Justice to Arkansas.—An impression has gone forth, and has been circulated throughout the Union, that the citizens of Arkansas were engaged in the horrid massacre on the Islands between Arkansas and Mississippi.

The following statement of facts has been furnished us by a man whose veracity cannot be doubted, and who resides in Desha county, Arkansas, near the place where the bloody deeds were perpetrated. He states that the Sheriff of Coahoma county, Mississippi, Mr. Poindexter, came along in Mr. Burgess's trading boat, bringing with him a posse of the citizens of that county, and stopped at the head of island No. 61, when, upon the request of the Sheriff, three more persons from there, and one from the head of island No. 66, went along with him to assist in taking Hugh Tully and his accomplices; and after they were taken, they (the four men,) returned up on this side to their homes, leaving nineteen prisoners bound, in the custody of the Sheriff and his possee, at Lunsford's Landing, at the head of No. 68, whence the Sheriff proceeded with his prisoners to the mouth of Stoke's bayou on the bend, opposite island No. 69, where an altercation took place between the Sheriff and his mob about the manner of disposing of their prisoners, when the legal process was wrested from the Sheriff by force, and he and part of his possee, citizens of Coahoma county, were compelled to leave the place, and his prisoners in the hands of a lawless mob; who, by this time, had seized two more men as culprits; at a Mr. Hennington's, on the Mississippi side of the river, about three miles below.

The principal men who headed the mob were, Hector McNeal, Chas. B. Harrod, J. W. Lunsford, W. J. Howerton, Jos. McCoy, Daniel Richmond, Farrow and Speers, (two Justices of peace.) Keats, McNeal's Mr. Parker, a Mr. Tanner and his two sons, John and Simon. These compelled others to join them whose names are known.

After deliberating some time on the course to pursue, they took all the prisoners but eight, whose names are Hugh Tully, Hugh Elliot, Joseph Merritt, Andrew McLaughlin, Liphus Kingston, Joseph Cotton, Hunter, (Tully's son-in-law,) and a man by the name of Pollock, (whom they left in the boat,) on shore, to the bridge on the country road, where they whipped some of them and turned them loose; and then the mob returned to the boat in which were the eight remaining prisoners, and rowed it out from shore and threw them overboard, bound hand and foot, and drowned the whole of them. Since which time, the same men mentioned before as the leaders of the mob, have collected a band of drunken outlaws, and are now patrolling the country, riding up and down, burning houses, and committing outrages upon those of the inhabitants that did not join them in their acts of villainy. They have driven many away from their houses and lands, and plundered their goods, dividing the spoils, setting them up at auction under mock executions, and distributing the proceeds among themselves, after the manner of freebooters.

They have written several letters to some of the most respectable citizens of Desha and Phillips counties, in this State, even to Judge Lacy, Associate Chief Justice of the State of Arkansas, threatening them with death if they should attempt to demand justice, or even complain of the outrage, or in any way to attempt to expose them in their crimes. All along the river the people are apprehensive of nightly attacks from the murderers, who have twice crossed the river to execute their threats, but found that the citizens were too much on the alert, and had assembled for mutual defense. On one occasion, however, they burned a house in which there was nobody but a woman and her child.—Many of these men who were engaged in this marauding horde are well known to have been the former associates and accomplices of the freebooter Hugh Tully, and are, no doubt, equally deserving of public execration.—Arkansas Gazette.

A Punctual Subscriber.—Mrs. Elizabeth Oakman, of Phoenixville, whose death occurred a few days since, at the advanced age of 92, had been a subscriber to Poulson's Daily Advertiser for more than 60 years; when that paper was united to the North American, she still continued her subscription; and what is better than all the rest, through this whole period of more than sixty years her subscription was punctually paid. She is gone, but her good example remains. This, however, is only one of the many virtues which adorn her memory.—Phil. North Amer.

Effects of Whiskey.—A woman by the name of Gutherie, died yesterday morning, under circumstances which induce the opinion that her death was produced by violence. Her husband had been in the habit of flogging her, and he did so on Saturday evening with such violence as to induce apprehensions of the fatal consequences which followed. She, however, arose as usual on Sunday morning, when he again beat her; but no unusual effects were apparent until yesterday morning, when she fell into violent fits, in one of which, during the absence of her husband, she died.

We have not yet heard the verdict of the jury; but whatever it may be, whiskey should be declared to be the impelling cause.—Detroit Daily Adv.

New Jersey.—The Legislature of this State has convened, and the Senate being equally divided in political sentiment, some delay was occasioned in the election of a Governor. The Whigs have the majority in joint ballot, and on Monday last Hon. William Pennington was re-elected Governor for one year.

Fire at Oswego.—The Presbyterian Church on the public square in West Oswego was set on fire on Sunday night last, and burned to the ground. It was a dark stormy night, with a high wind from the north west, that carried large pieces of fire to a great distance over the village.—The storm and the vigilance of the firemen saved the village. All the doors of the church were locked on Saturday, and were not opened on Sunday in consequence of some repairs going on inside. The fire was first seen burning inside the church, and those who first reached the building found one door unbolted on the [illegible], with a hole large enough to admit a man's [illegible] cut through the panel. This wanton outrage, without any apparent object, not even that of plunder, aroused a general indignation, and on Monday morning the President and Trustees of the village caused a notice to be issued calling a meeting of the citizens on Monday evening.

The attendance at this meeting was very large, and resolutions were adopted requesting the President and Trustees to offer a reward of $[illegible] for the [illegible] which reward was offered [illegible].

Shocking Accident.—A [illegible] accident occurred in Cornish, N. H. a few days since. A Mrs. Wellman, a [illegible] years of age, in doing some house work, caught her clothes on fire. There being no other person in the house, except her husband, who was helpless, in order to extinguish the flame she rolled upon the floor, but without success; she then wrapped herself in a woollen blanket, and while in this situation a young man [illegible] without [illegible] into the house to seize the clothes of Mrs. W., which were so burned that most of them [illegible].—She clasped the young man [illegible] arms, that he was unable to extricate himself, until he had carried her out of the house, when they both fell [illegible] ground. He then succeeded [illegible] and threw water upon her which extinguished the flame. She survived [illegible] hours. The young man was badly burned.

Life Preservers.—A [illegible] the way of Life Preservers [illegible] always at hand in [illegible] and when the [illegible] certain to be [illegible] which every man wears. [illegible] flat on the water, [illegible] retain within itself [illegible] the most [illegible] The only [illegible] to a [illegible] which [illegible] every [illegible] made many experiments [illegible] cles, and in every case with a happy [illegible] This application [illegible] before ingenious [illegible] for their adoption and [illegible] for the same, as [illegible] when they will be of service.—[illegible] Commerce.

The Statue of Washington, by Greenough, has been safely removed [illegible] in the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington, and it has not received the slightest damage. It now awaits the [illegible] of the pedestal on which it is to stand [illegible] finished. The statue weighs [illegible] teen tons, and was raised [illegible] to the level of the floor of the rotunda [illegible] height of twenty-six feet [illegible] minutes, and placed on the way which had been prepared for it.

Sensation of being Crushed.—The following from the Baltimore [illegible] make the foundation for a sketch almost quite equal to that published in Blackwood ten years since, of a man who was crowded to death in an iron apartment, the sides of which gradually shut upon him:

Mr. John Doughtery, who was so dreadfully injured some time since, by being crushed between a car and the side wall of the ticket office, at the Railroad Depot, has so far recovered as to be enabled to leave this city for his home at Lancaster, Pa.—The case of Mr. D. is a remarkable instance of escape from the very jaws of death. His recollections of the sensations experienced during the accident, is distinct, and fearful indeed. His first expectation was that the car would be stopped, but it continued to advance, and thus increased the pressure—those parts of the body which were the most prominent being the first to feel the effects of the crush. In a moment or two, he felt his ribs giving way—and to this succeed the terrible sensation connected with the violent injection of the blood from the body to the head, which felt to him like a flame passing from the latter to the former. At this moment he became senseless, and the car was immediately thereafter stopped and removed backward for his release—the body falling to the ground as that of a dead man. His retnrn to reanimation he described as though he was under the effect of an unpleasant dream, from which he felt conscious he would be relieved when he awoke. To those who saw him after the accident, it appeared impossible he could survive—and yet, through a kind Providence, and the skill and unwearied attention of Dr. Dunbar, his principal physician, he has been restored to life.

William Lawrence, commander, and Joseph Andrews, helmsman, of the schooner Collector, have been arrested and committed to prison for wantonly running their schooner over a small boat in Washington city, and drowning a colored man named Henry Foster. Lawrence was subsequently released.

The Sandusky Clarion states that E. H. Haines, Collector of that port, seized, on the 2d inst., at that place, 24 guns, nicely boxed up, which were supposed to have been destined to aid in the Patriot cause."

A duel was fought at Galveston, on the 5th ult., between Dr. Garden and Lieut. Lansing, both of the Navy, in which the latter was severely wounded. They fought with pistols at five paces. The clothes of each were repeatedly pierced with balls, and at the sixth fire, Lieut. Lansing was wounded in the right thigh.

Bonnet Squash.—They do have some strange "fixings" in Texas. Only think of a lady with a culinary vegetable on her head for a bonnet, yet such is the fact. The Houston Telegraph says that some of the western planters lately [illegible] culture of a species of squash [illegible] manufactured into bonnets, and [illegible] the western ladies have already [illegible] beautiful bonnets from this hitherto despised vegetable. These bonnets are formed [illegible] the fine glossy fibrous lining of the [illegible] surface of the squash, and are [illegible] of the strength, lightness and [illegible] the texture composing them. [illegible] Possibly in a few years these [illegible] bonnets may become all the fashion and even the pumpkin heads of the north may be [illegible] with squashes from Texas.—[illegible]

The British Navy.—A letter from London in the last Journal of Commerce gives the following account of the naval force of Great Britain: [illegible]

[illegible] 74; [illegible] 72; [illegible] Styx, [illegible] Hercules, [illegible] Harlequin, [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]—In the year 1758, Capt. [illegible] Ward, of Guilford, [illegible] by Mr. Ward, father of Col. James Ward of this city. [illegible] George [illegible] Foote, Esq. of Guilford, one of Capt. Ward's descendants, has politely deposited one of these spoons with the Ct. Historical Society, to be examined among the many other interesting articles kindly furnished by those who feel desirous of preserving the remaining relics of our forefathers. It is devoutly to be wished that all persons who may have any papers, books, pamphlets, dresses, or other articles of historic interest or curiosity, would follow Mr. Foote's example, and deposite them with the Society.—Hartford Courant.

Invention to Walk on Water.—The Prussian Government has had its attention drawn to a new and ingenious contrivance for walking on the water—an elaborate account of which is given in the Prussian State Gazette. It is the invention of a pontoneer in the garrison at Magdeburgh, who on several times descended the river with his knapsack and musket, with as much apparent ease as he would travel on a dry road.

Life Preserver.—A metalic Life Preserver has been invented by Mr. Ralph Buckley. The chief advantages which it claims over other Life Preservers are, that the air cannot escape from it, nor the water gain access to it. Experiments have been made with it from the North Carolina, by order of the Navy Commissioners, and it has met with the approbation of Captain Gregory and others.

Preventive for Asphyria.—In one of our London papers we find a letter from Joseph Bowen, postmaster at Bayham, Upper Canada, suggesting, and, we should think, very sensibly, that the destructive effects of foul air in wells, coal pits, &c., may be obviated by dashing down a quantity of cold water—thus at once displacing the foul air, and assisting to restore animation in the person or persons who may have fallen insensible on going into it. Mr. Bowen says he knew an instance in which two men were almost instantly restored, while lying insensible at the bottom of a well, by a woman throwing down a bucket of water upon them.

Mr. Webster, so far from meditating a withdrawal from the cabinet, is preparing for house-keeping in Washington.

The St. Louis Commercial Bulletin says, that no less than one thousand substantial buildings, of the largest class, were erected in that city within the past year, some costing from $3,000 to $40,000 each!

NEW-ORLEANS, Oct. 19.

An Escape from Great Peril.——The United States steamer James Adams, Hussey, which arrived on Saturday from Tampa Bay, brought fifty-seven Indians, among whom were the noted chiefs Wild Cat, Coacoochee, Hospitaki, and Nethloch Emathla, besides many sub-chiefs, all under charge of Captain Seawell, U. S. Army. The passengers were: Major Capers, paying agent for Indians; Captain Birdsall, U. S. Army; Mortimer Turner, lady, child, and two servants; and Miss Davidson.

The James Adams had encountered remarkably rough weather in her passage, and was for some time in imminent peril, as will appear from the following extract from her log:

"Left Tampa Bay on Tuesday 12th inst. at one o'clock with fine weather. On Wednesday night the wind commenced blowing from the north, which soon increased to a gale, causing a very heavy sea and the boat to labor heavily. At two o'clock it was discovered the boat had sprung a leak, having about three feet water in her hold.—Both pumps were immediately put to work, which was barely sufficient to keep her free. Half-past two o'clock shipped a heavy sea, which carried away the chimney and sprung forward guard, wrenching the deck and laying the whole bow open. In order to save the boat and all on board, put her before the wind, and commenced throwing overboard Indian provisions and cutting up the deck of the guards, which soon appeared to ease her. Repaired damage done the bow by stuffing in blankets. Soon began to gain on the leak: but the gale and sea had increased to such an extent that we had no other resource than keeping her before the wind, which was running directly from the land.

"At daylight on Thursday the wind commenced to haul to the eastward until it reached east, which was very favorable, enabling us to run directly on our course.—Gale continued throughout the day. Had signals of distress hoisted, but discovered no vessels. On Friday night the gale had increased to a complete hurricane, with heavy squalls of rain, with tremendous sea, so much that it was thought impossible for the boat to survive it much longer; and, on the other hand, we were fast drawing in to the land and no other resource than running her on shore. Daylight at last broke, when we found ourselves in about seven fathoms water. At seven o'clock breakers were discovered in every direction ahead, without seeing land, when our situation became alarming in the extreme, and all on board deemed their immediate destruction inevitable, but, thanks to a kind Providence, we ran over the shoal in only ten feet water, and soon discovered the land—were under the lee of it, and let go anchor in eight feet water. Discovered a house on the shore; sent out the boat, and found ourselves under the lee of Britton Island, twenty-five miles from the Balize. Remained there until Saturday, at half-past 12 o'clock, when we got under way and ran for the Balize."

A few nights since, a negro fellow was shot by a boy 13 years of age, while entering his mother's house, in Springfield, near Vicksburg. The negro had been hunted off before, and returning, made his way up to the door in the dead of the night, when the boy shot him.

Fireman's Review.—The various branches of our Fire Department turned out on Saturday afternoon for inspection and review. There were eight engines on the ground together with the hose and ladder companies, all well equipped and in good order. They made a handsome display, both in number and quality, and exhibited their various powers by playing upon several of our highest buildings.

An attempt was made to try their skill upon the Center Church, and trains of hose were laid from Rowland's Force Pump on the Canal, and from the Reservoir at the upper part of Chapel-street, but strange as it may seem, the young gentlemen of Yale College, engaged in the exercise of kicking a foot-ball, determined that the hose should not be laid across the upper Green, and actually succeeded in preventing the operations of the hose and engines from the Reservoir, and kept possession of the field, in the face of our public authorities and several officers of the College.

The efficiency of the apparatus being tested, the Mayor and other officers of the city, together with the Engineers and Firemen, partook of a cold collation in the State House.

The firemen and others were much chagrined by the interference of the students, and the officers alone prevented a severe retaliation.

DISGRACEFUL OUTRAGE.—In consequence of the collision on the Green on Saturday afternoon, some apprehension was felt for the safety of the fire engines and a watch was kept at several of the engine houses till 12 at night, when, no disturbance appearing, the watchmen retired. Soon after that hour, however, a gang of students, in disguise, made a rush upon the engine house, and with axes and other implements commenced their destruction. The engine is called the Washington, a beautiful machine, entirely new, and one of the most valuable in the city. The beautiful portrait of the Father of his country, with which she was ornamented, was smashed in, the air chamber destroyed, and many fearful gashes were made in various parts of her body. About two hundred feet of hose was deliberately cut and destroyed.

While this was going on, the City Watch rallied, but were assailed with brickbats and other missiles, and so overpowered by numbers that their services were inefficient, and it was not until the alarm bells were rung, and the citizens began to turn out, that the rioters dispersed.

The College Faculty view these circumstances with deep regret, and have come promptly forward and offered to repair all damages, and will exercise all the means in their power to prevent the repetition of such offences.—New Haven Herald.

Sale of Popish Saints.—The following may afford some illustration of the falling off of the influence of Popery in France:

"The church of Melville, Department du Nord, requiring repairs internally and externally, the Building Committee came to a resolution, that the old statues and busts of the saints, which occupied various niches, should be sold by auction; and hand-bills were accordingly posted up. The day of sale arrived, but brought very few purchasers. St. Catharine was knocked down for one franc; St. Sebastian for ten sous; and St. John for eight sous; so on with the rest; and the gross amount of this petty economy did not reach forty francs.—Galignani's Messenger.

The New York American has recently been publishing several "rafting sketches," drawn up by one apparently engaged in the business on the Ohio. They are beautifully written, and some of the sketches are told in a chaste and graphic manner.—Witness the following:

Bright and early the next morning we were afloat. Towards evening we passed Steubenville, whose puffing factories and colonaded hotel and white seminary gave it a thriving appearance, and night and darkness came down upon us before we reached Wheeling. It is a law that rafts running in the night shall carry a light forward and aft to warn steamboats, but which is only observed by holding a torch when one is heard approaching. Raftmen, however, have nothing to fear from this craft, and many an amusing story is told of encounters between them. A boat going up stream once ran against a raft, and sinking its head ran upon it as far as her wheel house, anticipating much sport in walking over the old float; but when thus far she made a halt, nor could all her paddling and floundering move her an inch, while the raft nothing daunted moved on down stream very coolly.

The engine was reversed, but lo! she was fast! The firemen plied the wood and rosin, the engineer crowded on a full head of steam, the fire roared, the engine clanked and hissed, the echoes of the 'scape pipe rang among the hills, the pilot swore and the captain raved, the passengers laughed, and the raft-men derided and black-guarded the crew, but all would not do, the raft was unyielding, and the boat was at a dead set! The men could neither be hired, coaxed, nor driven to assist in getting her off, and on they floated together for ten miles, when the pilot thinking they had been sufficiently punished, called his men and helped them off.—Steamboats have learned that rafts are "ugly customers," and shun them as they would a sand-bar.

Condition of England.—The picture drawn by journals and individuals, of the distress among the operatives, is not overcolored. Although the Duke of Wellington declared in the House of Lords that every man who would work, could support himself in England, yet it is asserted, again and again, that the hand-loom weavers are starving at their looms! Mr. Crawford stated in the House of Commons last week, that out of five thousand two hundred and forty-two persons visited in a country town, to ascertain their condition, one hundred and thirty-six were subsisting upon six pence per head per week!—that two hundred and ninety-one were subsisting upon ten pence ha'penny per head—that five hundred were subsisting upon one shilling per head—that eighteen hundred and fifty-nine were subsisting upon one shilling and sixpence per head—and fifteen hundred were subsisting upon one shilling and nine pence per head, and that eight hundred and twelve were subsisting upon two shillings and two pence per head per week—so that the the poorest had less than one penny per day to puy food with, while those who were in a better condition, had but about three pence ha'penny—and this state of destitution was not confined to one section of the country but it was general.

Mr. Crawford went on to say, that five-sixths of the total number mentioned, had scarcely a blanket to cover them—that eighty-five families had no blankets—that forty-seven families were sleeping on chaff beds and wood shavings.—Charleston Mercury.

Somnambulism extraordinary.—A most extraordinary feat was performed last week, by a gentleman of Cayuga county, engaged as a juror, and lodging in one of the hotels at Auburn. The jury had been engaged on a very trying case for several hours—not closing their labors till near midnight—soon after the individual alluded to retired to rest. To make use of his own explanation since, he had not long been asleep before his mind became greatly agitated. He imagined himself attacked by a body of Indians—from whom, in attempting to flee, he jumped out of bed—and, after a few well directed blows at the window, bounded out. The distance from the window to the ground is twenty feet; and a solid walk of lime stone was there to receive him. His alarm still continued, and he started off to scape the imaginary foe, for some fifty rods, when he was overtaken by some gentlemen, who, lodging in the same room, had been awakened by his movements only in time to witness his exit from the window, and had proceeded with all haste for his recovery. When taken, he was still asleep; and so continued till after his return to the Exchange in their care. Singular enough, a slight pain, and a little blistering of his feet, are the only inconveniences this notable exploit has occasioned the performer.—N. Y. Sun.

Escaped probably.—A well clad individual yesterday applied at the Atlas office to have some printing done; and when asked if he had the copy from which to do it, said he would write out his job. He was furnished with writing materials, and after scribbling for half an hour, produced a sheet of unintelligible hyeroglyphics—suns, moons, stars, deaths heads, cross-bones &c., which he wanted executed instanter on gold paper. He said they would be notes on the "Bank of Jerusalem," that he wanted four millions of them printed, and the printer might take his pay out of the edition worked off! this being demurred to, he conceived himself insulted, put himself on his dignity, and declared he was King Solomon; that the Rothschilds had sent him over four ship loads of gold, in part on a long standing claim he had on cities of London and Paris; and that he was now on his way to chastise the Emperor of Russia, for a violation of faith.

He is probably some lunatic escaped from his friends, is apparently fifty years of age, and dressed in a strong suit of gray clothes.—Albany Atlas.

Police.—Tuesday.—Officer Bowyer yesterday arrested Wm. S. Snelling, George Wilkes, and George B. Woolridge, Editors and proprietors of a weekly paper called the "Sunday Flash." The arrest was made upon two bench warrants issued from the Court of Sessions, the one upon an indictment of the Grand Jury against the paper itself, the other upon an indictment for libel found in favor of Mr. Levy, a broker of Wall street, who made complaint at the Police office to that effect. Snelling was committed for want of the requisite bail, and the other two were liberated upon giving the requisite security to answer.—Cour. & Enquirer.

Slavers at St. Helena.—The ship Howard, at Boston from Calcutta, via St. Helena, reports the arrival at the latter place of the brig Gabriel, a slaver, which had been captured when fifteen days from Havannah, by H. M. brig of war Acorn.—She had a cargo of bale goods lumber and rice. In one of the bags of rice were found papers which gave information that twenty-three slave vessels were fitting out from Havanna. The Gabriel's crew were put on board the Acorn, which sailed for the coast of Africa, to land them on a desolate and uninhabited part of the coast.

Several other slavers previously captured, were breaking up at St. Helena.

No less than 1600 slaves taken from captured slave ships, were at St. Helena when the Howard left.

Horrible.—The state society on the borders of Texas and Arkansass, is horrible in the extreme. The following is an example:

The Natchitoches Herald records a most horrible transaction, in which some Texas marauders were engaged. They crossed the line into the U. S. territory, and captured a man named Boatright, whom they intended to bury alive. He stood by and saw them digging his grave, when he started to run for a thicket—a dozen muskets were levelled at him, and he fell a lifeless corpse. His offence was that he refused to recognize their authority, and expressed his opposition to their many lawless acts.

Supposed attempt at Assassination.—On Wednesday evening of last week, about six o'clock, a ball passed through a pane of glass in the window of the boot store of R. McCulloch, at the corner of Dock and Third sts., and entered a partition wall a few feet distant. It is supposed to have been discharged by an air gun, as the report heard was very indistinct, in the hand of some person standing at or near Mr. Gowen's building, adjoining the Exchange, whose intention was malicious. It passed within a few inches of the head of Mr. John W. McGrath, who was sitting on the window sill, in conversation with Mr. McCulloch.—Phil. Chron.

Seaman's Friend Society.—Last evening the 12th anniversary meeting at the First Presbyterian church, Washington Square, and was attended by a large number of persons, in addition to the members of the Society. The exercises were of a very interesting character.

Capt. Henry Lelar, jr., one of the Board of Managers, read a report which was listened to with much attention. From the report we learn that at present there are what are termed "Homes" in this city, three in number, at which, during the past year, more than a thousand seamen were boarded. The board are gratified to report that similar institutions are in all our principal seaports, and even in distant India. The corner-stone of one on a large scale has recently been laid in New York.

After the reading of the report, addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Barnes, Rev. Dr. Tyng, and Rev. Mr Kennedy, which were exciting and interesting. We are satisfied that no one present felt otherwise than as a friend of seamen, and wished success to the institutions designed for the benevolent object of generally ameliorating their condition.

The amount of funds received the past year was $111343, all of which has been expended.—Phil. Gazette, Oct. 25th.

Losses by Banks.—The Philadelphia Spirit of the Times, gives a list of all the sums of money that have been lost by robberry, corruption, and mismanagement of banks, that have come to light within one year. The names of the banks, and as far as known, of the individual robbers, are stated at length. The aggregate loss amounts to forty-two millions two hundred sixty-four thousand dollars.

Joseph W. Place, who was confined in Vevay, Indiana, awaiting a trial for shooting at, and severely wounding two young ladies, committed suicide by taking poison on the 16th ult.

The ravages of the Yellow Fever.—In a charity sermon preached in New Orleans, by the Rev. Mr. Clapp, he said "that he had resided 20 years, within a few months, in New Orleans, and during that time had witnessed 11 epidemic yellow fever years, and 2 cholera—each epidemic carrying away to a sudden grave never less than 3000 human beings, and often 5000. Within that 20 years 100,000 human beings had found a grave in New Orleans, and of that immense host, 25,000 were young men between the ages of 18 and 20 years; each one the representative of a distant family, with whose fate that family was connected, rising when he rose, and with his fall sinking hopeless and forever."

The old Safety Fund "Bank of Buffalo," the Free "Bank of Olean," and the "Bank of Bennington," Vt. are all rejected by the brokers of this city, except at a heavy discount.

The Milwaukie Journal says that a large and rich body of lead ore has been found on Sugar River.

Twenty thousand bushels of wheat, two thousand eight hundred bushels of corn, and eight thousand two hundred barrels of flour, were the receipts of Buffalo one day last week.

The whole amount of funds raised in the United States and appropriated to the seamen during the present year was $40,000, of which $28,000 was expended by the American Seaman's Friend Society, and $12,000 by local Societies, and for the support of Mariners' churches.

Two years ago, Marcus Morton was elected Governor of Massachusetts by one vote, and at the election just passed in Pennsylvania, Mr. Darise, Whig, was elected to the Senate by a majority of one vote over his competitor.

Cincinnati is about to be lighted with gas. The necessary works are already in progress.

Britton, who has been indicted at the Court of Common Pleas now in session at Lowell, Mass., for murdering Miss Stevenson at the Cambridge alms-house, was brought before the Supreme Court in Cambridge recently, and the trial deferred till April next.

The Mercer (Pa.) Luminary states, that a few nights previous, a party of men from Virginia came to that co. and apprehended four runaway slaves. They secured them, intending to start for home the next day. In the meantime, however, some whites interfered, released the negroes, and arrested the Virginians for kidnapping.

The Brockville Statesman mentions a rumor that the militia forces of Upper and Lower Canada are to be consolidated, and Sir A. McNab to be Adjutant General.

The Library of Harvard University is the largest in the United States, it contains 57,942 volumes.

Deaths in Philadelphia last week 115—adults 61, children 54. In Boston, 32.

The total vote for Govenor at the late election in Pennsylvania was—Porter 136,576; Banks 113,573; Lemoye (Abolition) 793; Porter over Banks, 23,003.

The population of Iowa territory is said to be sufficient to entitle it to admission into the Union as a State.

Some of the people of Illinois talk of amending their Constitution, so as to permit the introduction of slavery, with a view to the cultivation of hemp and tobacco

Pork is said to have been contracted for in Cincinnatti, at $2 per cwt.

Notice is given that the publication of the New York Times & Star is finally given up, and that henceforth it will be merged in the Commercial Advertiser.

The Philadelphia papers, without any exception condemn the political movements of Bishop Hughes.

Thirteen hundred gallons of spirituous liquors were lately burnt on the green in Barre, Me. The liquors constituted the stock of several retailers who promised to give up the business on condition that the temperance people would pay for what they had on hand.

Right is right, though only one man in a thousand pursues it; and wrong will be forever wrong, though it be the owned practice of the other nine hundred and ninety-nine.

Snow was several inches deep on the Allegany mountains, on Monday last.

MARRIED,

In German, on the 24th ultimo., by Rev. Charles Bush, Mr. SAMUEL W. HALL, of DeRuyter, and Miss ELIZABETH R. ROTHSFORD, of Perrysburgh, Ohio.

LIST OF LETTERS.

G. N. Swinney, (business attended to,) Denison & Cately, [Your work shall be done soon.] Rev. Joel Greene, [We will write you.] H. M. Hill, [all right,] "John, a Gospel Baptist," [We do not see the force of the article. No responsible name.]—Jesse L. Moss, P. M.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

B. G. Stillman, $2, cr. Matthew Stillman to 34 vol. 3. Oliver Curtis $3, cr. J. B. Wells, vol. 1 & 2. Joel Greene $2,25, cr Utter & Bassett, vol. 2. E. Maxson $1, cr. Betsey Coon, vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

"Lovers of Good Tea"
WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

DRUGS & MEDICINES
"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at
S. D. DELLAY'S.

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster is unrivalled in curing scrofulous swellings, scurvey sores, lame back, and limbs; and seldom fails to give relief in local Rheumatism. If applied to the side it will cure many of the common Liver complaints, and if applied to the neck in season, it will cure the Quinsey. It is also an excellent remedy for diseases of the spine.

The virtues of the Plaster have been witnessed by thousands of the most respectable individuals in the states of Vermont and New-York who have tested its efficacy.—Price, 25 cents per roll.
For sale by S. D. DELLAY.
De Ruyter, Nov 10. 37tf

G. W. KNOWLTON
HAS taken a shop in the basement of the three story building, one door north of Sutton & Quinby's Store, where he will manufacture to order Boots and Shoes of any kind or style to suit his customers.
Ladies Kid or Morocco Slips and Shoes, Pranello and Gaiter boots, of the first quality and style, very cheap.
N. B. Customer's leather manufactured on short notice, cheap for good pay. Please call and enquire the prices and satisfy yourselves.
De Ruyter, Oct 23, 1841 35tf

STOVES.
COLD WINTER IS COMING.
ABIJAH N. ANNAS.
LATE of the firm of "Elmore Annas & Ayer," has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore (La Fayette Block,) where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and
Fancy Parlor Stoves,
Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in his line of business.
The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper,
BRASS AND TIN WARE
Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as
LOW PRICES
Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.
Eave Troughs
Made and put up to order. Also,
JUST RECEIVED
And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Climax Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.
JOB WORK
☞Done well, on short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block No 3 Cortland Street.
De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

NEW GOODS
AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!
S. G. WALKER,
HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of
☞BOOTS & SHOES,☜
Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than any ever sold before in this town (for the especial reason that I have "Peculiar advantages in purchasing") that is to say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.
De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34yl

MADISON COM. PLEAS
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, and Jane Goodwin, by John Maxson, the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
IN PARTITION

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition therein, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, on the 26th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated in the village of De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of Le Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded, beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner thereof; thence south about one rod to lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence east on the said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by Marcus Bump; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.
BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

NO MONOPOLY!
THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.
De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE,
A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf
De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

NO IMPOSITION!
NO STATES PRISON WORK!
THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.
De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.
SUTTON & QUINBY,
HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of
Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;
Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as
LOW PRICES,
as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,
One Price and Ready Pay.
Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the verriest banterer.
GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians or Families at prices, 10 per cent less than any establishment in this place, at the STONE STORE

JOHN N. ELMORE,
IS Agent for the sale of the following valuable Medicines:—
Rev. I Covert's Balm of Life
Moffat's Phœnix Bitters
Moffat's Life Pills
Phinney's Pills
Phelp's Tomato Pills
Mile's " "
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.
Balm of China.
Parker's Pulmonary Balm.
Cheeseman's Arabian Balsam.
Hutchinson's Liniment.
With others too numerous to mention.
Oct. 4.

Swedes, English and Russia Bar Iron, Round and square American Iron, Swedes Horse Shoe Iron, Band and Hoop Iron, Nail rods, Saxony German, Cast and Spring Steel, Swedes Iron Nails, Cast Steel Shovels, Mill and X Cut Saws for sale very low at the STONE STORE
October 4.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA
WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the
October 4. STONE STORE.

L. W BLISS' Window Sash
Bliss' & Co. " Blinds
Holme's Sampson & Salisbury Edged Tools, consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE,
October 4 Manufacturers' Agent.

1 CASE Gentlemen's CLOTH CAPS, Fur Trimmed.
1 CASE Ladie's Silk Hats,
ALSO
The splendid $8 LACE VEIL, at $4.50, for sale at the STONE STORE

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.
TAKE NOTICE.
THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, and Valices, common and Brussel's Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this kind, which I can sell as low as any shop west of Albany or Utica, and even De Ruyter not excepted, according to quality and for durability.
Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wood, and some money, and the remainder in Notes; also, wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese and every thing that is raised by the Farmer in this vicinity. Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, Pine Lumber, &c &c &c.
Pine Lumber for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. 10,000 feet first rate Ash Flooring, and one half of a new Dwelling House to rent for one year or more.
J. R. RIDER
De Ruyter, Oct 5, 1841 22tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT!
S. M. HOUSE,
RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order
Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.
N. B Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.
One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.
De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

NOTICE.
THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day by its own limitation. All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and settle.
JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
27tf WILLIAM J. AYER.
De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.
Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequalled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.
De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the
Oct. 4th. STONE STORE.

CASH
PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.
CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

POETRY.

From the New England Puritan.

The Scape Goat.

BY WILLIAM B. TAPPAN.

"And Aaron shall lay both hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions and all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send them away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness; and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited.—Leviticus xvi 21st, 22nd.

Away to the desert the Scape Goat flies;
On him the sin of the people lies;
Confession is made with the laying of hands.
And he bears the transgression to desolate lands.

To desolate lands, with an errand of woes,
And a curse for his burden, the fugitive goes;
And none may stay him on his path—
The heavily prest with Jehovah's wrath!

Now Israel! be glad;—let the timbrel and song
Thro' thy tents the thank-offering of music prolong
From sin and transgression and bale thou art free,
Thy God from the cherubs communeth with thee.

'Tis past the altar no longer is red
With blood, or the flame of sacrifice fed;
The Scape Goat no longer burden our woes
And the curse due to sin to the wilderness goes.

And where are the sinning nations now?
Do earth's kingdoms no more idolatry bow?
Transgression and crime, are they not found with us?
And who shall bear off the burden of curse!

No Aaron is here with the laying of hands
On the goat that conveys to desolate lands
The guilt of the people, without and within,
To leave them released from the thraldom of sin.

Did Israel return to his folly again!
Type, symbol and substance, for him were they vain
Where shall the wild Gentile appear in his pride,
When the Olive of God even withered and died!

O priest of Melchisideck! only to THEE
Appealing he looks—for THOU, only, can'st free;
Not a family, tribe, not a nation alone—
For a WORLD that has wandered thy blood can atone.

In the GARDEN, on Thee, all its guilt that had past,
And all that the future, uncounted, could cast,
Was confessed, when the hands of Infinite Power
Were laid on the Infinite in agony's hour

On the cross thou didst take and bear it away
To lands where death and corruption have sway,
And tho' fann'd in their triumph, by arrogant wing,
Thou saw'st not their reign, and Thou knew'st not their sting.

Now, NOW, to the cross, in my sorrow I fly,
Assured by the mercy that beams from thine eye,
That from sin, by thy suffering, forever made free,
I'm safe, Blessed Sacrifice! only with THEE.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Oberlin Evangelist.

BEAUTIES OF SLAVERY!

PALMYRA JAIL, Mo., Sept. 15, 1841.

DEAR BROTHER—It no doubt, seems strange to you, to see my letter dated as above—and strange it would be, had not our Savior, more than eighteen hundred years ago, said, "Behold the Devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried"—and did we not remember that the Apostles, and thousands of ancient Christians were cast into prison, "for the name of Jesus," and "for conscience toward God"—Remembering these things, it is not strange that the Devil should even now cast God's little ones into prison. We are told, "it is through much tribulation, we must enter into the kingdom of God;" and "All who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution"—"yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." I am not at all astonished to see days of persecution commence—I have expected them. I have felt that they would come, before the poor slave could be delivered, and that some must make up their minds to be sacrificed upon the altar of Slavery—and if I am thus to be sacrificed, I submit cheerfully, gladly, "rejoicing that I am counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Jesus." I feel unworthy to be here, but am perfectly willing, if the will of my Father be so. "Not as I will, but as thou wilt."

Doubtless you have heard the cause of my being in this place—viz., for stretching out my hand to help the poor—for following the Samaritan's example—for loving my neighbor as myself—for doing to others, as I would wish them to do to me—for acting out the principles of the Bible, and the spirit of the gospel—or, plainly, for attempting to help across the river, one who wished and requested the assistance, being in trouble, and desiring to escape from the iron despotism of Slavery. Such, brother, is my offense. For this, I have been in this place more than nine weeks—eight of which, we were confined to a very large chair, so that we could move but little. We are now under sentence of TWELVE years labor in the Penitentiary, for this GRIEVOUS CRIME!!

We have broken no LAW of the state—They have no law touching the point—but being "exceedingly mad against" us, and determined on revenge, any how, after a trial of two days, the jury brought in a verdict of guilty—not according to law and evidence, but in accordance with their own prejudice and cruel malice. The excitement has been, and is very great, in old and young—far and near. When the verdict was given in, a shouting and clapping of hands filled the house. Hundreds crowded round, and gazed as if they were looking upon some terrible monsters.

Do you ask how I feel under such treatment?—Happy. The weeks, spent here, have been happy weeks—pleasant, profitable and memorable weeks. I never expect, look back upon any portion of my past life with greater joy, and satisfaction, than upon the time spent in this chair. The Savior has been our constant companion, to whom we have had great delight in approaching, and who has poured into our souls, the consolations of his grace. Time has passed rapidly and sweetly away. I have been enabled to say with David, "Though a host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear." The love of Jesus, has cast out fear, and our souls have been kept in peace.

My mind is calm, and composed, in view of the future. I have no anxiety, as to what shall become of this body, if so be that my Savior be glorified.

If I am to labor for years in prison, to satisfy the spite of blood-thirsty men, be it known that I go with a clear conscience, that I go cheerfully, gladly, triumphantly—knowing that the enemies are but heaping coals upon their own heads—that truth will prevail, and that great will be the good resulting from such confinement. I go perfectly satisfied with my Father's dealings; and rejoicing in his will. If the great cause of Liberty, truth, and righteousness will be advanced by my suffering or death, I say with all my heart, Amen. "Father, glorify Thy name." May thousands, arise in my stead—the cause roll on with power—and the Lord arise, and "cut short the work in righteousness."

For the Truth, and the Slave,

Yours, truly, GEO. THOMPSON.

NOTE—The two brothers with me are Alanson Work, who has a wife and four children, and James E. Burr. ☞ Will the N. Y. Evangelist please give the above an insertion—Many of my friends read it.

LIVE AND LET LIVE.

We do not live for ourselves alone. We should be willing that others should live as well as ourselves. Give every one a chance. The selfish man envies his neighbor everything which may in any way conduce to his prosperity, and the comfort and happiness of himself and family. He lives for himself alone. He would not "let live," if it interfered in any way with his own views. If he finds another likely to prosper by the same profession he is pursuing, he looks upon him with a jealous eye, as much as to say, "you are taking bread out of my mouth, or money out of my purse." He does not seem to be aware that there are other people to whom the world owes a living besides himself. The laws of mutual rights seem to be unknown to him. Interest he has not for himself. Nobody has rights but himself. Nobody should prosper but himself. Nobody should look cheerful but himself. Nobody should be happy but himself. The narrow-minded selfishness of some speaks but little in favor of kindness and charity. The confident assurance with which they assume exclusive rights indicates a disposition but little creditable to the common feelings of kindness and charity.—People of this nature are to be found in all ranks and grades of society.

"Live and let live" is but too seldom found in the vocabulary of the rich. They live and think others can live too; little thinking that troubles and difficulties surround others in less prosperous condition than themselves. They will take the clothes from the poor man's back for arrearages of rent. They do not consider that because they can live without trouble, care or anxiety, sure of certain incomes, others can support their families, pay their rents and meet all demands against them at once. Because they have resources at all times at their command, they do not seem to be aware that there are others who have not, and that a little unfavorable turn of fortune may reduce them to distress from which they have no immediate means of relief.

Honorable competition is justifiable in every profession, and it encourages industry and improvement, but it is to be regretted that competition is often apt to degenerate into unfair rivalry, and one will resort to mean artifices to supplant another in his exertions to procure an honest living. The "let live" part of the business is entirely overlooked, and the "grab game," or the "get all you can" doctrine predominates over all others.

This kind of "every-one-for-himself" doctrine is sometimes found among mechanics. One announces that he can do more work in the same space of time, do it better and at a cheaper rate than any of his neighbors. Heedless of the motto "let live" he looks out for himself only. He will work for a time at an astonishingly cheap rate, and after the public have been sufficiently blinded, he will put on an enormous charge for some other work, which the unwary suppose to be all right at an exceedingly low rate, and pay without thinking to enquire whether they have been deceived or not.

And thus the world goes on. One endeavors to overreach another, without regarding the honorable motto "live and let live."—Boston Transcript.

HISTORICAL INCIDENT.

The writer of this was employed, a short time since, to institute certain enquiries into the pedigree of an obscure family, formerly residing in New Jersey, for the purpose of sustaining their claim to a large estate, which had escheated, for want of heirs, to the State of New York. In the course of his duty he called upon an aged woman residing in Burlington, N. J., who was supposed to possess important information on the subject, having emigrated from Holland at about the same time with the ancestors of the claimants. In the course of conversation, the old woman gave an account of herself, and the causes of her family's emigration. Her husband had held a respectable post in the custom House at Amsterdam, under William V., Prince of Orange, and Stadtholder of Holland.

The French Revolutionary Government was in its first vigor. Holland had long trembled in the vicinity of this political Ogre, who devoured kingdoms as if they had been little children. At length her day came. The legions of France gathered on her frontier. The signal was given, and they poured over the boundary upon their defenceles prey. The ineffectual resistance of a few fortresses scarcely protracted the inevitable result, and it only remained to calculate the necessary length of the march to the capitol, in order to determine the hour when Amsterdam must fall.

In this brief interval, the venerable Prince summoned his people into the principal church of the city—they assembled—an immense multitude, in desponding but anxious silence. At length the Prince, attended by his family and principal servants, entered the church, and moved through the respectful crowds into the pulpit, which he ascended. Thence, with broken voice and tearful eye, he addressed his weeping people; briefly recapitulated the events which compelled him to desert them, whom he could no longer protect; absolved them from their allegiance, and advised them, till better times, to submit peaceably to the invader, still looking to the Kings of kings with humble faith, that he would be the friend of the friendless, the refuge of the oppressed in all their troubles, and at length in his own time, lift up the light of his countenance upon them, and give them rescue and peace.

The sobs of the people and the agitation of the Prince for a while prevailed. He, however, was the first to recover his fortitude, and requested them to join with him in singing the 46th Psalm. With his own voice he led the tune, and all the people joined in chanting.

"God is our refuge and strength: a very present help in time of trouble. Therefore will we not fear; though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the rvers thereof roar and be troubled; though the mountains shake at the swelling thereof.

"There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God; the holy place of the tabernacle of the Most High.

"God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved; God shall help her, and that right early.

"The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted. The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge.

"Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he has made in the earth! Yet he maketh wars to cease; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder. Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted in the earth; the Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

The old woman wept fresh tears as she recapitulated the scene, which was vivid in her recollection, as if it had been acted yesterday.

"I watched the kind old man," said she, "till I could no longer see his grey head above the crowd, as he passed out amid the silent reverence of his people, and never saw him again. The same day that he embarked in a miserable fishing boat for England, my husband, children and myself, gathered in haste what we could, and sailed for America. Our fathers had been his father's servants for many ages, and we had no wish to fare better than our good old master. He was an exile, and we were willing to be exiles too, rather than witness the triumph of enemies."

INCOMBUSTIBLE WASH.—Slack stone lime in a large tub or barrel, with boiling water, covering the tub or barrel, to keep in all the steam. When thus slacked, pass six quarts of it through a fine sieve. It will then be in a state of fine flour. Now to six quarts of this lime, add one quart of rock or Turk's Island salt, and one gallon of water, then boil the mixture and skim it clean. To every five gallons, of this skimmed mixture, add one pound of alum, half pound of copperas by slow degrees, add three fourths of a pound of potash, and four quarts of fine sand, or hickory ashes sifted. We suppose any kind of good hard wood ashes will answer as well as hickory.—This mixture will now admit of any coloring matter you please, and may be applied with a brush. It looks better than paint, and is as durable as slate. It will stop small leaks in the roof, prevent the moss from growing over and rotting the wood, and render it incombustible from sparks falling upon it, when laid upon brick work, it renders the brick impervious to rain or wet.

REFORMING THE ALPHABET.—We learn from the St. Louis Republican, that there is now in that city, a gentleman engaged in the laudable purpose of reforming the ALPHABET. He has adopted a new Alphabet, in which certain characters are substituted for certain sounds and by the use of which he proposes to dispense with the mute letters. He has issued several numbers of a work styled the "Literary Reformer," and gone to the expense of having type made for his new alphabet—he has also succeeded, as certificates state, in learning persons to read the new system in two hours, and he believes he can, in a very short time, one who does not know B from bull's foot, to read as well as the most learned. The professor intends shortly bringing the subject fully before a committee of learned gentlemen.

A correspondent of the Republican thus throws a little light upon this new system of language:

"One of the new letters is named and sounded awe. It is shaped some like a. I will spell a few words that will contain it, but the printer will use an apostrophe in its place. By using this new letter, we could spell 't, 'l, 'r, b't, b'k, b'l, d'b, d'ter, f'n, f't, gr't, h'ty, h'k, h'f, l'd, m', m'l, a', n't, r't, t'k, th't; instead of aught, all and awl, or brought, hawk, ball and bawl, daub, daughter, fawn, fought, groat, haughty, hawk, cough, law, lawd, maw, maul, gnaw, naught and nought, wrought, talk, thought. By the use of other new letters, all the words in our language may be reduced to the above system, a system which needs to be known by every scholar."

CRANBERRIES.—In many parts of the Commonwealth, cranberries are quite an object with the farmer. A vast many are gathered in the northern towns of Middlesex, but we know of no lands which produce more than some of the meadows in Sherburne. Mr. Albert Wier has extensive fields of them, and it is believed he has gathered upwards of 200 bushels from ONE ACRE. Such land is now valued higher than any which is now used for farming purposes: and when it is considered that the Cranberry under proper FLOODING, produces its fruit without interruption for a succession of years, and that 50 bushels was gathered by one man in a single day, we may conceive of the high value set upon such meadows.—Mass. Plowman.

DESTRUCTIVE KISSING.—Cicero speaks of a bronze statue of Hercules which had the features worn away by the frequent osculations of the devout. Several instances of the same kind have occurred in modern times. The face of a figure of the Savior, among the bronze bas reliefs which adorn the Cassa Santa at Loretto, has, in this manner, been kissed quite away. The foot of the famous statue of St. Peter, in the Vatican, has lost most of its metal by the continued application of the lips and the foreheads of its Votaries: and it has been found necessary to protect the foot of the statue of the Savior, by Michael Angelo, in the Minerva, from similar injury, by a brass buskin.

MANUFACTURE OF ANCIENT GEMS.—The number of persons engaged in fabricating ancient gems in Rome, at the present day, is, we believe, considerable; and there is consequently great difficulty in ascertaining the genuine from the imitations, when the latter are finely executed. But the appearance of antiquity—that must be copied too: and ingenuity has devised a very curious and extraordinary process for producing the effect. The fresh cut cameo is crammed down the throat of a turkey, and left in its intestines for a sufficient length of time, when the fowl is killed, and it is found that the stone (subject to the trituration of the gizzard), presents every semblance of a grecian treasure which has been buried 2,000 years.—Literary Gazette.

They who will abandon a friend for one error, know little of human character, and prove that their hearts are as cold as their judgments are weak.

If heaven does not enter into us by way of holiness, we shall never enter into heaven by way of happiness.

Temperance Department.

RUMSELLING WORSE THAN COUNTERFEITING.

At the great temperance meeting in Baltimore, Mr. Hunt, "the drunkard's friend," made the following remarks:

"What if a man should keep a mad dog for the little boys to plague for a penny, and one get bit and have the hydrophobia, would you take up the little boy and punish him, and let the man go free? No, you'd take the man and imprison him for such heartless practices. If a poor drunkard should take in change a counterfeit note, he says, I can't afford to lose it, and he tries to pass it away, knowing it to be a counterfeit, you'd put him in prison, wouldn't you, because society has a right to protect itself. And now I want to know, not but that there are some good men in the businesss, (though take them by and large, they are a scurvy set,) which does the most harm, cheating by counterfeit money, or selling liquor? and I want to ask you some questions, and should like to have you answer them. Have you ever known, any of you, a man disabled from paying his debts because he had received counterfeit money? If you have, I want you to say 'yes;' if you have not, I want you to say 'no.' 'No,' cried every one. Well," said Mr. H., "have you ever known a man unable to pay his debts by liquor-selling? If you have, say 'yes'—'Yes,' said every one. Have you ever known a man abuse his wife, beat his children, and himself transformed to a brute by counterfeit money? Have you ever seen a kind father, or an affectionate child become a curse to his family and a disgrace to himself by receiving a counterfeit? If you have, say 'yes;' if not, say 'no;'—all cried 'No.'

"Well, have you ever known, all these and a thousand fold greater evils from the selling of liquor? If you have not, say 'no;' if you have, 'raise your hands. Every hand is up,' said Mr. H., 'and you are right; a thousand fold more crime, poverty and misery, has, come from selling liquor, than ever has, ever will, or ever can, from counterfeiting. What honest man, then, can any longer hesitate whether to sell or not to sell?"

"A little boy went home from a meeting held in a little country town where I had spoken, and said to his father—'Father, how should you like to be a counterfeiter?, 'What do you mean, sir?' said his father. Why, father, said the little fellow, 'a gentleman said selling liquor was worse than couterfeiting, and all the people held up their hands and said it was so.' 'Go to bed, you little rascal,' said the old gentleman, 'I don't know what things are coming to, it's this priestcraft and politics—I'll stand it no longer.' However, he went to bed, and presently he began to remember how many men had been ruined at his counter, and never rested, till he went upon his knees and promised God never again to be engaged in the deadly traffic. And in that town at this day not a man can be found who sells liquor."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.

Too well known to need comment

DR. WATERMAN'S

Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this [illegible] are owing to the immediate effects produced on the [illegible], it being carried by the absorbents to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, [illegible] cases, such as acute and chronic Rheumatism, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c &c &c

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to the "New David or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above [illegible] reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will never be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

☞For which the highest price will be [illegible]
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 62 [illegible]

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE 17.

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, at 50 cts pr lb, CASH, Old Hyson do at 5s6 Cash. New Orleans MOLASSES at 30 cts pr Gal.

He has also just opened 3 packages of Crockery, directly from Liverpool, bought for cash, and at prices which he is confident are

50 per cent Lower, than those of any New-York purchase. He can furnish any style of Crockery which may be wanted, and offers either

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig, Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills.
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr Phinney's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlæm Oil.
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey

Godfrey's Cordial.
Foster's Anodyne Cordial.
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organum,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cradked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWLER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Webster's Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar.

Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
[illegible] "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.

De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber [illegible] a BINDERY [illegible] in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return his thanks for the patronage he has received [illegible] friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken [illegible] formerly occupied by Dr. [illegible] Store,) together with [illegible] where he will be happy to [illegible] with a call—He [illegible] WARRANT his work to be [illegible]

N. B. [illegible] Fashions just received. [illegible]

J. M. [illegible] experienced Journeymen [illegible] to making up [illegible] in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, [illegible] 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Dr. S. Bailey.
Alfred—[illegible] Maxson Greene, Samuel [illegible]
B[illegible] P. M.
B[illegible] Silas Bailey, Alfa [illegible]
B[illegible] Dr. Wm. M. [illegible]
[illegible] Samuel E. Lan[illegible]
[illegible] H. W[illegible], P. M.
[illegible] P. Livermore, P. M., [illegible]
[illegible] H. S. Crandall.
[illegible] Stillman.
[illegible] Crandall.
[illegible] Rogers
[illegible] Geo. P. Burdick
[illegible] Potter, James Hubbard, [illegible]
[illegible] Beauchamp.
[illegible] Stillman.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson, Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers, Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY

Plainfield—[illegible] Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jeptha F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 38.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 90.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE,] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Department.

From the London Christian Guardian.

EFFECTS OF FAITHFUL REPROOF.

In the autumn of 1829, I met with an accident of so serious a nature, that, had not surgical assistance been rendered almost instantaneously, I should not have lived an hour. This happened on a Sabbath morning. When the necessary operation had been performed, and I was able to speak, my first exclamation was, "Doctor I thought I was off!" which I accompanied with an oath.

The worthy surgeon, who was a very young man, replied, "You were indeed nearly off this world's stage; but, may I take the liberty of asking you were you prepared to meet that great Being whose name you so lightly treated?"

I cannot describe the confusion I felt at this merited reproof, any more than the astonishment it occasioned. I confessed that I feared I was not in a state to meet my Maker in judgment.

"Pardon my observation, sir," said he, "you may perhaps think that I am stepping out of my province, in interposing in spiritual matters; but, sir, I should consider myself an unworthy member of the mystical body of our Lord Jesus Christ, if I suffered you, or any one I may be called upon to attend, to imagine that I felt any thing short of deep sorrow, when I hear the name of my Maker irreverently treated."

I apologized for my becoming levity, assuring him that I used the expression most unthinkingly, and with no intention of disrespect to my Creator.

"Believe me, my dear sir," he replied, "I do not accuse you of any intentional disrespect to your Creator, much less to me; but allow me to observe, that I should have thought the most natural sentiment of your heart would have been, to have returned your sincere thanks for your preservation; for no man was ever nearer death that did not die. I was merely the instrument of rescuing you from so sudden an end—the success of my endeavors belonged to God; and to him are your praises and thanksgivings due. May I request you to consider seriously the events of the last hour? Think that in that short period of time, you were perfectly well, and on the verge of eternity, and again restored; think what might have been your fate, had it pleased the great Disposer of events to have called you into his presence. I will say no more at present, as I am sure, when you reflect on these matters, you will not wonder at my rebuke."

I was left without reply. He took his leave, promised to call on me the following day. Perhaps at no period of my life did I ever feel more ashamed of myself, or a greater degree of admiration and respect for an utter stranger, for he was not our family surgeon, but was called in as the nearest at hand. In this apparently accidental circumstance I traced the finger of divine providence. Another practitioner, might, no doubt, have been equally successful in his operation, but I might have used the same observation unnoticed, and have been left equally unthankful to my Maker, as I was at the moment I used the expression. This providential accident afforded me an opportunity of contracting an intimate acquaintance with this pious, humble-minded Christian, who was a man of intelligent mind, and capable of giving instructions in the great truths of Christianity. He first opened my eyes to the real beauties of the Gospel, though I thought I knew them perfectly well at the time. He first brought me to understand what was meant by "justification of faith," and the doctrine of the imputed righteousness of Christ. He was born of Socinian parents, and educated in that unfortunate system until he arrived at the age of eighteen, at which period he was walking in the hospitals in London, and was the gayest among the gay and thoughtless. His conversion was brought about in rather a singular manner. Having one evening gone out with some licentious object in vew, his attention was attracted by the sound of music and singing.

He drew near to the house whence the sound proceeded. There was a number of respectable people singing a hymn. The singing was so good, that, instead of setting up a laugh at the "swadlers," as he termed them, he remained stationary until it was ended, when one of the men, who must have observed him while the hymn was singing, came out and asked him to walk in. He did so, though merely in order to furnish himself with a subject on which to exercise his powers of ridicule. A chair was placed for him, and then one of the men read a chapter from Corinthians, which he afterwards commented on; and then followed a sort of conversational disquisition, in which several took a part. "I liked," said he to me, "all that I heard, so much, that I felt gratified by being invited to meet the same parties on the following Wednesday." After a very short acquaintance, he made known his sentiments, or rather those in which he had been educated, and which he entirely renounced in less than a month, and from that time became a steady Christian.

As I have already stated, I owe to him, under God, a change of ideas which I sincerely believe will tend to my eternal benefit. I feel their grateful effects at this moment. I know, and feel an inward assurance of my Redeemer's love, that enables me to bear misfortunes, at least with resignation—conscious, that "all things will work together for good to those that love God."

From the Boston Recorder.

A SMALL DISCIPLE.

There are such. We have seen them. If our readers never saw one, we are glad. We will give a brief description of one, hoping they may be profited with the picture.

1. He has small acquaintance with the Bible. If the actual worth of that book could have been an incitement to a large acquaintance with it, or the earnest injunction of its author to study it, had prevailed, there would have been deep knowledge of it. But they have both failed.—The Scriptures are a territory into which he has taken only now and then a hasty ramble. Long and diligent journeying, then, to know what might be known, has never been practised. Hence a very small circle of ideas would embrace all his knowledge of the lively oracles.

2. He is very sparing in his attendance upon Christian privileges. Custom, and perhaps other motives, make him acquainted with the sanctuary on the Sabbath, but he is seldom discernable on other occasions. This neglect helps to keep him small. If he only had the heart to turn into all the fat pastures that are open to him, he might find ample food, and increase in spiritual stature.

3. His prayers are small. The whole heart and soul is not in them, only a part of it. And when but a small part of the soul is engaged, the prayers themselves cannot be otherwise than small. They do not go largely forth, expanding and increasing, as they must from an heart all on fire with love and zeal. They are fettered and cramped, and are dwarfish. There is nothing of the giant about them.

4. His faith is small. A grain of mustard seed is too large an object for the comparison. If his faith filled but that small measure, Zion would not be long in learning that man's spiritual strength. But he has only dim visions of eternal things. Instead of soaring upward as on eagle's wings, he grovels and creeps. If you were to place him beside some of the men of strong faith, that may be found in Zion, you would be surprised at the contrast.—Their shadow over him would make it difficult to find him.

5. He is very small also in his charities. They are drops, small drops, and not very near together either. We have heard one commended who gave all that she had, which is a large donation; and of others who have given themselves—and of others who have done what they could. All this is large and noble. But this disciple was never found in such company. It is pitiful to see one who is so largely indebted to God's beneficence, as a disciple, and one whose profession so rich, and one whose hopes embrace so large and glorious an inheritance hereafter, it is pitiful to find charity with him a small affair. It ought to be one of the largest of his Christian graces. Indeed Paul would have disciples abound in it so much that it should be like a mantle, covering and binding together all the other Christian graces, the very "bond of perfectness." We wish this disciple had hearkened to Paul. What a noble position he might have held, compared with the sorry spectacle he now presents.

Now, because all these things are true, we do not see how we can call the person any thing else than a small disciple. We looked about for a better name, but could not find one. The Scriptures speak of growing in grace, and of rising "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of of Christ." But it has not been so in this case. We have to tax charity heavily to hope he ever began to grow at all. We trust there is some life in what so nearly resembles a dead body. But all the indications are so small that we cannot but have anxiety.

We should like to make a personal address to all the small disciples, who read this article. But we have misgivings about its being of any use, because the really small disciple is the last person to suspect his own diminutiveness. He would not dream this article had any relation to him. Hence the shot would fly harmlessly over his head. We will leave him, therefore, hoping that to some of our readers, this small account of the small disciple shall be at least of some small advantage.

An Excellent Rule.—Two professors of religion were standing at the door of a theatre in the city of New York, when one of them proposed to go in and see the play, and desired his friend to accompany him. The other declined the invitation, and after being repeatedly solicited to enter, gave this excellent reason for his refusal: "If I should go in, and while there be called into eternity, and should be asked at the door of heaven where I had come from, I should be ashamed to answer."

This incident furnishes a rule for general observance. Never go to a place where you would be ashamed to die. No doubt every man would prefer to die in his bed, with his friends around him, but duty may call him away to posts on which he may fall. But duty never calls him away to the theatre or to the gambling table, or to any of the thousand gilded gates of hell, that stand open night and day, in our cities and chief towns. And, when temptation whispers in the ear that there is no harm in going once, merely to see what is to be seen, and learn the ways of the world, let conscience ask if it is a fitting place in which to die.—N. Y. Obs.

IRRITABLE CHRISTIANS.

There is too much truth in the following from the Religious Magazine:—

There was a clergyman who often became quite vexed at finding his little grandchildren in his study. One day one of these little children was standing by his mother's side, and she was speaking to him of heaven.

"Ma," said he, "I dont want to go to heaven."

"Don't want to go to heaven, my son?"

"No, ma, I am sure I don't."

"Why not, my son?"

"Why, grandpa will be there, won't he?"

"Why, yes, I hope he will."

"Well just as soon as he sees us, he will come scolding along, and say, whew! whew! whew! what are these boys here for? I dont want to go to heaven if grandpapa is going to be there."

There is no doubt that many Christians bring a reproach on religion, and disgust the young with serious things, by the moroseness of their tempers, their perpetual fretting and fuming when every thing goes not to suit them. The young are ready to say if religion makes its possessors so unlovely, I never want it. Cheerfulness, kindness, pleasant looks and words are the fruits of grace. The religion of Christ is love, and though it does not instantly root out all the evil propensities of the human heart, it must gradually transform the natural character until the Christian reflects the image of him from whose lips the language only of kindness fell.—N. Y. Obs.

Selfishness.

Cold as the grave must be the heart
That pity never moves—
Which in distress bears no part,
But self, self only loves.

Though in the world, a stranger [illegible]
Earth's beauty and her bloom,
Is but a shadow, dark and drear,
And barren as the tomb.

Distrust is read in every eye—
Deception in each breast;
My God, O rather let me die,
Than live to self addrest.

Speak not often of your own actions, nor even (when it can be properly avoided,) make allusion to yourself, as an agent in transactions which are calculated to attract notice. We do not suppose, as some may be inclined to do, that frequently speaking of our actions is necessarily a proof, although it may furnish a presumption of inordinate self-love or vanity; but it cannot be denied that by such a course, we expose ourselves to temptation and dangers in that direction. It is much safer, and is certainly much more profitable, to speak of what has been done for us and wrought in us—to speak, for instance, of ourselves as the recipients of the goodness of God than to speak of what we have ourselves done. But even here, also, although it may often be an imperative duty, there is need of deliberation and caution.—Guide to Christian Perfection.

Parent's Department.

Extracts from "Means and End of Self-Training."

WHAT IS EDUCATION?

BY MISS [illegible]

'What is education?' asked a teacher of a class of girls. Young persons, when asked such general questions, do not reply promptly. They have no thoughts on the subject, and therefore have nothing to say; or, their thoughts not being arranged, they are not ready to answer; or, they may be too difficult to answer at all. On this occasion half the girls were silent, and the rest replied, 'I don't know sir.'

'Oblige me, girls, by saying something,' urged the teacher. 'The word is not Greek—surely you have some ideas about it. What is your notion of education, Mary Bliss?'

'Does it not mean, sir, learning to read and write?' Mary Bliss paused, and the girl next her added, "and cyphering, sir, and grammar, and geography?"

'Yes, it means this, and something more. What is your idea of education, Sarah Johnson?'

'I did not suppose education meant much more than the girls have mentioned, sir. Mr. Smith, said, at the Lyceum Lecture, that the majority of the great mass of the people received their education at the common schools; and the girls have named nearly all that we learn at the common schools.'

'Does not education mean,' asked Maria Jarvis, 'the learning young men obtain at colleges? I often hear people say of a man that he has 'had an education,' when they mean merely that he has been through college.'

'You are right, Maria, in believing this to be a commonly received meaning of the term, "education:"—but it means more, and as it is important to you to have right and fixed ideas on this subject, I earnestly beg you to give me your attention, while I attempt to explain to you its full meaning.

'A great man, Mr. Locke, said, "that the difference to be found in the manners and abilities of men, is owing more to their education than any thing else." Now, as you are acquainted with men who have never seen the inside of a college, and yet who are superior in manners and abilities to some others who have passed four of the best years of their lives there, you must conclude that education is not confined to college walls.

'You are born with certain faculties.—Whatever tends to develope and improve these, is education. Whatever trains your mental powers, your affections, manners, and habits, is education. Your education is not limited to any period of your life, but is going on as long as you live. Whatever prepares you to be a profitable servant of God, and a faithful disciple of Christ—whatever increases your reverence and love of your Maker—all that in the Scripture is called "nurture and admonition of the Lord," is a part of your religious education.

'Whatever you do to promote your health, to develope and improve the strength and powers of body, is a part of your physical education.'

'What, sir?' interrupted Mary Lewis, 'do you mean running, and jumping rope, and trundling hoops, and clambering over rocks; is that a part of education?'

'I certainly do: but why do you laugh, my dear child?'

'Because, sir, I never knew that [illegible] any thing so pleasant as this.—I wish my mother could hear you, sir; she would let me play more, instead of [illegible] all the time, if she only knew that driving hoop was called [illegible].'

The teacher smiled and proceeded: 'Whatever calls forth your affections, strengthens them, whatever directs and subdues your passions, whatever exalts your virtues, and whatever improves your manners, is a part of your moral education.'

'Then,' said the same lively little girl, 'that is what my mother means when she says, "there is a lesson for you, Anne," every time any one of the family does a good thing. It seems to me I am at lessons all the time.'

"You are, Anne—the world is your school, and good examples are your very best lessons. Whatever unfolds the faculties of the mind, improves your reason, and augments your stores of knowledge, is a part of your intellectual education.

'Whatever improves your capacity for domestic affairs, or for business of any sort, is a part of your economical education. Now you will perceive from what I have said, that education is not confined to schools and colleges, but that as Anne has very well remarked, we are "educating all the time." Nor is the conduct of education confined to professed teachers, we are educating one another.

'While I am teaching you geography and arithmetic, you are perhaps trying my patience, or by your own patience calling forth my gratitude. If I make progress in these virtues, you are helping on moral education.

'The knowledge you impart to each other, the kindness you receive, the love you exchange, are all a part of your education. When you learn to sweep a room, to make a bed, or a cup of tea, a shirt, or a loaf of bread, you are getting on in your education.

'Every thing around us, my children, may help forward this great work. The sun, the moon, and the stars teach their sublime lessons. "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." The seasons make their revelations. The rain and snow, dew and frost, the trees and rocks, fruits and flowers, plants, herbs, the very stones and grass we tread upon, are full of instruction to those who study them.

'All the events and circumstances of your lives are contributing to your education. Your class-mate, Lucy Davis, has been absent from school the last two months. Reflect on what I have been saying to you, and then tell me whether Lucy, during this time, though she has not looked into a school-book, has made any progress in her education.'

The girls were silent and thoughtful for a few moments. Maria Jarvis spoke first.

'Lucy's "economical education," as you call it, sir,' she said, 'has been going on, for she has had the care of the family, and every thing to do, all through her mother's illness.'

'And I guess she has been going on in her "moral education,"' interposed little Mary Lewis, 'for I never saw any body so patient as she was with her mother's cross baby.'

'And she has not lost this opportunity for improving in her religious education,' resumed the teacher. 'You all saw her yesterday at her mother's funeral, subduing the grief of her little sisters, by her quiet resignation and affectionate devotion to them. Ah, she has been taking lessons in more important branches of education than are taught in schools.

'So you see, my dear children, that life is a school—a primary school; and that we are [illegible] scholars, and are all preparing for a day of examination, when the infallible Judge will decide how we have profited by our means of education.

Temperance Department.

From the New England Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE DIALOGUE.

Teetotaller.—Well, neighbor, I hope you are better natured than when we parted the other morning, for I wish to talk a little with you in relation to your business, for, notwithstanding the offense you took at my remarks, I am constrained to say that I am unable to reconcile rum-selling with strict moral principle.

R.—[illegible]

[illegible]

R.—You reason upon the [illegible] spirit is good for nothing, which is [illegible] matter, though many abuse it, which is not the fault of the vender; [illegible] is beneficial, and therefore you [illegible] accusing me of selling what is good for nothing.

T.—I suppose you are aware [illegible] denied that rum is ever [illegible] drunk, and with so many facts [illegible] staring you in the face, I do not see how you can pretend that it is beneficial. As a man's bill is increased with the dry goods dealer, or the provision [illegible], the comforts of life are increased to his family, but not so when his bill is increased with you. What family enjoys any more of the comforts or the necessaries of life, or any more domestic peace and happiness, as his bill is increased with the rum-seller? That rum is not necessary, is plain from the fact that some never use it, and others who have been in the habit of using it have left off, and now they say that they are better off without it than they were with it. Look at your neighbors, some have never purchased rum, while others have dealt with you for years; now look at them for yourself, and see which have made the most of their opportunities. While those who have used no alcohol have generally been prospered, not one of your customers has made any thing by his trade with you; no one now owns any more land, or produces one bushel more of grain from what he does possess, while numbers have lost their farms, and many mechanics have lost their business, in consequence of having dealt too largely with you. Now you, during the same period, appear to have made money by your trade with these customers, while they have only lost by their trade with you;

[illegible]

Natural History.

THE FALLS OF NIAGARA.

[illegible]

How sublime the [illegible] is presented [illegible] falling perpendicularly into the ocean below, whose depth it is not possible for man to fathom.

[illegible] which is [illegible] splendor, yet sublimity of the scene [illegible] new to the spectator, and creates emotions hard to be described.

[illegible] of the stormy [illegible] tempest [illegible] sounds [illegible] varied.

Strangers who remain over night, though the sound of the Falls is in their ears when they retire to rest, yet when they happen to awake from their slumbers, frequently fancy themselves in the midst of a tempest; the house trembles, the windows and doors clatter, the wind rushes and whistles around, the rain pours; and amid all, they hear the unceasing sound of the cataract. They rise to look out upon the raging storm; and when they draw the curtain, or throw up the windows, they perceive that the stars are shining sweetly, and not a zephyr disturbs the pendent leaves.

In some directions the roar of the Falls is not usually heard over six or seven miles; along the course of the river they are constantly perceptible for about [illegible] miles; they have been occasionally heard at the distance of 30 miles; and in one instance an individual asserts to have heard them at at the city of Toronto, in Canada; distant 44 miles.

The concussions of the falling waters jar the adjoining shores and the houses tremble in concert with the unceasing shock.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter. November 17, 1841.

Our Denomination.

In December, 1671, the first S. D. Baptist church was constituted in America, at Newport, R. I. This was the sixth Baptist church in the United States. Since that time, during a period of 170 years, the number of churches has increased to about 50, and the communicants to 5,500. During the same period, the Baptists have increased to several hundred. Our relative increase has been very small, and by the time that we ought to have extended a knowledge of our distinguishing sentiments throughout the land, we are but an inefficient band.—For many years our increase has been very small. The idea seemed to have prevailed that it were impossible to extend a knowledge of our peculiarities. The disadvantages of observing a day as a Sabbath different from others, has kept those in obscurity who otherwise would have shone conspicuously in almost every department of enterprize and usefulness. Within a few years past a different sentiment has prevailed.—Formerly our brethren firmly believed that all would come to observe the Sabbath of the Lord God, but were slow in the use of means to attain the object. Now the same sentiment prevails, in connection with the deep-settled conviction that God requires us to labor for this purpose. The command of the Savior, 'let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven,' comes with all its divine force, leaving no room to doubt as to what is required at our hands. Our faith in the word of inspiration teaches us that all men shall yet call the Sabbath a delight, and cease to observe a day that God has not appointed. We can not account for our comparative small increase, otherwise than from inefficiency in action. In reckoning the prospect of success, we have not sufficiently regarded the Divine influence that accompanies a faithful exhibition of truth. God has declared that his word shall not return unto him void.—And we know that the truth is sharper than a two-edged sword, and is capable of subduing the heart and changing the life. If men love God they must also love his commandments. If they place a proper estimate on His approbation, they will certainly be induced to renounce error and embrace the truth, though at the expense of worldly interests. It is therefore with us to exhibit what light God has committed to us, and others, to receive or reject at their pleasure.

For a few years past, the additions to our numbers have been greatly augmented. And were the denomination now to use the means they possess, the truths that characterize us would be widely spread, and multitudes would embrace them. The Providence of God seems to assign us a more important work in evangelizing the world than we have heretofore occupied. If it be true that the fourth command is yet binding, then it is our labor to inculcate this truth to the world. No greater obstacle apparently is placed in the way of the conversion of the Jews, than the practice of those laboring to convert them in disregarding the fourth command. So long as the validity of the Decalogue is acknowledged by the Jews, it will be impossible to convert them to a religion that denies any part of it. Therefore, the Providence of God manifestly invites us to this labor; and we know of no two departments of labor that can be better blended than these. Thousands are ready to aid in the work of the conversion of the Jews, who cannot approach them themselves on account of their disagreement relative to the fourth command of the Decalogue. It has long been a prevalent opinion that God required us to act in this matter. If this is true, is it not time to commence in earnest? Look at the field, how extensive! and already white for the harvest! Who will thrust in the sickle and reap?

'What thou doest do quickly.'

Important considerations press this language upon the Christian's heart. The world is his field, the salvation of souls is his labor, and time the season in which to work. If he look over the field he finds it peopled with a vast multitude, defiled with sin by nature, whose every thought is evil, and whose every act is sinful. A vast majority of these are enshrouded with the darkness of heathenism, in whose ears the name of Jesus has never sounded. The impress of immortality is legibly stamped upon them, while the soul-destroying influence of heathenism is defiling and unfitting them for the blissful and pure scenes of Paradise.—Others he sees who are enjoying peculiar advantages from their connection with those who fear God, who are in a still more deplorable condition fearing neither God nor regarding man, and running with open eyes in the way of Death. All around him he sees them falling a prey to death, & in their fall exclaiming, 'the battle is fought but the victory is lost forever.' He sees, too, that the enemy of souls is quick and vigilant in his efforts to destroy them. Therefore, if he will do them good, he must do it quickly.

The human heart drinks in sin without an effort. The springs of life are corrupted, and every breeze wafts the thoughtless down the streams of pleasure and vanity to the gulph of perdition. When the descent of sin is commenced, an accelerated motion hastens its victim onward. Every gay scene invites the wayward youth, and hurries him on in his career of vice, till the monitions of conscience are disregarded, and habits of sin are almost the only springs to action. To prevent this Christians are to do quickly, what they do. They are to meet the first dawnings of reason with the genial influence of religion, and implant in the young heart the principles of virtue and piety, before it has learned to love the ways of sin.

The season of man's probation is as the continuance of a vapor—'tis like the morning cloud or early dew. The first joyful note of existence ends in the heaving sigh that presages approaching dissolution. Every hour exposes him to the shafts of the destroyer, and none can tell when these fiery darts will hurry him to the tomb. He may be timely warned of his end, or he may be hurried to account for the deeds done in the body, ere he is aware that danger is nigh. Therefore the duty is impressed, 'what thou doest do quickly; whatsoever thy hands find to do, do with thy might, for there is no work, or knowledge, or device in the grave, whither thou hasteth.'

A brother who lives far from any of our societies, writes: "The three papers I wrote for last winter are doing good, and I know of no way in which I can promote the knowledge of the truth at so cheap a rate as by circulating the Register."—While we thank our brother for his good opinion of the "Register," we would say, we believe there is no better way for us to present truth to the mind of thousands whose attention has not been called to it, than by well written and clear expositions of it through the medium of the press. We have sometimes printed an extra number of Registers that contained important arguments for gratuitous distribution. And we would be glad if our subscription list would warrant us in doing so to a greater extent.

The Register not a Political Paper.

It has been suggested to us, that the terms in which we spoke of the election in this State last week, were such as to identify us (and perhaps the Register,) with the Whig party. Well, suppose it did? have we not as much right as any other citizen to our own views of political men and measures? In using the term "Opposition," we referred to those opposed to the State and National Administrations. All that we ask in the matter is, that when we neither do nor say any thing, nor vote any ticket whatever, we be not accused of being a politician, and that the Register be not identified with politics, when there is not a sentence in its columns that can be so construed, otherwise than as a matter of news.

The Title of Rev.

A brother has kindly reminded us that we apply the title "Rev." to some of our ministers and not to others. Also, that the General Conference recommended the disuse of that title. Our apology is, that while some are opposed to the use of the title, others are not, and know of no reason why it should be discontinued. Many of our ministers were not present at that Conference when the Resolution referred to was passed, and it is a matter of doubt whether the denomination wish the title discontinued. For ourself, we have no anxiety in the matter, but have discontinued the use of it wherever we supposed it was desired, and used it in other cases.

Gambling Christians.

Look at it again; what incongruity!—We have heard the term, but we know not how to reconcile it with consistency. And we have heard that Christians gamble, i. e., trade in Lottery tickets! But it must be evident to any one, who has any idea of the religion of Jesus Christ, that he who will do this has not a vital spark of religion in his heart, though he may be clothed with the name.

☞The Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute will meet at their room on Thursday, the 25th inst., at 1 o'clock P. M.

For the Register.

Labor in Vain.

When we see mankind wearying and exhausting themselves by various toils, the question very naturally presents itself to the mind, what great and good purpose will all this answer?

It is not uncommon that we may observe people of both sexes, and all conditions, laboring with intense activity to deck their mortal bodies for the exhibition of a moment, calling into requisition what it has cost days, and perhaps months and years to obtain; and all this to gratify the gazing multitude, or gain the short-lived admiration of a selected few. Little, indeed, do they think of the magnitude of the reward which is to be obtained. For what consolation is derived from it? Does it satisfy the mind with regard to that important call, "be ye also ready"? or give comfort and peace with the god of this world alone? and every action has its design either to benefit the condition or injure the well being of some.

It oftentimes happens that men rise early, sit up late, and give all diligence to make sure the object of their pursuit, which has no other ultimatum than to accumulate wealth; but when gained they lock up or keep it with a selfishness equal to the precaution which is necessary to confine a wild beast. Poor souls, how much better would it be for them to let this viper (so studiously nourished in their bosoms,) roam abroad, free, where he would lose the venom so abundantly engendered by his confinement, than to keep him the constant companion of all their vocations and numerous pursuits.

But what strange infatuation and inconsistency must that be, when professing christians, and ministers of the gospel, who should be heralds of salvation and peace to a fallen race, zealously set forth and uphold doctrines, which, if they were not adapted to their secular interests, and received by the world at large, would, doubtless, like many others much more plausible, be set down as anti-christian, and calculated to sap the foundations of all moral institutions.

Moreover, when even the truth itself is proclaimed and put forth, not because it is the spirit of the word of God alone, but is upheld and lauded on account of being accompanied by the names of Esq. B——, the Rev. Doct. C——, and the like, thereby giving more honor to the creature than to the Creator. May we not exclaim with emphasis, "vanity of vanities," to think that mankind will stoop so low as to lay aside the real and lasting blessings so profusely spread out before them, for such minor considerations as profit but little, and must soon pass away, oftentimes perverting the mind from its legitimate source; thus destroying those influences which, if rightly brought to bear upon it, would secure elevated affections; lasting benefit; unshaken hope; abiding honor, and ever-enduring life beyond the grave.

PHILANTHROPOS.

Pike, Nov. 4th, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Atlas.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITANNIA.

The British steam packet Britannia, Capt John Hewitt, arrived in our harbor yesterday, at 2 o'clock P. M. The news she brings is not very important, although we have by her eight days later intelligence from China than that received by the Huntress and Narragansett, at New York.

The tardiness of the Britannia, which has occasioned no little anxiety here, was caused by her detention forty-eight hours at Liverpool, as well as by severe westerly gales on her passage. The Britannia was detained by order of the Postmaster General, in consequence of the non-arrival of the Caledonia, which was expected to bring some important despatches for the government from the Canadas. The anxiety of the people of England for intelligence from the other side of the Atlantic was intense, and special railway trains were for some days in waiting to carry her news instantly to London. She came into port on Tuesday, Oct. 19th, having been preceded by the packet ship South America, which sailed from New York on the day previous to her departure from here.—As the papers received by the South America announced that the Caledonia would leave here on the 2d, and the commander of the packet ship was, of course, unaware of the damage which the steamer had sustained on her passage from this port to Halifax, it was supposed that she had been detained in the latter port for other than the real reasons, and public curiosity was still further awakened to ascertain the exact cause of the delay.

Prorogation of Parliament.

Parliament was prorogued on the 7th by commission: The ceremonial was therefore not of a very imposing nature. The Commissioners having taken their places on chairs at the foot of the throne in the House of Lords, the attendance of the Commons was required as usual, at the bar of their Lordships' House, by the Usher of the Black Rod. Preceded by the Speaker, several members attended accordingly, when the following Speech was read by the Lord Chancellor—

"My Lords and Gentlemen:

"We are commanded by her Majesty to acquaint you that it appears advisable to her Majesty to bring to a close the present session of Parliament.

"In conformity with the advice of her Parliament, and in pursuance of the declared intention of her Majesty, her Majesty has taken the requisite measures for the formation of a new Administration, and the arrangements for that purpose have been made by her Majesty.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"We have it in command from her Majesty to thank you for the supplies which you have granted to her Majesty for those branches of the public service for which complete provision had not been made by the late Parliament.

"My Lords and Gentlemen:

"The measures which it will be expedient to adopt for the purpose of equalizing the public income and other important objects connected with the trade and commerce of the country, will necessarily occupy your attention at an early period after the recess.

"Her Majesty has commanded us to repeat the expression of her deep concern at the distress which has prevailed for a considerable period in some of the manufacturing districts, and to assure you that you may rely upon the cordial concurrence of her Majesty in all such measures as shall appear, after mature consideration, best calculated to prevent the recurrence of that distress, and to promote the great object of all her Majesty's wishes, the happiness and contentment of her people."

As an evidence of the great want of employment in England, [illegible] there were more than four thousand applications in one week, in answer to an advertisement for a man to fill a responsible place at a salary of only £100 per annum.

There was some excitement in the suburbs of London in consequence of the refusal of the metropolitan commissioners longer to light the streets beyond the limits of the city.

The crops in Ireland had fallen greatly short of the usual average; but the spread of temperance, it was thought would prevent that distress among the poor which might otherwise become insupportable.

From the Continent there is little news of importance, except from Spain. In France, all was still. The census was proceeding towards its termination but not without afflicting demonstrations on the part of the people in many districts. The proceedings in the case of Queisset, the assassin, were proceeding. No day had been fixed for his trial. Several further arrests had taken place of persons in the atrocious attempt of Quenisset. The prisoners declared they had no knowledge of Quenisset, but he persisted in affirming that they were his accomplices.

We are indebted to Samuel Moore, Esq., Purser of the Britannia, for London and Liverpool papers to the latest dates, and to Snelling Powell, Esq., for a copy of the European.

The steam frigate Styx, with Sir Charles Bagot, the new Governor General of Canada, was detained at the Cove of Cork, awaiting the arrival of the Caledonia with the news of McLeod's Trial, and [illegible] of the seizure of Grogan—that he could have the final instruction of the Home Government.

A letter from the Turkish frontiers of the 25th ult., asserts that the Russian government is displeased with the arrangement of the Servian question made by Baron Lieven, the Czar being opposed to the return of the exiled senators.

The following changes are made in the French cabinet:—M. Martin remains with the portfolio of justice, which will be separated from that of public worship, which will be given to M. Sauzet, president of the Chamber of Deputies. M. Thiers, who has ratted, adds the Post, intends abandoning the attack on M. Guizot relative to the foreign policy, and to attack him on the domestic policy.

The following is a correct and authentic list of the officers comprising the personal staff of the Right Hon. Sir Charles Bagot, G. C. B., who has succeeded the late Lord Sydenham as Governor-General of British North America:—Capt. J. T. W. Jones, of the Royal Canadian Rifle Regiment, to be military Secretary and first Aid-de-Camp; and Captain George Talbot, and Lieut. the Hon. Thos. Greenville Cholmondely of the 43d Light Infantry to be his Excellency's Aides-de-Camp.

The Thames Tunnel is rapidly advancing to completion. The sub-marine cutting has been finished some months, but, in order to secure easy facility of entrance, it has been found necessary to bore farther beyond high-water mark than was originally intended.

M. Jaudon, the agent of the U. S. Bank, has addressed a notice to the holders of the loan for £900,000 sterling, contracted at Paris on the 26th of December, 1839, in which he states that, in consequence of unavoidable circumstances, the Bank of the United States will be unable to reimburse the half of the aforesaid loan on the 15th inst., according to the terms of the loan; he therefore requests a postponement of the time of payment for one year, in consideration of a bonus of £15,000, for the liquidation of which he has placed ample security in the hands of Messrs. Rothschild and Sons, of London.

The Thames river overflowed on the morning of Oct. 18th, causing considerable destruction of property.

A great many failures had taken place in England, both in the commercial and banking departments.

The Parisians are exceedingly angry with this country for having raised her tariff 20 per cent.

Revolution in Spain.

In Spain a formidable movement in favor of the former Regent Christiana, has excited no little alarm, both in that country and abroad, for the safety of the present Government. It seems to have been commenced by a partizan of the Regent, named O'Donnel, who attacked, carried, and at the last accounts still held possession of Pampeluna. While he retains this city,—Montes de Oca, an ex-Minister, has assumed the head of a Provisional Government at Vittoria, and Diego Leon makes an attempt to seize the person of the Queen.—The scheme, however, though large and bold, snapped in pieces almost as soon as it was put to a practical use. Leon and his partizans in Madrid could make no head against E[illegible] all who were not put to route [illegible] perfect [illegible] the metropolitan [illegible] or the [illegible] back. [illegible] Government who [illegible] pal privileges of the Biscayes, does not appear to [illegible] vor of Christina. [illegible] O'Donnel [illegible] said to be [illegible] prisoner [illegible] that the [illegible] these Montes de Oca [illegible] mation [illegible] that it [illegible] must [illegible] elsewhere.

It has [illegible]

[illegible]

and her sister [illegible] loudly [illegible] Mina, who [illegible] took every [illegible] the musk [illegible] apartment.

During the [illegible] visited the palace [illegible] tion, [illegible] the [illegible] still remained [illegible] the Sta. Maria [illegible] quil.

The latest [illegible] from [illegible] in Paris on [illegible] 12th inst. [illegible] had declared [illegible] commission [illegible] provided.

Intelligence had [illegible] through [illegible] that the hotel of the French Charge d'Affaires at [illegible] had been attacked by the mob, and more than 40 shots fired through the windows. In spite of the attack, the Charge d'Affaires [illegible] persevered in [illegible]

Gen. Pavia has been arrested at Barcelona. The arming of the people of Biscay was vigorously proceeding, and that of the province of Alava had commenced.

It is now confidently believed that General Ribero, Viceroy of Navarre, had been thoroughly acquainted with the plot before the breaking out of the insurrection, and that his natural indecision prevented him from joining in the rebellion.

The insurrection, it is said, was intended to have commenced on the 15th inst., but had been hurried on somewhat prematurely in consequence of the arrival of Don Francisco de Paula.

Eight Days later from China.

Some later advices from China had been received by the Castle Huntley, from Canton, which arrived at Bombay just before the departure of the mail for Suez. They consist of Canton papers to the 26th, and private letters to the 27th of June, being eight days later than the dates of the accounts copied by the London newspapers from the Bombay journals. It does not appear that during those eight days any important movement had taken place on either side, though it was stated that the Chinese were actively repairing the defenses of the river—that the fort of Wangtung, which we believe is situated on an island just above the Bogue, had been again garrisoned [illegible] and that [illegible] had been [illegible] when going up the river. By [illegible] from Canton, all [illegible] Canton [illegible] but no [illegible] Hong merchants refusing to buy [illegible] the American market. A [illegible] and some Americans [illegible] Canton [illegible] the general impression [illegible] it was decidedly unsafe for [illegible] to remain, and they were [illegible] to secure the British [illegible] Taylor, which had just arrived [illegible] House [illegible] it was thought not [illegible] blockade of the [illegible]

[illegible]

News of the Day.

[illegible] AMERICAN INSTITUTE [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] American friends—the friends of American labor and prosperity look to the United States, with her 3700 miles of canal, and 1500 miles of rail road, constructed at an expense of $160,000,000, and free government and institutions, com[illegible] as a nation, more that is excellent, than can be said of any other nation on the globe.

"The subject of Agriculture has been the chief matter of discussion before the Institute. On this subject it has been addressed by Judge Baldwin, Gov Everett, Gov. Davis, Mr. Southard, and Mr Webster.

The American Institute was founded for the benefit of Agriculture, Manufactures and Commerce. We maintain that if our Country would do justice to Commerce, Manufactures and Agriculture would be protected and have all we ask. The condition of our country is prosperous, in territory and resources, beyond compa and unequalled in its mighty results, rendering, each year, by reason of its increase, all past calculations inapplicable. And while we acknowledge all this, and allude to the fact of our Country being exempt from war, pestilence or famine, something must be wrong while the labor of our countrymen is so depressed. A few days since, I cut out from a city newspaper, a slip, from which it appears that four-fifths of the vessels arriving here with foreign merchandize were European. Our purpose is to trace this to its true source—unwise legislation. We respect foreigners—receive them with open arms, and give them the benefit of all our civil rights; but we remonstrate against being made their inferiors in the land of our birth. By the tables from the Custom House, it appears that, with foreign nations, nine-tenths of the imports from France are on foreign account; and almost the same from Germany and Great Britain. What are the circumstances under which this inequality rests? No country possesses the same advantages as the ——————"Sea-girt isle."

By her policy she manages to claim all the benefits in her commercial relations, without giving any thing whatever in return.—Look to her Corn Laws—to name them is enough. Talk of equality and reciprocity with us, while she refuses to take any produce in return for her manufactures! Above $1,000,000 of specie are required to be shipped every month in exchange for her productions. Go with Flour, you find the duties amount to a prohibition. Take Pork to any spot within or under British dominion, and if carried in American vessels, you meet with discriminating duties which defeat the voyage. One third, too, of the commerce of the United States is carried on in British bottoms, and the increase of foreign trade is increasing the proportion of foreign vessels. For the causes of this, look, for instance, to the Tobacco trade—the production of the South, adapted to her clime and soil. The duty on one pound of Tobacco worth 40 cents in America, is nine shillings sterling—a duty of 2000 per cent! Now, fellow citizens, how can this be called free trade? The American Institute advise free trade—Washington, Jefferson, and the elder Adams proposed free trade; but if not free, then we ask a reciprocity; that rejected, the American Institute on being put on an equality. They ask not for high tariff duties. We say to England take our Tobacco on equal terms, free, or on the principle of reciprocity—that refused, we put on your broadcloths and merchandize what you put on our agriculture.

Rice worth 3 1-2 or 4 dollars per cwt., in the U. S., shipped to England, is subject to a duty of $3 and $4 per 100 lbs.—This is prohibition.

Pork, too, cannot be sold in open market without paying a duty of at least one-third its value in the United States. We repeat, we ask for free trade, reciprocity, or equality.

Labor.—Go to your mountains, and see how you are affected by this system of free trade. Sailing up the Savannah river, I met not an American flag, but met no less than 11 British vessels laden with the lumber of Georgia. There is surely a cause for this. Yankees are not behind hand when there is a chance to gain a penny by industry.—"For every where there is a wherefore."

Shingles shipped to Nova Scotia in American vessels, subject to duty $3,25 per 1000, while they may be found rolling from vessels with the British flag at $3, being 25 cents less than the duty on the American flag.

Silk.—On the part of France, take her gewgaws, which so well become my wife, and your wife and daughter, it draws away our specie, however, half a million a month, and not an article from our country in return.

Cotton has not yet been prohibited, and why? It is an article England cannot yet do without. She is, however, turning her attention to other portions of the globe for supplies. 105 barrels of American cotton seed, with American workmen to cultivate, have been shipped to India. Brazil and Texas, too, are looked to for future supplies.

Shipping on the Lakes.—On Lake Ontario.

American vessels,	597
British vessels,	1,011
Tonnage American vessels,	63,517 tons.
Tonnage British vessels,	215,080 "

This subject was dwelt upon at some length, with remarks upon the increase of the tolls on the Welland Canal, and comparative decrease on our own.

Ship Building.—During the last year, there were built in Massachusetts,	113 vessels,	17,811 tons.

Maine,	181 "	38,936 "
New-Jersey,	109 "
Pennsylvania,	103 "
Maryland,	111 "

"Stand back," continued General T., "and let in New Jersey and Maryland; for during the same period there were built in New-York 72 vessels!"

Rapid driving in our streets, crowded as they are by people on foot, crossing our streets, should be stopped. An Irish cabman rode over a little girl the other day in rapidly passing a corner, which will probably cost the little creature her life. He was fined $5. The Era says this is most salutary—$5 for your child!—N. Y. Watchman.

They say Colt is thinking about becoming insane, so as to make it available at his trial. The arts adopted to secure criminals from punishment, are now practised to a great extent in this community.—N. Y. Watchman.

A Remedy for Arsenic.—A young lady in New Hampshire who recently swallowed a portion of arsenic, that had been prepared for the destruction of rats, was cured by swallowing the juice of tobacco.

A Fact.—The United States have paid Great Britain, within a few years, $80,000,000 for iron manufactures. Is not this fact sufficient to arouse our countrymen to the importance of working our own superior and superabundant iron? How long shall this ruinous policy be pursued?

A war steamer is to be built on the Lakes by the United States.

In England, Scotland and Wales, there is but one voter to every seventeen inhabitants; in Ireland only one in every eighty?

Editor's Accommodations.—An exchange paper says very truly, that "an editor's room" should have chairs enough—that is, not more than one; occupants enough—that is, only one; and not too many supernumeraries—that is, less than one. In short, three things mainly—elbow room, leg room, and nose room.—Nantucket Inquirer.

Steam Engine for Rocking Cradles.—I saw on Saturday, a perfect little steam engine, of "a child of two years' old power," to which a simple apparatus is fitted by the action of a steam engine, upon which a cradle containing an infant was rocked to and fro, with infinitely more regularity than the toe of the most experienced nurse could accomplish.—Correspondence of the Dublin Monitor.

A PROCLAMATION.

In the year which is about to close, Divine Providence hath been pleased, as in former years, to vouchsafe to the inhabitants of this State, the various fruits of the earth in their proper seasons—health, security and tranquility—prosperous commerce, and peaceful relations with foreign countries—freedom of conscience—religious instruction and consolation—moral, social and intellectual improvement—and laws established and administered by representatives chosen by the People.

I do, therefore, appoint Thursday the ninth day of December next, to be set apart for the customary annual offerings of Public Thanksgiving and Praise to Almighty God, for all his mercies and blessings; and I recommend that the occasion be observed throughout the Commonwealth, with the humility, devotion and gratitude which become a free and favored Christian People.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the privy seal of the said State, to be affixed, at the city of Albany, this twenty-fifth day of [L. S.] October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and of American Independence the sixty-sixth.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

By the Governor:
Henry Underwood, Private Secretary.

Chinese Cannon.—In the Pancock-hall, which arrived in St. Catherine's Dock a few days since, from China, were two splendid cannon, which were taken from the Chinese by the English at the Bogue Forts. They have been sent to this country as a present to her Majesty's Government, and are to be placed, it is believed, in the Tower of London, as curiosities.—They are of Spanish manufacture, about 11 feet in length; the touch-holes have been spiked, which renders them quite useless; they weigh about two tons each. One of them bears the following inscription: "Por Vida do Capitao-geral de Macao, Manoel y Tavares Bocaroa, Afez, 1651." On the other is the Spanish crown, and "Don Felipe I. Rey d'Espana."—"Don Miguel Tavares Rocaerozsey San Geral y Mor, ecaptiad de Ari Acan Macao, A. 1652." They are looked upon as great curiosities, and numbers of persons are daily drawn to the wharf of the docks where they now lie. A large bullet, of Chinese manufacture, was also sent by the same ship; it is exceedingly rough and ill-shaped, and seems to have been cast in two pieces, and riveted together afterwards; this also, it is supposed, will be deposited in the Tower.—English paper.

A Russian's Estimate of Authorship.—A popular Russian fable, (by Krulloft,) represents an author and a thief in hell. They are in two separate kettles, and the devil has lighted a huge fire under that belonging to the man of letters, while the light-fingered hero is only enjoying a gentle degree of warmth. The author reproaches Satan with his partiality, but the latter justifies himself thus: "You are a much greater sinner than the thief; his sins have died with him, but yours will survive for centuries."

The famous case of Reeside, the mail contractor, is in course of litigation in Philadelphia. Reeside claims of the U. S. a balance of $148,994.31—the U. S. claims of him a balance of $32,709.62—making a difference of $181,703.93.

A magnificent volcano, 12,400 feet above the level of the Sea, on the 27th of January last, by H. M. S. Erebus, and is in lat. 77 31 S. and long. 167 0 E.

The donations to the Female Moral Reform Society for the last six years, has been nearly equal to $11,000.

Maine is the potato State. The village of Kennebeck alone sold last week for exportation, twenty thousand bushels of the article at two shillings a bushel. The value of the potato crop of the State will well compare with the cotton crop at Georgia.

A new State is proposed to be formed out of the northern portion of Tennessee, and of Kentucky, west of Kentucky river.

It is supposed by the Canada papers that the Provincial Government will recommend to the Home Government compensation to McLeod for his expenses and losses and sufferings during his imprisonment.

Gen. D. Parker, formerly Adjutant and Inspector General, and subsequently Paymaster General of the Army, has been appointed by the Secretary of War, chief Clerk of that department.

An old lady in New Orleans, buried a box with about $100 worth of gold coins and jewelry in it, some thirty or forty years ago, and kept the fact secret until the day of her death, last summer.

The amount of city tax for Utica this year is $8000. $1800 are appropriated to the support of a night watch, $2000 for repairing roads, highways, and bridges, and $700 for lighting the streets.

The Ladies Temperance Society of Boston are said to have reclaimed more than 200 intemperate females.

A young girl dressed in men's clothes, was recently shot and dangerously wounded in Washington, on the 30th ult., while attempting in company with others, to amuse herself by 'stealing cabbages' on "hallow e'en."

The store of Mr. Lyman Smith, of Westfield, Mass., was broken into on the night of the 24th ult., and robbed of $407 in bank bills, $36 in gold and silver, and notes and orders amounting to $846.42.

The Wheeling Times urges the policy of bridging the Ohio river at that point, among the reasons assigned in favor of the project are, that the stoppage of the mails by the running ice in the winter, and the detention of travelers on the National road, would both be prevented by the construction of a bridge.

In the year ending September 1840, there were imported for consumption in this country, 19,681,478 pounds of tea, at an expense of $5,417,589; 64,966,045 of coffee at $8,561,222; and 2,723,563 of cocoa at $461,389, making a total cost of fourteen millions of dollars.

A treaty offensive and defensive has been formed between Texas and Yucatan. The cotton crops of Texas are coming in rapidly. The Custom House at Galveston has been robbed of between three and four thousand dollars, and the robber detected by his wife, and the money recovered.

A bottle of spurious port wine, manufactured in this city, was found, on analysis, to contain—Alcohol 3 oz.—Cider 4 oz. Sugar 1 1-2 oz.—Alum 2 scr.—Tartaric Acid 1 scr.—Concentrated Solution of Logwood 4 oz.

Maryland holds the fourth rank among the States for ship building. The first is Maine; second, Massachusetts; third, New York; fourth, Maryland; fifth, New Jersey, and sixth Ohio.

The last quarterly report of the Washington Temperance Society of this city, it is stated that [illegible] persons have already been rescued from intemperance by the new movement.

A census of the population of all the British Isles has just been taken. From some of the returns which have been published, it is conjectured, that since 1831 there has been an increase of 15 per cent, which would make the present number of inhabitants nearly [illegible].

The number of practising lawyers in the State is 2912; there are probably over 1000 in fact. In this city there are 800—enough to form a full regiment in the United States army.

One of the on dits at Washington is that Hon. Caleb Cushing is soon to wed a daughter of President Tyler.

The Wheat Crops of 1842.—We learn from a friend who has been spending a few days at different points in the Great Miami Valley, that the wheat which has been sown the present fall in this fertile section of the State, amounts to about three times the usual quantity. If the farmers in the other principal grain districts of the State have sown any think like as extensively, with a favorable season, the wheat product of 1842 will be very large.

The seed along the Miami has come up well, and the fields present a beautiful and healthy appearance. The fly has shown itself in some districts, but has as yet done but little damage. Entire exemption from its ravages is not to be expected, but the present indications are that it will be far less destructive than it was last fall.—Cin. Republican.

Steamboat Disasters.—Since the 1st of January, 1841, the following boats engaged in the St. Louis trade have been lost:

The Vermont, sunk between St. Louis and the mouth of the Ohio, valued at			$5,000
Rieniz,	do	do	8,000
Peoria,	do	do	5,000
Chester,	do	do	20,000
Homer,	do	do	6,000
Maid of Orleans,	do	do	25,000
Orregon,	do	do	25,000
Keokuk,	do	do	6,000
Wm. Paris,	do	do	12,000
A. M. Phillips,	do	do	6,000
Tehula,	do	do	15,000
U. S. Mail,	do	do	15,000
Brazil sunk on the upper Mississppi			8,000
Carolina, do below mouth of Ohio			34,000
Chief Magistrate,		do	15,000
Baltic,	do	do	12,000
Malta, sunk on the Missouri,			15,000
Missouri, burnt at the wharf,			50,000
Total value,			$290,000

The above we believe is a complete list of all the boats totally lost; and the value of them is set down below the rate they were insured at, and all greatly below their actual cost. of these vessels would not fall short of $400,000.

Of these vessels, not exceeding fifteen per cent. had not been saved from the wrecks. In fact we believe the actual amount much below this sum.—St. Louis Repub.

Counterfeit.—A new counterfeit of the following description was detected in this city this morning: $5 bank of Auburn—pay to B. Beed or bearer—dated Aug. 1, 1841—J. S. Seymor, Cashier; Samuel Kellogg, President—engraved by S. Stiles, Sherman & Smith, N. Y. Mr. Kellogg has been dead some two years.—Buff. Com.

From Jamaica.—We are indebted to a correspondent at Jamaica for a regular file of the Kingston Morning Journal to the 27th ult. inclusive.

The British ship Race-Horse had arrived at Port Royal from Vera Cruz, with $000,000 for the Commissariat and Colonel Bank.

Severe shocks of earthquake had been experienced at the Islands of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, and Antigua.

In consequence of the blockade of the Port Carthagena, by which several vessels from Jamaica had been turned off, a meeting had been held at Kingston, for the purpose of considering what measures should be adopted for the protection of British interests in New Grenada. It was stated that the commander of the French naval force on the Carthagena station had expressed his intentions of affording the protection of his flag to any English or American vessel that should require it of him.

Hayti.—The Journal of the 17th ult. says,—

The information which has reached us from Hayti [illegible] to lead to the conclusion [illegible], an effort will be made by the [illegible] to rid themselves of the [illegible] which they now suffer.—[illegible]

[illegible]

We learn that the [illegible] were unable to agree with the [illegible] the liberal offers that were made [illegible] promptly and [illegible]

A correspondent remarks that there will be [illegible] to the people of [illegible] of their territory, and [illegible] from the neighboring States.

The persecution of the colored people is extending all along the Ohio river. It broke out in New Orleans, and Mississippi then took the alarm. Then Indiana and Ohio. And now we hear, that in Kentucky the same wicked spirit is abroad. At Louisville, the free people of color have been warned out of the State. In Lexington they are charged as incendiaries. At Maysville they have been molested, and their church burnt.

We cannot but think, that one of the chief objects in lately imprisoning all the free colored persons, was to allow the slave-hunters a chance to search for runaways. The story was current, that Cincinnati was an asylum for fugitive slaves, and now an opportunity was afforded to test its truth. Some 30 or 40 slave holders busied themselves in making the examination, but among all the examined, but one was claimed as a slave, and the claim to him is not yet made out. Among others engaged in this revolting business, was a woman from Kentucky.

Miraculous Escape.—On Saturday morning the following miraculous escape occurred New-cut Lambeth. A little boy named Frank Holmes, only seven years of age, in the employ of Mr. Ballard, chimney sweeper, Lowmarsh, Lambeth, ascended a chimney in the house of a person residing in the New-cut, for the purpose of cleaning it. On reaching the top, on which was a chimney-pot, he rattled his brush, and when in the act of doing so, the pot became loosened from the mortar, and with the little fellow in it, fell off the chimney, and rolling down the tiles, bounded off into the street, a height of between 40 and 50 feet. The bystanders who witnessed the occurrence ran to him, expecting he was killed on the spot, but were astonished to find he had escaped with only a few bruises and the loss of three of his teeth.—London Times.

A Lost Vessel Found.—An American fishing schooner, with only a boy on board, put into port Matoon, N. S., having been blown out of Gloucester during the late gale.—She has some dry fish on board,(600 barrels mackerel.) The boy is well.

DIED,

In Milton Rock co., Wiskonsan of the liver complaint, on the 21st ult., Mrs. SALLY STILLMAN, wife of Dea. George Stillman, formerly of Alfred N. Y., aged 78 years.

In the same place, on the 23d ult., Mrs. SALLY COON, widow of Stephen Coon, deceased, aged 74 years.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, on the 30th ult., by Eld. John Green, Mr. CLARK SPICER and Miss SARAH A. DAVIS all of Hopkinton.

LIST OF LETTERS

Joseph Goodrich, Geo. S. Green, Schuyler Saunders, S. C. Carr, Samuel Van Campen, B. Church P. M., (thank you.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the
October 4th. STONE STORE.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find a good [illegible] at S. D. DELLAY'S [illegible]

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of [illegible] BOUGHT [illegible] STONE STORE [illegible] New York [illegible]
S. D. DELLAY'S

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster is [illegible]
For sale [illegible] S. D. DELLAY.
De Ruyter, Nov. 10

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS [illegible]
N. B. [illegible]
De Ruyter, Oct. [illegible] 1841.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

LATE [illegible]

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

[illegible]

BRASS AND TIN WARE

LOW PRICES

Eave Troughs

JUST RECEIVED

JOB WORK

NEW GOODS AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

S. G. WALKER.

HAVING [illegible] Dry Goods, Groceries, [illegible] HARDWARE [illegible]

BOOTS & SHOES,

[illegible] CHEAPER [illegible] CASH [illegible]

MADISON COMMON PLEAS.

[illegible] IN PARTITION.

[illegible] Marcus Bumpus [illegible]
20, 1841. BENJAMIN ENOS, JAMES NYE, EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney.

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to [illegible] BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the Farmer's Exchange than any other [illegible] in town.
De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE.

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, [illegible] situated first lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three fourths of an acre, being about six rods in [illegible] Apply to Lauren H. Babcock.
De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MANSON

NO IMPOSITION!

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. S. Wil[illegible] BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT OF GEO. W. SUTTON'S, [illegible] the inhabitants of [illegible] surrounding country, that they are [illegible] from New-York, a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs:
[illegible] ever before offered [illegible] they flatter themselves from [illegible] in purchasing, they can [illegible]

LOW PRICES.

[illegible] city of New-York [illegible] invariably be

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible] purchase Goods cheap, are [illegible] them a call, and examine [illegible] at prices that cannot fail to [illegible]
GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A [illegible]
STONE STORE

JOHN N. ELMORE,

[illegible]

[illegible] STONE STORE

TAKE NOTICE.

T[illegible]

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

R[illegible] BENJAMIN [illegible]

NOTICE

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the subscribers under the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day [illegible]
JOHN N. ELMORE.
A. N. ANNAS.
WILLIAM J. AYER.
De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on account, [illegible]
Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving [illegible] an extensive assortment [illegible] for variety, [illegible]
De Ruyter, Oct. [illegible] 1841

25 PIECES BROAD Cloth BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment just received at the
Oct. 4th. STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
S. G. WALKER.

POETRY.

From the Churchman.

One by one Love's Links are Broken.

One by one the objects of our affection depart from us. Thou glorious Spirit-land! O, that I could behold thee as thou art,—the region of life, and light, and love, and the dwelling place of those beloved ones, whose being has flowed onward like a silver clear stream into the solemn sounding main, into the ocean of eternity!" HYPERION.

One by one love's links are broken,
One by one our friends depart,
Voices that have kindly spoken,
Heart which throbbed to kindred heart.

Gentle tones with ours that blended
At the holy hour of prayer,
Lips from which Te Deum ascended,
We ask for these, and find them—where?

Some are resting in the ocean,
Hidden 'mid its secret deep,
Heedless of its wild commotion,
Sleeping there a dreamless sleep.

Some have wandered o'er the billow,
Prayers nor tears their lives could save,
Deep they rest beneath the willow,
In a far-off church-yard grave.

And some are near us calmly lying,
Our love-words cannot wake their sleep;
No answer comes but wild winds sighing
Through the grass o'er which we weep.

List for the heart-warm greeting
Loved and prized in days gone by!
Look we for fond glances meeting
Ours from the soul-lit eye?

Ask we for the joyous beaming
Of the smiles that radiant shone
Round us in our youthful dreaming?
Ask for these?—Where are they?—Gone!

Like the fresh and dewy sweetness,
Of the summer's balmy flowers,
Such the fragrance, such the fleetness,
Of those blessed dreams of ours.

Ah, not here, not here our dwelling,
In this changing world of time;
Thanks to GOD! all change is telling
Of a holier, happier clime.

Thanks to GOD! this parting, paining,
Weans the heart from earthly ties;
Life's night of sorrow darkly waning,
Will break in morn upon the skies.

Weep not over hopes departed,
Seek not here the scattered band;
Soul of mine, look up, look forward
To the glorious spirit-land!

Miscellaneous Department.

PROTECTION FROM LIGHTNING.

BY PROF. OLMSTEAD, OF YALE COLLEGE.

Circumstances of peculiar safety in exposure in thunder storms.

A just view of the laws that govern the electric fluid, will lead us to form a correct opinion of the relative security or danger of particular situations, and of the influence of particular circumstances, either increasing or diminishing our liability to be struck with lightning. Most of the cases will readily be resolved by keeping in view the principle, that lightning in its passage from one point to another, as from a cloud to the earth, always selects the best conductors that lie near its path. The air itself, even when moistened with rain, is but an imperfect conductor; and the fluid will readily desert it for any solid or liquid substances, that lie in its route, these are generally much better conductors than air. Among these, also, the fluid will often make a delicate discrimination, always preferring the best conductors. The idea that metallic bodies attract lightning, is not perfectly correct; they determine its course through them in consequence of their superior conductory powers. Let us consider a number of distinct cases.

1. Is a house less or more safe for having a metallic covering, as of zinc, sheet lead, or tin? If a house has a lightning rod, and the roofing is in contact or close communication with the rod, it promotes the safety of the house, composing in fact a part of the conductor, and tending to convey to the rod any charge which might meet the roof at any point distant from it. In the same manner, metallic gutters and water pipes may help to defend the house, if a good conducting communication is formed between them and the ground. If, on the contrary, the house has no lightning rod, such metallic coverings or pipes enhance the danger in a greater or less degree, varying with the materials of the building. Were the building composed of non-conductors, like glass, a metallic roof would be insulated, and would not determine the charge to take that course to the earth. But the materials of which houses are usually constructed, are partial conductors, and metallic roofs increase their aggregate conductory power so much as to enhance the liability to be struck.

2. Do silk dresses and feather beds afford protection during thunder storms? Silk and feathers being severally non-conductors, they have generally been supposed condusive to safety. Indeed, silk dresses were formerly kept for the express purpose of being worn during thunder storms. Were the persons completely enveloped in a silk covering, it would afford some protection; but while the head and feet were exposed as usual, such a dress would rather augment than diminish the danger. A ready path would be afforded to the lightning from head to foot beneath the dress, and the fluid would take the body instead of the silk, because it is a better conductor. In fact, a metallic dress would be safer than one of silk, for the lightning would take the metal sooner than the body, because it is a better conductor. A similar remark may be made respecting feather beds. Were the person enveloped in feathers, it would afford some protection; but resting as we do on the outside of a bed, I conceive that a bed of iron or any metal would be safer than of feathers. In the one case, the lightning would take the man instead of the feathers, because he is a better conductor; and in the other case, it would take the iron bed or bedstead, instead of the man, for the same reason. Whatever advantage we may derive from remaining in bed during a thunder storm, is to be referred to the horizontal posture, which is much safer than an erect posture.

3. Do tall trees, standing near a house increase or diminish its liability to be struck with lightning? In general they afford some protection; being composed of as good conducting a substance as the house; and, the tall and pointed tops affording a readier passage for the lightning, they diminish the liability of the house being struck. Still, it would be unsafe to sit, and much more to stand, in a door way or piazza, wih a tall tree in front; for the human body being a better conductor than wood, the lightning would be apt to leap from the tree and take the body. For a similar reason, a position under a tree during a thunder storm, is peculiarly unsafe. Trees in a forest are less liable to be struck with lightning, than single trees standing in an open field; the great number of pointed branches presented to the cloud, have the effect to dissipate or divide the charge, and prevent its descending upon any individual object in a concentrated form. So, also, houses standing thickly together in a large town, are less liable to be struck with lightning than single buildings in the country.

4. 'What part of a house is safest in a thunder storm? A chimney, unless there is attached to it a lightning rod, is to be avoided, and especially a kitchen chimney where a fire is burning. The head of a bed should not be placed, as is sometimes done, near a fire place. It is unsafe to stand in the door way, or near an open window. During thunder storms, windows and doors ought to be closed, for greater security not only against lightning, but also against violent winds. A position near the walls of a house, is less safe than in the central parts of the room. A sitting is safer than an erect posture, but a horizontal posture is the safest of all. Some suppose that the cellar is a place of greater security than the upper rooms. This is probably not the case, for if the lightning strikes the house any where, the charge usually terminates in the cellar. The vicinity of a puddle, or small body of water, is a situation of peculiar danger, since a stroke of lightning, approaching the ground, would be determined towards such a spot by the greater conductory power of water. A situation, however, which is surrounded by water, as a small boat on a lake, would not be one of peculiar exposure, since the lightning could descend into the water anywhere without changing its course.

If one is abroad on horseback, during a thunder storm, he ought by no means to take shelter under a shed, without dismounting. If he cannot find a convenient and safe shelter, it will be prudent to dismount and tying his horse to some low object, to seat himself at as low a level as possible. An umbrella held over his head would probably not enhance the danger, since the dry staff or handle is but an imperfect conductor.

An umbrella, indeed, might be easily made to afford additional protection, either by inverting over the top of the staff a glass phial or tube, so as to make a non-conductor, or by attaching to the staff a chain or wire, or a wet rope, leading to the ground. Various other cases of exposure, which occur in the circumstances of different individuals, may be solved in a manner similar to the foregoing, always keeping in view the relative conducting powers of different bodies. The leading principle which governs all the different modes of protection, is extremely simple, and needs nothing but common sense to apply it successfully.

From the New York Observer.

A DAUGHTER'S LOVE.

In an upper room of a humble dwelling in the city of New York, I found, a few days ago, a dying girl. She was about 18 years of age, and far from home. In early life she had left her mother's cot "in the Emerald Isle," and with a band of emigrants she had sought America, trusting to the labor of her hands for her daily bread. In one of our thousand mills she had found employment, but had laid up nothing against an evil day; and when sickness overtook her, and consumption stretched her on a dying bed, she was dependent utterly on the charity of others—relatives she had none this side of the great water.

It is needless to say how I was led to her chamber. Upon sitting down and speaking of the only refuge of the soul in the hour of dissolving nature, and of the happiness of those who trust in Jesus, I asked her if she felt willing to die. "Yes," said she, "but—but—I should like to see my mother;" and as she spoke, her eyes filled with tears, she drew the covering over her head and wept.

It was a tribute of filial love. Those who were present felt it, and we sat in silence till the swollen tide subsided.

I have mentioned this fact, not to repeat the conversation that ensued, but simply for the sake of this expression of a daughter's love for her mother in the hour of death.—Years and years had passed away since she had seen that mother; and oceans had rolled between them; and hard labor, and poverty, and sickness, had been her lot. She had been an exile from home in a strange land, but through all the changes of her hard journeyings, the memory of a mother clung to her, and melted her heart while death-chills were on it.

There is something to be learned from this little incident. It is the mother's power. If the ties are so strong, how deep the obligation to make those ties fast to the principles of the religion of Jesus Christ. In very infancy, in the tenderest years of childhood, the mother as she winds her own heart-strings around her children, should bind those children with cords, stronger than earthly ties, to the cross of Jesus. Many a proud man has felt "the pressure of his mother's hand" restraining him from sin, long after that mother had been in her grave. Many are the youth whose first awakening to a sense of sin has been the revival of the memory of a mother's [illegible] and tears. Who can tell how many daughters, now outcasts on the world, lost to heaven and hope, might have been ornaments on earth, and stars in heaven, had maternal influence impressed their infant minds with the truths of God's word. Will mothers think of this?

The young woman whose touching remark suggested these lines, had never forgotten the impressions of childhood. Though a stranger in a strange land, with no parent to counsel or restrain her, she had been kept from the paths of vice, and had early [illegible] in a Savior. She assured me that in the midst of her protracted illness, she had found that Savior precious, and trusted only in him for salvation.

This was my first visit. She asked me to come again. They told me [illegible] way that she would probably live a [illegible] or two: but three days afterwards [illegible] and she was buried. They will [illegible] few hours only after she told me she should like to see her mother. I hope she will.

Poor girl! poor as the world goes [illegible] charity gave her a burial. Bl[illegible] now with Lazarus in Abraham's bosom.

IRENAEUS.

Receive a lesson of Christian charity and toleration from father Theobald Mathew, the great Irish reformer. Listen to his discourse on the following wise:

"The time is coming when that house (pointing to the poor house, which stands on the opposite hill,) will become an empty monument of the drunkenness of former times. When our jails and prisons will become roofless, and their falling walls, [illegible] ing to ruins and overgrown with moss, will only be sad memorials of the vices and crimes of an age passed away [illegible] more. He would impress upon [illegible] unless they were possessed of Christian charity, or brotherly love, all their other gifts and accomplishments were as nothing. Charity was the distinguishing [illegible] the Gospel which our Savior taught. [illegible] were bound to consider every man [illegible] they beheld as a brother. [illegible] means of his Apostles [illegible] the children, a new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. [illegible] Redeemer had himself said, "By this shall all men know that ye are [illegible] you love one another." The test of discipleship was not to be found in the [illegible] which the followers of Christ held, or in [illegible] belief which they entertained. The only test of discipleship which Christ [illegible] brotherly love. "Ye are my disciples [illegible] love one another." The particular [illegible] ion of religion which a man [illegible] left to his conscience and his God. [illegible] duty to judge of men by their [illegible] and to act towards them [illegible] standard. Whilst, with the Apostle [illegible] to wish that all—men were not only almost but altogether, such as we are, [illegible] to extend brotherly love to all, and to be kind and obliging to those of every [illegible] —not forgetting to do good [illegible] acting in obedience to the spirit of the holy gospel of Jesus Christ.

The lesson of Christian charity was beautifully illustrated in Dr. Franklin's parable against persecution, in imitation of scripture: "And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun. And, behold, a man bent with age came from the way of the wilderness, leaning on a staff. And Abraham arose, and met him, and said unto him, Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry all night: and thou shalt arise early in the morning, and go on thy way. And the man said, nay: for I will abide under this tree. But Abraham pressed him greatly: so he turned, and they went into the tent: and Abraham baked unleavened bread and they did eat. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, Wherefore dost thou not worship the Most High God, Creator of heaven and earth? And the man answered and said, I do not worship thy God, neither do I call upon his name, for I have made to myself a God, which abideth always in my house, and provideth me with all things. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose, and fell upon him, and drove him forth with blows, into the wilderness. And God called upon Abraham, saying, Where is the stranger? And Abraham answered and said, Lord, he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy name; therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness. And God said, have I borne with him these hundred and ninety and eight years, and nourished him, and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me: and couldst not thou, who art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night?"

GRAVES OF BURNED WIDOWS.—Just outside the village we noticed a cluster of mounds, somewhat resembling our ancient tombs; a few had rather splendid stone edifices erected, of such form and architecture as proclaimed them Hindoo cemeteries. We turned aside to see them, and found them to be tombs of Hindoo wives, who in better days, as they say, of this village, were burned at sattis (suttees,) with their husbands' bodies. They are always honored with the memorial of a grave. Those whose friends are able have a stone or brick monument over; those who are poor, have to be content with an humble mound of earth. I [illegible] strangely solemn as I stood up [illegible] looked round upon a circle of [illegible] quarter of a hundred of others which marked the very spots where many women have sacrificed themselves to the foolish and wicked prejudices of their country! They have been sacrificed; yes, hecatombs of the [illegible] women of their country! and yet the country has not been benefited by these sacrifices. The marks of disapprobation from Him to whom sacrifices ought to be offered have written upon the country in [illegible] ages cannot obliterate. [illegible]

—Rev. J. H. M[illegible]

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

De Lamartine, in his [illegible] book called "A Pilgrimage to the Holy Land," relates the following [illegible] legend, preserved in the tradition of the [illegible] the circumstances which led [illegible] Solomon's selection of a site for the temple.

"Jerusalem was a ploughed field, and the ground on which the temple now stands was the joint inheritance of two brothers; one of whom [illegible] children [illegible] bound up their sheaves, and made of them two equal stacks, which they left upon the field. During the night a good thought presented itself to the younger. 'My brother,' said he to himself, [illegible] and children to maintain. It is not just that our shares should be equal. [illegible] then take a few sheaves from my stack, and secretly add them to his; he will not perceive it, and therefore cannot refuse them.' This project the young man immediately executed.

[illegible]

From the New [illegible]

[illegible]

Dean [illegible] I remember a touching incident which happened at the Cape of Good Hope when I was there. A party had gone out to shoot baboons. [illegible] severely. Great was his surprise, on seeing the animal thus wounded leave the rest of the troop, approach him and lie down at his feet. Looking him full in the face, the fainting, dying creature pointed at its bleeding side, as much as to say, "This is your cruel work, and what have I done to deserve it?" No language could surpass this in truth of appeal, or the moral lesson which it taught.—Rev Dr. Jones' Lecture on Oratory.

EASTERN METHOD OF MEASURING TIME.—The people of the East measure time by the length of their shadow. Hence if you ask a man what o'clock it is, he immediately goes into the sun, stands erect, looking where the shadow terminates, he measures his length with his feet and tells you nearly the time. Thus the workmen earnestly desire the shadow which indicates the time for leaving their work. A person wishing to leave his toil, says, "How long my shadow is in coming!"—"Why did you not come sooner?" "Because I waited for my shadow." In the 7th of Job, we find it written, "As a servant earnestly desireth his shadow."

Though you point your arrows, never poison them; and if the club of Hercules must be raised, let it be the naked club, not entwined with serpents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT [illegible]

Sept. 28, 1841.

[illegible]

S. D. DELLAY.

[illegible]

Sayre's Invaluable [illegible] Expectorant.

[illegible]

ROOT'S [illegible]

[illegible]

ROOT'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, [illegible] galled backs, cracked heels occasioned by over-reach, or tread of another horse, scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 41m6

S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWLER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A. & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED.

300 [illegible]

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

[illegible]

J. M. LETTS.

[illegible]

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

[illegible]

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON [illegible] N. Y.

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within [illegible] months from the receipt of the first number, [illegible] considered in advance.

[illegible] communication, involving facts and intended [illegible] in the paper, must be accompanied [illegible] responsible name.

No subscription received for a less term than six months.

All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher post paid.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.---NO. 39.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—— A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [illegible] NO. 91

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

A review of Rev. Joseph R. Johnson's Articles on the Trinity, recently published in the Register.

NO. I.

MR. EDITOR;—I have already, in my last letter, given my reasons for considering the work before me an Essay, or Treatise on the Trinity, rather than a reply to my "reasons for not embracing the doctrine.' But whether it be regarded as an Essay, or a Reply, my main business is to review his proofs of the doctrine with a view to test their validity, and to determine on which side of the question the truth lies.

This is confessedly a serious and momentous subject, and should be investigated with the utmost candor, diligence and impartiality. If we have any other object in view than the development of truth, the glory of God, and the good of souls, our motives are unworthy of the sacredness and importance of the subject. It behooves both writers and readers to see that we approach it with a proper spirit.

Mr. Johnson commences his defense of the doctrine of the Trinity, (see no. 19 of the Register, Vol. II.,) with a statement of the doctrine, and adopts the definition given by the Westminster Assembly, viz: that "there are three persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one true, eternal God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory, although distinguished by their personal properties." And what he means by person when applied to God, he states in the language of Dr. Emmons, viz: "the only living and true God exists in such a manner that there is a foundation in his nature to speak of himself in the first, second and third person, and say I, thou, he, meaning only himself." This may be as clear a definition of the doctrine as can be given; but it must be obvious that it wraps up the subject in mystery. It makes the Trinity an indefinable something. Neither the Assembly, nor the Doctor could tell what it is; nor can any one else.

Professor Stewart, whom he afterwards quotes, tells us what it is not; but acknowledges his inability to tell us affirmatively what it is, or what the distinction contended for consists in; and attempts to sustain himself by the plea that there is an analogy between this case and that of the underived existence of God; and, consequently, that the former ought not to be rejected on account of its being affirmatively indefinable, any more than the latter. But I think the cases are not analagous. When we speak of underived existence, we speak of a plain, intelligible fact, though we can not comprehend the how respecting its existence. The mere fact of God's existing without a beginning, or without an extraneous cause, is as easy to be conceived of as any other fact. How it is that he so exists is altogether another question. But in the above definition of persons in the Trinity, there is no intelligible fact, or point stated. There is no definition given of which the mind can form a clear and distinct idea. It is said that there is a foundation in God's nature for the application of the three personal pronouns, when he means only himself. But the question, what is that foundation, remains unanswered—untouched. This, in my view, is a serious objection to the doctrine, especially as being regarded in the light of a fundamental truth.

This definition differs, also, from other definitions which have been given of the doctrine. Dr. Dwight calls the three persons "three percipient agents." But what is a percipient agent, but a real, intelligent person in the common acceptation of the term. The plain, unavoidable consequence of the Doctor's view, though he would not admit it, is Tritheism. I have heard the distinct individuality of each person asserted from the desk, which appears to me to be in effect affirming the existence of three Supreme Gods.

The Nicene Creed maintained that Christ is "very God of very God," which, for aught I can see, makes him a Supreme God, produced, or caused by another Supreme God, which involves a palpable absurdity and contradiction.

Bishop Pierson, in explaining the Apostle's creed, as it is termed, contends, that the Father, who is the first person in the Godhead, "communicated the whole Deity to the Son, and that the Father and Son communicated the whole Deity to the Holy Spirit." But this notion of communicated Deity is manifestly at war with self-existence and independence. Hence, these distinctions are now regarded by many as improper, or at least inadequate; and the distinction in question is made to consist in a certain indefinable something, as above. And yet the belief of, we know not what, is considered indispensable to Christian character, and the true hope of salvation.

But what is most of all objectionable to Mr. Johnson's definition, is its want of a scriptural sanction. If he had cited the text in which the doctrine is so asserted and defined, it would have been to the purpose. But here he has failed, and that from the necessity of the case.

It is true, he might have produced evidence that the pronoun I, and thou, are employed by Christ when addressing the Father, and vice versa; but none that the Son spoke thus as being himself the Supreme God; or that the Father spoke thus to the Son, considering him as the Supreme God—none that the same being applied both pronouns to himself. He might also have produced evidence, that Christ in a particular case applied the third personal pronoun to the Holy Spirit, having first introduced it as a figurative person—a Comforter, or rather Advocate, which is the primary meaning of παρακλητος; but not that he applied it thus, as being himself the Supreme God. But I think he could not have produced any passage in which the Almighty Father addressed the Spirit in the third person. His mode of speaking is "my Spirit," in the first person singular —the Spirit belonging to his very person —bearing the same relation to him that the Spirit of a man does to a man. This fact is alone sufficient to show the incorrectness of the above definition. And I would here remark, that many who rank among Trinitarians are dissatisfied with the prevailing definitions given of the Trinity, and make it consist of three different modes of manifestation, or the three offices. But this can not be a proper Trinity. It is essentially Unitarianism. But without insisting farther on Mr. Johnson's failure to define the word person, we will proceed to consider his proofs of a three-fold distinction in the Godhead, which he denominates three persons, equal in power and glory, and yet the same in substance.

The first, is God's speaking in the plural sense, as, for instance, "let us make man in our image." But how does this prove a Trinity of co-equal persons?—What is there in this mode of speaking but what may be perfectly accounted for, upon the principle that the Father thus addressed his Son, who is "the first born of every creature," and "by whom he made the world"? Evidently nothing. Certainly two make a plurality without implying an equality. Here, therefore, is no proof of a Trinity.

He next notices the Baptismal Commissioon, Mat xxviii. 19, and first translates it "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." It is manifest that baptizing into the name, (εις το ονομα,) is a different thing from baptizing in the name, (εν τῳ ονοματι.) What, then, is the meaning of baptizing into the name &c.? By consulting the most able and approved Trinitarian authors, he will find that it is conceived, and that correctly, that it is baptizing disciples "into the belief and profession of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." But this is far from proving that these are three distinct, co-equal and co-eternal persons in one God. For aught he has exhibited to the contrary, it is perfectly consistent with the Father's being, "the only true God," and Jesus Christ's being, his Son and our Mediator, who has derived his being and all his powers from his Father, and with the Holy Spirit's being the Father's own Spirit, essential to his person, and not a distinct person, and thus distinctly mentioned, because God ordinarily operates in this world by his Spirit which is omnipresent, and not by a visible manifestation of his personal glory. Doctor Dwight, and Matthew Henry, and Doctor Scott, and a hundred other Doctors saying that "it is a plain and unanswerable exhibition of the doctrine of the Trinity," does not make it so. This is but the opinion of certain great and good men, while others as great and good as they are of a different opinion. We must look at the passage each one for himself. Does it plainly and necessarily teach that there are three co-equal and co-eternal persons in one God? If not, (and I think it manifestly does not,) it fails of sustaining the doctrine under consideration.

His next proof is the Apostolic Benediction, 2d, Cor. xiii. 14. "The grace of the Lord Jesus, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all." "How," he asks, "would it have appeared, if Paul had written, the grace of Paul, and the love of God? or the grace of Gabriel? Place," says he, "the name of any mere creature there, and we are shocked at the change." Why should we be shocked? Because, neither Paul, nor Gabriel, nor any other man, or angel, stands in the same relation to God and man that Jesus Christ does. Had God appointed either Paul, or Gabriel to be the prime minister of his kingdom, and mediator between himself and man, instead of his first-born Son, Jesus Christ, and had replenished him with the abundant gifts of his Spirit, and had made him "full of grace and truth" to be dispensed to the children of men, there would have been nothing shocking in such a wish or prayer. It would have been perfectly consistent. There is nothing in this clause of the benediction which necessarily carries the mind of the reader beyond the character of Christ as the anointed being and mediator in Zion, in which character he is confessedly inferior to God; and hence it furnishes no proof that he is a co-equal person in the Godhead. His grace, though given him, as all things else are, is very properly connected with the love of God in this appropriate benediction. So also is the communion of the Holy Spirit, though it professes no distinct personality from the Father; because it is by his Spirit that God dwells with saints, and brings them into holy fellowship with himself.

These two texts, containing the baptismal commission, and the Apostolic benediction, are the only ones which he addresses in this place, as presenting the doctrine of the Trinity at one view. He forbears to mention 1 John v. 7, on account of its genuineness being denied by Anti-Trinitarians, and defers his vindication of it to a subsequent number. I shall therefore defer my objections to its genuineness until I come to it in the order in which it stands in this Essay, and I shall then attempt to show that it is verily an interpolation, and no part of the inspired record; although if its genuineness should be admitted, it would by no means prove that there are three distinct co-equal persons in one God, as I have showed in my former articles. Let no reader be started at the suggestion that the passage is not genuine; for if it should be made to appear that the same rules of evidence which require us to admit the authenticity of the scriptures in general, require us to reject the genuineness of this text in particular, we are bound to do so. Be pleased to suspend your decision till you shall have heard both sides of the case.

In taking my leave of this number, I would remark, that, in my sober judgment, Mr. Johnson has utterly failed of presenting any satisfactory proof that God exists a Trinity in Unity in the common acceptation of the phrase. And, yet, if the doctrine be true, and not only true; but fundamental to the Christian system, we should reasonably expect to find it presented clearly and definitely, at one connected view, in some part of the sacred cannon—yea, so presented repeatedly, and by different writers. This is the case with other prominent doctrines, and surely it must have been the case with this, if the doctrine be true: more especially, as just views of God lie at the foundation of true religion, and as the point of God's absolute unity is so often—so dearly—and so solemnly stated. But, instead of this, not a single passage is produced in which it is thus presented; (the disputed one excepted, which itself fails of definitely expressing the entire doctrine.) How happens this? Is it not a circumstance decidedly unfavorable to the Trinitarian hypothesis? Is it not one, which should, at least, induce us to examine very critically, the separate and detached forms of evidence in which it is supposed to be presented?

Have patience with me, dear reader, and, (the Lord permitting,) I will further examine our author's proof-texts and arguments in subsequent numbers.

Affectionately yours,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, Sept. 1841.

If heaven doth not enter into us by way of holiness, we shall never enter into heaven by way of happiness.

If you would lay up a treasure of glory in heaven, lay up a treasure of grace in your hearts.

If your souls are rich in grace, they will be rich in glory.

Religious Department.

From the New York Observer.

A REMARKABLE MAN.

In looking over some old papers a few days since we met with a letter which throws additional light on the character of a remarkable man. It may be known to many of the readers of the Missionary Herald that some fifteen or twenty years ago, there lived in the State of Vermont, a man by the name of Solomon Goodell, whose donations to benevolent objects, considering the day in which he lived, and his pecuniary circumstances, were extraordinary, and worthy of being remembered and imitated by Christians at the present time. Jeremiah Evarts, Esq., prepared a biographical sketch of this worthy individual, which was published in the Missionary Herald for August 1825. It has recently appeared in the Day Spring, and we gather from it a few facts to give the reader a farther acquaintance with the man whose letter is to follow.

"His property could not at any time, have been sold for $5,000, but he pursued a course of charity, as a business for life, with a laborious self-denial, a hardihood, a perseverance, and an enlarged catholicism, which unitedly formed a character of Christian heroism, as rare as it is honorable.

"About the year 1809, the writer observed a donation of $100 to the Connecticut Missionary Society, published in the annual accounts as from Mr. Goodell. Such donations were at that time very uncommon in this country, and in regard to that Society, nearly or quite unprecedented. The thought occurred, that doubtless some gentleman of independent fortune had thought proper to take up his residence in the interior of Vermont, and that he considered the Society just named a good channel for his pious beneficence. This conclusion was strengthened by seeing a similar donation from the same source, at the return of each successive year for a considerable period.

"When the American Board of Foreign Missions began its operations, Mr Goodell did not wait for an agent to visit him, but sent a message (or came himself) more than fifty miles, to a member of the Board, saying that he wished to subscribe $500 for immediate use, and $1,000 for the permanent fund. He sent $50 as earnest money, and said he would forward the remaining $450 as soon as he could raise the sum; and would pay the interest annually upon $1,000 till the principal should be paid. This engagement he punctually complied with, paying the interest, and just before his death transferring notes and bonds secured by mortgages, which, (including the $1,000 above mentioned) amounted to $1,708 37; that is, a new donation was made of $708 37, to which afterwards was added another bond and mortgage of $350.

"Mr. Goodell had made what he thought suitable provision for his children, as he passed through life. After consulting his wife, he left her such a portion of his estate as was satisfactory to her, gave several small legacies, and made the Board his residuary legatee. He supposed that the property left to the Board by will, would not be less than $1,000.

"On visiting Mr. Goodell at his house, you would find no gentleman with an independent fortune; but a plain man, in moderate circumstances, on one of the rudest spots in the neighborhood of the Green Mountains, every dollar of whose property was either gained by severe personal labor, or saved by strict frugality, or received as interest on small sums lent to his neighbors. His house was comfortable; but with the farm on which it stood, was worth only between $700 and $1,000. His income was derived principally from a dairy.

"When he took a journey of fifty miles to pay over $465 of his hard earned property, for the circulation of the Scriptures on the other side of the world,—a donation which would have been acknowledged as generous from a British nobleman,—his whole appearance and equipage would indicate that he was in the plainest class of laborious farmers. All his wearing apparel, at the time of his death, did not equal in value what is often paid for a single garment by persons who can not afford to expend any thing in the way of charity.

"Besides the donations above mentioned, Mr. Goodell made many smaller ones to missionary societies, formed to send the gospel to new settlements. He paid $50, or more, at one time, to a missionary, whom he employed to preach in the destitute towns near him.

He aided in the education of pious young men for the ministry, by furnishing them with money for their necessary expenses. He discovered no ostentation, so far as we have been able to learn, in his religious charities. Certain it is, that he always appeared to consider himself as the obliged party, and as obtaining a favor from Societies, which he made the almoners of his bounty. Farthest of all was he from supposing that his charitable exertions could make any atonement for sin, or authorize any claims upon the Divine mercy. He held to the most entire self-renunciation, and to dependence upon Christ alone."

The letter to which we have alluded reveals another of the channels through which this liberal man suffered his substance to flow for the relief of the destitute. As [illegible] of benevolence suggested by [illegible]oodell is evidently the fruit of pure [illegible] publication will [illegible] the suspicion of fanaticism, and [illegible] for him wider admiration, and, we trust, imitation. At least, the narrative [illegible] and the letter below, will serve [illegible] ample from actual life [illegible] what a man in very moderate circumstances, with a family dependent on the [illegible] labor of his hands, may do [illegible] men, and for Christ, if he has [illegible] position to do what he [illegible]

[illegible]

To Rev. Dr. [illegible]

DEAR SIR,—If you write to [illegible] in England or Scotland, [illegible] of their poor coming over here, [illegible] well to mention the [illegible] being farmers; and if those [illegible] write back as soon as might be, [illegible] say what number will come [illegible] circumstances they may be [illegible] they will bring any [illegible] ries or not, and what [illegible] here, whether this fall or next [illegible] next spring, it would be best [illegible] here as early as might be. I propose [illegible] to devote $1,[illegible] can provide for [illegible] them to get [illegible] first that come over should [illegible] much, the next year I would [illegible] until that sum is expended. [illegible] that those [illegible] what I do for them [illegible] another [illegible] or more. [illegible] industrious people may be sent, [illegible] be willing to do what [illegible] own support. I write this [illegible] God, and [illegible] upon my [illegible] And [illegible] sure to minister to the necessities [illegible] when Christ will set [illegible] himself.

I earnestly desire [illegible] ers of your [illegible] grant his blessing [illegible] and that I and those I may [illegible] may daily [illegible]

[illegible]

With [illegible]

I subscribe myself [illegible]

So[illegible]

What if the [illegible] farmers [illegible] Christ should [illegible] works of benevolence [illegible] Would [illegible] Would [illegible] be [illegible] Would the [illegible] lack of the bread of [illegible] scattereth and yet increaseth, [illegible] that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

[illegible]

THE CHRISTIAN HERITAGE.

Oh, how consolatory is the thought!—If the spirit has been justified, regenerated, sanctified, it will return to [illegible] of God in heaven [illegible] for ever happy. It will be a dissolution from that body of corruption which has been a clog, a weight, a hindrance. How little we know of the disembodied spirit! How little do we know of the [illegible] the spirit that has emerged [illegible] We have often followed [illegible] flight of the spirit. But we [illegible]

[illegible]

They are in glory, they are with Christ, they are separated from [illegible] temptations and trials of this [illegible] The journeying spirit returns; [illegible] at home. Yes, after the toil and peril and fatigues of his journey [illegible] pilgrim—after the toil of [illegible] enters his father's house [illegible] at the table [illegible] the happy family:

[illegible]

Yes it is the soldier, the hardy veteran who has endured the fatigues of successive campaigns, who has worn his armor constantly, and used his sword manfully, and kept the shield of his faith steadfastly, and finished his course gloriously. It is the triumphant soldier stepping on the neck of his last enemy, and shouting as he rises, "O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" He returns to God; he lays by his sword, he takes the victorious palm and waves it before the throne; he takes off his [illegible], he unbuckles his breast plate, he removes his helmet, he lays by his shield; God clothes him with a robe of salvation, and he walks with those who are before the throne.

Yes, it is the weather-beaten mariner; he has endured many hardships, many dangers; now at length he has weathered every storm; he is now entering the port, no more to be dashed on the surface of the troublous ocean, no more to feel the surges beat against him. Angels welcome him—he lands on the shores of immortality to be forever with Jesus. It is the spirit returning to God.—Lesly.

Children's Department.

[illegible]

THE BIBLE, AND THE WASTE PAPER.

[illegible] saw a Sunday School scholar [illegible] her was [illegible] of his [illegible] for the seat [illegible] book lying [illegible] the floor. After seeing the teacher, [illegible] with a careless air. [illegible] to show [illegible] his Bible, that I [illegible] a verse or two in it. [illegible] for the sacred [illegible] his seat, he looked [illegible] all covered [illegible] dirt. Hastily [illegible] it up, and began [illegible]

Do you think that boy loved his Bible, [illegible] Young [illegible] with things they [illegible] show you [illegible] the book of [illegible]

[illegible] School scholar [illegible] replied the [illegible] the child, [illegible] was the really [illegible] the boy, [illegible] I thought it [illegible] replied [illegible] and ask [illegible] the young [illegible] give the [illegible] that it may not [illegible] boy, [illegible] back to the woman [illegible] can not give me [illegible] be under great [illegible] the old Bible, the [illegible] shall have the [illegible] weight in waste paper.'

[illegible] offer, the poor child [illegible] and asked his [illegible] gave him all she [illegible] the paper [illegible] scale, and [illegible] his precious [illegible]

"[illegible] I have got it, I have [illegible] the Bible!"

[illegible] like this [illegible] love.— [illegible] men and children the way to eternal life.

THE CONTRAST.

[illegible] was on [illegible] were gliding rapidly over its [illegible] surface. A dashing equipage was driven to the centre of a commercial square, and its thickly cloaked occupant stepped upon the pavement. A poor woman with a shivering child stood before him.

'Good sir, my child is starving—give me a shilling to buy bread.'

He looked sternly upon her, and her upturned eyes dropped at the fierce look, while she [illegible] pressed her infant close to her breast.

'Woman! go to the Alms-house; I have nothing for you.'

The [illegible] the harshness of the tone in which the words were spoken, [illegible] her [illegible] expression of his features. She sighed, and said to her child, "God take compassion on thee, for the heart of this man does not feel for thee!" and her sobs and wailing expressed the bitterness of the mother's sorrow.

He passed on.

The horses were champing on the bright bits, and throwing up their sleek and arching necks, as if delighted with the clanging sounds of the bells so profusely strung around them. A boy of ten or eleven years of age was gazing with the eagerness of juvenile curiosity, wonder, and delight, upon the splendid vehicle, and the noble horses. Although on his way to school, he had turned aside for a few moments, and in his open and pleased face was written the expectation of the joy which he would experience, when, at some future day, he might sit behind such animals, and be whirled along the smooth road.

While his eyes were thus occupied, and his feelings were thus swelling up like the waters of an overflowing spring, his ears heard the low and piteous request of the indigent petitioner, and the coarseness and brutality of the rich man to whom it was addressed, checked the current of his joyous emotions. Scarcely were the words uttered before he was hurrying off, and ere the moanings of the woman had ceased, he was running back from a shop, distant but a few yards.

"Here, poor woman, take this bread, and feed your child."

The sobbings were exchanged for a scream of surprised delight; the bread was quickly seized, and a portion of it given to the child, who, almost famished, and stiffened with cold, could with difficulty receive the proffered sustenance. The boy stood until the child commenced to eat, and the mother, whose attention and persuasive accents had been employed in various methods to impart warmth, and to induce it to eat, looked up, while a gleam of satisfaction at the result of her experiments, and of thankfulness for the timely relief, broke over her anxious and saddened countenance. "God bless you, little sir," said she, "and if you have a mother, may she be long preserved to you!"

The blood rose to his cheeks, and the glow spread over his forehead; his throat seemed as if filling with something, which rising, almost induced choking; tears rushed to his eyes; and with mingled feelings of pity and gladness, he ran on to the school-house. Genuine charity! thou hast the uniform light and heat of the sun.

Children, be kind to the poor, for he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, November 24, 1841.

Action! Action!

There is a want of vital action in our churches. Our benevolent operations are nearly suspended, and with here and there an exception, our churches have relapsed into a state of supineness nearly bordering on death; and but little of that fervent piety which should ever characterize the disciples of Christ is exhibited, where discord does not exist. Sinners are becoming hardened in their sins, while the energies of the church are so paralized, and professors are losing the enjoyment of a Savior's presence.

Is it not time for action, to save both the church and the world? How few, alas! among all that have felt a Savior's love warming their hearts, and filling them with raptures, have fanned the flame and kept it burning with increased fervency? How many more have left their first love, and forgotten that they were purged from their former sins? It is to such we now make our appeal. And shall our plea be vain? Shall we point out the languishing energies of the church? Shall we refer you to her waste places in vain? It is your coldness of heart, your want of co-operation that has brought about this state of things, and caused death to abound when life should reign. In your own heart may you find the cause of this, and without your aid it can not be removed. Your minister may preach the truth with Paul's eloquence, or Peter's zeal, if it falls on frozen hearts, it can profit but little. Our ministers may be all zeal and energy, unless they can find a response from you their efforts will be greatly paralized. Who, we ask, will bear all this responsibility? Who will remain inactive while so much remains to be done? There is a great work to be done to bring the church into a proper state. This work must commence with individuals. It must commence with every one that has left the mercy-seat—with all who have in any degree departed from the right way of the Lord, and forgotten their first love. Le the work commence now, and long ere the Spring shall reanimate Nature, multitudes will be brought from the darkness of sin to the light of the gospel. Our faith in the word of God teaches us that whenever the children of God turn to their first love, and are importunate in their prayers and faithful in their labors for sinners that the Spirit will be poured out without measure, and multitudes in consequence thereof be brought to repentance and salvation. Your prayers are needed, O ye that have neglected to pray, for the church of God and for sinners. The church, in its divisions and supineness, demands them; your own eternal interests demand them; Sinners, who are continually filling up the measure of their iniquities, or who are falling into their graves, and in their fall lamenting the victory lost forever, demand them.

All experience, together with the word of God, teaches that where christians are praying and laboring in the vineyard of God, the work of conversion of sinners is sure to attend it. "The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much." God is waiting to hear this. His attentive ear is open to his children when they cry, and their cries shall not be vain, for He will arise and exhibit his power to save. He cannot deny himself. He will not withhold from his Son the praise that would result to him from the conversion of sinners. Who, then, will commence, having before him the ruined condition of sinners? How many will be found doing with diligence whatever is before them? The prayers of one have been answered in the conversion of many. How much, then, may we expect from the united prayers of the whole denomination? And may we not hope that every one will feel himself bound by all the interests of religion and the soul, to cling to the mercy-seat? This will all be accomplished when each individual for himself takes the stand of Joshua, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." It is our privilege—our right—to pray for, expect and receive great things. Who has a mind to work?

Inequality of Laws.

Provisions are made by our Laws, so that he who steals from his neighbor a trifling sum, that he would never miss, is incarcerated in the walls of a prison. If a man slander his neighbor, the arm of the law avenges the wrong and makes the guilty suffer.—But the shamless libertine, the lowest and most degraded of all creatures, the violator of the seventh command stalks abroad, ruining characters, rending hearts with the keenest anguish, trampling on the righteous laws of heaven, blasting the fairest prospects, covering with perpetual infamy and disgrace the unprotected and virtuous, regardless of right, and reckless of consequences, with impunity.

That which is most dear to every heart where virtue dwells, is unprotected by those laws that offer security to property. A man's wealth and character are protected by law, while his affections, the dearest interests of all, virtue and peace, are at the mercy of the vile seducer—the soulless libertine. It is the duty of every philanthropist to awaken to this subject, and combine his efforts with those who are now already engaged in the work to effect a reform. Commence by signing the Petition in the "Advocate of Moral Reform" of the 15th inst., and continue the effort until Adultery and Fornication shall withdraw themselves to the "Pit," from whence they came.

"Freemen to the Rescue."

There is an enemy in our midst that is secretly and yet efficiently waging a successful warfare against the liberties of our fellow-citizens, and every year slaying its thousands of those who otherwise might be the pride and defense of our institutions. Awake! and combine your energies before the demon Intemperance becomes an invincible enemy. What is doing for this cause, and who is doing it? Every day sordid avarice is pouring down the liquid fire to eat out the life and destroy the souls of those around us, and in our midst. The coming winter affords a favorable time to hunt out the monster and drive him from among us. Let there be concerted action and the work will go successfully on, till there shall not be a drunkard to disgrace human nature. Will the officers of our society here set the work agoing?

Trinity Discussion.

We supposed we should not have any thing more to publish when we closed Mr. Johnson's argument. Since that time we have received two articles from Mr. Chadwick. We do not feel ourselves bound to publish them, from the fact that near the first of the discussion we stated that Mr. Chadwick's letters would be published first, and Mr. Johnson's would end the Discussion. It seems that Mr. Chadwick did not so understand the matter. We have, therefore, concluded to publish the two letters we have on hand, lest any should think we were partial in our decisions, or were afraid of investigation. Mr. J. informs us that he shall not reply. We expect, therefore, that there will be nothing further offered on the subject.

N. Y. Evangelist and the Sabbath.

We are happy to find the following in the Evangelist of the 13th inst. "In every town where the church can secure the observance of this day, [the Sabbath,] according to the commandment, the progress of improvement will be sure and rapid." "If we can save the Sabbath, all is saved, if not all is lost."

This is right. We are happy to see men contending for the Sabbath "according to the commandment," being assured that it can be sustained by no other argument.—And now that our brother of the Evangelist is right in theory, we trust his love of consistency will so change his conduct as to make his theory and practice agree; i. e.—that he will cease observing a day that God has not commanded, to the neglect of the Sabbath of the "commandment." Try it.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR:

(NOVEMBER, 1841.)

NO. XI.—THE SUPERSCRIPTION OF THE EPISTLES.

ROMANS i. 1, 7.—Paul———To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

I will now repeat this passage to you again, and the characteristic of this superscription to which I solicit your attention, will be designated by emphasis:—Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the Gospel of God; To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is thus that the inspired penman designates this epistle as the property of Christians. Our simple design is, to examine the superscription of each of the epistles, that we may determine how many of them contain this same definitive characteristic.

1 COR.—Paul———and Sothenes our brother, Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours.

2 COR.—Paul———and Timothy our brother, Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

GAL.—Paul,———and all the brethren which are with me, Unto the churches of Galatia.

EPH.—Paul,———to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus.

PHIL.—Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Phillippi, with the bishops and deacons:

COLOSS.—Paul———and Timotheus our brother, To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ Jesus which are at Colosse:

1 THESS.—Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 THESS.—The superscription is the same as in 1 Thess.

1 TIM.—Paul———Unto Timothy mine own son in the faith.

2 TIM.—To Timothy, my dearly beloved son.

TITUS.—Paul, To Titus, mine own son after the common faith.

PHIL.—Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timotheus our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved and fellow-laborer, and to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-soldier, and to the church in thy house.

HEB.—Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling.

JAMES.—James———To the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

1 PET.—Peter, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, through the sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied.

2 PET.—To them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

1 JOHN.—My little children: Beloved.

2 JOHN.—The elder unto the elect lady and her children whom I love in the truth: and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth: For the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be in us forever.

3 JOHN.—The elder unto the well beloved Gaius whom I love in the truth.

JUDE.—Jude———to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called; Mercy unto you, and peace, and love.

THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN.—John to the SEVEN CHURCHES which are in Asia.

The SUMMARY may thus be stated:—

We find nine epistles of Paul to churches,—to saints in a collective capacity; beside the one called Hebrews, which is to "Holy brethren." We have four epistles of the same apostle, directed to pious individuals: two epistles of Peter to saints: one of James "to the twelve tribes:" three epistles of John to saints; the Apocalypse to the seven churches. Total, twenty-one; all superscribed to some department of the church of God.

REFLECTIONS.

1. The baneful idea which some at the present day attempt to teach, viz:—that there is no need of any specific church organization, is fully refuted by these superscriptions of the epistles. Many of the epistles are directed to distinct church organizations. "The church of God at Corinth: the churches of Galatia: Unto the church of the Tessalonians: To the church in thy house: Unto the seven churches" &c. These expressions can have no meaning, unless we recognize church organization:—The epistle to the Phillippians is directed to "saints" "with the bishops and deacons." Of course, these saints existed in an organized body, over which the bishops and deacons presided as church officers.

2. We are reminded of our obligation to those who preserved these epistles.—Through much care, and the care of many, they have come to us.

3. We are reminded of the great privilege of being connected with the church of Christ. These epistles, or letters, are to us. We can open them, and appropriate these rich blessings to ourselves.

4. We see the great mistake of ungodly persons who apply the promises of the epistles to themselves.

To whom do the writers of the epistles send "Grace, mercy, and peace"? Who partake of the glorious resurrection which is mentioned in 1 Cor. ch. 15? On whom is the Apostolic Benediction pronounced? Those who share in these blessings, are those who are assimilated in character to those who are mentioned in these inspired superscriptions: "saints"—"the faithful in Christ Jesus" &c., in short, those who are new creatures in Christ Jesus. The unregenerated have no share in these blessings. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maranatha"—let him be accursed at the coming of the Lord. If the impenitent continue to deceive themselves by appropriating to themselves the blessings which the epistles contain, their consternation will be great at the last great Day. Suppose one goes to our village post-office, and taking from it a letter, which he opens, he joyfully proclaims to all, that this letter informs him that he is an heir to a vast estate. On a second inspection of the superscription, he finds that the letter is not for him; the bequest is for another. How great his disappointment! But what will the incorrigibly impenitent do in the day of final retribution? In the face of clearly inscribed superscriptions, which plainly mark the epistles as designed for God's own dear children, they walk up boldly, and claim for themselves promises, with which, in their present character they have "no part nor lot." They continue to do this, until they cherish the belief that all the 'Grace, mercy and peace' of the epistles, do really belong to themselves.

Sinners! Shake off this delusion! For you, in your present character as rebels against God, "there is no peace,"—but there is "tribulation and wrath."

5. But you may have a share in all the heavenly salutations, and glorious hopes, and everlasting promises, which you can find in the twenty-one epistles. You may say this superscription is for me. ——"To them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." By faith in his atoning blood, call upon his Almighty name, and you will be "beloved of God"—you will be one whom the saints will 'love in the truth, for the truth's sake.' Heaven's salutation to you, will be—"Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the LORD JESUS CHRIST." AMEN.

News of the Day.

A Slave Question with Georgia.—Gov. McDonald, in his message to the Legislature of Georgia, states that in the month of April last, a slave was stolen by a person who escaped to the State of New York, and that the proper papers were prepared and authenticated, and a demand made upon Gov. Seward for the arrest and delivery of the fugitive. Gov. Seward has declined to comply with the demand until he has received proof of the facts and circumstances. "This proof, although entirely convenient," states the message, "I declined procuring, as I was fully satisfied that I had complied with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and Act of Congress."

This paragraph does not present the "Slave Question with Georgia" truly. The "fugitive" referred to is a Mr. Greenman, who is said to be employed in canal navigation. It is charged that Greenman passed the last winter in Georgia, and that on leaving there in the spring he enticed a Female Slave, (for whom he spoke a passage) to come with him. The slave was found on board, before the ship sailed and returned to her master. After the ship sailed the slave stated that she was induced to run away by Greenman, who was subsequently demanded of Gov. Seward upon the requisition of Gov. McDonald, as a fugitive from the Justice of Georgia, charged, 1st, with Stealing a Slave, and 2d, with Stealing the Slave's wearing apparel.—Eve. Jour.

A Wife worth having.—We noticed with peculiar pleasure, the recent marriage of Miss Charlotte Mitchell, of Georgia, to Wm. Wattington, Esq. The lady appeared on her wedding day dressed entirely in silk of her own manufacture—cap, gloves, stockings and dress—equal to the best pongee. Girls do you hear that? Such a girl would be worth more to a young man just starting in the world, than a thousand dollar farm and a half a dozen pianos to boot.

From the Buffalo Com. Advertiser.

Low water in the Lake—Enlargement of the Canal.—In the memorial on the subject of the enlargement of the canal, published in yesterday's paper, it was assumed that in the year 1820 the water in the lake was at its lowest stage of depression. Such, we learn, is not the fact. From the years 1809 to 1814, inclusive, the water was two feet lower than in 1820, the reefs between this and Fort Erie, now covered, were then entirely out of water, and on Bird Island, which for many years past had been almost wholly under water, buildings were erected. There is good reason to fear that a similar state of things may be again experienced. Its possible consequences are of the highest importance. If the lake should fall as low as it was during the five years above mentioned, a canal constructed upon the plan adopted for the enlargement from this to Lockport, would leave the whole utterly useless as far as Montezuma. Between that place and Lockport, it would require nearly, if not quite, the whole of the Genesee river to secure an adequate supply of water. This matter, therefore, is of the highest interest to the whole State, and to Rochester its importance is incalculable. The foundation of that city's prosperity, that which is [illegible] its very existence even, may be [illegible] destroyed when least expected. We shall procure as speedily as possible, [illegible] information on this subject, and put it in such a shape as will, we trust, command the earliest attention of the Canal Commissioners and the Legislature.

Later Still.—Capt. Van [illegible], of the brig Charles Carroll, [illegible] days from Tampico reports that the whole of the North of Mexico had declared for the change of the present government, and that President Bustamente was unfit to govern. Santa Anna had been named Commander-in-Chief, and the belief was that he would be declared Supreme Dictator, as Congress was to be dissolved, and he to call a new one, which should declare who was to govern. The mass of the citizens [illegible] interest themselves in any way with the Revolution. The agitation was carried on solely by the army, which governs every thing, and whose orders are received by express from Mexico. Business had [illegible] entirely been suspended at the latter place.

Mysterious.—On Monday [illegible] last, as the Hagerstown [illegible], while the Western stage was approaching [illegible], a passenger who seemed to be laboring under mental derangement, made several attempts to jump from the vehicle. When [illegible] the town, he accomplished it, and repairing to the house of an old woman, he entered and left his purse containing five hundred and thirty dollars in gold. While the stage was in town, he came up with it again and proceeded on his journey. His name is understood to be Hagerman. Nothing else seems to be known of him. The money was deposited in Bank by the old lady, and still remains there.

Daring Attempt to Poison a [illegible]—We learn, says the New Orleans Post, from the ship Swanton, Capt. Heath, arrived from Liverpool this day, that a most atrocious attempt was made by the black steward, Charles Burton, to poison the whole crew with corrosive sublimate, which he put into their food.

Nine were poisoned, and have suffered most excruciating pains, though none have yet died. It was his intention to poison the whole—captain, passengers, and men, at once. He made an attempt to escape detection; but was taken, secured, and is now in irons.

The Devil Killed.—The Raleigh (N. C.) Rasp gives the following account of a fellow being shot in Georgia lately in the disguise of the devil.

The fellow disguised himself with a club foot, went to the house of an old lady, a rich widow, called himself the devil, and frightening the family off the premises, took the old lady's money, and eloped. In the act of retreating he was met a mile or two from the house by a man with a gun who had been to attend a muster, and was then returning home, who, too, had taken a little too much of the "critter." The man upon meeting him, retreated, levelled his gun, and demanded who comes there? "I am the Prince of Darkness, but it is not thee that I am after, Jesse Bradlock. I had but one or two subjects, and them I have despatched to the lower regions." Jesse not being disposed to let his devilship pass, presented his gun and ordered him not to move. Satan commenced swelling, emitting smoke at the same time and burning sulphur. Jesse not liking the scent of the sulphur, fired and laid the Satanic Majesty a corpse at his feet. He then made his way to the house of the old lady, where he found the family in the greatest distress. Upon inquiry, he was told that the devil had been there, and they were compelled to fly to the woods for protection, or be carried off by him alive.

They immediately took the road, and tracked him by track of the club foot until they came up with his body, when they disrobed him of his garments, took off the club foot, recovered the money which he had stolen, washed his face, and recognized him as a man who had lived neighbor to them for many years.

Wreck of the Crusader.—We announced yesterday the wreck of the schooner Crusader, bound from this Port to Portsmouth, N. H., on Monday night, and the loss of three persons on board. The Gloucester Telegraph gives the particulars of the disaster, and the preservation of the rest of the crew. The Crusader had on board a valuable cargo of goods for Portsmouth traders. When she had reached within two or three miles of the Isle of Shoals, the storm became so violent that the Captain was obliged to put the vessel before the wind, and thinking it not prudent to attempt going round the centre, he steered for Annisquam. It being nearly low water, the vessel struck the bar at half past ten o'clock, and in a short time filled. It was so dark that she was not discovered until morning, when, by means of the life boat, Capt. Geo. Bennett, [illegible] Broadhurst, mate, and Noah Elms, seaman, were taken off the wreck much exhausted, having hung in the rigging six or seven hours.—Two men, John Burnham and Evan Davis, and Mary Broadhurst, the mate's wife had perished. The survivors were taken to the house of Mr. Day, Keeper of the Light, where they received every attention to render them comfortable.—Boston Daily Ad.

[illegible]—We regret to learn that a [illegible] by the name of Davidson, and a [illegible] belonging to Mr. Pynchon of [illegible], were accidentally drowned in the Savannah River on Sunday last. They were attached to the sloop Macon, of this port. [illegible] makes three valuable negroes [illegible] by Mr. P. during the month [illegible]. One of which was scalded [illegible] the steamer Beaufort, [illegible] the same day from [illegible].—Savannah Repub.

[illegible] to the lives of the slaves [illegible] valuable [illegible]

[illegible]

The [illegible], thank God! has left us [illegible]. The reports of the Board of Health may show [illegible] isolated case of death from this disease, but as an epidemic, or even as a source of danger to the new comer, its terrors have departed. We are likely to remember the season of 1841, as the most fatal which has for years afflicted our city. There seems but little profit or pleasure in reminiscences of mortality, and yet the mind can not help reverting to this dreadful scourge, and [illegible] sorrowfully on its victims—among which [illegible] every citizen can number [illegible] relative. Among the better classes and more valued members of society, its ravages have been this year appalling. It appeared to seek out with a surprising [illegible] of victims every [illegible] exemption for a long series of years had [illegible] with the condition of safety. It [illegible] heard—and when we state that the deaths did not exceed ten per cent of the sick, and that the records of the Board of Health will exhibit a total of [illegible] some idea may be formed of the numbers who were attacked.

But [illegible] has [illegible] us, satiated with slaughter, and [illegible] from his prey [illegible] the [illegible] elements.—Away then with gloomy recollections, [illegible] of public health [illegible] dawns once more upon us; strangers [illegible] friends are daily [illegible] the streets are [illegible] thoroughfares [illegible] thronged [illegible] pleasure of the present and anticipations of the future, occupy every mind, and the horrors of the [illegible] will soon be remembered [illegible].—To [illegible] is sometimes a benefaction [illegible].

We have heard it suggested that the public authorities should recommend to the citizens the observance of some appropriate time as a day of humiliation, thanksgiving and prayer. If we have been sorely afflicted, we have still much that should command our gratitude to the giver of all good. We cordially unite in the suggestion, and hope it will be carried into effect.

Lost Mail Found.—Letters were received from Columbus to-day announcing the arrival of the New York mail of [illegible]. It is quite too bad that the great mails of the country with their immense values, should be thus treated. This mail was probably thrown off by some [illegible] who thought his load too heavy. We hope Mr. Wickliffe will be able to contrive and execute some system of responsibility which will secure the mails.

A Good Sign.—The Army and Navy Chronicle states it as an interesting fact, and one perhaps not generally known, that within a few years past, as many as twelve or fifteen officers of the army, and it is believed some from the navy, have laid aside the military profession for the more peaceful, but not less arduous vocation of the Christian ministry, and are now usefully employed, in various portions of the U. S. in preaching the gospel.

Fatal Accident.—Yesterday morning a young girl about twenty years old, named Jane Noble, who resided at the corner of 86th street and 7th avenue, was accidentally shot by her father, William Noble, a master mason, who was a contractor for some of the public works. In consequence of having some time back received an intimation that his house would be attacked by some dissolute characters residing in his neighborhood, he kept fire arms ready loaded in order to resist them. Yesterday morning he was showing one of his pistols to a neighbor who came into his house, and as there was no cap upon the touch hole, he cocked and pulled the trigger, when it immediately exploded and the charge entered his daughter's head, who was standing within a few feet of him and killed her on the spot. It was subsequently ascertained that there was a detonating cap in the hollow of the lock, which the unfortunate father was not aware of when he pulled the trigger. The Coroner held an inquest on the body, and the Jury returned a verdict of accidental death.—Jour. of Com.

SAVANNAH, NOV. 9.

Latest from Florida.—By the steamer Newbern, Capt. McNulty, the Editors of the Georgian have received the following from a correspondent.

East Florida, Nov. 5, 1841.—Sam Jones' party in the Big Cypress have separated. Sam is on the Loosahatchie. Alluck-Tustenuggee has joined him. Par-sarc-i-mi-co, one of the Chiefs late in operation with 36 of his people. 38 of Tiger Tail's people have arrived at Tampa. Runners have been despatched by Tiger Tail, in pursuit of the remainder. Lieut. Sprague, A. D. C. and Lieut. Hoffman, with a detachment of 20 men, left Fort King yesterday for the Panee Suffka, to endeavor to open a communication with some Indians, supposed to reside in that neighborhood. Alligator and Tiger Tail accompanied them. Two friendly Indians are now hunting for some of their people east of the St. Johns. Two more are up the Oclawaha. Both parties are the bearers of a talk from Tiger Tail. The movement upon the Big Cypress commenced on the 1st inst. My word for it—the war will be over by the 1st of March next. Yours truly.

The War of England upon China.—A most immortal and hypocritical fallacy prevails as to this war. We constantly hear even well-informed and serious people justifying or excusing its disgraceful origin, by reference to its probable good results in introducing western civilization and Christianity among 300,000,000 of semi-barbarous people. Now, on such a plea, Nicholas of Russia is justified in his ruthless and fiendish attack on the nationality and independence of Circassia. Such an excuse would palliate any public crime; and on the principles which it involves, picking pockets may be deemed a moral act, because it is probable that the punishment consequent on conviction may lead to the reformation of the criminal.

Any palliation of this war is idle; the Legislature gave to the India Company a monopoly of opium, which was cultivated for the Chinese market, with a knowledge of its demoralizing and destructive effects on that people; and the present war is to defend British interests from the consequence of the illegal introduction of the poisonous drug into China. In its origin the war is wholly indefensible, though in the progress of the events which immediately led to hostilities, most undoubtedly the Chinese did grossly insult the honor of the British Crown.—London Morning Chronicle.

The Unfortunate Cypher.—The Marseilles Gazette, a few weeks ago, told us a curious anecdote, relating to one of the first commercial men of the town. This gentleman, having a business correspondent on the African coast, bethought him some time since, that, as some members of his family had shown a partiality for monkeys, he might gratify them by sending for one or two specimens of these animals from Africa. Accordingly he wrote to his correspondent to procure two or three of the finest and most admired species, and transport them to Marseilles. Chance so ordered it that the merchant, in putting down the ou, (in English or,) between the figures 2 and 3, made the o very prominent, while the u remained scarcely visible.

"What great events from trifling causes spring."

Some months afterwards, a ship porter came in all haste to the old merchant, and announced to him that his menagerie had arrived. "Menagerie!" cried the merchant. "Yes, a menagerie; a whole cargo of monkeys had arrived to his consignment!" The merchant could scarcely credit the announcement, until the letter of his correspondent was put into his hand.—In that epistle, the African negociant, a man of the most uncompromising exactitude, excused himself very earnestly for not having been able with all his exertions to procure more than 160 monkeys, in place of the 203 ordered; but promises as soon as possible to fulfil the entire demand. The feelings of the honest merchant may be guessed, when, on moving down to the quay to satisfy himself on the subject by ocular inspection, he beheld his 160 monkeys all duly caged and littered, grinning at him with the most laudable pertinacity. It was a moment when a man might reasonably doubt whether it would be best to laugh or cry.

At Steubenville, O., the cashier of a menagarie, having given out in change some stage tickets, refused to receive them again. Upon this a mob rallied and assailed the establishment with brick bats and stones, and cutting their tents into strips. A sortie and a battle ensued, in which several were wounded. A constable present, who endeavored to set up the majesty of the law, was instantly silenced.—Cin. Gaz.

MONUMENTS OF WASHINGTON'S PATRIOTISM.—Third edition, with additions and embellishments. Washington, 1841. This is the title of a work containing a fac-simile of General Washington's public accounts, kept with his own hand, during the period he was achieving the independence of our republic, from June, 1775, to July, 1783.—It contains also some of the most interesting documents connected with his military command and civil administration, from the archieves of the Government. Several engravings adorn its pages. It is a volume which every American will regard as precious relic of the Father of his Country, and a desirable acquisition for the library and centre table.

It is stated in the Sangamo Journal, Springfield, Ill., that the State of Illinois has now become specially interested in Cairo city, at the mouth of the Ohio. It is said that at London, some of the Illinois bonds have been exchanged for Cairo bonds.

AN INCIDENT.—An incident of peculiar interest occurred during the burning of the Presbyterian church in Oswego. The schooner Essex was out—owing to the darkness and snow of the night, was unable to discover the light-house, and must in all probability have been lost but for the light of the fire, which pointed her to the harbor and lighted her safely into port.—Rochester Democrat.

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.—Within the last few years a person of the name of Pardoe, upwards of seventy years of age, has become an inmate of St. Giles' work-house, and the following is a tale related by him respecting a matrimonial affair in which he had been engaged:—It appears that he is a widower, by trade a shoemaker, and formerly resided at Potter's bar, Enfield. Some months ago a friend called upon him, and told him that he knew of something which, if he liked to undertake the part required of him, would be to his pecuniary advantage. He then said that a lady, between forty and fifty years of age, who lived in London, had a large sum of money willed to her, but she could not enjoy it unless she married: that she had an aversion to a married life, but he had mentioned Pardoe's name to the lady's solicitor, who wished to have an interview with him, and to make a proposition. Pardoe replied that he was willing to be engaged in any way, and having disposed of what little property he possessed, he came up to town and waited upon the solicitor, with whose name and address he had been made acquainted, and who told him that the lady would marry such a person as himself, but would not see him before the marriage took place; that she would not live with him after the ceremony had been performed, and that he must immediately afterwards be ready to sign with her a deed of separation, and concluded by asking him if he was willing on those terms to be the bridegroom? —For doing so he should receive the sum of £40, and he should subsequently be assisted with money should he require it.

Pardoe acquiesced to the proposition, and by appointment went, accompanied by an attorney to whom he had made known the circumstances, to the house of a registrar of births, deaths, and marriages, where he found the lady and her solicitor anxiously waiting his arrival, his intended bride being closely veiled, which prevented him from having more than an imperfect view of her features. A license being provided, the form of marriage was gone through by the registrar, and at its conclusion as he had been informed would be the case, the deed of separation was produced, to which both he and the lady affixed their signatures, after which the lady, wishing him good morning, retired. The attorney he (Pardoe) had then engaged, handed him over £40, which he had received, on the part of the bride, from her solicitor, and he has not since received any communication from the parties. The above named sum, his marriage portion, being all expended, and being too infirm to follow his trade, he was obliged to make application to the parish of St. Giles, to which he belongs, and the result has been his admission into the work-house.—English paper.

ATTEMPT TO BREAK PRISON.—A few days ago twenty-five or twenty-six of the prisoners confined in the Parish jail at New-Orleans, came within an ace of escaping.—On Tuesday, 2d inst., about 2 o'clock, a. m., one of the keepers of the Jail hearing a smothered noise in the upper story of the prison, thought something extraordinary was taking place, and awoke the clerk.—The two, having armed themselves, proceeded towards the spot whence the noise appeared to come. Having ascended to the highest story, they opened one of the female convict's cells, and beheld a number of the prisoners congregated together. The moment the latter perceived they were discovered, they attacked the jail keeper and clerk, and though they were armed, their assailants were so numerous that the issue might have been fatal, had not the shout of the party attacked and the noise of the scuffle brought the other keepers to the rescue.—The prisoners were subdued after a resistance so obstinate, that several of them were wounded in the affray. It appears that the prisoners had, by dint of much labor, effected a communication between the apartments in which they were confined, and those on the upper story. They had ascended on the night of the discovery, and were engaged in effecting a passage to the roof. A few moments later and their escape would have been certain. The room in the upper story, into which the prisoners had made an entrance from beneath, was occupied by three women, whose husbands were among those who had conducted the desperate enterprise. These women were, doubtless, accomplices. Among the prisoners detected in the act, are De Putron, Smith, Philips, Morrison, J. Johnson, D. Jackson, Lowry, Waters, D. Porter, Hand, Wilmot, &c. Ample means have been adopted to prevent further experiments of the kind.—New Orleans Bee.

"THE CONVENTION OF EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS OF NEWSPAPERS, which was called to be held at Frankfort, Ky., on the 16th of October, was not numerously attended. The convention was however organized, and the old "bill of prices" submitted to a committee, revised, and then adopted by all present. It appears to be the purpose, in Kentucky, to adopt the cash system, which has been adopted in the East, as the best for each side. The credit system, now so prevalent, it was agreed by those present at the above meeting, caused an average loss of 25 per cent., and that it was this which so generally embarrassed the successful prosecution of the printing business. When credit is given for subscription and advertising, the sums due are so small, and due from individuals so scattered, and whose locations are so frequently changed, that when the time for collection comes round, many of the individuals are not to be found, and, to find the few, who are, costs nearly as much as the sum to be collected. When demanded, it has been found, that on account of the smallness of the sum, individuals were as willing to pay at that time, as after; whilst the cash gives new spirit to those conducting the press. It was determined at the convention above, to call another meeting, during the session of the Legislature this winter, and try and have the system generally adopted in Kentucky."

The officers of the volunteers concerned in the arrest of Grogan within the Vermont frontier, have been dismissed by the Commander of the Forces, Sir Richard Jackson, in conformity to the sentence of a court martial.—Montreal paper.

COLLEGE RIOTERS.—Justice Wheeler this morning bound Moody over to the County Court—sentenced Underhill to pay a fine of $7 and costs of prosecution—and Eccles and Kain to pay each a fine of $5 and costs. Underhill, Eccles and Kain took an appeal.—N. Haven Palladium.

Austrian Commerce.—The average amount of exportations from Austria, is officially estimated at nearly eighty millions of Austrian guilders per annum, or about $32,000,000. Nearly one fourth of this amount consists in the export of silk from the Italian provinces; next in value is the export of wool from Morovia and Bohemia; the rest is in linnen, steel and iron ware from Syria and the arch-dukedom of Austria.

The mercantile vessels of Austria amount to 515—the whole tonnage, 123,000. Of these, only ten are three-masted vessels, tonnage 7,000; and fifteen steamers, tonnage 5,000. The rest are small in size and tonnage. The navy is employed as follows:—160 in the Adriatic sea, 150 in the Black sea and the river Danube, 170 in the Mediterranean, 12 in the Atlantic, 2 in the Caspian sea, 2 in the Baltic, and 19 trade to America. The whole amount of Austrian vessels which pass the straits of Gibralter consequently does not exceed 35.—Boston Jour.

Late and Interesting from Mexico.—The annexed letter from Vera Cruz, brings us the latest intelligence from Mexico:

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

Vera Cruz Oct. 7.

Things are getting bad in the city of Mexico. Bustamente has pronounced for the Federation. The mail of this morning brings news that both parties are fighting, and Santa Anna was to make a bold push on the 2nd inst. against Bustamente.

We do not know what to think, for since that day, no extraordinary courier has come here from the capitol. A Gen. Bandara, of Mexico, an influential character since Bustamente pronounced for the Federation, has joined him, promising 5,000 men, the Ceperos.

Here we are in peace. The barque Anahuac is to leave here on the 11th.

P. S. Since putting the above in type, we have received New Orleans papers of the 26th ult., containing the following particulars:

Santa Anna, having arrived at the Capitol with his troops, on the night of the 2d October about 3 o'clock, captured by assault the port of San Francisco, one of the strongest holds of Bustamente, and also the fort of St. Geronimo. Most of the officers and men captured immedately enrolled themselves among Santa Anna's party.—On the 3d, President Bustamente, with 1,500 infantry and 500 cavalry, attacked one of the posts of Santa Anna, but being reristed by 500 men of the corps of Peubla and Largas, was repulsed with great loss, and retired, leaving on the ground his killed and wounded. Gen. Galindo, on the same day, with 700 men, abandoned the cause of Bustamente and joined Santa Anna. The Censor says, that at the last accounts Gen. Santa Anna had completed the besieging line around the capitol, with the prospect of its early surrender.

Extract of a letter, dated

Vera Cruz, Oct. 7, 1841.

The mail from Mexico has just arrived, with information that the negotiation pending between Santa Anna and Bustamente had produced no result. In the time, the Federal party had taken advantage of the state of things, to proclaim the system of State Government, in the name of Bustamente; to which, however, Bustamente had not yet assented. General Victoria has been called in as a mediator, and has left Xalapa for Mexico; and it was hoped a compromise would, through him, be effected so as to pacify all parties.

Melancholy Result of Cupidity.—The Louisville Journal states that two or three weeks ago, three hundred foreign emigrants arrived at the Balize below New Orleans. The city authorities, hearing of their arrival, and anxious that they should not fall victims to the yellow fever, sent a deputation, warning them not to enter the city, and offering to furnish them with the means of subsistence until the pestilence should subside. The emigrants thought that it was all a Yankee trick. "We are told," said they to the deputation, "that we can make three dollars a day in New Orleans; if the authorities will pay us that, we will stay where we are—if not, not." The poor fellows hastened to the city; and, at the last dates, it is said that not one of them was living.—N. Y. Tattler.

Georgia.—The new Gov. of Ga., McDonald, has just transmitted his message to the Legislature, in which he recommends the establishment of a great centeral State bank, with branches in different parts of the State, and that the charters of all the present banks be suffered to expire. He also states that in the month of April last a slave was stolen by a person who escaped to the State of New-York, that he made the proper requsitions of Gov. Seward, who declined to comply, until he had recived proof of the facts, which the gallant Governor would not begin to afford. He consequently recommends to the Legislature to pass a law subjecting to inspection any package of goods that shall be shipped from this State; and that any suspected person coming from the State, be required to furnish security for good behavior! Our liberty would be truly a valuable possession.

Conviction of Konig.—Another of the party engaged in the murder of Bigham, has been convicted—the Jury, yesterday, in the case of Frederic Konig, having in fifteen minutes after the District Attorney closed his speech, which was about 8 o'clock, brought in a verdict of Guilty of murder in the second degree.

This is the fourth conviction for this murder. There remain still three more prisoners in jail to be tried for participation in the same crime, but their trials will be postponed for a day or two, neither of them having been called this morning.—Balt. Patriot

"Negroes.—We opine that if a stricter search than at present is practised, were instituted over this city, vast numbers of negroes might be caught in the act of learning to read, from white abolitionists. It is not long since that we heard of a slave owner in the upper part of this city, who on hearing for several nights successively a low murmuring sound in the rooms of his negroes, went to listen finally to see what it was about. He found a cluster of three or four with books in their hands, attempting the mystery of reading, and on inquiry, found farther that they had been in the habit of paying fifty cents a week each, to a schoolmaster in the neighborhood for the abolition philanthropy in the premises. It is very certain that our slaveholders cannot watch their negroes too narrowly, and if we wish to remain as we now are, a compact and contented people, every one of them thus caught reading, or trying to learn, should be visited with lashes. This may seem a harsh doctrine, but it is not half so harsh as the butchery of our families and children. We hope in this case the old Latin maxim of verbum sat, will be sufficient."—New Orleans "Crescent City" of Aug. 11.

A New way of 'Raising the Wind.'—A loafer in a country village in Massachusetts, having got out at the elbows applied to the first of the 'Select Men,' for admittance to the Alms House; and received an order on the superintendent to this effect; 'To Mr. A. B., superintendant, &c. Please to admit the bearer to the ——— Alms House, for three months,

C——— D———.

The loafer no sooner got the order than he went directly to a poor old laborer, who had applied in vain for the same favor, actually sold him the order for cash enough to purchase another 'jug of rum,' at the store.—(Fact.)

Newspaper Delinquencies.—There are fifty thousand dollars due for the Missionary Herald by delinquent subscribers since the year 1821. "And," said one of the officers of the American Board, at a recent meeting, "were all the delinquents to pay up, the board would be free from debt."

Notices.

Madison County Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the Madison county Agricultural Society will be held at 12 o'clock M. on Monday the 27th December next, at the court-house in Morrisville.

The members, and all those who feel an interest in the promotion of agriculture, and the welfare of the country, are earnestly requested to attend.

The executive committee will meet on the same day at 11 A. M.

Nov. 15, 1841.

A. S. SLOAN, Rec. Sec'y.

☞ The papers of the county will please copy the above notice.

LIST OF LETTERS.

C. P. Browning, P. M. C. Hubbard, P. M. Bennet, Backus and Hawley, (we can do better,) G. Card

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

C. Hubbard, $1, [illegible] P. Green, [illegible] C. Card, $1.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS,
CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi. Beat that if you can Messrs. HUMBUGS.

Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S.

Nov. 24.

It is of no use my little man, so have done with your crying. LOVERS OF GOOD TEA will call at the Stone Store, and those only who wish to purchase a good for nothing article will call at the HUMBUG store. By the way, what is the use of the little man's advertising that he goes the humbug system? every body knows it.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered in lots to suit purchasers, at prices 10 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

Has not the little man of the HUMBUG store waked up the wrong customer! And does his anxious mother know he's out?

Nov. 24.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the STONE STORE.

October 4th.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL [illegible] 20 per cent [illegible] DELLAY'S [illegible]

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE [illegible] are now offered [illegible] per cent lower [illegible] STORE merchant in New York [illegible]

[illegible]

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster [illegible] swellings [illegible]

[illegible]

The virtues of [illegible] thousands of the most [illegible] states of Vermont [illegible] its efficacy.—Price, 25 [illegible]

For sale by [illegible]

De Ruyter, Nov. 10. [illegible]

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS taken [illegible] story [illegible]

[illegible]

N. B. [illegible] short notice [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 23, 1841. [illegible]

STOVES.
COLD WINTER IS COMING.

[illegible]

LATE of the [illegible] has moved [illegible] Stone Store [illegible] Block, where [illegible] assortment of STOVES ever [illegible] market, comprising every [illegible] Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate [illegible]

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers [illegible] able terms as can be purchased [illegible] TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. [illegible] Old Cast-iron, and CASH, [illegible] fused in payment [illegible] business.

The subscriber [illegible] Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron [illegible]

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description [illegible] on hand, and offers [illegible]

LOW PRICES

[illegible] LEAKY

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. [illegible]

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of [illegible] and Climax Stoves and Cameron [illegible]

JOB WORK

[illegible] Done well on short notice [illegible] N. B. Purchasers [illegible] please Call at the Centre Store, [illegible] Block No. 3 Central Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. [illegible]

NEW GOODS
AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING [illegible] DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARDWARE, &c. [illegible] LARGEST stock of

BOOTS & SHOES.

Ever offered in De Ruyter [illegible] be sold CHEAPER than [illegible] "Peculiar advantages [illegible]" [illegible] CASH [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. [illegible]

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin and Jane Goodwin [illegible] Moyson, the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane
IN PARTITION

IN pursuance of an Order [illegible] Common Pleas of the [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] of Lot No. [illegible] about twenty-six rods; thence [illegible] of the road; thence south [illegible] road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney [illegible]

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.

31tf S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, [illegible] enough, situated first Lot south of the [illegible] Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly [illegible] fourths of an acre, being about six rods [illegible] Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. WM. MANSON

NO IMPOSITION!
NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the store formerly occupied by H. J. Wil[illegible] [illegible] with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, [illegible] respectfully announce to the inhabitants of [illegible] surrounding country, that they are [illegible] from New-York a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

[illegible] with the former stock completes [illegible] assortment ever before offered in [illegible] they flatter themselves from [illegible] advantages in purchasing, they can [illegible]

LOW PRICES,

[illegible] establishment west of the city of New-York. The [illegible] system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible] wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are [illegible] to give them a call, and examine a [illegible] Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to [illegible] shrewdest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, [illegible] offered to Physicians or Families at prices [illegible] per cent less than any establishment in this [illegible] STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS [illegible] for sale at the following valuable [illegible]

Rev. I. Covert's Balm of Life.
Moffat's Phœnix Bitters.
Moffat's Life Pills.
[illegible] Pills.
Phelp's Tomato Pills.
M[illegible]
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.
Balm of China.
Parker's Pulmonary Balm.
Cheeseman's Arabian Balsam.
Hutchinson's Liniment.
With others too numerous to mention.

Oct. 4.

S[illegible] English and Russia Bar Iron. [illegible] square American Iron, Swedes Horse [illegible] Band and Hoop Iron, Nail rods, Swedes [illegible] Cast and Spring Steel, Swedes Iron Nails, Cast Steel Shovels, Mill and X Cut Saws for sale very low at the STONE STORE.

October 4.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, [illegible] Children's Shoes a little better [illegible] elsewhere, at the

October 4 STONE STORE

L. W. BLISS' Window Sash [illegible] Bass & Co. [illegible] Blinds. [illegible] Simpson & Salisbury Edged Tools, consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and [illegible] at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE,

October 4. Manufacturers' Agent

1 CASE Gentlemen's CLOTH CAPS, Fur Trimmed.

1 CASE Ladies Silk Hats

ALSO:

[illegible] splendid $8 LACE VEIL, at $4,50, for sale at [illegible] STONE STORE

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, [illegible] Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, [illegible] Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all [illegible] Valices, common and Brussels Carpet [illegible] Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, [illegible] Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck [illegible] Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles [illegible] ever made or kept in a shop of this [illegible] as low as any shop west of Albany [illegible] and even De Ruyter not excepted, [illegible] for durability.

Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wood, and some money, and the remainder [illegible] Notes; also, wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese [illegible] every thing that is raised by the Farmer [illegible] Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible] &c. &c. &c.

[illegible] Lime [illegible] for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. [illegible] feet first rate Ash Flooring, and one half of [illegible] Dwelling House to rent for one year or more.

J. R. RIDER

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal [illegible] He would say that he [illegible] and the business will be continued [illegible] firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, [illegible] ready at all times to do work [illegible]

[illegible] the shortest notice, and warranted [illegible]

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 [illegible]

[illegible] S. D. Dellay's Store.

[illegible] 21, 1841. 30w6

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between the Subscribers under the firm of [illegible] ANNAS & AYER, expires this day [illegible] All persons having unsettled [illegible] are requested to call and [illegible]

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.

Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would [illegible] this opportunity to state, that he intends to [illegible] times a stock, unequalled for variety, at [illegible] as cheap as the cheapest.

De Ruyter, October 4, 1841.

25 PIECES BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the [illegible] STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by

Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct 20, 1841.

31tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the

Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

POETRY.

From the Knickerbocker.

Trust in Heaven.

This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy, the tears of wo,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow—
There's nothing true but Heaven!

MOORE.

Trust in heaven!—when o'er thy path,
Clouds and tempests come in wrath;
When thy grief oppresseth thee,
When obscured thy prospects be,
When around thee mists are driven,
Heed them not, but trust in Heaven!

Trust in Heaven!—when morning lifts
Up her head, and casts her gifts,
Light and dew upon the earth;
When she brings the blossoms forth,
'Till shall shine the stars of even,
For a safeguared trust in Heaven!

Trust in Heaven!—when there afar
Burneth many a glorious star;
Can'st thou doubt when thus her light
Gleams unshaded through the night,
That protection may be given
To thy pillow!—trust in Heaven!

Trust in heaven!—when one by one
Swift the waves of hope glide on,
Leaving thee a wreck at last
On the shore whence they passed;
Though thy heart be wrung and riven,
Still forever trust in Heaven!

Trust in heaven!—when from its way
Those thou lovest go astray;
Strive, still strive to bring them back
To its strait and thornless track;
And that truth may soon be given
To their spirits, trust in heaven!

Trust in Heaven!—it shall not fail,
When the darkest griefs prevail,
And when death at length shall come
When around thee spreads his gloom,
Pray that thou may'st be forgiven—
Place thy dearest trust in Heaven!

Natural History.

GREAT ERUPTION IN THE VOLCANO OF KILAUEA, IN HAWAII, SANDWICH ISLANDS,

Letter from Mr. Coan, dated,

Hilo, Sept. 25, 1840.

I cannot close without saying a word respecting the late volcano eruption in Puna, on this island. At the time this eruption took place we were all absent from Hilo to attend the general meeting at Oahu, a circumstance which I much regret, as it deprived us of a view of the most splendid and awful part of the scene. Since our return from Oahu I have made a pretty thorough exploration of the tract of country where the eruption occurred, having found its source, and traced the stream through most of its windings, to the sea. Some of the principal facts which have been collected from creditable testimony, and personal observation, I will now give you. For several years past the great crater of Kilauea has been rapidly filling up, by the rising of the superincumbent crust, and by the frequent gushing forth of the molten sea below. In this manner the great basin below the black ledge, which has been computed from three to five hundred feet deep, was long since filled up by the ejection and cooling of successive masses of the fiery fluid. These silent eruptions continued to occur at intervals, until the black ledge was repeatedly overflowed, each cooling, and forming a new layer from two feet thick and upwards, until the whole area of the crater was filled up at least fifty feet above the original black ledge, and thus reducing the whole depth of the crater to less than nine hundred feet. This process of filling up continued until the latter part of May, 1840, when, as many natives testify, the whole area of the crater became one entire sea of ignifluous matter, raging like old ocean when lashed into fury by a tempest. For several days the fire raged with fearful intensity, exhibiting a scene awfully terrific. The infuriated waves sent up infernal sounds, and dashed with such maddening energy against the sides of the chaldron, as to shake the solid earth above, and to detach huge masses of overhanging rocks, which, leaving their ancient beds, plunged into the fiery gulf below. So terrific was the scene that no one dared to approach near it, and travelers on the main road, which lay along the verge of the crater, feeling the ground tremble beneath their feet, fled and passed by at a distance. I should be inclined to discredit these statements of the natives, had I not since been to Kilauea and examined it minutely with these reports in view. Every appearance, however, of the crater confirms these reports. Every thing within the chaldron is new. Not a particle of lava remains as it was when I last visited it. All has been melted down and re-cast. All is new. The whole appears like a raging sea, whose waves had been suddenly solidified while in the most violent agitation.

Having stated something of the appearance of the great crater, for several days previous to the disgorgement of its fiery contents, I will now give a short history of the eruption itself. I say short, because it would require a volume to give a full and minute detail of all the facts in the case.

On the 30th of May the people of Puna observed the appearance of smoke and fire in the interior, a mountainous and desolate region of that district. Thinking that the fire might be the burning jungle, they took little notice of it until the next day, Sabbath, when the meetings in the different villages were thrown into confusion by sudden and grand exhibitions of fire, on a scale so large and fearful as to leave no room to doubt the cause of the phenomenon. The fire augmented during the day and night; but did not seem to flow off rapidly in any direction. All were in consternation, as it was expected that the molten flood would pour itself down from its height of four thousand feet to the coast, and no one knew to what point it would flow, or what devastation would attend its fiery course. On Monday, June 1st, the stream began to flow off in a North-Easterly direction, and on the following Wednesday, June 3d, at evening, the burning river reached the sea, having averaged about half a mile an hour in its progress. The rapidity of the flow was very unequal, being modified by the inequalities of the surface, over which the stream passed. Sometimes it is supposed to have moved five miles an hour, and other times, owing to abstractions, making no apparent progress, except in filling up deep valleys; and in swelling over or breaking away hills and and precipices.

But I will return to the source of the eruption. This is in a forest, and in the bottom of an ancient wooded crater, about four hundred feet deep, and probably eight miles east from Kilauea. The region being uninhabited and covered with a thicket, it was some time before the place was discovered, and up to this time, though several foreigners have attempted it, no one except myself, has reached the spot.—From Kilauea this place the lava flows in a subterranean gallery, probably at the depth of a thousand feet, but its course can be distinctly traced all the way, by the rending of the crust of the earth into innumerable fissures, and by the emission of smoke, steam and gases. The eruption in this old crater is small, and from this place the stream disappears again for the distance of a mile or two, when the lava again gushed up and spread over an area of about fifty acres. Again it passes under ground for two or three miles, when it re-appears in another old wooded crater, consuming the forest, and partly filling up the basin. Once more it disappears, and flowing in a subterranean channel, cracks and breaks the earth, opening fissures from six inches to ten or twelve feet in width, and sometimes splitting the trunk of a tree so exactly that its legs stand astride at the fissure. At some places it is impossible to trace the subterranean stream on account of the impenetrable thicket under which it passes. After flowing under ground several miles, perhaps six or eight, it again broke out like an overwhelming flood, and sweeping forest, hamlet, plantation, and every thing before it, rolled down with resistless energy to the sea, where, leaping a vast precipice of forty or fifty feet, it poured in one vast cataract of fire into the deep below, with loud detonations, fearful hissings, and a thousand unearthly and indescribable sounds. Imagine to yourself a river of fused minerals of the breadth and depth of Niagara, and of the deep, gory red, falling in one emblazoned sheet, one raging torrent into the ocean! The scene, as described by eye-witnesses, was terribly sublime. Two mighty agencies in collision. Two antagonists and gigantic forces in contact, and producing effect on a scale inconceivably grand! The atmosphere in all directions was filled with ashes, spray, gasses, &c., while the burning lava, as it fell into the water, was shivered into millions of minute particles, and, being thrown back into the air, fell in showers of sand on all the surrounding country. The coast was extended into the sea for a quarter of a mile, and a pretty sand beach and a new cape were formed. Three hills of scoria and sand were formed in the sea, the lowest about two hundred, and the highest about three hundred feet.

For three weeks this terrific river disgorged itself into the sea with little abatement. Multitudes of fishes were killed, and the waters of the ocean were heated for twenty miles along the coast. The breadth of the stream, where it fell into the sea, is about a half a mile, but inland it varies from one to four or five miles in width, conforming itself, like a river to the face of the country over which it flowed. Indeed, if you can imagine the Mississippi, converted into liquid fire, of the consistency of fused iron, and moving onward, sometimes rapidly, sometimes sluggishly; now widening into a sea, and anon rushing through a narrow defile, winding its way through mighty forests and ancient solitudes, you will get some idea of the spectacle here exhibited. The depth of the stream will probably vary from ten to two hundred feet, according to the inequalities of the surface over which it passed. During its flow, night was converted into day on all eastern Hawaii. The light rose and spread like the morning upon the mountains, and its glare was seen on the opposite side of the island. It was also distinctly visible for more than one hundred miles at sea; and at the distance of forty miles fine print could be read at midnight. The brilliancy of the light was like a blazing firmament, and the scene is said to have been one of unrivalled sublimity.

The whole course of the stream from Kilauea to the sea is about forty miles. Its mouth is about twenty-five miles from Hilo station. The ground over which it flowed descends at the rate of one hundred feet to the mile. The crust is now cooled, and may be traversed with care, though scalding steam, pungent gasses, and smoke, are still emitted in many places.

In pursuing my way for nearly two days over this mighty, smouldering mass, I was more and more impressed at every step with the wonderful scene. Hills had been melted down like wax; ravines and deep valleys had been filled; and majestic forests had disappeared like a feather in the flames. In some places the molten stream parted and flowed in separate channels for a considerable distance, and then re-uniting, formed islands of various sizes, from one to fifty acres, with trees still standing, but seared and blighted by the intense heat. On the outer edge of the lava, where the stream was more shallow and the heat less vehement, and where of course the liquid mass was cooled soonest, the trees were mowed down like grass before the scythe, and left charred, crisped, smouldering, and only half consumed. As the lava flowed around the trunks of large trees on the outskirts of the stream, the melted mass stiffened and consolidated before the trunk was consumed, and when this was affected, the top of the tree fell, and lay unconsumed on the crust, while the hole which marked the place of the trunk, remains as smooth and perfect as the calibre of a cannon. These holes are innumerable, and I found them to measure from ten to forty feet deep, but as I remarked before, they are in the more shallow parts of the lava, the trees being entirley consumed where it was deeper. During the flow of the eruption, the great crater of Kilauea sunk about three hundred feet, and her fires became nearly extinct, one lake only, out of many, being left active in this mighty chaldron. This, with other facts that have been named demonstrates that the eruption was the disgorgement of the fires of Kilauea.—The open lake in the old crater, is at present intensively active, and the fires are increasing, as is evident from the glare visible at our station, and from the testimony of visitors.

During the early part of the eruption, slight and repeated shocks of earthquake were felt, for several successive days, near the scene of action. These shocks were not noticed at Hilo.

Through the directing hand of a kind Providence no lives were lost, and but little property was consumed during this amazing flood of fiery ruin. The stream passed over an almost uninhabited desert. A few little hamlets were consumed, and a few plantations were destroyed; but the inhabitants forewarned, fled and escaped. During the progress of the eruption, some of the people in Puna spent the most of their time in prayer and religious meetings, some flew in consternation from the face of the all-devouring element, others wandered along its margin, marking with idle curiosity its daily progress, while another class still coolly pursued their usual vocations, unawed by the burning fury as it rolled along within a mile of their doors. It was literally true that they ate, drank, bought, sold, planted, builded, apparently indifferent to the roar of consuming forests, the sight of devouring fire, the startling detonations, the hissing of escaping steam, the rending of the earth, the shivering and melting of gigantic rocks, the raging and dashing of the fiery waves, the bellowings, the murmurings, the unearthly mutterings coming up from a burning deep. They went carelessly on amid the rain of ashes, sand, and fiery scintillations, gazing vacantly on the fearful and ever-varying appearance of the atmosphere, murky, black, livid, blazing, the sudden rising of lofty pillars of flame, the upward curling of ten thousand columns of smoke, and their majestic roll in dense, dingy, lurid, or parti-colored clouds. All these moving phenomena were regarded by them as the fall of a shower, or the running of a brook; while to others they were as the tokens of a burning world, the departing heaven and the coming Judge.

I will just remark here, that while the stream was flowing, it might be approached within a few yards on the windward side, while at the leeward no one could live within the distance of many miles, on account of the smoke, the impregnation of the atmosphere with pungent and deadly gasses, and the fiery showers which were constantly descending, and destroying all vegetable life. During the progress of the descending stream, it would often fall into some fissure, and forcing itself into apertures and under massive rocks, and even hillocks and extended plats of ground, and lifting them from their ancient beds, bear them with all their superincumbent mass of soil, trees, &c., on its viscious and livid bosom, like a raft on the water. When the fused mass was sluggish, it had a gory appearance like clotted blood, and when it was active, it resembled fresh and clotted blood mingled and thrown into violent agitation. Sometimes the flowing lava would find a subterranean gallery, diverging at right angles from the main channel, and pressing into it, would flow off unobserved, till meeting with some obstruction in its dark passage, when, by its expansive force, it would raise the crust of the earth into a dome-like hill of fifteen or twenty feet in height, and then, bursting this shell, pour itself out in a fiery torrent around. A man who was standing at a considerable distance from the main stream, and intensely gazing on the absorbing scene before him, found himself suddenly raised to the height of ten or fifteen feet above the common level around him, and he had just time to escape from his dangerous position, when the earth opened where he had stood, and a stream of fire gushed out.—Missionary Herald.

Miscellaneous Department.

The touching anecdote which follows was related by Father Matthew, in a charity sermon:—

A poor woman found in the streets a male infant, which was brought to me, and asked imploringly what she was to do with it. Influenced, unhappily, by cold caution, I advised her to give it to the church wardens. It was then evening; on the ensuing morning, early, I found this poor woman at my doors. She was a poor water-carrier; she cried bitterly and said,—"I have not slept one wink all night for parting with the child which God had put in my way, and if you will give me leave I will take him back again. I was filled with confusion at the pious tenderness of this poor creature.

I went with her to the parish nurse for the infant which she brought to her home with joy, exclaiming in the very words of the prophet,—"Poor child, though thy mother has forgotten thee, I will not forget thee." Eight years have elapsed since she brought to her humble home that exposed infant, and she is now blind from constant exposure to wet and cold; and ten times a day may be seen that poor water-carrier passing with her weary load, led by this little foundling boy. O! merciful Jesus, I would gladly sacrifice the wealth and power of this wide world, to secure to myself the glorious welcome that awaits this poor blind water-carrier, on the great accounting day! O! what compared to charity like this, the ermine robe, the ivory scepter, the golden throne, the jewelled diadem!"

EFFECTS OF SINGING ON HEALTH.—"A fact," says an American physician, "has been suggested to me by my profession which is, that the exercise of the organs of the breast by singing, contributes very much to defend them from those diseases to which the climate and other causes expose them." A music writer in England, after quoting this remark, says, "the Music Master of our Academy has furnished me with an observation still more in favor of this opinion.—He informs me that he had known several persons strongly disposed to consumption, restored to health by the exercise of the lungs in singing. But why cite medical or other authorities on a point so plain? It appears self-evident that exercises in vocal music, when not carried to an unreasonable excess, must expand the chest, and thereby strengthen the lungs and vital organs.

The amount of exercise derived from the practice of singing is much greater than would be imagined by those not versed in it; and the fatigue incident to prolonged exertion in singing, is as positive as that which follows sawing wood, or riding on horseback. During a residence of nine or ten months in Germany some years ago, we were much struck with the fact, that diseases of the lungs of all sorts are far less common there than with us. Is any difference in the situation or habits of the people, to which this result may be ascribed with so much probability, as the different customs of the two nations with regard to vocal music? In Germany, every body sings; in America, nobody. In Germany it is an art honored and loved; in America it is treated with indifference.—N. A. Review.

WONDERS OF PHILOSOPHY.—The polypus, like the fabled hydra, receives new life from the knife which is lifted to destroy it. There are four thousand and forty-one muscles in a caterpillar. Hook discovered fourteen thousand mirrors in the eyes of a drone; and to effect the respiration of a carp, thirteen thousand three hundred arteries, vessels, veins, and bones, &c., are necessary. The body of every spider contains four little masses pierced with a multitude of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads, to the amount of a thousand to each mass, join together when they come out, and make the single thread with which the spider spins its web; so that what we call a spider's thread consists of more than four thousand united. Lewenhoek, by means of microscopes, observed spiders no bigger than a grain of sand, which spun thread so fine that it took ten thousand of them to equal in magnitude a single hair.

STRANGE ILLUSIONS.—Dr. P. [illegible] Marie Pan was admitted into the hospital at Bordeaux, her left hand and arm covered with deep and bleeding gashes, its tendons projecting and the bones broken. She had in her sleep gone into a loft to cut wood with a hedging bill. Thinking she was cutting wood, she had hacked her fore-arm and hand, until she fainted away, and fell bathed in her blood. She had felt no pain, but merely had a sensation as if the parts were pricked with pins. From Marcus Donatus we read the following case of still more melancholy interest:—Vicentinus believed himself too large to pass one of his door-ways. To dispel this allusion, it was resolved by his physician that he should be dragged through this aperture by force. This erroneous dictate was obeyed; but as he was forced along, Vicentinus screamed out in agony, that his limbs were fractured, and the flesh torn from his bones. In this dreadful delusion, with terrific imprecations against his murderers, he died.—Dendy's Philosophy of Mystery.

A GOOD ONE.—A young gentleman in Connecticut was visiting a lady in the same State—she was a tetotaler—he drank wine on Scriptural authority. 'Wine was a good gift of God, and to be used with thankfulness.' To refuse to use it was to cast reproach upon the Saviour, &c. &c. Amongst other quotations to sustain himself was this: 'And wine that maketh glad the heart of man and oil to make his face to shine.'—when the young gentleman next called upon his beloved, he found her with her face 'shining brilliantly with a good coat of oil!' He was of course greatly astonished. But she told him her authority and the lesson was sufficient.

A NEW IDEA.—The proprietor of a Circus in Pawtucket, R. I., advertises to perform day and evening for a time in that village, the proceeds, after paying the expenses, to be appropriated to the erection of a Universalist meeting-house in the place. But, as a friend informs us, that the receipts fell short of the expenses.—Christian Watchman.

Hast thou a child? Give no time to vice to gain upon him; let him be sanctified from a child, and consecrated to the Spirit from his tender years.—Gregory Nazianzen.

Be indefatigable in your honest pursuits: you will always obtain a part of what you seek; and the first success, however faint, will give you courage in your farther efforts.

A more glorious victory cannot be gained over another man than this—that when the injury begins on his part, the kindness should begin on ours.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, [illegible] of SHEETINGS, [illegible] CALICOES, [illegible] CLOTH [illegible] BROADCLOTHS are now [illegible]

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, [illegible] RINOS, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, [illegible] ONES &c. &c. &c. [illegible]

His Purchases have been [illegible] to be sold equally cheap for good notes [illegible] Store in this section [illegible]

TEAS, SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To [illegible] he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from each at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.

Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S

Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced [illegible]

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible]

WANTED,

10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

[illegible]

JUST RECEIVED, JUNE [illegible]

Still Later and Still Cheaper!

BEST YOUNG HYSON TEA, [illegible] MOLASSES [illegible]

50 per cent Lower,

[illegible] New York [illegible] style of Crockery [illegible]

Stone, China, Porcelain China, Blue Sprig, Plain White, Brown or Pink Ware,

25 per cent Lower than they can be bought elsewhere in town. Call and examine.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock:

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arabian "
Dr Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's [illegible] of the Day
Dr Pamnor's " Moffat's Vegetable Life "
Gregory's Bilious "
Harlem Oil
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey

Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organum,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞ A certain cure in all cases. ☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.

47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark [illegible] in exchange for Leather, B[illegible] at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements [illegible]

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber [illegible] BINDERY [illegible]

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

W[illegible] WARRANTED [illegible]

De Ruyter, [illegible] 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible]

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—[illegible] T. Rogers, Wm Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—[illegible]
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Reed.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
[illegible]—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jonathan F. Randolph.
[illegible]
[illegible]—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

[illegible]

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 40.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. [illegible]

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE,] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 1, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

A review of Rev. Joseph R. Johnson's Articles on the Trinity, recently published in the Register.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor;—In this and subsequent numbers, a repetition of some of the ideas contained in my former articles on the unity of God, will be unavoidable. But I shall avoid it as much as practicable, and present new thoughts and illustrations.—And I hope the importance of the subject will induce the reader to bear with me, and to be willing to look repeatedly, if need be, at the same argument, observing, with the utmost care, its proper bearing upon the great question.

In this number, I am to review Mr. Johnson's proofs of the Supreme Deity of Jesus Christ. This he considers as "a branch of the argument for the Trinity." And by the Deity of Christ is meant, he says, "that in his Divine nature, he is the self-existent and eternal God." How this can be reconciled with Christ's acknowledgment that the Father is "the only true God," he has manifestly failed to show. But we will see what he says. The first proof which he adduces, is "Christ's assertion of his unity with the Father." John x. 30. "I and my Father are one." But he appears sensible "that oneness in spirit, in interest and design, is here implied." But he thinks that "oneness of being" is also taught, and refers to John xiv. 7—9, for the proof. This must be construed as an admission that the passage itself does not contain this proof. And most evidently it does not. It proves nothing more than what he first allows to be implied, viz:—"oneness in spirit, in interest and design." Christ and the Father are one in the same sense that he, believers and the Father are one. See John xvii. 21, 22. "That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." It is not said, nor implied, that Christ and his Father are one being. And, therefore, the text is manifestly no proof of his Supreme Deity. Nor does Christ's saying in the other passage, "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father," prove the point in question.—If Mr. Johnson had replied to my reasons for not embracing the Trinity as I expected, he would naturally have noticed my method of disposing of this text, and attempted to show its incorrectness. I cannot, for brevity's sake, repeat the entire exposition which I gave, but must refer the reader to it, as also to other expositions which I gave of the Trinitarian proof-texts, in order to obtain a full view of the merits of the case. Suffice it here to say, that if the passage proves any thing for Mr. Johnson's theory, it proves too much, viz: that Christ is the very person of the Father; and, hence, it proves nothing. If it is at all to his purpose, it proves that what he calls Christ's divine nature is the very person of the Father, which is directly hostile to his notion of three distinct co-equal persons in the Godhead. But, in truth, it proves no more than that he who had seen Jesus in his true character, as God's Son and servant, had seen the Father also, not in his entire person, for in this sense, "no man hath seen God at any time;" but in his power and doctrine. The power by which Christ operated, and the doctrine which he taught were not his; but the Father's.—Therefore, he who had seen him, had seen the Father likewise, or in connection with him; not that he was the Father, or one Being with him. "No man could do the miracles which he did, except God were with him." So reasoned Nicodemus very correctly. And, hence, the passage loses all its force as a proof of Christ's Supreme Deity.

Mr. Johnson next notices the charge of blasphemy brought by the Jews against Christ, viz: that "he being a man made himself God." Did their bringing this charge prove it well grounded? If it did, then, on the same principle, their accusation on another occasion, that he had broken the Sabbath, proves that he had done so. But, it is said, if they had misapprehended him, would he not have corrected them? A careful perusal of the connection will show that he did correct them. The purport of his answer is, that even if he had claimed the title, God, it would not have been blasphemy; for this was given by God himself to magistrates: but he had not done so much as this. He had simply affirmed that he was the Son of God; and, therefore, it was manifest that he could not be accused of blasphemy. And for the truth of his pretension, he appealed to his miraculous works, which furnished full proof that he was no impostor; but that he and his Father co-operated. The Father was indeed in him, and he in the Father. In like manner, "he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." This phraseology, therefore, does not prove "a oneness of being." It is infinitely far from it. Yet the explicit avowal that he was the Son of God, and was acting in concert with him, was altogether sufficient, considering the temper of the Jews, to induce them to persist in their purpose of stoning him.

Mr. Johnson next observes that "Christ asserted himself to be the I am." His proof is John viii. 58. "Before Abraham was I am." He might just as well have brought John iv. 26 in proof, where Jesus said to the woman of Samaria, "I that speak unto thee am he," the pronoun, he, being supplied by the translators. The very same Greek words, "ἐγώ εἰμι," rendered "I am," here occur. But the simple meaning is, I am the Messiah. So, in the other case, it is not an assertion that he is the Being calling himself "I am"—the Jehovah who sent Moses to Israel; but merely that he existed before Abraham was born—or was older than that patriarch, which was the fact, without implying self-existence, he being the first-born of every creature. The order of the words may be properly varied so as to read, "I am before Abraham was." Nothing, therefore, is hereby fairly proved, except Christ's being superior to Abraham on point of age. There is evidently no foundation for attributing the following claim in Mr. Johnson's paraphrase of the text to Christ, viz: "Behold, I am the self-existent God who created Abraham—the same "I AM," who sent Moses unto your fathers." I confess myself shocked when I hear such a sentiment ascribed to Jesus, who repeatedly testified that he "lived by the Father," and that all his power was "given him of God." There is no evidence that Christ here laid any claims to self-existence, or that he was so understood by the Jews. They received no other impression than that he professed to be older than Abraham, and that he had seen him; whereas, in their estimation, he was not yet fifty years of age. Neither was "his going through the midst of them," as though his course was not at all impeded by their efforts to stone him, any evidence of such a claim as the above, for it was no greater an escape than had been experienced by the servants of God on different occasions.

The next thing offered in proof of Christ's essential Deity is his supposed assertion of the attribute of omnipresence. Matt. xviii. 20. "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." If we admit the most extensive interpretation of this passage, it will not prove absolute omnipresence, or unlimited existence; for the space occupied by all the Christian assemblies in the world—yea, in heaven and earth, is but a small portion of immensity. Allowing Christ to possess a spirit or mind capacious enough to fill this space at one and the same time, it would not prove his absolute omnipresence. But it may be forcibly argued that no more is meant than that he would be virtually present—present with his people in spirit, as Paul, "though absent in the flesh, was present with the Colossians in the Spirit, joying and beholding their order, and the steadfastness of their faith in Christ,"—or present by the Holy Spirit, his Advocate, whose assistance and influence are promised him in carrying on his work. Something more to the purpose than this text, or any similar one, is required to prove him to be the omnipresent God.

His next proof is stated in these words, viz: "The Deity of Christ is proved by his own assertion of his inferiority to the Father." John xiv. 28. "For my Father is greater than I." This is the first time that I ever heard this assertion brought to prove Christ's Supreme Deity. But how is the proof made out? Why, he thinks "there is no pertinency in his proclamation of this truth, unless in some sense he was truly God." "Let any mere creature," says he, "proclaim in the midst of a public assembly, 'God is greater than I,' and the instantaneous response of every mind would be, who did not know that?" "Whoever the proclaimer might be, howsoever exalted, if he were a mere creature, his words, 'God is greater than I,' would be useless breath, and would savor of arrogance." Hence, he concludes that he spake thus, "as one sent of God," and that it was his equality with the Father, which laid the foundation for him to speak of his inferiority to the Father." There is truly something uncommon and extraordinary in this mode of reasoning. And we can see its exact weight by comparing the text on which it is founded with a similar passage. John x. 29. "My Father which gave them me is greater than all." But, where, upon the principle of the argument before us, is the pertinency of this declaration that "God is greater than all"? for "who did not know that"? If its being obvious that the Father is greater than Christ, considered as a mere creature, proves that he must be equal with God in another nature, than the one of which he spake, or in other words that he is very God; then, its being obvious that "God is greater than all," proves equally, that in some other nature than the one referred to, all are possessed of Supreme Divinity, or, in other words, the inferiority of all to God, proves the equality of all to him.—This would make the "Τὸ Πᾶν" of the Greeks—every thing God, and God every thing, or, in other words, absolute Atheism. Surely, Mr. Johnson, when he penned this argument, did not look at the legitimate results. For in attempting to prove the Deity of Christ, he proves the Deity of all, and that by the same rule. What will not the prejudice of education, and the love of theory do?

This argument closes his second number, and the subject of Christ's Deity is resumed again in the third.

For the present, therefore, I subscribe myself, as ever,

Yours,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, Oct. 1841.

Moral Reform Department.

From the Advocate of Moral Reform.

ONE OF A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

By Rev. Emerson Davis, Colleague Pastor with Rev. Isaac Knapp, of the Congregational Church in Westfield, Mass.

"Thou shalt not commit Adultery."—Ex. xx. 14.

It will not be necessary for me, on this occasion, to define terms, or speak of the specific difference between the particular sins prohibited by the seventh commandment, and other sins of the same class. It is enough to say, in the language of the shorter catechism, "that it forbids all unchaste thoughts, words, and actions." Adultery is here used as a generic term, including and forbidding a whole class of sins, just as the sixth commandment and some others prohibit a whole class of sins that nearly resemble each other. In Matt. v. 27 and 28, our Savior has given an exposition of the extent of this commandment. He assured the Pharisees that "it did not regard the external act merely, but the secrets of the heart, and the movements of the eye."

I invite your serious attention to some remarks suggested by that portion of God's law which is the theme of my present discourse. Permit me here to remark that this subject affords no room for trifling when properly discussed, except to persons of weak minds and of bad hearts. If any are disposed to make light of the topics that may be suggested on this occasion, or if any deem them improper to be introduced into the pulpit, I would say to such, "Your views and feelings are neither just to the subject, nor honorable to yourselves." If we cannot look at a great fact in our nature, in our history, and in our relations to God; if we cannot seriously attend to instruction on a subject that has such an immense influence upon our future destiny, it proves that we are controlled more by our animal than by our rational and moral nature.

In order to perpetuate the race of men upon earth, God has seen fit to follow the analogy of the whole animal creation, but, by the institution of marriage—by allowing one man to be the husband of one wife, and one woman to be the wife of one husband—he has provided for the peace, for the purity, and for the welfare of society.

God made but one woman to be an helpmeet for Adam, and our Savior recognized the same as a law by which we are to be governed under the Christian dispensation. "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." The strict observance of this law is necessary to the temporal prosperity of mankind. It promotes industry and economy. Those who have families to support are constrained to labor more diligently, and to be more frugal in their expenses than they would be, if no such necessity was laid upon them. Let the law of marriage be abolished, and every individual would be independent—none would feel obliged to provide for the wants of others, nor inclined to provide for themselves much more than what is absolutely needful. If it were not for the marriage relation, the ties of natural affection by which society is now bound together would be broken. Conjugal and filial affection would not exist; brothers and sisters would be aliens and strangers to each other, and that long catalogue of relations which often bind half the inhabitants of a town in one great brotherhood, would be entirely unknown. Were it not for the marriage institution, children would not be reared at all; they would grow up uneducated and ungoverned [illegible] could not be better than it is among the half civilized nations of [illegible].

Says Dick, in his "Philosophy of Religion," if the marriage institution were abolished, "children neglected and abandoned by their mothers, would be left to the full influence of their own wayward and impetuous passions; they would depend for subsistence only on the feelings or tender mercies of general society; they would wander about as vagabonds, naked and forlorn; there [illegible] exposed to the inclemencies of the [illegible] rains and biting frosts, and deformed with filthiness and disease. In every [illegible] be seen multitudes of houseless and shivering females set adrift by their seducers, wandering with their helpless offspring, and imploring [illegible] the common necessities of food, of shelter, and protection; among human beings in such a [illegible] state the kind and benevolent affections would seldom be exercised."

If the marriage institution were abolished, the minds of all persons would be less inclined to intellectual, moral, or religious pleasures. One master passion would govern and debase the soul. Science and literature would be neglected; churches, colleges, schools, and academies would fall into ruins; the foundation of all regular government would be undermined, for it is chiefly under the domestic roof that the foundation of order and obedience to magistrates must be laid. I think every one who reflects seriously upon this subject, will perceive that the ordinance of marriage—the allowing one man to have one wife—is of immense importance to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the human family. Some, perhaps, will ask, did not the patriarchs and kings have a plurality of wives? They had; but it was not agreeable to the will of God. It was a sin which the chosen people of God fell into in consequence of their intercourse with the pagan nations. It was not forbidden [illegible] them by physical force; but a system of moral rules and regulations, designed to counteract and oppose it, were introduced, which, in process of time, proved successful.

Another topic suggested by this commandment is, the evil consequences that follow a violation of it, both to the guilty individuals, and to the community in which they reside. They are smaller, of course, than the disastrous consequences of abolishing the marriage institution. It may be proper, however, to consider separately the evils that grow out of a violation of this precept, when the ordinance of marriage is still observed. The husband who is guilty of this sin, treats the wife to whom God has joined him, with neglect, insult, and cruelty. He has proved false to his vows, and become a curse to her to whom he should have been a blessing. The man who violates the seventh commandment, let his nominal rank or standing in society be what it may, is a miserable and unhappy man. He is looked upon with the eye of jealousy and suspicion in his own family—his children cannot avoid feeling as if they were disgraced by their own father.—Such men may assume the air of innocence, and the virtuous may not have the independence to refuse all social intercourse with them, but they will watch them, and their eye will follow them wherever they go; and they will cease to honor them as they otherwise would. No man can be guilty of the sin here forbidden without being suspected, and the moment he begins to be suspected, rumor, with her thousand tongues, is busy in spreading the report of his crimes. An innocent man would be crushed; he would sicken and die with shame and grief, if he knew the suspicion prevailed in the community that he was unfaithful to his marriage covenant.

If the guilty man, with all his hard-heartedness, is miserable, what do you think must be the condition of his innocent wife! We can imagine that her soul must be filled with awful anguish, but her real feelings who can tell? Would to God there was no wife that ever experienced this painful sense of mortification and neglect, that tortures the soul night and day. Think, furthermore, of the wretchedness and misery of the unfortunate females who are induced to swerve from the path of virtue. One false step forever blasts their fame. They are cast suddenly into the abyss of ignominy, from which very few rise even to half their former standing in society. Many of this class, covered with burning shame, give up all for lost, and "bid a last adieu to the smiles of tenderness and sympathy, to the kind embraces of father and mother, of sisters and brothers,—to the house of God, to the instruction of his word, and to the society of the faithful. Every generous feeling, by their companionship with crime, is shrunk and withered. They stalk abroad like painted corpses, filling the mind of the virtuous with horror, and alluring the unwary to the shades of death. Soon, however, they are stretched upon a dying bed, wasted with consumption or loathsome disease, and sink,

Children's Department.

[illegible]

two pennies a week [illegible] week, we shall have [illegible] end of the year. Now [illegible] fifty boys and fifty girls in our Sabbath School, that will give two pennies a week, there will be [illegible] there are several other schools, that I should think might give two pennies a week, so that they can give [illegible]

C.—A hundred dollars, [illegible] I thought could be given [illegible] Sabbath School, [illegible] very easy to get two pennies a week [illegible] only think how.

J.—If we only lived in the country, I know what we could do; we could have a piece of ground, and plant some corn or melons, or something else that would grow; we could take care of it ourselves, and when it was ripe, we could sell it, and sometimes we could get a good deal of money; but we have such little gardens in the city, that if we plant corn, there is so much shade it does not ripen well.

C.—Well, we must try something else; we can go of errands when we are out of school, that will be as good as any other exercise, and we shall be as happy as if we were playing all the time.

J.—Yes, and by and by we shall have some snow, and then we can sweep it off the door steps, and shovel it from the sidewalk. When father was away from home last winter, you know I swept it away so well one day that mother gave me six pence, and said she thought I fairly earned

[illegible]

[illegible] your confessions [illegible] power of which you are [illegible] Then you will find Him faithful and just to forgive you your sins, and to cleanse you from all unrighteousness."

[illegible]

[illegible]

Fill up the void spaces of your time with meditation and prayer.

Prayer does not consist in gifted expressions, and volubility of speech, but in brokenness of heart.

He that lives without prayer, or prays without life, hath not the spirit of God.

Prayer does not consist in the elegance of the phrase, but in the strength of the affection.

Prayer, if it be done, as a task, is no prayer.

Death, to a Christian, is putting off rags for robes.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, December 1, 1841.

Monthly Concert.

Do you remember the Monthly Concert? It occurs on the 1st Sabbath in each month. If you have forgotten it, just turn your thoughts for awhile to the condition of thousands upon thousands who are now shrouded in the darkness of heathenism. Think of many of your own brethren who are without the means of grace. Eighteen hundred years since the Jews said [of Christ] "his blood be upon us and our children."—From that time to the present, the curse of God has rested heavily upon them; and now scattered in every land, they anxiously await deliverance from that curse. Eighteen hundred years having passed since, from the language of their prophets, they expected the Messiah to redeem Israel, and the same time having expired since the 'despised Nazarene' was crucified, they now have but little hope that their deliverer will come. Between hope that he will yet appear, and fear that they have crucified him, they are tossed to and fro.

Look at this people as they were when their holy seers prophesied, and their psalmists sweetly sung of the promised Shiloh, in a land flowing with milk and honey.—Look at them as they are now scattered every where, proscribed, persecuted, enslaved, and cast down under the overwhelming curse. Then ask yourselves, have you no prayers to bestow in "concert" for those to him who has promised that if two of you shall agree upon earth as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in Heaven.

Children's Reading.

Children, do you read the selections in the "Children's Department" of the Register? We have taken great pains to select what we thought would be of the most use to you. We have done this because we feel a deep interest in your future course. Very soon important trusts will be committed to your care, when you shall have entered upon the scenes of active life. The days of youth will soon flee away. The duties and cares of mature years will take place of youthful amusements. The responsibilities of conducting the affairs of life and of contributing to the advancement of society, of guarding the interests of virtue and religion, will soon be yours. We wish to see you well prepared for them.

A more important destiny awaits you.—The course you now take is likely to decide your eternal interests. You are now forming characters for another state of being. Peculiar advantages are now afforded you to become virtuous and pious, and thus secure all that is desirable in this life and the life to come. Jesus took little children and blessed them. The word of God says, they that seek me early shall find me, and whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord. Your parents have no greater joy than to see you walk in the truth. There is nothing better than for the young to give their first and best affections to God; and then will they have a whole life to devote to his praise. How many of our youthful readers will this winter yield themselves to God, and commence a life of piety and pleasure? These two are always associated. You cannot be pious without being happy. As your piety increases or diminishes, so will your pleasure. And you cannot be happy without being pious. Every departure from a strictly honest and obedient course of conduct towards God and all men, will open a way for the introduction of discontent and every unpleasant feeling. Remember this, that piety and peace go hand in hand through all the journey of life, that goodness and mercy shall attend those that love God, while the reverse will be the lot of all that are disobedient and do not love the truth.

Moral Excellence.

Every Christian by virtue of the relation he sustains to God, is bound to attain to the greatest possible degree of moral excellence. His profession of Christ is a renunciation of the world. He can not, therefore, be under obligation to live any longer for worldly purposes. He has disfranchised himself from the service of the god of this world, and joined himself to the King of heaven; taken the oath of allegiance, and bound himself by the strongest ties to impartial and perpetual service, and it is impossible to be true to his engagement without bending his energies entirely to his great work.

The honor of God and the triumph of his kingdom is dependent on the moral excellence of his subjects. The service of God must be rendered peculiarly attractive, and above all things desirable, in order to induce men to enter it. Every one that neglects to present the service of God thus, by reason of a want of moral excellence, is in his influence a traitor to God. Every advance that is made in moral excellence by the children of God is sure to have a happy influence on those who are aliens from God. The nearer men live to God, the greater is their happiness, and the better their influence. It is, therefore, for their interest, and their indispensable duty to continue an unceasing warfare against sin, to cultivate all the holy principles of the gospel, and labor to become perfect in obedience and love to God.

The Register.

This No. commences the 4th quarter of Vol. II. We wish the friends of the Press to make what exertions they can to increase our subscription, and we will do what WE can to make the Register interesting and profitable. There are yet many families in the denomination, that do not take the Register. Will our Agents see that all have it? We shall send out our Prospectus soon for Vol. III., and hope to receive returns from all before this Vol. closes. The only alteration that we at present anticipate, is that that the Terms will be but $2, which will be expected in advance, or in three months. We also, having been liberated from much of the business that has occupied us this year, hope by devoting our time exclusively to the paper to make it what its patrons have a right to expect.

In the mean time, we return our hearty congratulations to those who have so readily come to our aid in sustaining the Press thus far on so favorable a basis; and that they may receive an equivalent for their money and exertions in our behalf, is a matter of no little moment with us in the performance of of our editorial duties.

Notice.

The MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE of the S. D. B. Western Association will meet (by Divine permission) with the church in Persia, Cattaraugus co., on the fourth day of the week before the last Sabbath in December next at 10 o'clock, A. M. All ministers, Deacons, and Licentiates of the Association are constitutionally members of the Conference. A cordial welcome is tendered to any lover of Christ who may meet with us. The following is the assigned order of exercises:

Introductory Sermon, J. H. COCHRAN.

Dissertations on the habits and manners of a minister as connected with his usefulness in the cause of God. } Z. CAMPBELL.

Critical Exposition of James ii. 24. } N. V. HULL.

Nature of Moral Agency, J. R. IRISH.

What the Scriptures teach respecting the perseverance of the saints. } T. B. BROWN.

Nature and duty of Family Religion. } H. P. GREEN.

J. R. IRISH, Sec'y.

Scientific Lecture.

J. A. BADGER, Lecturer on Chemistry in De Ruyter Institute, will give to the citizens of De Ruyter a Public Lecture on Voltaic Electricity or Galvanism, on Monday evening, Dec. 6th, at 7 o'clock.

The Lecture will be accompanied with experiments.

By the way, we wish to say to the friends of the Institute that the Lectures on Chemistry and Philosophy and other scientific subjects, add not a little to the interest of the school. The Lectures which are delivered on three or more evenings every week, are of more real service to students than whole terms of instruction in common select schools. Instruction in any science by a smatterer, or any one, unaccompanied by ocular demonstration, is of comparatively little service; whereas, when it is accompanied by experiments and Lectures, it is not easily forgotten.

Br. Irish informs us that on account of feeble health and previous engagement, he will not be able to attend to the appointment given him by the Missionary Society before next May. It is very desirable that the Executive Committee secure some efficient laborer as soon as practicable. The Society is languishing for want of aid. Several fields, white and ready for the harvest, are without a laborer. What shall be done?—Brethren, lay by you in store as God has prospered you, that the work may go on.

Septuagint.

The following we offer as a correct and literal translation of Genesis ii. 2, from the Greek Septuagint. And God ended on the sixth day his works, which he made, and rested on the seventh-day from all his works which he made. This translation must do away the objection of cavillers that God finished, i. e., performed a part of his work on the seventh-day. So far as creative operations were concerned, the seventh-day was to God a day of rest.

Removal.

Br. B. C. Church has removed to Northampton, Clark Co., Ohio. We trust his labors with the churches there will be abundantly blessed.

☞The Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute will meet at their room on Thursday, the 7th inst., at 1 o'clock, P. M.

It will be seen by our Foreign News that the British refuse to be satisfied, now, that McLeod is acquitted, and think sufficient respect had not been paid to the Court of St. James. It seems to us very incongruous for the authors of the China war to talk of honor. A fouler game we are not conscious of having seen played, than the British have now shown in the opium war with China.

Mexico.

Affairs have been settled amicably between Bustamente and Santa Anna, on proposition of the latter. Four Commissioners were chosen, two by each party.—The decision was in favor of Santa Anna's holding the Presidency till Congress should settle the matter. Congress, on assembling, decided for Santa Anna. This decision gave general satisfaction.

Congress.

The Session of Congress is close at hand. It will be one of considerable interest. We shall give a summary of its more important doings. Will Christians remember the injunction to pray for those in authority?

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Morning Post.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

11 DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The steam packet Caledonia, Capt. E. G. Lott, arrived at this port yesterday, at half-past 6 P. M. She left Liverpool on the 4th inst., with 42 passengers, six of whom were left at Halifax, at which port she received seven for Boston.

She brings from England no political news of importance, and, indeed, but little of any other character. The news from the continent will be found of some interest. The Queen of England was in good health, and the event, which it was hoped would give a Prince of Wales to England had not taken place, but was daily looked for. Trade remained in the same depressed state noticed at the last arrival, and the distress of the working population was daily extending, and becoming more intense in degree. The happy issue of the McLeod difficulty had inspired a little more confidence than was felt while the affair remained undecided, but its effect on the markets was trifling. There were 6000 operatives without work in Paisely, and the master spinners of Blackburn had determined to run their mills only a short time.

The Acadia arrived out on the 30th of October, with the news of the acquittal of McLeod. Even the bitterest of the tory papers were compelled to acknowledge the uprightness of the court and jury which tried him. The result calmed to a great extent, the strong excitement which had prevailed against this country, but the government papers did not look upon it as perfectly satisfactory. The voice of the tory press seems to be decidedly for war. The Herald urges the government not to relax one iota of the extraordinary preparations which it has been making.

The Liverpool European of the 4th inst., contains the following paragraph:—

"We have heard it stated in quarters generally well-informed, that if any serious difference should arise between Great Britain and the United States of America, relative to the trial of McLeod, the north-eastern boundary, or any other question pending between both countries, our country has agreed to accept the mediation of France, which mediation has been offered as a guarantee of peace and good will between the French and English cabinets."

The municipal elections held throughout England had generally resulted favorably for the tory party.

Great excitement and consternation prevailed in the money circles of London, in consequence of the discovery of a forgery of exchequer bills on a gigantic scale, perpetrated, it was supposed, by some person employed by the government. Mr. E. Beaumont Smith, the chief clerk in the Comptroller General's office, had been arrested on suspicion. The amount of the forged bills in circulation was stated at upwards of £300,000! The matter had not been thoroughly sifted by the government when the Caledonia left Liverpool. The Times states the following circumstance as a proof of the adroitness of the fraud:

"More than three months ago, parties holding exchequer bills, respecting which, though they felt no particular distrust, they thought it prudent to put their authenticity to the test, went up to the exchequer, where they were submitted, not only to the inspection of that office in which Mr. E. Beaumont Smith is the principal, but to the Exchequer Issue-office, and at both, these very bills were declared to be genuine. It turns out that these are now, under the new inspection, pronounced spurious."

Daniel O'Connell was elected Lord Mayor of Dublin on the 1st of November.

The steam frigate Styx, having on board the new Governor General of British North America, Sir C. Bagot, sailed for Canada from Portsmouth, but was obliged to put back in consequence of damage received by her machinery. It was expected that his Excellency would re-embark for Canada on board the Illustrious, 72.

The lords of the Treasury have authorized the admission of rough rice from the United States at 1d. per quarter.

Government is about to strengthen the fortifications of Gibralter!

The Royal West India Mail Company has memorialized government to run once a month, instead of fortnightly.

Several acts of incendiarism have lately been perpetrated in Yorkshire and Warwickshire.

It is stated that the greater part of the six millions of dollars paid by the Chinese for the redemption of Canton turns out to be bad silver.

According to a statement just completed, it appears that the balance of cash and securities placed to the credit of the various accounts in chancery amounts to the extraordinary sum of £42,000,000 and upwards.

The British troops in China have suffered so much that it is stated the force in India is to be augmented by two regiments.

In consequence of the recent boisterous weather, and the advanced period of the season, it has been determined to postpone the sinking of the great caisson on the Goodwin Sands till the spring.

FRANCE.

The investigation into the late attack on the lives of the king's sons, has led to the discovery of evidence that had either of the princes fallen, an insurrection in Paris and the provinces would have burst forth in an extensive scale. Arrests are every day taking place, and documentary and other testimony is said to have fallen into the hands of the police. The garrison of Paris is held ready to act at a moment's notice, although no immediate outbreak is expected. The day had not been fixed for the trial of Quenisset, as every moment appears to afford fresh materials for the prosecution.

The imputed proprietor and publisher of the Moniteur Republican, which was established in 1839, and has repeatedly expressed its approval of regicide, was tried on Saturday, and acquitted. Five persons had already been sentenced to five years imprisonment for their connection with this publication. The ground of acquittal on this last occasion was, that the accused had not been identified. In addition to the wide spread conspiracy referred to, a spirit of insubordination is extending itself through the French army, and the whole country seems in an unsettled state.

Several regiments have been ordered by the French government to approach the Pyrenian frontier, and a squadron of ships of war has been dispatched to the Spanish coast, in order, according to the Presse, that France may be ready for any reprisal which the Spanish government may think proper to direct, in the alleged support given to the insurrection.

The trial of the National, for attacking the inviolability of the king, has terminated in the acquittal of its responsible editor, M. Delaroche.

Two more attempts have taken place in Paris, in reference to the attempt of Quenisset.

A great part of the south of France has again been inundated.

SPAIN.

The insurrection has been completely suppressed, and nearly all the leaders had arrived in France. A few who had been arrested, were to be tried and shot, of course. The capital was tranquil, and accounts from the southern provinces were all favorable to Espartero. The insurrection will give the English government increased influence in Spanish affairs.

The London Morning Herald states that a negotiation has been for some time pending between the two extreme parties in Spain—the Moderados and Carlistas—and that a common point of union has been devised, and submitted to the leaders. It turns upon these conditions:—1. That Don Carlos shall formally abdicate his pretensions to the throne in favor of his son. 2. That this young prince shall espouse Isabella II.

THE EAST.

A most violent shock of an earthquake occurred at Constantinople on the night of the 5th, such indeed as the oldest inhabitants does not remember to have ever witnessed. The first shock, felt at 25 minutes after 2 in the morning, was strong and lasted some time. The second at 3 o'clock, and lasted from 50 to 55 seconds.—This was succeeded half an hour afterwards by a third and slight shock, and at 7 in the morning occurred a fourth. A great deal of damage was done in the Khan, Constantinople, and in the surrounding villages many lives were said to have been lost; but our correspondent states that there were only five or six persons killed, though the loss of property is very extensive.

The military organization of Turkey was going on rapidly and satisfactorily.

News of the Day.

M'LEOD'S TRIAL AND ACQUITTAL.

The Liverpool Mail has the following remarks:—

We were enabled on Saturday to furnish our readers with the conclusion of McLeod's trial, and the verdict—ACQUITTAL!

We repeat, for at least the twentieth time, that the acquittal of McLeod does not in the slightest degree affect the question at issue between the two governments. On the contrary, we cannot help thinking that the extraordinary circumstances developed by the trial, only render the case more complicated. The principle involved by the American government, permitting Mr. McLeod to be placed upon his trial in defiance of the demands of England and in open and avowed violation of the laws of all civilized nations, remains untouched and unadjusted. But it cannot remain so much longer. The honor of this country is deeply concerned; for, be it remembered, the demand was made in the QUEEN'S name, and the justness of the demand acknowledged by Mr. Secretary WEBSTER, although he, in the name of the federal government, the only government that England can recognise, urged the pitiful plea that the central and supreme authority could not, nor dare not, interfere with judicial acts of any sectional authority.

The London Times of the 1st of November has an editorial article on the acquittal of McLeod, in which it expresses the following views of the case:

Thus, if any sensible portion of the British public ever conceived that the continuance of our amicable relations with America depended upon the issue of McLeod's trial, their apprehensions on that score may now be considered at an end.—But although we never to any extent partook of those apprehensions, and least of all since the publication of Mr. Webster's letter to Mr. Crittenden, we cannot disguise from ourselves that there still remain certain correlative questions of great importance, the satisfactory adjustment of which may be attended with some difficulty. The case of McLeod has disclosed to the Powers of Europe, a vital disability in the American Constitution, which, unless it be forthwith repaired, not only places the Republican Union in the untrustworthy position of being unable to exact from its component states a due observance of international law, but must compel foreign kingdoms, for their own safety, to insist at all hazards that such a dangerous [illegible] shall be effectually extinguished. If Great Britain or any other Power [illegible] to an amicable alliance with the trans-Atlantic union, it is on the distinct understanding that the whole American [illegible] parties to that alliance, and shall [illegible] respect the treaties of their central Government. What powers or privileges may be arrogated by the separate provinces of the Union, we have nothing to do with.—The responsible party with whom alone we treat is the Federal Administration. If the Federal Administration [illegible] its own approved policy among its subordinate states, the American [illegible] is an impotent phantom—a mere [illegible] entity, set up to give a colorable [illegible] bility to an enormous system of [illegible] ing. No civilized country could [illegible] treating with such a Power. To [illegible] the supreme and independent sovereignty of New York, is a perilous [illegible] every nation in Europe. If New York [illegible] other American provinces [illegible] states, let them severally send [illegible] bassadors to foreign Powers, and [illegible] be bound respectively to the obligations of their international justice.

Just imagine that any of our [illegible] upon the seacoast, affecting [illegible] exemption from the stipulations of our national treaties, were to [illegible] system of private [illegible] ble injury and dishonor of our neighboring allies. On such a [illegible] larity being questioned, what sort of apology would it be to say, that [illegible] counties are so completely independent [illegible] Her Majesty's interference, that [illegible] gressions upon the vessels of France or America must be patiently [illegible] and cannot possibly be redressed? Yet this is precisely the position which America has allowed New York to assume in reference to McLeod's detention.

Mr. Webster, the Secretary of State to the Republican Union, has [illegible] declared that his detention, in [illegible] point of view, was illegal. [illegible] [illegible] refuses to be [illegible] the Federal Government's decision. The New York sovereigns have persisted in bringing McLeod to trial. They have bearded the Washington Cabinet to the teeth. Great Britain, apart altogether from the acquittal of her persecuted subject, has thus been incidentally dishonored by the private lawlessness of an organized mob, wholly unknown to European diplomacy. Of course, a rectification of this injury, or at least a satisfactory guarantee against its recurrence, in which all nations are equally interested, is indispensable to the peace of the world.

Conviction of Mitchell.—The trial of Charles F. Mitchell, late Member of Congress, for forgery, terminated at half-past three o'clock Tuesday afternoon, in a verdict of guilty.

From the National Intelligencer, Nov. 28.

Accident on the Richmond and Fredericksburg Railroad.—For two days there has been a delay or failure of mails from the South, the cause of which has been what is called "Accident" on their Railroad.

The mail from the South, due on Monday, failed on account of the engine giving out this side of Weldon, by which the passengers were kept four hours at night in the pine woods, and the connection was lost at Richmond.

The mail from the South due on Tuesday did not reach Washington until Wednesday morning. The engine that started from Richmond on Tuesday morning was defective, and gave out after it had gone 12 miles. Upon this, expresses were despatched on hand-cars in two directions for locomotives; one towards Richmond, and the other towards "the Junction," so called. The locomotive from Richmond arrived after a delay of about two hours, when the train proceeded on its way. After it had gone about six miles it met the other locomotive on a curve, coming full tilt. A collision was inevitable, as neither engineer could see many yards ahead of the embankment. Fortunately, the locomotive with the train was going very slowly, not six miles an hour; and, fortunately, too, the locomotive from "the Junction" was reversed—that is, the tender preceding the engine.

The firemen leaped from their places the instant the two engines came in sight; but the engineer on the locomotive from "the Junction" stuck to his post till the engines were within ten feet, when, after doing all he could, he took his leap. None of the leapers were hurt; and the force of the approaching engines was so much broken by the tender, which was smashed up, that none of the passengers suffered from any thing but fright. The preservation of life was indeed remarkable.

We leave our readers to make their own comments on the culpability of a neglect or carelessness which exposed to imminent peril the limbs and lives of so many human beings.

A Big Ship.—The largest ship ever built was undoubtedly the Baron Renfew. She was constructed in Canada, and was solid timber throughout. She measured upwards of five thousand tons, being double the measurement of an English seventy-four. She left the St. Lawrence for London, and arrived at the Downs in safety, after a [illegible] passage. But her draught of water being very great, the pilots were unwilling to take her into the river through the western channel, and in attempting to carry her round the Goodwin Sands, and unable to beat up against the strong north wind, she got ashore on the Flemish banks, near Gravelines, where she was soon broken up by the heavy sea. Nearly all her cargo was saved—rafts of [illegible] size were made of the lumber, and towed into France or up the river Thames. Some of these rafts contained from 15 to [illegible]. On the top of one of them, which was towed to London, was the foremast of this mammoth ship. It was a single tree of 90 feet in length, [illegible] surpassing [illegible] diameter. It was regarded with great admiration, as a noble specimen of the white pine of North America.—Boston Mer. Jour.

[illegible]—Clement V., during his [illegible] and profligate reign, amassed enormous treasures by the sale of ecclesiastical [illegible] and by other scandalous means. He had enriched his relations [illegible] and dependents, but he had not secured [illegible]. The moment that his death was [illegible] the papal palace, all the [illegible] rushed upon his treasures as if they [illegible]. Amongst his [illegible] not a single servant [illegible] with the dead body of his master. [illegible] wax candles that lighted [illegible] fell upon the bed clothes [illegible]. The flames spread [illegible] the palace [illegible] to cover [illegible] one of the richest [illegible] who had ever governed the [illegible] [illegible] Life of Petrarch.

[illegible] Kingston.—It appears by [illegible] the British House of Commons [illegible] that no less a [illegible] has been proposed for [illegible] Kingston [illegible] at a cost of £27,000, and [illegible] upon the sanction of the [illegible] of Wellington, £25,000 was devoted [illegible] for extending the works.—[illegible]

[illegible]—An enormous [illegible] was killed in [illegible] seven miles [illegible] by a party who were out [illegible]. They came up and followed [illegible], when they [illegible] and fired at [illegible] distance of about fifteen feet, without any apparent effect; he retreated some fifty rods, and stopped; two of the party again approached to within about ten feet and fired again, when he turned and came at his pursuers with the utmost ferocity; but, fortunately, a hound which they had with them, at this moment seized him behind, and caused him again to retreat a short distance. After firing a dozen rounds of shot and balls they so disabled him as to allow them to approach and knock him on the head with an axe. He measured 7 1-2 feet in length, and 12 1-2 inches round the fore arm, and weighed nearly 200 lbs. He has been exhibited in this town, and is considered the most formidable animal ever taken in our forests. He had not long been in that vicinity, and it is surprising how an animal of this kind could have penetrated into so populous a territory without being sooner [illegible] and hunted down.—Kennebec [illegible]

[illegible] Effect of Lightning on Glass.—The Maidstone Gazette states that during a thunder storm in that neighborhood, when several hay stacks were fired, and much other damage was done, one flash of lightning, after striking a chimney and the tiles of a pipe manufactory, was partially dispersed, and reflected against the dwelling house opposite, the four windows of which facing the chimney, and about 15 or 20 feet distant, presented a very singular appearance. In several panes oval blisters have been raised, like the air-bubbles seen in badly manufactured sheet glass. When first observed, they were covered with a fine dark colored powder, which was unfortunately brushed away without being minutely examined, and there is a similar appearance inside some of the blisters.—When the pipe manufactory was struck, four men at work were knocked down, and were of course dreadfully alarmed.

Shameful Outrage.—We learn from the Boston Atlas that a very gross and outrageous attack was made upon the house of Benjamin A. Gould, Esq., in Winthrop Place, on the night of Monday last. Several bottles, filled with very offensive and filthy matter, were thrown into the windows with great force. The windows were broken, and the contents of the bottles discharged upon the carpets of the parlors, injuring them very seriously. Mr. Gould was the foreman of one of the Juries on the License cases, which have recently been on trial, and which have been the cause of considerable excitement in our community. Mr. Gould's jury brought in a verdict against one of the defendants, on Monday last—and on the night of that day, this most outrageous attack was made. This is another illustration of the spirit of Alcohol.

The Election of a Colored Citizen.—We have ascertained what we believe to be the facts in the election in Townsend of a colored man for Representative to the Legislature. The democrats and whigs were nearly equally divided, and a few abolitionists held the balance. Finding no possibility of a choice, some of the two Principal parties told the third that unless they withdrew or voted with their respective parties, they would unite on a colored man, and give them negro enough. The abolitionists persisted, and the voting went on, when it was ascertained that the colored man had actually received a majority of three votes over all others. Some misgivings then being felt, it was moved and carried to dissolve the meeting before the vote was declared by the Selectmen. This is the only objection to the legality of election, and not the sunset law, as has been supposed. A refusal to declare the votes is probably no sound legal objection to an election, and under our Constitution and laws, color is no qualification or disqualification. We also learn that the colored citizen who was chosen, is a man of property and a decided anti-abolitionist, and that all the abolitionists voted against him. A meeting for the fourth Monday has been called, we learn, to try it over again, and our informant says that the people of Townsend are determined to elect the same man again, if the abolitionists run a third candidate. In that event, he must have the seat if he claims it.—Boston Post.

Libel Suits.—The suit between Mr. Cooper and the Editor of the Albany Evening Journal, came on for trial in Montgomery Co. last week. Mr. Cooper obtained verdict of $100, by default of the defendant, which was caused by illness in his family.

On the trial of the indictment against the editor of the Cour. and Enquirer for the same cause, the jury being unable to agree were discharged.

Important Lawsuit.—Mr. S. Waddell, the former Marshal of this district, is litigating before the Supreme Court of the United States, a very comprehensive claim against the State of New Jersey. It embraces all the land under water in all the rivers of East Jersey, and for three leagues beyond the shore. No farmer can build a little dock even, if he succeed. All the fisheries, ferries, and oyster beds in East Jersey depend upon the result. It is the most important case that has arisen since the settlement of the colony.

Mr. George Wood and Mr. Garret D. Wall are employed by the State to defend its rights; and so important is the matter deemed by the Legislature, that before adjourning they passed this resolution:—

Resolved, That in view of the great and immediate importance of this cause, in respect to the rights of this State and its citizens, His Excellency, the Governor, be requested, if he shall deem it compatible with his other public duties, to repair in person to the city of Washington, and attend the said argument on behalf of this State.

Mr. Waddell sues in the name and in behalf of the East Jersey proprietors, and the appeal by the State to the Supreme Court is from a decision in the Circuit Court, favorable to the claimants. The issue of the suit will decide a similar claim of the West Jersey proprietors.—N. Y. Sun.

Interesting from Yucatan.—An act declaring Yucatan independent of Mexico, had been introduced into the Yucatan House of Representatives; and after a long and very interesting debate, had been passed by an almost unanimous vote. It was immediately taken up in the Senate, and a stormy discussion ensued. No doubt existed, however, of its speedy passage through that body, and its full enactment into a law.

The report that Santa Anna had been appointed Dictator in Mexico, had been semi-officially communicated to the government of Yucatan.

The government of Yucatan had purchased a brig which is to be armed with eighteen guns. The naval force at present consists of a brig of ten guns and two armed schooners.

According to all accounts, Yucatan is rapidly improving under the new order of things, being even now fifty years in advance of the Mexican provinces generally. —N. O. Picayune.

Rum and Parricide.—On Tuesday evening of last week about five miles from Laprarie, L. C., a respectable farmer, named Jean Baptiste Pomainville, and his son John, were drinking together in the father's house, when a dispute arose between them, on which the son, aged about 28 years, drew his knife and stabbed his father in five places, from the effects of which he died. The parricide was apprehended, and secured in prison.

Not Guilty.—Wm. A. Harris, a youth of fourteen years of age, was tried in the Baldwin Superior Court, Georgia, on the 12th inst., on an indictment for voluntary manslaughter, by killing his schoolmate, a child but little over 12 years of age, named Richard H. Sanford. The jury were absent in the case about three minutes, and returned a verdict of acquittal.

Tennessee School Fund.—The School Fund of Tennessee, invested in various Bank Stocks, is now $1,053,631 31. The amount expended the past year for the support of schools and academies is $215,816 82. The other expenses of the State government for the year ending Oct. 1st, 1841, amount to $254,931 93, and $186,590 47 remain in the Treasury.

A man named Edgerston, of Quincy, Ill., died of the delirium tremens at one of the hotels in St. Louis on the 10th inst.—He went there to have what is termed "a high spree."

Ex-President Adams.—It has been recently announced that the Hon. John Quincy Adams would decline to be a candidate for re-election after the present Congress. The Quincy Patriot of Saturday, contradicts this report, on the authority of Mr. Adams himself, who says that he "shall be ready to serve his constituents as their Representative in Congress, so long as they may require his services, and his health permits him to discharge the duties of his office.

The number of cases now in the Chancery Court of England is 18,000, involving the enormous amount of $210,000,000!

There were received for toll on the New York State Canals, during the 2nd week in November, $74,021 72.

The number of deaths the present year, in New Orleans, by yellow fever, is, as nearly as can be ascertained, sixteen hundred and thirty-five.

The Toronto Patriot says that Mr. Murdock, (late Secretary to Lord Sydenham,) has been offered and will accept the same office under Sir Charles Bagot. It was offered to and declined by Mr. H. L. Bulwer, brother of the novelist.

It is said that Sir Allan McNab is to be Adjutant General of the United Canadian provinces under the new Administration.

The Supreme Court of Mass., refused to grant a divorce on application of a woman, who, it was proved, had lived apart from her husband for five years, on account of his cross and cruel treatment; the court holding, under the statute of 1838, that this was not wilful desertion on his part.

Charles Davies, late Professor of Mathematics in the Military Academy at West Point, has been appointed Paymaster in the Army, in the place of Major Donald Fraser, resigned.

The half-decayed body of an Indian has been found in one of the ancient mounds near St. Louis—whereupon the Republican concludes that those mounds were constructed for cemeteries.

Out of 14,189,108 free white inhabitants of the United States, as shown by the late census, there are 791 one hundred years of age, and upwards. Of 2,487,213 slaves, there are no less than 1,333 of the same age.

The Tribune states that our present Corporation has already licensed four hundred more grog shops than were in the city last year. We fear it will take our Washington and other temperance men, a long while to stop drunkenness at this rate.

Mr. McLeod arrived at Niagara on the 7th inst., and was warmly welcomed by his fellow countrymen there. The Chronicle states that it is his intention to leave Canada next month for England, where it is hoped he will receive a personal solatium for his 12 months' unjust imprisonment.

An Abolition meeting in Beaver co., Pa., was broken up a few days since by a mob. The speaker was pelted with a shower of stones, eggs, &c. Several of the rioters were arrested.

The City Council of Savannah have directed that Thursday the 25th day of this month, be observed in that city as a day of Thanksgiving.

The Rothschilds.—According to the Merchant's Magazine, the wealth of the house is estimated between $25 and $40,000,000; and they are supposed to be able to command $75,000,000 more. From the loans made by the house, we are inclined to think the estimate below the fact unless we are permitted to substitue in it "pounds sterling" for "dollars."

A Trip to Europe.—We yesterday had a visit from an old and esteemed friend, who had just returned from a visit to Europe.—He was absent, accompanied by his son, about four months and a half. They went out and returned in the Great Western, and were on the ocean only twenty-nine days in all. They traveled 10,000 miles, visited all England, saw the principal curiosities, passed through Scotland, tarried for a short time at the principal towns in France, made a trip through Switzerland and down the Rhine, stopped at a number of the principal towns in Germany, hurried through Holland, and rambled through Ireland.—They were six weeks in London, and three weeks in Paris—put up at the best hotels, and traveled in the best conveyances—and expended about $1000 each, including nearly $800, their passage money in the steamers. So much for traveling in these modern days. They saw all the lions of the Great Metropolis—from the bottom of the Thames to the ball of St. Paul's, and from Brentford to Mile End. Indeed, he informs us that one may travel ten miles through the streets of London and suburbs, in an omnibus, for sixpence, and during the route, at one point gaze with astonishment and admiration at all the magnificence of nobility and wealth, decked out in the richest trappings, such as splendid equipages, outriders, &c., and at another, look with feelings of pity and commiseration at human nature in its most wretched and deplorable condition.—Phil. Enq.

Important Medical Discovery.—An interesting case of recovery from the effects of laudanum, by an application of electro-magnetism, recently occurred in the Middlesex Hospital, which is reported in the London Lancet. The patient had taken an ounce of laudanum, containing 26 grains of opium. The laudanum had been removed by the stomach pump, but as he continued to fail, one wire of a small battery was applied to his neck, and the other to the region of the heart or epigastrium, and by these a succession of very powerful shocks were given. The muscles of respiration were set in action, and the diaphragm contracted powerfully; the chest was more fully expanded, the pulse improved, and became more powerful. This application was continued for several hours, and was finally successful.

Worthy of Patronizing.—The Exchange Hotel, of this city, kept by C. A. Colton, we are told, is increasing its business rapidly, far beyond what the proprietor expected when he opened it on the temperance plan. His table is inferior to none in the place, and his house all must know is perfectly quiet, and, of course, where every thing is quiet, things are done gentlemanly, decently, and in order.—Hartford Review.

An American Abroad.—Lord Lyndhurst, recently elevated to the office of High Chancellor for the third time by the political revolution to England, is a native of Boston. His father was a distinguished painter, of the name of John Singleton Copley, who removed to England at an early period in the life of his new distinguished son. The widow of the late Gardner Greene is a sister of Lord Lyndhurst. Lord L. was born in Beacon street, in a house on a site now occupied by the princely mansion of David Sears. Both Whigs and Tories admit Lord Lyndhurst as one of the most able judges who ever sat in a court of equity or of law.

A Perilous Adventure.—A negro residing with Mr. Hudson, opposite to Navy Island, a week or two ago, while drawing water from the river Niagara, had gone into a small boat for the purpose of filling his vessel more readily. The current which is strong at this part hurried him down, and when he was betaking himself to the oars, one of them dropped from his hand. Unable to skull against the violent wind which blew from the shore, he was soon borne off into the river. Mr. H. seeing the sad plight of the poor fellow, who was crying earnestly for help, despatched a man and horse to Chipewa for a boat to intercept him before he could reach the rapids. A boat was quickly obtained—manned with five oars, and pushed forward into the midst of the waters. The men poised their boat in the current, looking all around them as they best could, for it was now almost dark—they stemmed it in a transverse direction—they shouted that if possible the unhappy negro might hear and return the cry—but all their praiseworthy efforts were in vain,

The night had come on,
And the rapids were near,

and they heard only their everlasting roar. There were many now who thought that both boat and man had taken their last leap over the terrible horse-shoe fall—where an ocean flood ——— collected all

In one impetuous torrent down the steep
It thundering shoots, and shakes the country round."

Darkie, however, was more fortunate. The boat that carried him had tracked in safety to Navy Island, until it came to the eddy at the termination, when it was wafted upwards till it reached the land. It is scarcely needful to add, that more scared than hurt, he was able to lift up so loud a voice that it reached his Canadian friends who soon ferried him across.—Toronto Colonist.

Expenses of Royalty.—In the House of Lords, on the 27th ult., Lord Brougham expressed great dissatisfaction at the circumstance that £70,000 had been expended for the royal stables, at a time when he could hardly wring £20,000 from the Government, for the education of the people. Viscount Melbourne explained that the grant was indispensable, and the Duke of Wellington concurred with him.

Value of Pins' Heads.—The principal members of the Chancery Bar, says an English paper, were occupied several days last week, before the Lord chancellor, in arguing a question relating to a patent connected with the making of Pins' Heads. The costs of the proceedings on both sides are said to amount to nearly £5000.

Sheep Husbandry.—According to the best calculations, there are 34,000,000 sheep in the Union. This is an increase of about 5,000,000 within the three last years. These are worth, at a fair calculation, $70,000,000. About one-fifth of all these are found in the single State of New York. These sheep, at three sheep to the acre, would require 11,000,000 acres for their keep, worth $12 per acre, making the amount of $132,000,000 invested in lands.

Aggregate amount invested in sheep husbandry in the United States is,

In Sheep,	$68,000,000
In Land,	132,000,000
	$200,000,000

The annual crop of wool is estimated at 90,000,000 lbs., and worth nearly $10,000,000.—Cultivator.

Needles.—By a simple machine, a mere tray, 20,000 needles thrown together, entangled in every way, are in 3 or 4 minutes accurately arranged, head and point.

Baptist Ministers in Prison.—Recent communications have brought us the unwelcome tidings that Adolph, the brother of Rev. Peter C. Mœnster, has also become the victim of persecution. These pious brethren, and other members of the Baptist Church in Copenhagen, have been imprisoned for their public profession of the doctrines and ordinances of Christ. These servants of the Lord inform us, that they are in actual want, having no means of subsistence but the coarse and scanty fare allowed to the common felon. It is hoped that the sympathies of American Christians will be aroused to this subject, and that means will pe provided to support our suffering brethren so long as it shall please God to permit them to continue in bonds for the truth's sake, and also to enable them to pay the heavy fines which have been imposed by the government.

The Court of Chancery at Copenhagen has recently decided that persons refusing to have their children sprinkled, shall, after the expiration of the time appointed by law, pay for the first eight days, five rix bank dollars, ten for the next week and ten for every succeeding week, so long as they have any property left.

Those members of the church who possessed property have like the first Christians, freely disposed of them, and applied the avails for the support of their needy brethren. Will not many in the United States contribute to their relief according as the Lord hath prospered them.

Donations may be forwarded to the subscriber, No. 82, Madison street, or to No. 12, Chambers street, New York.

Charles G. Sommers
New York, Oct. 20, 1841.

Out of the six gentlemen who compose the President's Cabinet, only two are married, Messrs. Webster and Spencer!

A woman in England the other day actually dislocated her lower jaw while scolding at her husband. He compelled her to nod affirmation to a solemn oath, that she would not scold again, before he permitted the surgeon to mend the dislocation. A real come-up, if true. Look out, scolding wives.

A London paper says, the entire number of young creatures occupied in dress mkaing in this city is 15,000.

Notices.

Madison County Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the Madison county Agricultural Society will be held at 12 o'clock M. on Monday the 27th December next, at the court-house in Morrisville.

The members, and all those who feel an interest in the promotion of agriculture, and the welfare of the country, are earnestly requested to attend.

The executive committee will meet on the same day at 11 A. M.

Nov. 15, 1841.

A. S. SLOAN, Rec. Sec'y.

☞ The papers of the county will please copy the above notice.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, on the 30th ult., by Eld. John Green, Mr. CHARLES SPICER, and Miss SARAH A. DAVIS, all of Hopkinton.

Note.—We republish the above hymeneal to correct an error in its former publication. The name is CHARLES, and not Clark as first published.

DIED,

In [illegible], on the 30th ult., STEPHEN MANSON, aged 84 years, in full hope of a blessed immortality. It is probable a more extended biography will be given at another time.

In Truxton, on the 24th inst., ARTEMAS MUNSEY, son of James Munsey, after a short illness, in the 19th year of his age.

In Alfred, of scarlet fever on the 16th inst., Mr. CYRENUS PENNY, in the 24th year of age.

Mr. P. was an enterprising merchant, beloved and respected by all his acquaintances.

LIST OF LETTERS.

C. Hubbard P. M., (credit given,) John Whitford, (W. Green is credited on our book,) J. B. Craig, (alteration made,) James R. Irish, (it is done.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of C. Hubbard, $2 cr. Job Spencer, vol. 2. of John Whitford, $1.75, cr. Robert West, $2,50, Perry Stillman, $2,25, .75 retained.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of six per cent has been levied on the deposite notes in force in said company on the 25th day of October 1841, and that the same is requested to be paid to the Treasurer at the office of said Company in the village of Cazenovia on or before the first day of January next.

Dated at Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.
40w6 WM J. HOUGH, Treasurer.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next

G. W. SUTTON.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

NEW GOODS,
CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.
J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S.

Nov. 24.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered in lots to suit purchasers, at prices 18 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the

October 4th. STONE STORE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment [illegible] are now offered to Physicians at [illegible] per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster is unrivalled [illegible] swellings, scurvy sores, [illegible] and seldom fails to give relief [illegible] If applied to the side it will [illegible] mon Liver complaints, and if applied [illegible] season, it will cure the Quinsey. It is also an excellent remedy for diseases of the spine.

The virtues of the Plaster have been [illegible] thousands of the most respectable [illegible] states of Vermont and New-York [illegible] its efficacy.—Price, 25 cents [illegible]

For sale by S. D. DELLAY.
De Ruyter, Nov. 10

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS taken a shop [illegible] story [illegible] Store, where he will [illegible] and Shoes of any kind [illegible]

Ladies Kid or Morocco [illegible] and Gaiter boots, of the [illegible]

N. B. [illegible] short notice, [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 27, 1841.

STOVES.
COLD WINTER IS COMING.
ABRAM N. ANNAS.

LATE of the firm of [illegible] Stove Store of J. [illegible] Block where he is [illegible] assortment of STOVES ever [illegible] market, comprising [illegible] Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, &c.

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, [illegible] able terms as can be [illegible] TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. [illegible] Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, [illegible] in payment for any [illegible] business.

The [illegible] Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, [illegible]

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he [illegible] on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

[illegible] of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY

Eave Troughs

Made [illegible]

JUST RECEIVED

[illegible]

JOB WORK

[illegible] N. B. [illegible] No. 3 [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841.

NEW GOODS
AT THE FARMERS' EXCHANGE.
S. G. WALKER.

HAVING [illegible] DRY GOODS, [illegible] ERY, HARDWARE, [illegible]

BOOTS & SHOES.

Ever [illegible] De Ruyter [illegible] be sold CHEAPER [illegible] CASH [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841.

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin [illegible]
Mary L. Goodwin [illegible] Goodwin, and [illegible] by John M. [illegible] Guardian [illegible] and [illegible]

IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order [illegible] Common Pleas of the C[illegible] the 26th [illegible] the house of Wm. C. [illegible] the estate of Le Ba[illegible] bounded, beginning at [illegible] east corner [illegible] the said Mitchell's [illegible] Marcus Rump[illegible] west to [illegible] about twenty-six rods [illegible] of the road; thence south [illegible] road to the place of beginning [illegible] from two lots [illegible] er to Thomas Russel [illegible] sold in such parcels [illegible] made known [illegible]

20, 1841. BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
Z. T. BENTLEY, A[illegible]

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above [illegible] day of January next [illegible] time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.
JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
Z. T. BENTLEY, A[illegible] 40.1s

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE.

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, [illegible] enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing [illegible] fourths of an acre, being about six rods [illegible] Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm MANSON.

NO IMPOSITION!
NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.
De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.
SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING [illegible] the stock of Goods, and taken [illegible] H. [illegible] BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, [illegible] the inhabitants of [illegible] they are [illegible] New-York a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs.

[illegible]

LOW PRICES.

[illegible]

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible]

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A [illegible]

STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE.

[illegible]
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound
[illegible]
Parker's Pulmonary Balm
[illegible] American Balsam
Hutchinson's Liniment
With others too numerous to mention

[illegible]

STONE STORE.

October 4.

M[illegible]

STONE STORE.

L[illegible]

STONE STORE.

[illegible]

TAKE NOTICE.

T[illegible]

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
S. M. HOUSE.

R[illegible]

NOTICE.

THE [illegible]

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
WILLIAM [illegible]

C[illegible]

JOHN N. ELMORE,

I[illegible]

25 [illegible] BEAVER Cloth [illegible] CASSIMERES, SATINETTS, [illegible] STONE STORE.

CASH

PAID [illegible] J. N. ELMORE.

[illegible]

C[illegible] NEW YORK CASH STORE.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale [illegible] at the [illegible] FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

POETRY.

The Infidel.

BY MOSES H. PERKINS.

I've heard, on Afric's dreary shore,
The serpent's hiss, the panther's roar
No footsteps mark'd the sands ;
No human voice the desert cheer'd,
Save now and then, were faintly heard,
The yells of savage bands.

I've seen the red volcanic tide,
Impetuous sweep the mountain's side,
And wrap the plain- in fire ;
And heard the shepherd's plaintive moans,
Mingling with Ætna's hollow groans,
On passing gales expire

In twilight's faint and dusky beam,
I've seen the murd'rer's weapon gleam,
Bath'd in the victim's gore ;
Ghastly and pale, with many a wound,
The mangled corse, half breathing found,
Stretch'd on the blood-stain'd shore.

I've heard amid the foaming deep,
When tempests howl, and whirlwinds sweep,
Heart-rending cries "to save ;"
The shrieks of many a trembling soul,
And mark'd the sea's tremendous roll,
Which swept them to their grave.

Nor shepherd's moans, nor panther's roar,
Nor wreck, nor corse upon the shore,
To me such pain has given,
As seeing on the couch of death,
The Infidel resign his breath,
Without the hopes of Heaven.

Sonnet.—The Bible

O Book of Books ! though skepticism flout
Thy sacred origin, thy worth decry ;
Though transcendental folly give the lie
To what thou teachest ; though the critic doubt
This fact, that miracle, and raise a shout
Of triumph o'er each incongruity,
He in thy pages may perchance espy ;
As in his strength th' effulgent sun shines out,
Hiding innumerous stars, so dost thou shine
With heavenly light, all human works excelling :
Thy oracles are holy and divine,
Of free salvation, through a SAVIOUR, telling :
All truth, all excellence dost thou enshrine—
The mists of sin and ignorance dispelling.
WM. LLOYD GARRISON.

Boston, Nov. 1, 1841.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the N. Y. Sunday Mercury.

ANOTHER SHORT SERMON.

BY DOW JR.—THE LAY PREACHER.

The following—by whom I know not, neither do I care.—must serve as a text to my present discourse :

Tobacco is an Indian weed,
It was the Devil that sowed the seed.

My indulgent and indulging hearers—it was the devil, beyond all question, who, first sowed the seed, and who is still the sole owner and proprietor of all that is, or ever will be raised of this soul-contaminating vegetable. Oh you vile tobacco worms ! I hardly know whether it is best to poke you about with a long stick of rancor, or stand farther off and rely upon the enticing powers of persuasion, I expect however to accomplish but little, any way.

My hearers—to such of you as are in the habit of chewing, allow me to address myself butt-end foremost. If you dont leave off the filthy practice, I shall put you down upon my catalogue of unclean beasts to be shunned and avoided by all decent society. It is a practice productive of no good whatever, and fraught wtih more evils than a scavenger's horse can carry. It renders your carcase as loathsome and disgusting as those of buzzards. It stains your dickeys, as well as your moral characters—blackens both your teeth and your souls—causes oderiforous stench to flow continually from your mouths—and not only infuses a deadly poison in your blood, but leads you to an inclination for dissipation—from that semi-occasional intoxication. Man's mouth, my friends was never made for a tobacco box ; and I wonder how any man can have the courage to chew that which he dare not swallow. I'd like to see a man stuff some of the trash into his abdominal pantry. If he did'nt feel uncomfortable about the waistbands soon after it would be because sickness was afraid to come near him.

Snuffing my friends, is nearly if not quite as bad as chewing ; and I grieve to observe that females as well as males are addicted to it. When I see a woman who speaks as though her nasal organ was made of bell metal—who says "pud'n" for pudding—whose skin is as yellow as the latter end of autumn—I know she takes snuff in sufficient quantities to make an Egyptian mummy sneeze in its sarcophagus ; and I also know her brains are equally as dirty as the handkerchief she uses—and that's enough to throw a pair of tongs into convulsions. Many pretend that they take snuff to clear their heads. It clears their heads in time, of all sparkling, brilliant and original ideas and leaves instead a confused chaos of unfinished thoughts—wrecks of fancy, and any number of untamed chimeras. That is the only way in which it clears their heads my friends. The less dust you admit into your noses the clearer you heads will be—the better your health—and the more transparent your morals.

From the Weekly Star.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco is the servant of Alcohol and Idleness. He is a sallow, dirty, ill-favored, lazy, good-for-nothing fellow. Some pretend that he is a dentist, and cures the tooth-ache. Beautiful work he makes of it ! The mouth where he has operated—what a place it is for pearls ! The breath how balmy !—But, for a dentist, he is a great while at it. He is a sort of a traveling dentist. You can hardly step into a tavern without stumbling over one of the beautiful basins which he keeps for his patients to spit in. And, when he does not furnish these basins, his patients, the plagues of Egypt take them, spit on the floor. If people have occasion for a dentist, why not resort to his office and receive his attentions in private, instead of lugging the doctor about with them, and spitting his fragrant tooth-wash in all sorts of places ? This spitting seems to some people a reversion of nature. It is a sort of vomiting. No doubt it must be done sometimes Many things must be done which decent people do not do in public. If the use of tobacco is in accordance with sound reason and civilization, why not take another step ? We might probably discover some plant which would go a little deeper, make idleness a little more delicious, and instead of the present slight ejections, fetch up pretty copious discharges from the lower reservoir. How delightful that would be ! Let us imagine a dozen gentlemen in the saloon of a first rate hotel, making cascades into elegant vases set on purpose—with occasionally puking on the carpet. Do our friends, the smokers and chewers turn up their noses at our comparison ? They ought not to ; it is only a reductio ad absurdum—a carrying out of their own habit one step farther. If one of the habits is reasonable then the other is. They only differ in degree.

But we have not much to say to the old smokers. They best know what dire necessities drove them to make an alembic of their mouths. Whether it was a deathlike and intolerable sense of vacancy in the head, or rebellious dinners which it became necessary to scare down, or an uncontrollable ambition to appear as much a man as any body, the habit is fixed beyond the eloquence of our pen. To the young ones we have a word or two to say. If you would distinguish yourselves in the world do not smoke or chew tobacco—but eschew it. The commonest of all common characters is your cigar smoker. To smoke a cigar in a genteel way may be a great achievment in itself. It unquestionably is. There is the easy air in lighting it from the cigar of some other monkey, and then the head is to be thrown up at the proper angle so that the smoke shall not ascend by the chimney of the nose, then the squirting of the juice on the most scientific and approved principles of gunnery, then the knockin off of the ashes with the finger, &c. &c.—delicate operations, and requires much tact. But then there are so many that do them well, incomparably well, that a beginner has no chance to shine in the profession. We have known some of the most good-for-nothing scamps, who could go through them all in the most admirable manner, and they gave the whole process a superior grace by swearing every three or four puffs. If you can not afford to swear you never will excel in the use of the cigar. A cigar without oaths and frequent mention of the devil, is like strawberries without sugar and cream. It may be good, but there is something wanting. To enjoy a real spanish cigar, or in other words to stand in the front rank of the profession, you need to wear thick and tall whiskers, and to be able to swear all the English oaths and some of the French : it is also well to have a lock of hair on the upper lip. If you can not afford these accomplishments give it up ; you have no chance of distinction. Touch not, then, what Charles Lamb calls

"The filth of the mouth and the fog of the mind."

You will puff your very soul for nothing, and be forgotten long before you die.

One other reason why you should not smoke, and we have done for this time. It promotes lying and hypocrisy—of which the world has already too much. Half a dozen ladies are seated in the parlor of a public house, when in comes the resemblance of a gentleman, with a cigar in his mouth, which he first lights at the stove, and then says, "Is smoking disagreeable to you, ladies ? "Oh no, not by any means," is the reply of those who speak, and our hero proceeds to fill the room with the "manly scent." But he proceeds upon a most tremendous lie. For the ladies are not smokers, and every one who is not must naturally abhor the smoke of tobacco. Possibly some may have lied themselves into the belief that it smells good, but it is a sad delusion. We recollect an inn in York State, where the host had taken the part of the ladies, by sticking up a notice very considerately. It did not read as usual, "No smoking allowed here," for that rule might have been violated by his old Franklin stove—but "Gentlemen are not allowed to smoke here." It was in vain. A stripling from Gotham had lighted up and was beginning to astound the natives by his expertness, when we pointed him to the rule. He eyed it for the space of three puffs, took out his cigar between two of his fingers, squirted a mouth full of juice full upon the front of the stove, and replied, "Well, I'm not a gentleman," and puffed away. That is what we call the perfection of the art of smoking.

Temperance Department.

RUMSELLER'S CONFESSION.

A writer in the Boston Morning Star, says he heard the following confession from a man at a hotel in central New York. It is the light shining out of darkness. We hope none of our readers will ever be rumsellers.

"Sixteen years ago, I was the owner of a distillery and was doing a large business in the way of destruction and death, and although the business was at that time comparatively respectable, I must acknowledge that there was seldom a time I did not feel in a greater or less degree, a sense of wrong-doing. In proportion as this feeling increased, my interest in busines declined, and the consequence was a failure, which brought me into reduced circumstances. I then commenced the retail grocery trade, including liquor of all sorts, and continued in this for some time, but never could get rid of a feeling of meanness, which seemed to attach itself to a business which I knew to be the cause of poverty and misery.

"It happened on one occasion, late at night in winter, a neighbor whom I knew to be very intemperate, called as usual with his jug, for a quart of poison. After it was filled and paid for, he asked me in an imploring way, if I would trust him for a loaf of bread. I replied in the negative, but told him I would take back the rum in exchange for the loaf. This, however, he promptly refused to do, and soon left the store.

"My pity was awakened, and thinking his family might be in distress, I went into the house, and succeeded in inducing my wife to go to their miserable hovel and ascertain the condition of the family. She soon returned with the sad tale of their misery. The drunken husband lay streched senseless upon a heap of dirty straw in a corner of the hovel, while his wife was bending over a single coal fire, the remnant of their last stick of wood, and striving to quell the cries of their half-frozen and half-starved children. The storm howled fearfully without, and I thought of the miserable condition, and felt that I was the cause of it all. It was enough. My ears were opened, and I made an everlasting vow that I would never sell or taste another drop. Thanks to God, who has enabled me to keep that vow inviolate to this day. I now feel it my duty to use all the influence I may have, to promote the glorious cause of Temperance, and if possible, to make restitution for some of the misery I have caused. But this I can only hope to do in part, and must look to God for forgiveness."

Natural History.

THE RINOCEROS, "UNICORN."

The Unicorn, like "Leviathan" and "Behemoth," has tried the ingenuity of critics, some contending that it was an animal of the buffalo tribe, to which the English name has been erroneously applied, while others suppose it to be a species of deer or antelope. The description which Job gives of it, however, agrees so well with the rhinoceros, as to render it most probable that this was the animal intended.

The rhinoceros, is a native of Africa and India, and is also found in some of the islands of the Indian seas.

At first sight the rhinoceros conveys to the mind of the spectator the idea of an enormous hog. It resembles this animal not only in its general form, but also in the shape of the head, the smallness of its eyes, and the size and shape of its ears. Its clumsily-formed feet and legs, however, partake more of the character of those of the hippopotamus and the elephant than of the hog. When full grown, it is about eight or nine feet in length ; but, from the shortness of his legs, it does not stand much more than half the height of the elephant. It is covered with a thick skin nearly destitute of hair, and in the Indian species it is marked with deep furrows, seeming to hang in folds in various parts of the animal, particularly under the throat and behind the shoulders and on the thighs. Its most striking peculiarity, however, consists in the horn which springs from its nose, and gives to the animal a very formidable and even dangerous look. Though strictly a vegetable feeder, it is easily excited, and becomes then very bold and persevering in its attacks.

Little is known of the rhinoceros in a state of nature ; and the details of the habits of such individuals as have been kept in confinement, are far from satisfactory.—Cooped up in a little den, and exposed to all the petty annoyances of inquisitive and impertinent visiters, it is not surprising that such as have been kept in this state have displayed a considerable degree of ferocity. Sir Everard Home furnishes some particulars respecting one which was kept 3 years at Exeter Exchange. "It was so savage," says he, "that about a month after it came, it endeavored to kill the keeper, and nearly succeeded. It ran at him with great impetuosity, but fortunately the horn passed between his thighs, and threw the keeper on his head ; the horn came against a wooden partition, into which the animal forced it to such a depth as to be unable for a minute to withdraw it, and during this interval the man escaped. Its skin, though apparently so hard, is only covered with small scales of the thickness of paper, with the appearance of tortoise-shell ; at the edges of these the skin itself is exceedingly sensitive, either to the bite of a fly or the lash of a whip. By this discipline the keeper got the management of it, and the animal was brought to know him ; but frequently, more especially in the middle of the night, fits of frenzy came on, and while these lasted, nothing could control its rage, the rhinoceros running with great swiftness round the den, playing all kinds of antics, making hideous noises, knocking everything in pieces, disturbing the whole neighborhood, and then all at once, becoming quiet. While the fit was on, not even the keeper durst approach.—The animal fell on its knee, to enable the horn to be borne on any object. It was quick in all its motions, ate voraciously all kinds of vegetables, appearing to have no selection. They fed it on branches of willow. Three years' confinement made no alteration in his habits."

The African rhinoceros is larger than the Indian one ; it has a second horn, of about half the length of the other, and placed immediately behind it. It is also in a great measure destitute of the folds of skin by which the Indian rhinoceros is marked, but in no case are these entirely wanting, though sometimes only partially developed. Burchell, in his "Travels in Africa," states that the length of one of the animals which he measured was eleven feet two inches, and the circumference of its body, eight feet four inches ; and he was informed by the natives that in the interior they were to be found of much larger dimensions. "The sense of smelling," says Mr. Burchell, "is so keen and nice, that they can know, even at a great distance, whether any man be coming toward them ; on the first suspicion of this they take to flight. It is therefore only by approaching them against the wind, or from the leeward, that the hunter can ever expect to get within musket-shot. Yet in doing this, he must move silently and cautiously, so as not to make the least noise in the bushes otherwise the hearing of the animal is so exceedingly quick that they would instantly take the alarm, and move far away to some more undististurbed spot. But the most dangerous part of the business is, that when they are thus disturbed, they sometimes become furious, and take it into their head to pursue their enemy ; and then, if they once get sight of the hunter, it is difficult for him to escape unless he possess a degree of coolness and presence of mind which in such a case is not always to be found. Yet, if he will quietly till the enraged animal makes a run at him, and will then spring suddenly to one side to let it pass, he may gain time enough to reload his gun before the rhinoceros gets sight of him again, which, fortunately, it does slowly and with difficulty. The knowledge of this imperfection of sight, which is occasioned, perhaps, by the excessive smallness of the aperture of the eye, (its length being only an inch,) in proportion to the bulk of the animal, encourages the hunter to advance without taking much pains to conceal himself; and by attending to the usual precautions just mentioned he may safely approach within musket-shot."

Before proceeding to examine whether the rhinoceros is the animal referred to by the sacred writers, we may remark, that the heraldic animal on the British coat of arms, which, in popular language, passes under the name of the unicorn, never had any but an imaginary existence ; it is therefore unnecessary to waste time in searching after its representative.

As has been already mentioned, considerable difference of opinion exists among critics regarding the identification of the unicorn with any known animal. An examination of the passages in which allusion is made to the animal, will best enable us to judge whether the rhinoceros can make good its claim. The first passage in scripture in which we find it mentioned, is in the reluctant reply of Balaam to Balak, when importuned by the terrified king, to curse the invading armies of Israel. "God brought them out of Egypt ; he hath, as it were, the strength of a unicorn." (Hebrew, reem) (Numb. xxiii. 22 xxiv. 8.) In the Book of Psalms it is described as a horned animal. "But my horn shalt thou exalt as the horn of a unicorn." (Ps. xcii. 10.) Moses, in his benediction of Joseph, distinctly states, that it is an animal having more than one horn. "His horns are like the horns of unicorns." (Deut. xxxiii. 17.) In the Book of Job it is introduced as a very fierce and untamable animal. "Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib ? Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow, or will he harrow the vallies after thee ? Wilt thou trust him because his strength is great ? or wilt thou leave thy labor to him ? Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn ?" (Job xxxix. 9—12.)

The following remarks of Mr. Bruce, the Abysinian traveller, seems to include all that can be said on this subject. In continuation of some observations on another subject, he says, "My only business is with the reem, which I suppose to be the rhinoceros. The derivation of this word, both in the Hebrew and Ethiopic, seems to be from erectness or standing straight. This is certainly for no particular quality in the animal itself, who is not more, nor even so much erect as many other quadrupeds for its knees are rather crooked ; but it is from the circumstance and manner in which his horn is placed. The horns of all other animals are inclined to some degree of parallelism with the nose, or os frontis. The horn of the rhinoceros alone is erect and perpendicular to this bone, on which it stands at right angles ; thereby possessing greater power as a purchase or a lever than any bone could possibly have in any other position.

"The situation of the horn is very happily alluded to in the sacred writings. "My horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of a reem." (Ps. xcii 10.) And the horn here alluded to is not wholly figurative, but was really an ornament worn by great men in the days of victory, preferment or rejoicing, when they were anointed with new, sweet or fresh oil ; a circumstance which David joins with that of erecting the horn.

"Some authors, for what reason I know not, have made the reem or unicorn, to be of the deer or antelope kind, that is, of a genus whose very character is fear and weakness, very opposite to the qualities by which the reem is described in Scripture.

"Balaam a priest of Midian, and so in the neighborhood of the haunts of the rhinoceros, and intimately connected with Ethiopia, for they themselves were shepherds of that country, in a transport from contemplating the strength of Israel, whom he was brought to curse, says they had, 'as it were, the strength of a reem,' (Numb. xxiii. 22.) Job makes frequent allusion to its great strength, ferocity, and indocility. He asks, 'Will the reem be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib ?' (xxxix. 10.) That is, will he willingly come into stable and eat at thy manger ? And again, 'Canst thou bind the reem with a band in the furrow, and will he harrow the valleys after thee ?' In other words, canst thou make him to go in the plough or harrow ?

"Isaiah, who of all the prophets seems to have known Egypt and Ethiopia best, when prophesying about the destruction of Idumea, says, that 'the reem shall come down with the fat cattle ;' a proof that he knew his habitation was in the neighborhood. In the same manner as when foretelling the desolation of Egypt, he mentions as one manner of effecting it, the bringing down the fly from Ethiopia, to meet the cattle in the desert, and among the bushes, and destroy them there, where that insect did not ordinarily come but on command, and where the cattle fled every year to save themselves from that insect.

"The principal reason for translating the word reem, unicorn, and not rhinoceros, is from a prejudice that he must have but one horn. But this is by no means so well founded as to be admitted as the only argument for establishing the existence of an animal which never has appeared after the search of so many ages. Scripture speaks of the horns of the unicorn (Deut. xxxiii. 17,) so that even from this circumstance, the reem may be the rhinoceros, as the Asiatic and part of the African rhinoceros may be the unicorn.—Bible Quadruped.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT
S. D. DELLAY'S.
Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of [illegible] GOODS, [illegible] SHEETINGS, [illegible] of CALICO [illegible] and [illegible] BEAVER CLOTHS, are now [illegible] by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH [illegible] [illegible] RINOS, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, [illegible] NES &c. &c. [illegible]

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as [illegible] cheaper [illegible]

To [illegible] his stock is now [illegible] least a call, [illegible] in their line [illegible] cent less [illegible] Norwich, Cazenovia, [illegible]

Terms of sale, [illegible]

He [illegible] also sole Agent [illegible] the following Valuable Medicines [illegible]

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.

[illegible]

DR. WATERMAN'S

[illegible]

[illegible] Dayton [illegible] place

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible] Coughs, Asthma, [illegible] Bronchitis, [illegible] leading to Consumption [illegible] virtues of Hoarhound [illegible] Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, [illegible] N. Y.

[illegible] HOREHOUND [illegible]

In conclusion he [illegible]

WANTED,

10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

[illegible] De Ruyter, May 13, 1841.

He also states, for the [illegible] that he has [illegible] following [illegible] MEDICINES, [illegible]

Dr. [illegible]
Morrison's [illegible]
Sands' [illegible]
Doctor [illegible]
Coetesworth's [illegible]
Dr. Phelps' [illegible] Dr. McMahon's Elixir
M. Gedden's [illegible] Opium, of the Day " Hive Syrup,
Dr. Peter's " Laudanum,
Moffat's Vegetable Life [illegible] Paregoric,
Gregory's Billious [illegible] Opodeldoc,
Harlem Oil " Spice,
British " " Lemons,
Pectoral Balm Honey " Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold ; but on the contrary will [illegible] the CHEAPEST

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. E. A. [illegible] in all cases [illegible] Many certificates [illegible] and will be if wished, to place this [illegible] Specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses ; also, all wounds or bruises of the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.

47m6 S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED,

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, [illegible] the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices. The following, among others, may now be found on his list :—

Webb's Dictionary, large. Novum Græcum Testamentum,
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon, Colloquial Phrases,
" Legendre, Greek Reader,
" First Lessons, Greek Lessons,
" Arithmetic, Jacob's Latin Reader,
Comstock's Chemistry, Polyglott Bibles,
Parker's Philosophy, Quarto "
Brown's Grammar, Medium Drawing Paper,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy, Demi " "
Town's Analysis, Cap " "
Olney's Geography, Drawing Pencils,
Parley's " Ruled, Plain and Fancy
Cicero's Orations, Letter Paper,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar, Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with [illegible] establishment, is now ready [illegible] kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has [illegible] [illegible] Store,) together [illegible] where he will be [illegible] He will as heretofore, WARRANT his work to [illegible]

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions [illegible] No. 1 [illegible]

J. M. L. [illegible] experienced [illegible] COATS [illegible] in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, [illegible] 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER

NEW-YORK.

Alfred—B. H. Potter, P. S. Bailey.
[illegible]
[illegible] P. M.
[illegible]
[illegible] Wm. M. [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] P. M.
[illegible] Maxson
[illegible] Samuel [illegible]
[illegible] H. Wilson, P. M.
[illegible] P. M., [illegible]
[illegible] H. S. Crandall
[illegible]

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible] Rev. [illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

[illegible]

NEW-JERSEY.

[illegible]

PENNSYLVANIA.

[illegible]
[illegible] P. M.

VIRGINIA.

[illegible]
[illegible] P. M.

OHIO.

[illegible]

MICHIGAN.

[illegible] Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorized Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, avowing facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 41.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—— A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. WHOLE NO. 93.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 8, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

THE SABBATH.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH.

The divine authority and perpetual obligation of the Sabbath, ought to be thoroughly understood and realized by the church, and by all men. On the preservation of the Sabbath depends the security of all our civil and religious, our temporal and eternal interests. The increase of vice and crime in our country has been in a great measure caused by contempt of the sacred day.

It is time for this nation to pause and examine this subject. It is time for the friends of the Sabbath to assert its claims, and vindicate them in such a manner as to entrench them in the convictions and affections of the American people. We feel quite certain that a clear and faithful representation of the authority of the Sabbath, and of its adaptation to all the wants of man in every relation, will not be wasted on our fellow-citizens. In this confidence we would respectfully recommend the topic to the attention of the press in general, and to the pulpit.

When we came into existence, we found the Sabbath already established, and the course of time as regularly divided into weeks, as it is into months and years. It is natural to inquire the origin of this division. The foundation of the month and year we find in the changes of the moon, and the course of the seasons. But whence comes the week? Why this division of time into periods of seven days? There is no such foundation in the arrangement of nature.

Let us appeal to history. We can trace the existence of this day backwards from age to age, and so far as profane history is concerned, it has lived time whereof the memory of man runneth not the contrary. The day belongs to religion by virtue of immemorial possession. We must sit at the feet of Revelation, and learn of her.—She alone can impart unerring information. She places us in the garden of Eden. The heavens and earth were created. The air and the ocean were then peopled. The earth teemed with the varieties of the animal creation, and last, yet most glorious of all came forth man—erect, immortal, and majestic man, adorned with the image of his Maker, and crowned with glory and honor. The six days work was done, and God pronounced it good, and rested on the seventh from all the work which he had created and made. Then, for this, he blessed the seventh day and sanctified it. Then the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Thus began the Sabbath. It is one day younger than the human race. It was made for man.

We know it has been said that Moses in his narrative is merely assigning the reason of one of his own institutions, without professing to describe its origin. One glance at the order of narration is sufficient to refute the error. The writer gives an account of the six days work, in order, and then states that on the seventh day, God ended his work which he had made, and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made, and God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had created and made. On the seventh day he rested, and because he rested on that day he set it apart as holy. If, then, for this reason that day was sanctified at all, its consecration was undoubtedly coeval with man. Was not the Sabbath appointed to celebrate the creation of the world, and was it so delinquent as not to begin until twenty-five hundred years after? Both the fact that Moses placed the account of it as completing the history of the creation, and the reason itself assigned for its original sanctification, show the objection false.

It has also been asked why we do not hear of the Sabbath again until the encampment of the Israelites in the wilderness, if it was instituted "in the beginning?" It is not true that there is no allusion to the Sabbath during that period. But if it were, the objection would have no force. It might as well be asked, Why there is no account of the Sabbath from the time of Joshua to Daniel, when its existence was of course undoubted? Or, why is there no allusion to the rite of circumcision from a little time after the death of Moses, to the days of Jeremiah? The alleged silence of the Bible does not therefore prove that there was no ante-diluvian Sabbath.

But, as we just said, the Bible is not silent. Take the history of the deluge, and see what you can make of it, on the supposition that the Sabbath was not in existence. In Gen. vii. 4, God declares, For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain upon the earth. Again, verse 10, And it came to pass after seven days, that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the eighth chapter, we are told that at the end of forty days Noah opened the window of the ark, and sent forth a raven and a dove, which last returned—that he waited yet other seven days, and again sent forth the dove, which again returned; that he stayed yet other seven days, and again sent forth the dove which returned no more. What means this division of time into periods of seven days? Why are we thus wafted along from week to week, if there was no Sabbath? How could the week have existed without it? It should be noticed also, that the Hebrew word translated seven days in these passages, is the same translated week in the language which Laban used to Jacob. "Fulfil her week."—He used it as applied to years, by a common figure of speech, and therefore proves that not only before the flood, but down to the time of Jacob, time was divided into periods of seven days. What could have done this but the Sabbath? The objection, therefore, is entirely destroyed.

The testimony of all ancient writers confirms this interpretation of these passages. Homer and Hesiod both speak of the seventh day as holy. The Phœnicians consecrated one day in seven. Grotius declares that the memory of the creation's being performed in six days, was preserved not only among the Greeks and Italians, but among the Celts and Indians, all of whom divided their time into weeks. So also it is affirmed of the Assyrians, Egyptians, Arabians, Romans, Gauls, Britons, and Germans. Josephus affirms that there is no city either of Greek or Barbarians, or any other nation, where the religion of the Sabbath is unknown. The existence of this tradition in so many different languages and nations, compels us to suppose that the first generations after the flood consecrated to the service of God one day in seven.

There is but one other allusion to the Sabbath, until we come to its incorporation in the ten commands upon Mount Sinai.—This is found in the account given by Moses of the directions respecting the gathering of Manna. The people as it would appear, without any explicit directions given to them, voluntarily gathered twice as much on the sixth day as on the others.—The rulers reported this conduct to Moses, who justified them in it, and then proceeded to give them directions respecting the Sabbath. The natural impression of all this on a reflecting mind, is that the institution was known previously to the people, and that this was a revival of it, after it had been to some extent neglected.

There is something very impressive in this venerable antiquity of the Sabbath. It should awaken our reverence and gratitude. The argument appears to be conclusive that it was given to man, while he was yet in Paradise. When he was expelled from his original home, he was permitted to carry down with him this one specimen of Eden—this type of the Paradise above. The course of constant toil is thus suspended one day in seven. Among the Gentiles, the day was undoubtedly neglected and perverted. In the slavery of Egypt, it was probably denied to the Jews, for slavery cares not for the authority of God, or the rights of conscience. It is beautiful to think of the tribes in the wilderness, reposing in the refreshment of this sacred rest of the patriarchal ages.

Religious Department.

From the Boston Recorder.

A STRANGE KIND OF RICHES.

Some years ago, a number of poor men made a discovery of a species of property having various striking peculiarities. It differed totally from any that wealthy men in general at that time possessed. The poor men made no secret, as discoverers usually do, of what they had found out; but opened their whole hearts to all the world, and gave every living being an equal chance with themselves to become rich.

The lovers of gain of that day, however, were very little interested in the matter.—Most of them sneered at the whole thing, and virtually said, "give us the kind of wealth we now have, and are seeking, and we desire no other." They had many misgivings, however, about their own course in the matter, and many of them have wept, and are weeping yet, that, with all their gettings, they did not lay up this kind of treasure.

Some of the poor men of that age, made large acquisitions of this species of property. They became very wealthy; and one of the most ancient and valuable documents that have come down to our times, mentions their names, and gives a particular description of this peculiar kind of wealth. A singular quotation from that record will place the matter fairly before the reader, "RICH IN GOOD WORKS."

We have thought it worth while to notice a few of the peculiarities of this kind of riches, in the hope that in the scramble for other kinds of gain, now so animated among men, a few might probably be interested in turning their faces this way.

1. There is no uncertainty about the acquisition of this kind of wealth. Some men toil for property with the same success as he who draws water in a sieve.—They put their money in a bag with holes. They do not accumulate. But there is no uncertainty about the gains of him who would be "rich in good works." Every effort, well made, is safe from failure.—Each good work is a gain absolutely. And all the faithful labor put forth in this enterprise has upon it the stamp of assured success. The insurance is the assurance of infinite wisdom and power.

2. This kind of riches never harms the possessor. Other kinds often do. A good man was once so alarmed about such a danger, that he prayed he might not be rich! Many men would scoff at such a prayer, if offered in these days: but they can not scoff the wisdom of it away.—Many men's accumulation of gain is like a sinking man's filling his pockets with stones.

But good works are riches which have no sinking quality. All their tendency is upward, and heavenward. They are wings for the soul's flight to its eternal home.

3. This kind of riches never occasions any anxiety to the possessor. Worldly wealth often gives more trouble than the want of it ever occasioned. When gained, it must be guarded from waste, from theft, fraud, &c. The strong bolt and the strong bond must secure it. And both are not strong enough to bind the owner's heart to firm and quiet confidence. He has care still.

But you need not place a sentry over the kind of riches now described. You want no bond nor mortgage. The thief can not steal them, nor the moth corrupt them, nor the fire consume them, nor the waves swallow them up. They can never be lost.—Not a particle of this kind of wealth ever has, or even can perish. Hence, the owner needs no care only to accumulate as fast as he can. Every particle of wealth of this kind, and thus gained, takes its place at once among things imperishable. The stars may fade, the sun grow old and dim, and be extinguished, but good works are riches that outlive them all.

4. And they do men good for both worlds. Earthly riches belong only to earth. The feeble power they have to bless, is limited to this short life. They accompany no departing spirit into eternity to do it good there. But good works bless this side the grave—bless with an approving conscience—sweet communion with God, and a glorious hope. But their full power to bless is known only hereafter. Then cometh the harvest, and the happy reaper will find it will take an eternity to gather it." Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may "lay hold on ETERNAL LIFE."

We call the riches strange, but only because of the strange conduct of men in so foolishly neglecting them. When all other wealth is consuming in the fires of the great day, men will wonder at their own strange infatuation in not having been rich in good works. And it will not be strange, and they will not think it strange, that a just and holy God should leave them to the miseries of everlasting poverty.

STORY OF THE YOUNG LAWYER.

BY BISHOP CHASE

There lived in Poughkeepsie, at this time, a venerable lady and her talented son-in-law. The former was exceedingly anxious about the latter, because of his loose and infidel opinions on religious subjects; and yet few men were more amiable in manners, or more sprightly in conversation. "O, sir," said the lady to the writer, "I wish you to have a serious conversation with my son-in-law, on the subject of Christianity. Perhaps he may hearken to you, though to all of us he turns a deaf ear, whenever we speak on the Holy Scriptures."

A proposal of this nature seemed to be identified with the writer's profession.—Accordingly, a day was appointed when the lady would spend a social afternoon with the writer and his family, there being no doubt that the interesting young lawyer would, if properly invited, join the party at tea. The interview took place as was expected, and, in the full flow of talk, something was designedly introduced touching the Christian religion. Contrary to the expectation of his relatives and friends, this interesting gentleman did neither evade nor oppose what was said, but candidly confessed he was differently impressed on the subject from what he had been. "Till a few days ago," said he, "I should have brought forward my preliminaries, and before the threshhold of Christianity were passed, I would have insisted that they be all satisfactorily answered; but at present I feel differently disposed."

"And what has wrought the change?" asked the writer.

"O, sir," said he, "I must tell the whole story; it relates chiefly to GENERAL HAMILTON."

"You know," said he, "that pre-eminent character—how that he is not only the greatest in the field, in the senate, and at the bar, but also the most agreeable man in social intercourse. In pursuit of his professional duties, he passes from New York to Albany, to attend the higher courts, and Poughkeepsie is his stopping place for rest and social chat. We young lawyers delight to meet him at Hendrickson's tavern, and there breathe together the atmosphere of wit and satire. Not long since, he passed by: we gathered round him, and he greeted us with his usual cordiality.—But there was something altered in his wit—it was solemn, yet more affectionate. At length, to break the spell, I ventured, as erst, a story, the edge of which was ridiculo against Christians and their creed.—As I finished the anecdote, instead of the loud laugh, and responsive tale, the General gravely asked me, if I knew what I had been talking of? Confusion is the best name I can give my feelings and behavior before the great man at such a question from his lips. Seeing my embarrassment, he said he did not design to give me pain, but by his question, to call my attention to his own case.

"'Not many months ago,' said he, 'I was, as you are, doubtful of the truths of Christianity; but some circumstances turned my thoughts to the investigation of the subject, and I now think differently. I had been in company with some friends of a similar sentiment in New York. I had indulged in remarks much to the disadvantage of Christians, and disparagement of their religion. I had gone farther than ever before I had done in this way. Coming home, I stood, late at night, on the door steps waiting for my servant. In this moment of stillness, my thoughts returned to what had just passed at my friend's, and on what I had said there. And what if the Christian religion be true, after all? The thought certainly was natural, and it produced in my bosom the most alarming feelings. I was conscious that I had never examined it—not even with that attention which a small retaining fee requires in civil cases. In this, I hold myself bound to make up my mind according to the laws of evidence; and shall nothing be done of this sort, is a question that involves the fate of man's immortal being? Where every thing is at stake, shall I bargain all without inquiry? Wilfully blinding my own eyes, shall I laugh at that, which, if true, will laugh me to scorn in the day of judgment? These questions did not allow me to sleep quietly. In the morning I sent to my friends, the clergy, for such books as treated on the evidence of Christianity—I read them, and the result is, I believe the religion of Christians to be the truth—that Jesus Christ is the Son of God—that he made an atonement for our sins by his death, and that he rose for our justification."

"This is the substance of General Hamilton's declaration to me at Hendrickson's, and you may judge how I feel since. As I have followed the General in many other respects, so would I imitate him here."

"Will you lend me books, that I may read as he did, before I give my opinion?"

The books were accordingly taken to his house, but he never read them. A press of business intervened. He put off his duty to a more convenient season; that season never came until it was too late.—A sudden disease deprived him of reason and of life. This talented and interesting young lawyer passed from a temporal to an eternal state,—and let the word of God tell the rest.

The story of General Hamilton, which this talented person was the means of communicating to the writer, ought not to be forgotten. It was, from the time the writer heard of it, of the deepest interest; and when the tidings came of the General's death, it formed the basis of a sermon preached in Poughkeepsie, on the second day of July, 1804. This story is recorded here, because it forms a part of the writer's reminiscences.—Western Episcopal Observer.

From the Ohio Observer.

A SHORT CHAPTER ON PROFANE SWEARING.

ITS ORIGIN.—It has its origin in the consciousness of being liable to the suspicion of falsehood: for why should one swear to the truth of his own declaration, unless he is apprehensive that they will not be believed upon his simple assertion? Influence. It is most used by those who have most need of some such means to prop up their credit for veracity.

ITS PROGRESS.—It begins with simple asseverations such as "upon my word," "as true as I live," etc.: next come appeals to God's omniscience for what is assented: then in imprecations of God's vengeance upon the soul, if the thing is not as it is affirmed to be. This is the climax of profaneness; and the man that had learned to call upon God to damn his own soul, will not be slow to invoke the same damnation upon the souls of his fellow men: and his throat will become indeed "an open sepulchre," sending forth a continuous stench from the putrefaction within.

ITS CHARACTER.—1. As it respects God. It is a direct insult to his awful majesty, and will be punished as such. "The Lord will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain."

But, inasmuch as some persons of weak understanding take up this vicious practice from the example of others, under the idea that there is something in it manlike and dignified, it is necessary to show briefly its character.

2. As it respects men. This we shall do in a two-fold form negatively and positively.

Negatively: It does not require talents: any one who has barely sense enough to understand the use of language can swear. It does not require education; the man who can neither read nor write can swear. It does not require refinement nor good breeding: the most vulgar and ill-bred can swear. It does not require the possession of virtue and morality: the drunkard, the thief, the highway robber, the counterfeiter, the prostitute can swear. Inference. When we hear a man swear, we may not infer from this act that he is possessed of either talents, or education, or good breeding, or morality. But,

Positively: It indicates a want of confidence in one's own reputation for veracity. He whose character for truth is established, is contented with a simple affirmation. It is only the cracked jar that needs a string to hold it together; so it is only the man of broken credit whose assertions need the support of an oath. As a general rule, the frequency with which men resort to oaths and asseverations is inversely as their veracity. It is rude and ill-bred. Nothing can be a more certain indication of rudeness than wantonly to outrage the feelings of others. The profane man is perpetually offending the ears of the most virtuous and estimable portion of the community. He neither does not know what good manners are, or he knowingly violates them.—In either case, he wants the essential characteristics of a well-bred gentleman. [illegible] the swearer may reply, "I carefully restrain myself in the presence of the moral and religious." We add, then, that profaneness is the badge of low, vicious companionship. The swearer is at home only among those who have no regard for religion. When thrown into the society of the pious and the good, he feels that a disagreeable restraint is laid upon him. Inference. When we hear a man swear, not only may we not infer from this act that he is possessed of talents, or education, or good breeding, or morality; but the presumption is, that he is both a liar, and an ill-bred man, and a keeper of vicious company. The most charitable supposition in his case is, that he has been led, through weakness of mind, into the imitation of this vicious practice, under the mistaken idea of its being something dignified and manlike.

MOCKERY OF CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS.—Suppose you are witness of the falling of a bank of earth by which several persons are overwhelmed, and there is scarce a doubt they have perished. Yet they may be alive, and you hasten to rescue them. Animated with the deepest compassion, you give every power to the work. Your hands soon bleed as they are bruised by every [illegible] and your soul is filled with the agony of anxiety.

Beside you is a man who gives you not the slightest aid. He looks quietly on as you pant and suffer in your toil. He knows that several human beings are within a few feet of him in the agonies of [illegible] not seem to move him. And the agonies of your exertions as the sweat rolls from your brow, and the blood drops from your hands, seem in no degree to interest him. You are hurt at this indifference. The intensity of your own pity for the perishing makes the hardness of this man's heart the more revolting. You can not but feel that his indifference is mockery of the sympathy of your bleeding heart.

But a guilty world is perishing, and agonizing efforts have been put forth to save. The great agent in the rescue is the Lord Jesus Christ. Who has not known what he has suffered in the garden and on the cross in the work of mercy? But in a fair view of the cross of Christ, and well knowing the agonies of the dying Lamb, what multitudes refuse utterly all cooperation in the work. They see the world afflicted by sin; they see the glorious Redeemer and his friends seeking to save the lost. But they stand by in indifference.—The blood of Christ may be shed. His dying agonies be known. The tears, the prayers of the righteous may be witnessed. Yet that indifference remains.—There is no melting of the frozen heart.

Now what is this but utter mockery of the sufferings of Christ. Indifference to the tears, and groans, the blood, the death of the Son of God, is provoking ill-treatment of them. It is virtually to say they were unnecessary, and it was folly in him to become such a sufferer in such a cause.

Reader, if there was a sufficient cause for the Savior's sufferings, that cause is a most powerful appeal to you. And those sufferings themselves have a voice that must go down with melting power into your soul, or you stand convicted of a [illegible]ness of mind, and hardness of heart that is eminently alarming.—Recorder.

Children's Department.

From the New York Evangelist.

A NARRATIVE FOR THE YOUNG.

When the frame bending under the weight of years, yields to disease, and sinks into the grave, it is an event which was expected. We feel that nature has had her course, and the only wonder is,

—"That a harp of thousand strings,
Should keep in tune so long."

When the infant, the most helpless of creatures, first opens its eyes to the light, the vital spark is easily extinguished. The flower is so frequently nipped in the bud that no human being can possibly predict the issue. The fondest hopes are so often blasted, that at times, deep anxiety agitates the parents' heart. The little one closes its eyes in death. A breach is made in its own family. It is not missed in the community.

Behold another scene. A youth, buoyant in spirits, of fine health and unimpaired constitution, past the period of helpless infancy, and the dangers of childhood, has just come to an age which promises fair for long life; but death has marked the victim for his own. A slight pain is felt. It gives no alarm, for it is the lot of mortals. It becomes more intense. The symptoms assume a formidable appearance and the skill of the physician is baffled. The disease steadily progresses. Neither affectionate parents, nor brothers, nor sisters; neither piety, nor usefulness can stay its course, or bribe the King of Terrors.—He pursues his victim till the appointed moment, then seizes his prey. The form which but yesterday walked erect in all the vigor of youth, is now a lifeless corpse. How great, how sudden the change! It is right; for God has done it. And he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind.

Clarissa Diana Torrey, daughter of Joseph and Mary Torrey, was born in Williamstown, Mass., September 19th, 1827.—Being a child of the covenant, she was publicly dedicated to God in Christian baptism, in January, 1828. Her dispositon [illegible] she was the subject of serious [illegible] and manifested a sensible [illegible] Decision [illegible] in her nature [illegible] place in January, 1841. Christ was [illegible] Her conversion [illegible] and [illegible] a sin[illegible] committed herself to him who came to seek and save the lost. Calm peace, and a joyful hope of pardon through the blood of Jesus Christ, filled her soul. She ever after gave a pleasing evidence of her love of the Savior. She was regular in her private devotions, took great delight in the word of God, in the society of Christians, and in social and public worship. She exhibited her hope [illegible] which on suitable occasions she gave to them, and by her fervent prayers in their behalf. The Lord was fast preparing her for a better world. He whose ways are inscrutable had determined to remove this lovely plant to a more congenial clime.

In August of the same year, this young disciple was taken ill. Her sickness continued less than a week, when death released her from [illegible]. It was a week of [illegible] Her pains were severe, [illegible] Christian [illegible] She [illegible] praying [illegible] her father to [illegible] she [illegible] "[illegible] of life." He [illegible] and renewedly [illegible] the Redeemer. She next requested her [illegible] to come to her bedside that she might speak to each of them, and bid them an affectionate farewell. Her aged parents approached, and gave her a parting kiss, which she returned. Then came her brothers and sisters. She spoke a word to each, and bade them adieu. This being done, she said to all present, "Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves." Again she broke forth in fervent prayer for her friends. When she prayed for such of them as were [illegible] her feelings seemed too strong for expression. [illegible] to be there was a privilege.

"By [illegible]"

Others followed in prayer. Then [illegible] A little while after, she remarked, "this world is not my home; but now I am going home." The last few hours exhibited a scene of triumph which language cannot describe. She gave vent to her feelings in ejaculations like the following: "O, sweet Jesus, my heaven, my home, my all!" "Glory! glory! glory!" "Hallelujah!" [illegible] "Come Lord Jesus! O come quickly!" She [illegible]

[illegible]

Thus, by the grace of God, closed the earthly course of this young [illegible] of Christ, in the fourteenth year of her age. Her [illegible] was [illegible] till [illegible] sank under the power of disease, and she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!

[illegible]

Beloved youth, while you read this narrative, and reflect on the certainty of death, does not the desire force itself upon you too, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Like her, then, "Remember your Creator in the days of your youth." "Seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near." God's promises are all yea and amen. "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me." As you desire eternal life, defer not the great work of making your peace with God till to-morrow. "To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart." Ere long the scene will be changed. The day of grace has an end. The mercy of God is limited. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." Even the divine patience may be exhausted. Prov. i. 24—31. "Because I have called and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded; But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me; For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord; They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof; Therefore, shall they eat the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices." "NOW IS THE ACCEPTED TIME, AND THE DAY OF SALVATION."

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter. December 8, 1841.

Fixedness of Purpose.

A fixedness of purpose in any laudable enterprize, is of the utmost importance in the formation of character. Indecision of character betrays a want of the due exercise of the reasoning faculties which is highly reprehensible. In the acts of the christian, a firm and unwavering purpose, founded and based upon the immutable principles of the religion he professes, is the surest token of the sincerity of his profession. But when we see a christian vascillating—first on one side of a question, and then the opposite, in matters which pertain to the welfare of Zion, there is great reason to question the sincerity of his pretensions. With an eye firmly fixed upon the declarative glory of God and the advancement of his cause among men, and a mind immoveably based upon the ever-enduring principles of RIGHT, the christian, above all others, should be true to his purpose for the accomplishment of the objects in view. And though storms of persecution may darken the mental horizon, still the light emanating from the approving smiles of the Savior, may dispel the gloom, and exhibit the safest entrance with the saints in glory.

It is heart-rending, it is soul-destroying to witness so much indecision of character among those who profess to be consistent christians. It mars the beauty of the gospel, and distracts the peace and welfare of the church in all its ramifications. It casts a slur of reproach upon the institutions of the church, and lessens the attractions which she would otherwise present to the inquiring and anxious sinner. It blasts the fair prospects of thousands who might otherwise have been made the willing recipients of the abundant grace of God reserved in store for them.

Indecision of character, in matters of right and wrong, is productive of the most thrilling and reckless consequences in the church of Christ. The final doom to eternal misery of immortal spirits, may be traced to the want of a fixedness of purpose in those professing godliness. An Apostle has spoken on this subject in language which ought to sink deep into the hearts of christians in this age of the world. He says, "Be ye firm, steadfast and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." "Hold fast the form of sound words," &c. How important, then, that christians, in all their intercourse with the world, and in all their acts as they regard the immutable principles of right and wrong, base their conduct in accordance with the Apostolic injunction. Things of trivial moment ought never to swerve the christian from a duty which he is conscious of owing to God and the church. Notwithstanding the performance of duty may be painful to some extent, the holy principles of religion, the peace and welfare of the church ought not to suffer for the want of decision of character.—When christians are decided to act for God, Zion will flourish in all her wide domains. Then she will not be bound down to earth by the soul-contaminating influence of man-fearing spirits—by those who dare not act out the principles of RIGHT, lest professed friends should censure. Then the church will come forth 'clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners.'

Daily Mail.

We are highly gratified to learn that our enterprizing citizens are once more determined on making a vigorous effort to secure a daily mail from the North. This is as it should be. They have petitioned long and loud on this subject heretofore; but, from some cause best known to the head of the Department at Washington, their reasonable requests have not been granted. While the consequence has been deleterious, throughout the whole arrangement for months past, to every department of active business in our village, it has been doubly so to us.—With a paper, whose weekly circulation extends to thousands of readers, situated in most of the States and Territories in the Union, and whose very existence is dependent, more or less, on the earliest possible reception and transmission of the "News of the Day" to those readers, we have a double anxiety in the matter. And while we have suffered to no inconsiderable amount in consequence of the mail arrangements on this route, we have ever thought that the necessary arrangements might be made in due process of time to secure a daily mail, and that the Hon. Postmaster General, C. A. WICKLIFFE, would sanction such an arrangement.

Selfishness.

"Cold as the grave must be the heart
That pity never moves."

Man is a selfish being, whether viewed in the capacity of a Christian or a worldling. It ought not to be so with the Christian. The strongest inducements possible are urged in the scriptures against a spirit of selfishness. The will of the creature ought ever to be swallowed up in the will of the Creator. How often has our heart been pained, and torn with anguish indescribable, to witness the selfishness of Christians! Every thing must bend to the will of self, or contention succeeds contention in all its demoralizing features.—Reason, with all her powers of persuasion, may strive long and loud, and so long as selfishness predominates in the hearts of Christians, little indeed may be effected in the cause of Christ and the Church. When the spirit of God has done its work in the heart, selfishness will hide its head, nor dare intrude itself upon the sacred thoughts of the devout Christian, thwarting the purposes of grace, and bringing an incurable stain upon the fair fame of the Church.

Not only is the Christian oftentimes possessed of a selfish and ungovernable spirit, but so also is the worldling—he who never drank from those living streams which make glad the city of God.

The sinner is selfish to all intents and purposes, or he would at once be captivated with the promises so kindly proffered in the Gospel of becoming "heirs with God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ" in glory. He is blinded by his own selfish notions, and vainly supposes that if, perchance, there should prove to be more truth than poetry in the principles of religion, some future time will be equally available in securing the blessings of the gospel. Such a course betrays the selfishness of the heart to an alarming extent. While God urges the impenitent soul to repent now, and reason and conscience cast their influence in the same scale; the selfish mortal ever blind to his own best interests, boldly interdicts the purposes of the gospel, and rushes on in his wonted career, reckless of consequences which must ultimately engulph him in woe interminable.

Who, then, with a pleasing anticipation strong in view of meeting with the blest spirits of just men made perfect in the paradise of God, would not scorn to be possessed of a selfish disposition? How beautiful then would be the reflection, that our selfish hearts are subdued in the will of God, and our purposes are made to harmonize with His purposes! The light of the gospel would soon cast its radiant beams around the darksome pathway of the impenitent soul who would thus dethrone the idol "Selfishness," and rear in its stead, the feelings of filial submission to Heaven's high behest. Let this be done, and the knowledge of the Lord would soon fill the whole earth with praise, and righteousness would be as the mighty deep.

Thanksgiving.

Let us all attend and unite in giving thanks. Services, Thursday the 9th at 11 o'clock, A. M., at the Presbyterian Church. Sermon by the Rev. J. B. PIXLEY. "O come! let us give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever."

Congress.

This body convened on Monday, and doubtless the President's Message was delivered on Tuesday. Great anxiety will probably be felt throughout the union to see what measures he will recommend in regard to a Fiscal Agency. We shall doubtless anticipate our usual publication day next week for the purpose of laying the document before our readers at the earliest possible date.

N. Y. Evangelist and the Sabbath again.

We had occasion some two weeks since to advert to the favorable views of the Editor of the Evangelist in regard to the importance of the Sabbatic institution, to the church and the world. Since then we have been very agreeably surprised to discover that the Editor holds forth arguments peculiarly adapted to our own views upon the authenticity and perpetuity of the Sabbath of the Decalogue. We invite the attention of the reader to his article on our first page.

Mr. Cooper and his Libel Suits.

We published last week an account of the case of J. Fennimore Cooper vs. Thurlow Weed, et al, for libel, which resulted in a verdict of $400, against Mr. Weed. It appears from a letter from Mr. Cooper, that he recognized a departure from facts in some remarks made on the result by the Editors of the Evening Journal and New-York Tribune, for which he has ordered legal proceedings to be commenced against them again for libel. Truly, Editors are reminded to look well to their remarks when speaking of Literary characters.

For the Register.

Scientific Lectures.

I have been very much interested with the Scientific Lectures delivered in De Ruyter Institute for some time past; and especially so, with the Lecture on Voltaic Electricity or Galvanism, on Monday evening of this week, by Mr. Badger. The Lecturer evinced a spirit of deep research, and succeeded in agreeably entertaining an attentive audience. The Lecture was accompanied with experiments from the Galvanic Battery, or "Voltaic Pile," which was intimated consisted of one hundred Plates of Copper & Zinc interchanged alternately throughout the series. From this arrangement, the whole having been immersed in a saline solution, a vivid light and intense heat are evolved, superior to the most well heated Furnace, or perhaps equal to the flash of Lightning witnessed in the skies.

Mr. Langworthy also is to give another Lecture on Electricity, accompanied with experiments from the Electrometer, on Wednesday evening of this week, which will no doubt possess much merit and give the scientific mind an agreeable entertainment. Citizens' attend these Lectures. They are free to all.

A CITIZEN.

De Ruyter, Tuesday morning, Dec. 7.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW-MARKET, N. J., Nov. 23, 1841.

BR. BAILEY—Being assured that the prosperity of Zion is rejoicing to all the lovers of our Lord Jesus Christ, and as I am to write you a letter, I deem it expedient to inform the churches through the medium of your paper, what the Lord has been and is still doing for the churches in New-Jersey. During the summer past our church has been in a very pleasant state, as far as we could expect when there were no apparent conversions. Good attendance at meeting, our congregation has gradually increased in size, and in interest, and our Sabbath school has been attended, we have reason to believe, with lasting benefit, both to the aged and the young, and was the means of inducing these to attend meetings who had not been in the habit of so doing.

On the 15th of October, our yearly meeting commenced, which embraces the churches in this state. Br. Estee and Clawson, from the lower churches, were with us.—For weeks this meeting had been a subject of prayer in our social meetings, that God would meet with us and revive his work.—At evening we were encouraged upon the arrival of Br. N. V. Hull, from Clarence, N. Y. On Sabbath morning Br. W. B. Maxson, from Brookfield, arrived, which was truly heart-cheering to many, who consider him to be their spiritual father, having been the laborer and devoted Pastor of this church for eight years, and was permitted to see this church rise under his labors to occupy an eminent station in the world.

The brethren appeared to have come to us with the Spirit of their Master, they preached the truth with plainness, apparently coming to the circumstances of those with whom they had to do. Our house, though large, was thronged with attentive hearers of the word. On the second day of the week, Br. Estee was obliged to leave us and return to his own people, and on fourth day Br. Maxson left us and went to Philadelphia, and Shiloh, (West Jersey.) Br. Hull and Clawson stayed through the week. A number found peace in believing, and some who had previously cherished a hope, gained confidence to come out and confess Christ before men.

At the close of our meeting here, Br. Hull went to West Jersey where Br. Maxson had commenced a meeting, and soon after Br. Hull's arrival at Shiloh, Br. Maxson returned to this place, spent one Sabbath and started for home. Last week Br. Hull returned and preached three days and evenings in Plainfield. There is, we trust, a good degree of interest in that Church, and could the meeting have been continued longer, much good doubtless would have been the result. Since the close of our meeting I have baptized seven, three of whom were heads of families, and we are in hopes that we shall shortly have the privilege of attending to this interesting ordinance, again, for a number are lingering around the skirts of Zion, who ought to be gathered in. Br. Crandall has baptized one, and doubtless will more very soon. Br. Hull started from home yesterday. The meeting at Shiloh resulted in much good. At the last intelligence ten had been baptized at Shiloh, and some in Salem by Br. Clawson. I feel truly thankful to my ministering brethren for the assistance that they have rendered me, and I trust that they have the most devout gratitude of my brethren in general, hoping that God may always use them for his praise and glory as here with us. As ministers, much depends upon the course we pursue. Brethren, let us especially who are pastors of Churches, help one another, for I am confident that in so doing much can be effected.

I hope to hear often through your paper of revivals of religion, for I trust that all my brethren feel that the salvation of souls ought to engross our whole attention. For this, let us earnestly and devoutly pray.

W. B. GILLETT.

News of the Day.

From the N. Y. Express.

DEPARTURE OF THE MENDIAN AFRICANS.

The thirty-five surviving Africans of the Amistad, accompanied by the Rev. Messrs. Steele and Raymond, and Mrs. Raymond, missionaries to Africa, and by Mr. Wilson and wife, teachers, embarked last Wednesday morning in the bark Gentleman, Capt. Morris, bound to Sierra Leone, and were towed down the harbor by a steamer.

A farewell meeting of the Africans and the Missionaries who are to accompany them to their native country was held at the Broadway Tabernacle last Sabbath evening.

Mr. A. F. Williams one of the Committee who had the supervision of the Mendians during their residence of eight months at Farmington, Ct., gave in brief terms, their history. The exercises of the meeting were of a highly interesting character. Addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Joselyn, Andrews, Wright and Morell, and by Mr. W. Anderson, Esq. Solicitor General for the Island of Jamaica. Remarks were also made by Cinque, the chief of the Africans, which were very appropriate and touching. The following letter from Cinque, to Ex-President Adams, accompanied by a Bible presented to him by the Africans, with Mr. A's reply was read at the meeting.

To the Hon. John Quincy Adams:

Most Respected Sir,—The Mendi people give you thanks for all your kindness to them. They will never forget your defense of their rights before the great Court at Washington. They feel that they owe to you in a large measure, their delivery from the Spaniards, and from slavery or death. They will pray for you as long as you live, Mr. Adams. May God bless and reward you.

We are about to go home to Africa. We go to Sierra Leone first, and then we reach Mendi very quick. When we get to Mendi we shall tell the people of your great kindness. Good missionary will go with us. We will take the Bible with us. It has been a precious book in prison, and we love to read it now we are free. Mr. Adams, we want to make you a present of a beautiful Bible. Will you please to accept it, and when you look at it or read it, remember your poor and grateful clients.—We read in this holy book, "If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, when men rose up against us, then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled up against us. Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us a prey to their teeth. Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler—the snare is broken and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of the Lord who made Heaven and Earth." For the Mendi people,

CINQUE,
KINNA,
Boston, Nov. 6, 1841. KALE.

To the Mendian Africans, Cinque, Kinna, Kale, and thirty-two others, about to return to their native land:—

BOSTON, 19th Nov., 1841.

My Friends,—I have received the elegant Bible which you have presented to me through your true and faithful friend, Mr. Lewis Tappan. I accept it, and shall keep it as a kind remembrancer from you, to the end of my life. It was from that book that I learned to espouse your cause when you were in trouble, and to give thanks to God for your deliverance.

I am glad to learn that you have the prospect of returning safe and free to your native country; and I hope and pray that you may pass the remainder of your lives in peace and comfort there. Remember with kindness those persons who befriended you in your captivity here, and who now furnish you with the means of returning home, and tell your countrymen of the blessings of the book which you have given to me. May the Almighty Power who has preserved and sustained you hitherto, still go with you, and turn to your good and to that of your country, all that you have suffered, and all that may hereafter befall you. From your friend,

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

New Style of Duelling.—In one of our hotels, a few evenings ago, two gentlemen chanced to quarrel upon a subject most interesting to themselves, but of no interest to the public. The ice broken, words followed words rapidly, increasing in burning intensity, until the feelings of both were wound up to the duelling pitch. In the mean time, their high words and wrangling had brought about them some fifty or sixty spectators. A ring was formed, and the combatants continued threatening death and destruction to each other for some minutes, when one of them who had a fine Roman nose, black eyes, and flowing hair, cried out, "bring pistols, bring pistols, bring pistols." A bye stander added, "and coffee for two, and coffee for two, and coffee for two," in the same strain of voice. The mirth of the crowd was excited at this sally; and for a moment nothing could be heard but laughter, coughing, and hurrahing.

Pistols were brought, and two large mugs of coffee. The factious bearer made his way into the ring with these interesting weapons. The combatant with the long nose, seized one of the pistols. His opponent, with a short pug nose, seized the other, cocked it, and fired it. The flash in the pan made the crowd draw back, and the Hebe who had the coffee, let fall both cups, one of which was overturned, with its hot contents, into the bosom of a lady, while the other fell into his own. In this scene of confusion the long nosed combatant fired his pistol, and it too, flashed in the pan. Here another drawback of the bye standers enabled a short thick set gentleman to make his way into the ring. He knew the two combatants, and catching them, took both by the nape of the necks, and with a herculean effort, brought the face of the long nosed hero into direct contact with the face of his short nosed opponent. The concussion made the room tremble, and blood flowed in streams, to the great delight of those in the crowd, who, like dogs, love to lap the claret [illegible] while the duelists [illegible] with all their might at the pain caused by this novel mode of settling a dispute. [illegible]

Winter Route [illegible]

[illegible]

Ebenezer [illegible], Conway, N. H.
Eben P. [illegible], Mass.
Reuben Kemp, Sterling, Conn.
Capt. Josiah Cleveland, Oswego, N. Y.
Sylvanus Court, Mansfield, Vt.
Capt. Jerome Clark, Cherry Valley, N. Y.—Total, 17.

A Large Cargo.—The New Orleans Advertiser says that [illegible] by Ezra Weston of Duxbury, Mass., cleared on the 13th inst. for [illegible], with 3115 bales of cotton on board. [illegible] The total weight of the cargo is 1,2[illegible] pounds, and the burthen of the Hope is 989 tons.

Price of Pork in Chillicothe.—The Chillicothe Advertiser of the 12th says, "a few engagements have been made by the packers of this place for heavy pork, at $2 per 100 lbs. net, and we understand they are unwilling to make any large contracts at present, even at that price. It is most probable that the farmers will put up their own pork to a considerable extent during the present season."

The Half-reasoning Animal—by Water and by Fire!—The sagacity of the Mammoth Elephant, (who is attached to the Menagerie and Circus,) has displayed itself during his late visit to Richmond and Petersburg. Whilst the cavalcade was crossing the bridge over the James River, the Elephant quietly placed his foot upon its floor, but not satisfied with the shaking of the timbers, he withdrew from it, and immediately descended to the river, for the purpose of swimming across. On a sign, however, from his rider, he stopped—took him up with his proboscis, placed him on his neck, and then swam across the river. At Petersburg, he was chained with one leg to a post, in Powell's stable, which was consumed by fire. As soon as the flames began to spread, the animal, finding his quarters most uncomfortable, exerted his most enormous strength, pulled up the post which had been rammed down in very hard ground, released himself from "durance vile," walked out of the stable to a respectful distance, and then quietly turned round to witness the progress of the conflagration.—Richmond Enquirer.

An Elder in Trouble.—The Providence Journal contains an account of a scene in which the Rev. Mr. Knapp, a preacher of considerable notoriety, and the High Sheriff of the County, were the principal actors. Mr. Knapp, it appears, in the course of one of his sermons, took occasion to make some severe remarks against the Universalists; and in reply to a question which he made, a lady rose and answered.

At subsequent meetings he made some remarks derogatory to the character of the lady and her whole family, the particulars of which are not stated, the consequence was an action for slander, the damages being laid at $5,000. The writ was put in the hands of the Sheriff, who went to the church, where Mr. Knapp was holding forth, and took a seat with the intention of serving the writ after the close of the services.

The fact, however becoming generally known, [illegible]

[illegible]

Post Office De[illegible]

[illegible] Nov. 1, 1841.

[illegible]

If you become satisfied that any post office is not of public necessity [illegible] report that fact and the reasons for the [illegible]

[illegible] you the importance and high [illegible] of your stations. It is to you the Postmaster General must look for [illegible] information upon all subjects pertaining to the out-door operations of the Department. Give me your efficient aid, and I do not despair of making the Post Office Department eminently useful and popular.

Very respectfully, your ob't serv't,

C. A. WICKLIFFE.

Removal of a City.—The St. Louis Republican of the 19th inst. says: "The buildings in Marion city, on the Mississippi river, the same town in which so many Eastern purchasers got their fingers burned a few years since, are being removed to Hannibal, a town some 12 miles below, on the bank of the river. Lots which sold at from two to six and eight hundred dollars, and frame houses which cost from eight to fifteen hundred dollars, can now be bought at less than a hundred, lot and building included.

Death of Gov. Buchanan.—The Gloucester Mass. Telegraph says: "We learn by a letter received in town last evening, that His Excellency Thomas Buchanan, Governor of Liberia, died at Bassa, Sept. 3d, very much lamented."

"The Belle Poule with the Prince de Joinville, left our harbor yesterday morning about 9 o'clock, for her own "sunny France." A few minutes after she had left her moorings, she fired a salute of some twenty guns, which was returned in fine style by the North Carolina with the tri-color flying.—N. Y. Tribune.

From the Boston Transcript.

O. K. not O. K.—A singular mistake occurred in this city on Thursday last, which goes to prove that we should not always trust to outward appearances. The ship Saracen, Capt. Oliver Keating, sailed from this port that day for Manilla and Canton. When the ship was ready to start, the Captain sent a cartman to the Pearl Street House, where he had been boarding, for his baggage.

The cartman accordingly went to Capt. K.'s room and took his things, which were all packed up, and in coming out of the room he saw in the entry, near the door, two boxes marked O. K., the initials of the Captain's name, (Oliver Keating,) and supposing they belonged to him, and that it was Oll Korrect, he took the boxes, carried them down and put them on board the ship with the Captain's baggage, and the vessel immediately afterwards went to sea.—An hour or two after she had sailed, it was discovered that the boxes did not belong to the Captain, but to another gentleman who was stopping at the Pearl Street House, and that they contained a complete set of Daguerreotype apparatus which the owner was about to put into operation in this city. It was, however, too late to correct the mistake, and the boxes, Daguerreotype apparatus and al, are now on their way to Manilla.

From the Buffalo Com. Advertiser.

Awful Accident.—We learn that a boat with three men went over the Falls of Niagara, on the night of Monday last! They had started from Schlosser, at 9 o'clock, intending to cross over to Hudson's tavern, two miles above Chippeway. Shortly after they had left the shore, cries from the river were heard at Field's tavern, near by, but excited no attention, as similar noises are very common in that quarter from boatmen passing to and fro. No suspicion of the accident was had until Thursday, when enquiry began to arise, and on Friday, awful evidence of the fate of the boat and her devoted crew, were presented in the fragments found in the eddy below the Falls.

It is supposed that the boat was struck by a squall, and being heavily loaded with six barrels of whiskey, sunk—the wretched men on board being swept by the resistless current down the American rapids and over the frightful precipice below! The names of the two were Jehiel D. Kinney, and John York, and the other was a stranger, who had merely taken passage for Canada. The former were from Nova Scotia—Kinney had kept tavern eight miles below the Falls for two years past, and left a wife and three children. Part of one of the mangled bodies is said to have been found yesterday.

A Pillar of Fire.—At Cossier the following natural phenomenon is described. The residence was a stone's throw from the sea: Conceive my astonishment and surprise on repairing thither to gaze on the exquisite beauty of the waves, and to watch the sun, which was just emerging from the bosom of the water, to see the latter instead of rising in its usual circular form, assume that of a pillar of fire! I positively doubted the evidence of my senses, and I should scarcely hope to be believed, but that I find the ancients and Agatharchides in particular, have mentioned the same phenomenon, on these coasts, where they observe, 'the sun rises like a pillar of fire.' Lord Valentia also noticed a similar appearance at Mocha, where he saw it set in like manner. We subsequently saw it assume an elongated, but never again so completely columnar a figure. We could not but think of the pillar of fire which for forty years gave light to the Israelites in the wilderness. The color of the Red Sea here was of the most exquisite blue imaginable, far exceeding in beauty the boasted blue of the Mediterranean. The breakers had a peculiar vivid and lively whiteness, which by contrast, added greatly to the beauty of the azure main; but though I could have gazed for hours, it was too dazzling to permit me to do so with impunity. —Mrs. Elwood's Travels in Egypt.

What a Bad Woman can do.—Our readers will doubtless remember the performances of a woman calling herself Mrs. Jones, at Rochester, a few months ago.—She represented herself as a rich English widow, was married by a respectable young man by the name of Hunter, and after inducing him to purchase a large amount of costly furniture on the strength of her supposed wealth suddenly decamped with all the money she could obtain from Hunter, and leaving him to pay the debts she had contracted at the hotel and with the shopkeepers. We learn from a late number of the Rochester Post that she had been practising similar impositions in Toronto. She there represented herself as head cook in the late Sir Astley Cooper's establishment who she said had left her annuity of £100. This soon increased to £300 and a man named Lanesboro' believed her story and married her.

After having deceived her husband by stories about £100,000 being left her, and that Lord Liverpool had sent over his steward to bring her home; after having got a number of others to credit her story and trust her with money; having prepared her husband with the necessaries to go to London, to attend to her business; and having gulled every body she decamped quietly one morning just the day before her husband was to have started for England. She is supposed to have carried off about £300.

A Drunkard's Fate.—One night last week the train on the Baltimore rail-road run over a drunken man who lay across the track, below Wilmington, and cut off his leg. His struggles in this deplorable and helpless condition, only served to place his body directly across the track, in which situation he lay when the Philadelphia train came along, the same night, and nearly severed his body. Another awful answer to the enquiry of scripture—"Who hath wounds without cause."

A Meteor.—Last night, about a quarter to 12, many of our citizens were startled from their slumbers by what appeared to be a sharp flash of lightning, followed by a rattling and prolonged peal of heavy thunder. The afternoon had been snowy, and when we retired for the night, a sharp sleet was falling and the weather was growing cold; circumstances, we thought, not very favorable to thunder and lightning. This morning we learned that the occurrence which so much excited our surprise, was the rapid flight and bursting of a very large and brilliant meteor. We have not been able to learn its direction. The hour and the night were such as to render it unlikely that any of our citizens, capable of making exact observation of the phenomenon, were up; but from the size and brilliancy of the meteor, it must have been seen in other places, and we hope, under circumstances favorable to a more full account.—Buff. Com. Adv.

A Lost Man.—The Sandusky Clarion of Saturday gives an account of the mysterious disappearance of William H. Hunter, formerly a member of Congress from that district. He was engaged in hunting, on the peninsula in Danbury township, Ottowa County. Late in the afternoon of Thursday, Nov. 4th, he separated from two of his associates, in the pursuit of game; since which time he has not been heard from.—There was no uneasiness about him at the time, as he intimated an intention of seeking different quarters for the night, from those he had occupied the previous night; but his continued absence excited some serious apprehensions that some calamity had befallen him, and large bodies of men from both sides of the bay have been several days engaged in hunting for him; but thus far, without the least success.—Ohio State Journal.

Death Come in Mercy.—In our report on Saturday, in speaking a prisoner named John Phillips, it became necessary for us to refer to the fact, that he had been complained against for leaving his wife in utter destitution. She died on Saturday, and there was not to be found in the miserable room where she breathed her last, even a decent sheet to lay her out in, or a cap to put on her head. Her disease was consumption aggravated by the conduct of Phillips. Phillips is a smart good looking fellow, and will no doubt still find some woman fool enough to marry him, notwithstanding his treatment of the deceased.—Boston Post.

A curious affair, for these times, is mentioned by the Columbus (Geo.) Argus.—During the recent session of the Supreme Court at Columbus, the grand jury found a true bill against Rhodam A. Greene, President of the Western Bank of Georgia, for a high misdemeanor. The charge is founded on the refusal of the bank to pay specie. It seems that there is a provision of the charter of that bank, which declares that the bank shall not at any time refuse to pay specie, and that upon such a refusal the charter shall be forfeited. There is also a section of the Penal Code, which provides, that if any bank officer shall violate any provision of the charter, he shall be indicted for a high misdemeanor.

Robbery and Marriage at Dayton, O.—James Norvell's store in Dayton, was entered on Sunday last, and robbed of Jewelry to a considerable amount. Mr. N. had been in the practice of sleeping in his store, but on that evening having been married, changed his lodgings. This will be an argument for bachelors.—Cin. Gaz.

Mr. Stevenson.—The Madisonian, in noticing the report that Mr. Stevenson had expressed his conviction that war between England and the United States was highly probable, says: "We have good reason to believe that no such opinion has been expressed by Mr. Stevenson,—on the contrary it is understood that he has represented the British Government and people as disposed for peace with our country, and that there was nothing in the present relations of the two countries which might not be adjusted by negotiation."

Governors.—The following is a complete list of the Governors of the several States and Territories, including the results of the recent elections. Just half of the Governors of the States are Whigs. Their names are in italics.—Jour. of Com.

States.	Governors.
Maine,	John Fairfield.
New Hampshire,	John Page.
Vermont,	Charles Paine.
Massachusetts,	John Davis.
Rhode Island,	Samuel W. King.
Connecticut,	Wm. W. Ellsworth.
New York,	Wm. H. Seward.
New Jersey,	Wm. Pennington.
Pennsylvania,	David R. Porter.
Delaware,	Wm. B. Cooper.
Maryland,	Francis Thomas.
Virginia,	Jno. Rutherford, acting.
North Carolina,	John M. Morehead.
South Carolina,	John P. Richardson.
Georgia,	Charles J. M'Donald.
Alabama,	Benj. Fitzpatrick.
Mississippi,	T. A. Tucker.
Louisiana,	A. B. Roman.
Arkansas,	Archibald Yell.
Tennessee,	James C. Jones.
Kentucky,	Robert B. Letcher.
Ohio,	Thomas Corwin.
Michigan,	John S. Barry.
Indiana,	Samuel Bigger.
Illinois,	Thomas Carlin.
Missouri,	Thomas Reynolds.
Florida Territory,	Richard K. Call.
Wisconsin, do	Henry Dodge.
Iowa, do	Augustus C. Dodge.

The loss of property by the late fire at Vicksburg, is estimated at $60,000.

About four thousand persons have, within a few months, become members of a temperance Society in Cincinnati.

The Galena, Ill., Advertiser, mentions the arrival of two loads of copper from the mines of Minerel Point, Wiskonsan, which it adds are destined at no distant day to be a source of large income to the Territory.

Rum and Murder.—Remine, a foreigner, in Pittsburg, lately broke his wife's leg and otherwise horribly hurt her. When inquired of, in order to secure her husband, she said she fell down. She died and the murderer fled, but has since been captured.

Onions planted in the same hill with vines, will protect them from the depredations of the striped bug. Farmers and gardeners who remember this until next year, may profit by it.

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of New Jersey, and ordered to a second reading, requiring that all the banks and companies exercising banking privileges in New Jersey, shall, on or before the fourth day of July next, resume the redemption of their notes and the payment of their debts in specie, under forfeiture of their charters.

Shipwrecks.—At a recent meeting of the British Association for the advancement of Science, a statement was read, affirming that in the course of the year 500 ships had been wrecked on the coast of the country—the anual loss of lives being 1,200, and of means £3,000,000.

Clayton, the Aeronaut.—Mr. Richard Clayton, the celebrated Aeriel Voyageur, advertised to ascend from Nashville, Tenn., in his immense Aeriel ship, the "Star of the West," on the 13th inst., on his 28th Aeriel voyage. Mr. C. stands unrivalled at the present day, as a Navigator of the Air, and the following short sketch of his adventures, taken from his advertisement in the Nashville Wing, shows a most adventurous and daring spirit. He says he "has made more daring and romantic excursions through the air than any other person. On one occasion, he travelled from Cincinnati to the Alleghany Mountains, a distance of 350 miles, in nine and a half hours. At another time he ascended from Louisville, Ky., and on the following day returned in his balloon to the city, and floated around the neighborhood for nearly two days. He has spent whole nights in the atmosphere, crossing in his course, Rivers, Lakes, and Mountains. Four times he has been obliged to make his bed on the tops of lofty trees, sleeping in his little skiff or car.

But the most perilous of all his adventures, was that which he made from Lexington Ky., when at the height of two miles, the fabric that contained the gas, burst into a thousand holes, and every atom of that fluid in an instant escaped, causing him and his vessel to be dashed downward through the air with meteor like violence, until the mass of ribbons, (the rent silk,) became pressed against the netting of the Balloon so as to form a parachute, which was the means of saving his life. The experience that he has now gained, together with the improved construction of his Balloon, enable him to perform aerial voyages with less danger."

Texas and Santa Anna.—The Houstonian thinks that Santa Anna will recognize the independence of Texas.—It says: "If the report of Santa Anna's success in Mexico should prove correct, we venture to predict that, with General Houston at the head of our Government, one year will not have elapsed before the independence of Texas shall have been unconditionally recognized by Mexico. We do not make this prediction from any confidence we have in the pledges of that perfidious man, made while a prisoner, but from the belief that he is satisfied with his former campaign to Texas, and will not be anxious to become an actor in a second drama, the exit of which would, in all human probability, be more tragical."

An old Tree.—Some workmen engaged in excavating a well, near Leicester, after cutting some depth through a bed of clay, found their progress interrupted by a hard substance which proved to be the trunk of a large tree, apparently a fir; a cart load of wood and leaves was taken out. The leaves had become amalgamated by time and pressure. It is supposed by geologists that the tree was thrown there at the general convulsion of nature, at the time of the flood.—Bangor Whig.

A Disgrace to the Age.—The Court of Newcastle county, Delaware, was in session last week. Several persons were convicted of larceny, and sentenced to receive twenty-one lashes on the bare back. One man plead guilty to three indictments, and was sentenced to receive twenty-one lashes for each indictment. But a more extraordinary sentence is that of a young girl, who plead guilty on ten indictments for larceny. She was sentenced to wear ten T's on her outer garment, and to receive twenty-one lashes on the bare back, well laid on in each case, making 210 in all. The governor, who was shocked at the idea of a young girl being stripped, tied and scored with a whip, humanely remitted the corporeal punishment.—Express.

Anecdote.—A gasconading foreigner was vaunting one day that he had travelled over the whole American continent, and been caressed every where he went, and had seen all the great men of our country.

"Have you seen the lakes?" interrogated a shrewd Yankee by-stander.

"Parblue,' says he 'I must surely have seen them, when I dined with them a dozen times."

In Sweden they deprive a man of the right to vote who gets drunk a third time.

Jewish Synagogues in the United States.—In the State of New York there are nine, Pennsylvania six, Maryland four, Virginia four, Ohio eight, North Carolina five, South Caraolina four, Alabama three, Louisiana three, Kentucky five, Tennessee one, Georgia two, Florida three, Rhode Island one,—in all fifty-nine. Belonging to the above are about forty-two thousand Jews. There are supposed to be in the United States about ten thousand more who do not belong to either of the above congregations. In 1805 there were only five Synagogues, and about four thousand five hundred Jews. —Phil. Chronicle.

Good.—A prisoner who had unexpectedly been acquitted of the charge for which he was arraigned before Judge Bowlin, the other day, upon being informed that he was at liberty to go, turned to the Jury, and with much feeling observed:

"Gentlemen of the Jury; I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the decision just rendered—you will be ever remembered in my prayers; to you, my worthy, and I must say cute friend, (addressing himself to his counsel,) I wish it was in my power to double your fee; the feeling I entertain for you cannot be expressed by words; you are, indeed, the criminal's benefactor; to you, your honor, (addressing the Judge, who could scarcely suppress a smile,) I am everlastingly indebted; but all I can say to you is, I promise you, upon my honor, now that I am free, that I will never be guilty of stealing again as long as I live."—St. Louis Bulletin.

Notices.

Madison County Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the Madison county Agricultural Society will be held at 12 o'clock M. on Monday the 27th December next, at the court-house in Morrisville.

The members, and all those who feel an interest in the promotion of agriculture, and the welfare of the country, are earnestly requested to attend.

The executive committee will meet on the same day at 11 A. M.

Nov. 15, 1841.

A. S. SLOAN, Rec. Sec'y.

☞ The papers of the county will please copy the above notice.

MARRIED,

In New York, on the evening of the 25th ult., by the Rev. Lucius Crandall, Mr. JASON B. WELLS, of De Ruyter, to Miss MARIA STILLMAN, of the former place.

In Lincklaen, on the 25th ult., by Rev. S. M. Burdick, Mr. ORRIN POOLER, of Berkshire, and Miss CLARISSA CHANDLER, of the former place.

In Frankfort, Nov. 24th, by Rev. Geo. Bridge, Mr. GEO. L. GRIGGS, of Paris, and Miss EMLY S. FULLER, of Frankfort.

In Otselic, on the 13th ult., by Rev. Mr. Howe, Mr. JAMES HOWE, of Pharsalia, and MARY ELIZA WADKINS, of the former place.

DIED,

In Truxton, 2 o'clock A. M., the 28th ult., Mrs. SALLY BARKER, wife of Mr. Laurence Barker, and daughter of Mr. Prentice Coon, aged 63.

For a long time, wearisome nights were appointed her. She trusted not in her sufferings as giving her any hope of escaping future woe, but her hope of salvation seemed to rest wholly on "The Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

Her funeral services were attended in the S. D. B. house of worship at Lincklaen, and near that house her body rests; it was in that neighborhood that she spent the days of her youth.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Andrew Babcock, P. M., Rev. S. M. Burdick, J. P. Livermore, P. M., (we will do it.) Milo Stebbins, P M., (it is done.) A. Corey, P. M., Oran Vincent, (please accept our thanks for the present until we can satisfy you for your trouble. We will see that those accounts are corrected if not so.) J. B. Wells, (the cr. you mention was for another person with the same initials; the other you mention was not paid.) Rev. Lucius Crandall, (We send the papers as requested.) Rev. W. B. Gillet, (we will do the work as cheap, and as well as you can get it done elsewhere.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS

Of Andrew Babcock, $3, cr. Winslow Newton, $2, vol. 2, John Burleson, $1, vol. 2, of John P. Livermore, $2, cr. Allen M. Wood, $1,17 self, $3.

Of Oran Vincent, $12, cr. Clark C. Green, $4.50 vol. 1 and 2, John R. Shaw, $2, vol. 2, Joseph Davis, $2,64, vol. 2, Rial Wescote, $1,64, vol. 2 John B. Collins, $2,25 vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of six per cent has been levied on the deposite notes in force in said company on the 25th day of October 1841, and that the same is requested to be paid to the Treasurer at the office of said Company in the village of Cazenovia on or before the first day of January next.

Dated at Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.

40w6 WM J. HOUGH, Treasurer.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next

G. W. SUTTON.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

NEW GOODS,

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE [illegible] per cent [illegible] STORE [illegible] N. Y. [illegible]

S. D. DILLAYE.

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster [illegible] swellings, [illegible] Liver complaints, [illegible] season it will cure the Quinsy [illegible] best remedy for diseases of the spine.

The virtues of the Plaster have been [illegible] thousands of the most respectable [illegible] states of Vermont and New York, [illegible] its efficacy. Price, 25 cents per box.

For sale by S. D. DILLAYE.

De Ruyter, Nov. 10. [illegible]

G. W. KNOWLTON

HAS [illegible] ey's Store, where he will [illegible] and Shoes of all kinds. [illegible] Ladies Kid or Morocco Slips and Shoes [illegible] and Gaiter boots of the first quality, [illegible] cheap.

N. B. Customer's leather manufactured [illegible] short notice [illegible] for good pay. Please call [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 23, 1841. 33tf

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ELMORE ANNAS & AYER.

LATE [illegible] Elmore Annas & Ayer, has moved [illegible] Stone Store of John N. Elmore [illegible] assortment of STOVES [illegible]

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers Wholesale & Retail [illegible] COUNTY or STATE. [illegible] CASH, [illegible] business.

[illegible] Furniture, [illegible] Iron Coves.

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, [illegible]

LOW PRICES

[illegible] at wholesale or retail [illegible] manufacturer in the State. [illegible] of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up [illegible]

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of West [illegible] and Cheney Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK

Done with neatness and despatch, [illegible] prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy [illegible] please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette [illegible] No. 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct 15, 1841. 31tf

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

S. G. WALKER.

HAVING [illegible] DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, [illegible] ERY, HARDWARE [illegible] GISTS [illegible]

BOOTS & SHOES,

[illegible] CHEAPER [illegible] Pe[illegible] CASH [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. [illegible]

MADISON COMMON PLEAS. [illegible]

Mary [illegible] vs. [illegible] IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of [illegible] Common Pleas of [illegible] the 28th [illegible] of November [illegible] at 12 [illegible] the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition [illegible] ted in the village of De Ruyter, [illegible] the estate of [illegible] bounded, beginning at the centre [illegible] corner of a lot [illegible] Geo. W. S[illegible] east along [illegible] lands owned by Oliver Maxson [illegible] the said Maxson's [illegible] Marcus B[illegible] line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton, [illegible] west to the east line of Lot No. 37; [illegible] about twenty-six [illegible] of the road [illegible] road to the place of beginning, reserving [illegible] from two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS, JAMES NYE, EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.

JAMES NYE, BENJAMIN ENOS, EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40w4

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.

34tf S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

NO IMPOSITION!

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVE [illegible] Goods at [illegible] BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of G. W. SUTTON'S, [illegible] inhabitants of [illegible] that they are [illegible] stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

[illegible] stock complete [illegible] extensive [illegible] themselves from [illegible] they can [illegible]

LOW PRICES,

[illegible] establishment west of the city of New-York [illegible] be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible] to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly [illegible] examine [illegible] fail to [illegible]

GEO. W. SUTTON, WM. H. QUINBY.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE [illegible] quality, [illegible] STONE STORE.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

[illegible]

Rev. I. Covert's Balm of Life
Moffat's Phenix Bitters
Moffat's Life Pills
[illegible] Pills
[illegible] Pills
[illegible]
Winslow's Balsam of Horehound
Balm of China
Parker's Pulmonary Balm
Chessman's Arabian Balsam
Hewes's Liniment
With others too numerous to mention [illegible]

[illegible] Horse [illegible] Saws [illegible] Steel Shovels, Spades, Iron Nails, [illegible] Saws for sale [illegible] STONE STORE.

October 4

MENS Coarse [illegible] Boots, [illegible] Gaiter Boots, [illegible] STONE STORE.

L. [illegible] Sampson & Sons' [illegible] Edged Tools, [illegible] Axes, Adzes and [illegible] N. ELMORE, [illegible] Manufacturers' Agent.

1 CASE Gentlemen's CLOTH CAPS, For Trade.

1 CASE [illegible] [illegible] STONE STORE

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS,

TAKE NOTICE.

T[illegible] Harnesses, [illegible] Brass [illegible] Webster [illegible] Lace, Necks [illegible] west of [illegible] excepted, [illegible] of Grain, Butter, [illegible] Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible]

J. P. RIDER

De Ruyter, Oct. [illegible] 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE.

RETURNS [illegible] that he [illegible] taken a partner [illegible] SILAS BENJAMIN, [illegible] work [illegible] warranted [illegible]

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 [illegible]

[illegible] of S. [illegible] Stone [illegible]

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 29w6

NOTICE.

THE COPARTNERSHIP heretofore existing [illegible] the firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, expires this day [illegible] All persons having unsettled accounts with said firm are requested to call and [illegible] settle.

JOHN N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
WILLIAM J. AYER.

De Ruyter, Aug. 28, 1841.

GOOD DAIRY BUTTER wanted on accounts, if delivered previous to the 15th Oct. next.

Aug. 28. E. A. & A.

JOHN N. ELMORE,

IS now receiving at the Stone Store, an extensive assortment of seasonable Goods, which have been selected with care, purchased low, and will be offered at a small advance from cost. He would take this opportunity to state, that he intends to offer at all times a stock, unequaled for variety, at prices as cheap as the cheapest.

De Ruyter, October 1, 1841.

25 Pieces BROAD Cloth, BEAVER Cloth CASSIMERE and SATINETTE, comprising a general assortment, just received at the

Oct. 4th. STONE STORE.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered in lots to suit purchasers, at prices 10 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

NOW is the time to purchase SILK, WORSTED and LINNEN Goods, just received a large stock which have been purchased and will be sold at no Tariff Prices, at the

October 4th. STONE STORE.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at ELMORE'S.

Nov. 24.

POETRY.

From the Olive Plant.

The Desert Rose.

"There was a little rose-bush, and it grew
In loneliness; no kindred bush was here,
No other flow'ret there raised its bright eye,
But all was drear, alone, save here and there
A tuft of grass, had peep'd above the soil,
To meet the light of heaven. I do not know
Why nature placed that rose-bush there; perhaps
To let the desert know how beautiful
Were some of her productions. Now there came Upon that bush, a little bud—but one,
And that was passing far methought no flower
That graced the richest garden was so fair
As that lone rose-bud. It grew and flourished,
For it drank the choicest dews of heaven,
And the sun shed its most enlivening rays,
Upon its bosom. But ere it blossomed full,
It seemed to droop. Its lovely head bent low,
And when the pearly dews of morning fell,
I thought it wept; and yet it grew and op'ed
Its bright leaves to the sun, and seemed to breathe
An offering of praise to heaven. Twas beautiful,
And 'twas alone,—in all the desert round,
No loved companion met his eye. Its sighs
Fell on the breeze unnamed—unheard,
For who in such a waste e'er sought a rose!
The desert shrubs beheld it, wondering much,
But held no sympathy with that sweet flower.
It pined alone, and soon its leaves grew pale,
Ah sooner far than roses bright are wont
To fade. It drooped, it withered, and it died,
Its scattered leaves the winds of heaven bore
To richer climes where other roses bloom.
But though it died, a rich perfume it left,
Diffusing sweetness in the air around.
O can that dreary desert e'er forget
The dying fragrance of that young, sweet rose!
I've mused much and long upon the fate
Of that lone beauteous flower. I could have wept
To see it fade in all its loveliness
So soon, and yet methought 'twas better far,
To float in freedom, on the wings of wind,
Than to remain in such a wilderness.
Hast thou ne'er known some gentle, noble mind,
That grew in wastes, more dark than nature's winds,
And pined in deserts drear, though not of sand,
Whom thou couldst liken to a desert rose!

Miscellaneous Department.

GENTILITY.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

'Didn't I see you walking up the street with a young lady yesterday, William?' said Anna Enfield to her brother, who had but a few days before returned from New York after an absence of some months.

'Perhaps you did; I was in company with a young lady in the afternoon,' replied the brother.

'Well, who was she? I did not see you until after you had passed the store I was in, and then I could not see her face.'

'It was Caroline Murry; you know her I suppose.'

'Caroline Murry! Why, brother! what were you doing in her company?' and Anna's face expressed unfeigned astonishment.

'Why, really, you surprise me, sister! I hope there is no blemish on her character. But what is the matter? I feel concerned to know.'

'There's not much matter, brother, but then, Caroline Murry is not genteel. We don't think of keeping her company.'

'Indeed! and you don't associate with her because she is not genteel. Well, if I am any judge of gentility, Anna, Caroline Murry is about as genteel and ladylike as any girl I know—always excepting, of course, my own dear sister.'

'Why brother, how you talk! You don't certainly pretend to compare her with Ernestine Eberly, and Zepherine Fitzwilliams, whom you have seen here several times.'

'No, I do not,' replied the brother, emphatically.

'Well, they're what I call real genteel; and Caroline Murry wouldn't be tolerated in the society where they visit.'

'And why not, sister?'

'Havn't I told you? Because she is not considered genteel; that is the reason.'

'But I don't understand what you consider genteel, Anna. If I know what gentility means, Caroline, as far as that is concerned, is in every way superior to Ernestine Eberly, and Zepherine Fitzwilliams.'

'Now, William, that is to bad! If any other man had said so to me, I would never have spoken to him again as long as I lived.'

'But seriously, Anna, what do you mean by gentility?' asked the brother.

'That's a question more easily asked than answered; but you know as well as I do, what is meant by gentility. Every body knows.

'I know what I mean by it, Anna. But it seems that we don't agree on the subject; for I call Caroline Murry genteel, and you don't; so you see that different things may be called by the same name. Now, What I wish to know is, what precise meaning do you attach to the word; or why do you think Caroline not genteel?'

'Why, in the first place, she don't go into genteel company. People of the first rank won't associate with her.'

Here ensued a pause, and her brother said—

'Well, why don't they associate with her, Anna? I hope she has not been guilty of improper or immoral conduct.'

'O, no! nothing of that. I never heard the slightest reflection on her character,' replied the sister 'But then, genteel young ladies don't work in the kitchen, like hired servants, and she does. And, besides this, call on her when you will, and she is always doing something. Why, I am told that she has even been seen at the chamber windows, fronting on the public street, with her head tied up, sweeping and making the beds! And Clarissa Sprigler says that she saw her once, with the parlor windows open, sweeping and dusting like a servant! Nobody is going to associate, or be seen in the street with any one who has'nt the spirit to be above the condition of a hireling. And besides this, whenever she was invited to balls or parties, she never would stay later than ten or 11 o'clock, which every one knows to be vulgar. Somebody had to go home with her of course: and the choicest beau in the company was almost sure to have his good nature and his politeness taxed for this purpose. Once I heard her say that she considered the theatre an unfit place for any young lady; she offended the whole company, and has never been invited to a party among genteel people since.'

'And is that all?' said William Enfield taking a long breath.

'Yes, and I should think that was enough, in all conssience,' replied the sister.

'So should I, Anna—to make me respect her.'

'Why, William!'

'Why, Anna!'

'But seriously, William, you cannot be in earnest?'

'And seriously, Anna, are you in earnest?'

'Of course I am.'

'Well sister, I'm afraid my old fashioned notions, for such I suppose you will call them, and your new fangled notions; for such I must call them, will not chime well together. All that I have heard you allege against Caroline Murry, raises, instead of lowers her in my estimation. So far as a genteel and truly lady-like deportment is concerned, I think her greatly superior to the two friends you have named as pinks of gentility.'

Anna looked up into the face of her brother for some moments, her countenance exhibiting a mingled expression of surprise and disappointment.

But you are not going to walk with her in the street any more, I hope,' she at length said.

'And why not, Anna?'

'Because as I have said before, she is not gen—'

'Genteel, you were going to say. But that allegation, you perceive, Anna, has no weight with me, I do not consider it a true one.'

'Well, we won't talk any more about it just now, for it will be of no use,' said the sister, changing her voice and manner; 'and so I will change the subject. I want you to make a call or two with me this morning.'

'On whom?'

'On Miss Eberly and Miss Fitzwilliams.'

'It wouldn't be right for me to do so, would it? You know I don't consider them genteel,' said the brother, with affected gravity.

'O Nonsense, brother! why will you trifle?'

'But seriously, Anna, I do not consider that those young ladies have any very strong claims to gentility; and, like you, I do not wish to associate with those who are not genteel.'

'If you talk in that way, William, I shall get angry with you. I cannot hear my most intimate friends spoken of so lightly; and at the same time accused of a want of gentility. You must remember that you are reflecting upon your sister's associates.'

'You must not, and I know you will not get angry with me for speaking plainly—and you must do me the justice to believe that in saying what you did of Caroline Murry, you spoke of one with whom your brother has associated, and with whom he is still willing to associate.'

Anna looked very serious at this, nor could she frame in her own mind a reply that was satisfactory to her. At last she said—

'But seriously brother William, won't you call on those young ladies with me?'

'Yes on one condition.'

'Well, what is that?'

Why, on condition that you will afterward call with me and see Caroline Murry.'

'I cannot do that William,' she replied in a positive tone.

'And why not Anna?'

'I have already told you.'

'I cannot perceive the force of that reason, Anna. But, if you will not go with me, I must decline going with you. The society of Miss Murry can not be more repulsive to you, than is that of the Misses Eberly and Fitzwilliams to me.'

'You don't know what you are talking about, William.'

'That is my impression about you. But come, now, sister, let us both be rational to each other. I am willing to go with you, if you will go with me.'

'Yes but William, you don't reflect that in doing as you desire me, I will be in danger of losing my present position in society. Caroline Murry is not esteemed genteel in the circle in which I move, and if it should be known that I visit her, I will be considered on a level with her. I would do any thing to oblige you, but, indeed, I would be risking too much here.'

'You would only be breaking loose,' replied the brother, 'from the slavery you are now in to false notions of what is truly genteel. If any one esteems you less for being kind, attentive, and courteous, to one against whom suspicion has never dared to breathe a word, and whose whole life is a bright example of the pure high-toned principles that govern her, that one is unworthy of your regard. True gentility does not consist, my sister, merely in a studdied and artificial elegance of behavior, but in inward purity, and taste, and a true sense of what is right, all exhibiting themselves in their natural external expression. The real lady judges of others from what they are, and neglects none but the wilfully depraved. True, there are distinctions in society, and there are lines of social demarkation—and all this is right. But we should be careful into what social sphere we are drawn, and how we suffer ourselves to be influenced by the false notions of real worth which prevail in some circles that profess a high degree of gentility. I hold that every one, no matter what may be his or her condition in life, fails to act a true part if not engaged in doing something that is useful. Let me put it to your good sense, which do you think the most deserving of praise, Caroline Murry, who spends her time in 'doing something' useful to her family; or the Misses Eberly and Fitzwilliams, and those constituting that particular circle, who expect services from others, but never think of rendering any, and who carry their prejudices so far as to despise those who work?'

Anna did not reply, and her brother said—

'I am in earnest, sister, when I say, that you can not confer a greater favor upon your brother than to go with him to see Caroline Murry. Can not I induce you to comply with my wishes?'

'I will go,' she replied to this appeal, and then hurried away, evidently no little disturbed in her feelings.

In half an hour she was ready, and, taking her brother's arm, was soon on the way to Miss Ernestine Eberley's residence.—That young lady received them with all the graces and fashionable airs she could assume, and entertained them with the idle gossip of the day, interspersed with an occasional spice of envious and ill-natured remarks. Knowing that her brother was a close discriminator, and that he was by no means prepossessed in her friend's favor, Anna herself observed her more narrowly, and as it were with his eyes.

It seemed to her that Miss Eberly never was so uninteresting, or so malapropos in what she said. The call on Zepherine Fitzwilliams came next in turn. Scanning her also with other eyes than her own, Anna was disappointed in her very dear friend.—She looked through her, and was pained to see that there was a hollowness and want of any thing like true strength or excellence of character about her. Particularly was she displeased with a gratuitous sneer thrown out at the expense of Caroline Murray.

And now with a reluctance which she could not overcome, Anna turned with her brother towards the residence of the young lady who had lost caste because she had good sense and was industrious.

'I know my sister's lady-like character will prompt her to right action, in our next call,' said the brother, looking into Anna's face, with an encouraging smile.

She did not reply, yet she felt somehow or other pleased with the remark. A few minutes walk brought them to the door, and they were presently ushered into a parlor in which was the young lady they were seeking. She sat near a window and was sewing. She was plainly dressed, in comparison with the young ladies just called upon; but in neatness, and all that constitutes the lady in air, and appearance, in every way their superior.

'I believe you know my sister,' said Enfield, on presenting Anna.

'We have met a few times,' she replied, with a pleasant unembarrassed smile, extending at the same time her hand.

Miss Enfield took the offered hand with less reluctance than she had imagined she should but a few hours before. Somehow or other, Caroline seemed to her much changed for the better in manner and appearance. And she could not help, during all the visit, drawing contrasts between her and the two very dear friends she had just called upon; and the contrast was in no way favorable to the latter. The conversation was on topics of ordinary interest, but did not degenerate into frivolty or censoriousness. Good sense manifested itself in almost every sentence that Caroline uttered, and this was so apparent to Ann, that she could not help noticing and involuntarily approving it. 'What a pity,' Anna once or twice remarked to herself, 'that she will be so singular.'

The call was but a brief one. Anna parted with Caroline under a different impression of her character than she had ever before entertained. After her return with her brother, he asked her this abrupt question.

'Which of the young ladies, Anna, of the three we called upon this morning, would you prefer to call your sister?'

Anna looked up, bewildered and surprised, into the face of her brother, for a few moments, and then said—

'I don't understand you, brother William.'

'Why, I thought I asked a very plain question. But I will make it plainer.—Which one of the three young ladies we called upon this morning, would you advise me to marry?'

'Neither,' replied Anna, promptly.

'That is only jumping the question,' he said, smiling. 'But to corner you so that there can be no escape, I will confess that I have made up my mind to marry one of the three. Now tell me which you would rather it would be.'

'Caroline Murry,' said Anna emphatically, while her cheeks burned, and her eyes became slightly suffused. William Enfield did not reply to the hoped for, though rather unexpected admission, but stooping down, he kissed her glowing cheek, she shall be your sister, and I know you will love one another.'

He said truly. In a few months he claimed Caroline Murry as his bride, and her good sense, and winning gentleness of character, influenced Anna, and effectually counteracted the false notions which were beginning to corrupt a good heart and to overshadow a sound judgment. It was not long before she was fully sensible of the real difference which there was between the two characters of her friends and that of her brother's wife; and also between true and false gentility. Although Caroline Murry had been proscribed by a certain circle in which false pride, instead of principle, was the governing motive, she had still been esteemed among those who knew how to look beyond the surface.—As the wife of Enfield, she at once took a position in circles where those who had passed her by as unworthy would have sought in vain for admission, and in those circles she shone as a bright particular star.

TREES OF PALESTINE.—The sycamore tree, which abounded in the plain of Jericho, bore a fruit similar to a fig, while its leaves resembled the mulberry; hence its name, which is compounded of "syca, a fig tree, and morus, a mulberry tree." You will remember, that it was into a sycamore tree that Zaccheus climbed to see Jesus, amid the crowd in the neighborhood of Jericho. Amos also refers to it, saying, "I was a herdman, a gatherer of sycamore fruit." This fruit will not ripen until it is rubbed or cut with an iron comb or spike: this, probably, was the business of Amos. The wood is nearly incorruptible, and hence the Egyptians used it for coffins.

But the vine is the chief glory of Palestine: the clusters of Eschol were borne between two men to the camp at Kadish-barnea.

We are told that such wonderful grapes are still found in that part, the south of Palestine; the weight of the clusters being sometimes as much as ten or twelve pounds. We are also informed, that, "besides the large quantities of grapes and raisins which are daily sent to the markets at Jerusalem, and other places, Hebron alone, in the first half of the eighteenth century, annually sent three hundred camel loads, that is, nearly 30,000 lbs of grape juice, or honey of raisins to Egypt." Travelers remark the great size and strength of the vines, which will enable you to comprehend the figurative language of Jacob's blessings upon Judah, in whose portion both Eschol and Hebron were situated. "Binding his foal unto the vine, and his ass's colt unto the choice vine, he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes."

The most beautiful of all the trees of Palestine, were the almond, the pomegrant, with its bright scarlet flowers and fruit, the golden citron, (mistranslated apple tree, in Canticles.) It is supposed Solomon referred to the citron, under the name of apples of gold, in his elegant proverb, "a word fitly spoken, is like apples of gold, in pictures of silver," that is, network or baskets of silver; for the first fruits, among which was the citron, were often carried by the richer Jews, in silver baskets to the temple.—Evening Recreations.

NAPOLEON'S MODE OF MAKING COFFEE.—The late Emperor Napoleon, who was a great amateur of coffee, of which, however, he made a moderate use, is said to have given instructions to his cook to prepare it in the following way:—For three or four persons, two ounces of recently burnt and ground coffee, are put into an empty coffee pot of the ordinary kind, with a small piece of isinglass; this is held over the fire and shaken by the hand so as to prevent the burning of the coffee; when a smoke is seen to issue from the pot, water at the boiling point, is poured upon it in a sufficient quantity to supply six breakfast cups, in the proportion of one third of coffee to two-thirds of milk, the coffee pot is taken from the fire before the water is added, but being heated, the coffee boils gently as the pot is held in the hand; the ebullition is sufficient to bring out all the fine properties of the coffee without carrying off the aroma; a cup is then poured out and returned to the pot, to allow it to precipitate, and in two or three minutes the coffee is perfectly clear, and is used with boiling milk. Some of the best families in Paris now adopt this plan, which is certainly superior to that now in use.

IMPORTANT TO FIREMEN.—The following is a new and feasible plan proposed in the New York Sunday Atlas for the rapid extinguishment of fires, viz.—"To have a large machine, with a ton of carbonate of lime, a proper portion of water, and half a ton of sulphuric acid. With valves to regulate the contact of these materials, a mass of carbonic acid gas could be evolved, which, properly directed, would be more effectual than water, inasmuch as it would penetrate to every portion of a building, and extinguish a fire as completely as if it were drowned in the North River."

Smithsonian Legacy.—A Mr. Smithson of London, who died a few years since, bequeathed the handsome sum of $600,000 to the United States, for the establishment of an institution in the city of Washington, whose object should be the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men. Three years since the money arrived, and being in British gold, was deposited in the mint at Philadelphia, whence it was transported to Little Rock, in Arkansas, and exchanged for the bonds of the State of Arkansas, at par. These bonds have now sunk from par down to sixty-two per cent, thus diminishing the value of the legacy $228,090.

TRUE COURAGE.—An Irishman, who was a soldier of the Revolution, was suddenly stopped near Boston by a party, during a dark night. A horseman's pistol was presented to his breast, and he was asked to which side he belonged. The supposition that it might be a British party rendered Paddy's situation extremely critical. With true naivette he replied 'I think it would be more in the way of civil jintlemen jist to drop a hint which side you pleased to favor.'

'No,' testily said the first speaker; declare your sentiments, or die!'

'Then I will not die with a lie in my mouth—American to extremity! Do your worst, ye spalpeen!'

'We are friends, and I rejoice to meet with a man so faithful to the cause of his country; was the reply.

REMEDY FOR HOOPING COUGH.—Twenty grains of salt of tartar, and ten grains of cochineal with one ounce of refined sugar, dissolved in a gill or quarter of a pint of warm water—take a spoonful three times a day, for a child about four or five years of age, a little every time when the cough is troublesome. The relief is immediate, and the cure, in general from four to five days. It has cured many thousand. Also fresh air in mild and dry weather is advisable.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT
S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY.

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c., &c., at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than [illegible].

To Purchasers he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and he [illegible] from them at least a call, assuring them that [illegible] and every article in their line shall be put [illegible] at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, H[illegible] or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines.

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiar [illegible] the immediate effects [illegible] it being carried by the [illegible] case or pain [illegible] As an external [illegible] auxiliary, and will cure [illegible] as acute and [illegible] Rheumatism, [illegible] Affections, weakness of [illegible] and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c &c &c.

This Plaster is warranted [illegible] for the best ever offered to the public [illegible] "Jew David or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An [illegible] Colds, Coughs, Asthma, [illegible] Bronchitis, [illegible] of the Breast and Lungs, tending to Consumption, [illegible] of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, [illegible] Blood Root, Liverwort, [illegible] Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The [illegible] virtues of the Herb [illegible] BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is [illegible] to require [illegible] necessary [illegible] whole of [illegible] trated, and [illegible] vegetable substances, [illegible] dy, [illegible] now in use, for the complaints above [illegible].

Thousands of [illegible] ed, at any time, [illegible] represent.

In conclusion he would [illegible] be undersold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,
10,000 Rags,
10,900 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

For which the highest price will be paid [illegible]
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63tf

He also states, [illegible] that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arabian "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr. Pamer's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Bilious "
Harlem Oil,
British "
Pectoral Balm Honey "
[illegible] Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organum,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases. Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Webb's Dictionary, large,
" " small,
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,
Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken [illegible] recently occupied by Dr Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store, together with [illegible] where he will be happy to [illegible] those who will favor him with a call.—He will as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be [illegible] superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmer's Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russell, P. M., [illegible]
Berlin—S. S. [illegible], P. M.
B[illegible]—[illegible] Babcock, Silas Bailey, [illegible] Babcock
B[illegible]—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Tremain.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—[illegible] S[illegible]
Darien—[illegible] Joseph Potter
East H[illegible]—A. [illegible], P. M.
Edmeston—Rev. Ephraim Maxson
F[illegible]—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lamphere.
Genesee—Asa A. Longworthy, H. Wilson, P. M. Daniel S. Tenney
H[illegible]—William Greene
I[illegible]—[illegible] P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
L[illegible]—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall
New York City—Paul Stillman
N[illegible]—Daniel Truman
New London—Charles Lewis
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Rev. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Rev. [illegible] Wheaton
Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Rev. [illegible] G. Potter, James Hubbard, H[illegible] Babcock.
S[illegible]—[illegible] Ward.
S[illegible]—W. M. Beauchamp.
S[illegible]—[illegible] Babcock.
U[illegible]—[illegible] Stillman.
V[illegible]—Oscar Williams
W[illegible]—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson, Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers, Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Salem—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 42.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 94.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 15, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR:

(DECEMBER, 1841.)

NO. XII.—THE SUPREME JUDGE OF THE UNIVERSE.

Ps. i. 6.—For God is Judge himself.

The scriptures require us to contemplate God as our Creator, our Preserver, our King, our Benefactor, our Lawgiver, our Redeemer, and in the text he is announced as our Judge. "The mighty God, even the Lord hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is Judge Himself." "Himself" being added, gives peculiarly strong emphasis to the sentiment which is expressed.

The truth which we now contemplate is this:—viz,

God is the Judge of the Universe.

1. God is ABLE to be the Judge of the Universe.

We speak in reference to his natural attributes. His power is adequate to the discharge of all the unmeasured responsibility which his office involves. The multiplicity of judicial causes which may be brought before him, can not perplex his infinite mind. He that spake, and it was done; He that commanded, and it stood fast, has the requisite ability thoroughly to investigate whatever appertains to the history of all the beings whom his hands have fashioned. No event on which he may sit in judgment, can be too mighty for his infinite mind to grasp. No transaction can be so intricate that he cannot search it out.—The labarynths which it may contain in the view of finite beings, can present no obstruction to his investigation.

He is the Omnipotent Judge.

He is Omniscient. He knows all that we say and do. He knows also every secret of the heart. Not a thought in this world, or in any other world, can be concealed from him. He searcheth the heart. He looketh on the heart. To him, "the darkness and the light are both alike."

He is also Omnipresent. Take your stand where you may, and you may say, God is here. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea: Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

God will not, like any earthly judge, depend on evidence produced by others. He was on the spot when every act which he judges, was done. His eye rested on that pious one when he performed worthy deeds, though no human eye was near. His eye rested on the perpetrator of that evil deed, though perhaps he imagined that the darkness of midnight secluded him from the inspection of his Judge.

God is also infinite in Wisdom.

In the work of creation the infinite wisdom of God is displayed; his doings as Judge will present this glorious attribute no less conspicuously. A judge possessing infinite wisdom is such an one as the Universe needs; no confidence could be placed in any other.

The Universe also needs a judge who is Immutable. Such an one is God. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. He is of one mind, and none can turn him.

Does the Universe need a judge who is self-existent and independent? Such an one is God.

He is also eternal. "From everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." The Universe has no cause to apprehend that its Judge will cease to exist. This world may be destroyed; but the Judge will live. Other worlds that now exist, may cease to be; but the Judge will live. Other worlds may be created, and after having existed while God sees fit to sustain them—they too may be destroyed; but God, the Judge, will live. This view of the natural attributes of Jehovah, demonstrates that he is able to be the Judge of the Universe.

II. God is WORTHY to be the Judge of the Universe.

We speak now in reference to his moral attributes. He is just. "Just and right is he." St. Paul says in Romans 3rd chap., "Is God unrighteous? God forbid: for then how should God judge the world"?—Being just, he is no respecter of persons, and therefore he will judge impartially.—No influence of his creatures can swerve his decisions. He is beyond the reach of all bribe from the opulent and the powerful. He is a God of truth. 'It is impossible for God to lie:' it is diametrically opposite to the nature of his moral being. What is so prominent in his own character, he will approve in the character of his creatures. His decisions will always honor truth, and may always, as occasion may require, detect and expose falsehood, however adroitly it may have been concealed from human investigation. Two primary objects of judicial investigations should be, to exhibit truth and to expose falsehood. God, as Judge, will accomplish for the Universe these two important objects. He is worthy to be Judge, because he is infinitely Benevolent. "God is love." His benevolence is the source of all his moral attributes. In other words—His moral attributes are but so many varied expressions of his benevolence. All his doings, therefore, as Judge, will bear the seal of infinite benevolence. God is, therefore, worthy to be the Judge of the Universe.

III. God has a RIGHT to be the Judge of the Universe.

He is the Creator of all intelligences.—He that said, "Let there be light," said also—Let there be an intelligent being—and there was an intelligent being. Such an one receiving his existence, and all his powers from God, is constantly and absolutely dependant upon God. From his hand he receives every blessing which he enjoys.—God is his Creator, Supporter, and Benefactor. Sustaining such relations to God, he is consequently accountable to God for all his actions. This is equivalent to saying God is his Judge. As God is infinitely good, the intelligent and dependant being whom he has created, is obligated to love him supremely and constantly. His obligation is to serve God with all his powers. Thus an indisputable and immoveable foundation is laid for his accountability to God for all his feelings and actions. The import of all this is—God has a right to be his Judge. The same principles which illustrate God's right to be the Judge of one of his intelligent creatures, equally illustrate his right to be the Judge of all, in whatever worlds they exist.

These reasonings are not presented as needed proof that God is the Judge, for as the text expressly asserts this, it furnishes us with full proof. But the preceding thoughts may aid our minds in contemplating the ability, the worthiness, and the right of God to sustain the office of Supreme Judge of the Universe. This seat God will hold, unmolested, forever and ever. Inspired writers of the Old Testament speak of God as the Judge.

The pious Jephthah said, "The Lord, the Judge, be judge this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon." Isaiah writes—"For the Lord is our Judge." Abraham, Samuel, and David appeal to God as the Judge.

The New Testament writers re-iterate the same truth. The apostle James says—"Behold! the Judge standeth before the door." No other being in the Universe but God is able to be the Judge; none other is worthy; none other has a right to this infinitely high office.

Reason and Revelation unitedly proclaim to us that God is the Judge of the Universe.

In the sun, moon, and stars; on the mountains, trees, plants, and rocks—is written what conscience whispers, and what almost every page of revelation declares—"Behold! The Judge standeth before the door."

Reflections.

1. God is a Judge of glorious dignity.

We always associate dignity with the office of the judge. But what shall we say of the judge of the Universe? All that has transpired in all worlds since the first created being began his existence; all that now transpires; and all that will transpire while time lasts, or Eternity moves on—are the causes which come before this Almighty Judge. He is not merely the Judge of this little earth: he is equally the Judge of heaven, and of hell, and of all worlds. How many worlds he may yet create we know not: but though he may create countless myriads, he will be the Judge of all. The causes which he judges are as important as the Universe can furnish.

Call to mind his character; he is infinite in power, wisdom, and goodness. What a Judge! Who can be regardless of his laws? Who can trifle in his presence? Who can sport with his decisions?

2. If God is Judge himself, then each one of must be judged. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

3. If God is Judge himself, then every act must be judged. 2 Cor. v. 10. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or evil." Eccles. xi. 9. "Rejoice, O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."

Eccles. xii. 14. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

"For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

"In that day when God shall judge the secrets of men."

Sinner! no deed of yours can be concealed: "for God is Judge himself."

4. If God is Judge himself, then a just decision will be rendered. God's own people will be approved. The wicked will meet with just doom. "But God is the Judge; he putteth down one and setteth up another. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup and the wine is red, it is full of mixture, and he poureth out the same, but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out and drink them."

5. From the decision of the Judge of the Universe there can be no appeal. After his decision, there is no court of errors. If this Judge says, "Come, ye blessed!" it is a welcome forever. If he says, "Depart, ye cursed!" it is an irrevocable sentence.

Sinner! If the Judge of the Universe sentence you to hell, you will abide there, and weep, and wail, and gnash your teeth in your "own place"—your own bitter home,—while the Martyr Stephen shall abide in heaven, and there rejoice, and exult, and sing in his own sweet and everlasting home.

6. Let us prepare to stand before the Judge of the Universe.

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,
When I must stand before my Judge,
And pass the solemn test."

There is the great white throne! He sits upon it who is able, is worthy, and has a right to judge the Universe.

What a transcendently glorious Judge!
Each one of us must stand before him.
Every act must be judged.
A just decision will be proclaimed.
There can be no appeal.

The "righteousness" of each decision will be so fully declared—the consciences even of the lost responding "Amen," that none will dare wish to appeal.

For this solemn day let us now prepare.

The Closing Year may aid us to feel the importance of preparing to meet our Judge. For our doings this year we must render to him a strict account. God may be pleased to grant us yet a few more days in this year to think of this matter. For this purpose we must duly improve them. Ye who trust in Jesus, will not tremble when,

"In robes of Judgment, lo! he comes!
Shakes the wide earth, and cleaves the tombs;"

for, his edict will be—

"But gather all my saints" he cries,
That made their peace with God,
By the Redeemer's sacrifice,
And sealed it with his blood."

But sinner, beware! This closing year, and past years will witness against you.—How do you purpose to spend the few remaining days of this year? How do you purpose to spend the evening and day, which, by a portion of the church, is regarded as commemorative of our Savior's Advent. How do you purpose to spend Christmas Evening? How do you design to express your welcome of the expected New-Year?

Remember to spend Christmas and New Year in such a manner that the account of your transactions and thoughts during those interesting occasions, will not appal you when you shall stand before your Judge.

"Sinners, awake betimes; ye fools, be wise;
Awake before this dreadful morning rise;
Change, your vain thoughts, your crooked works amend;
Fly to the Savior; make the Judge your friend;
Lest like a lion his last vengeance tear
Your trembling souls, and no deliverer near."

Impenitent sinner! Hear it now—and remember it:—Thou must come to Judgment. There is no escape,—"FOR GOD IS Judge Himself."

THE SABBATH.

From the New York Evangelist.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH.

The introduction of the Sabbath into the moral law or ten commandments, was an important event in its history. God was present in awful majesty before the children of Israel. With his own voice he uttered these ten commandments, amidst the thunders and lightnings of Sinai. Afterwards, with his own hand he wrote them out twice on two tables of stone. These commandments, therefore, were particularly distinguished above all the other laws of Israel. All were founded on the eternal principles of rectitude, and will stand forever unabolished. Among them the Sabbath holds an elevated rank. These laws were not given merely for the Jews; but they are equally binding on all people, in every land and age. The whole system of the gospel implies that the moral law is binding on every one of us. Those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ are redeemed from the curse of the law; of course then they are under it, and exposed to its penalty, else they would have needed no Redeemer. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid! yea, we establish the law. As this moral law of ten commandments has never been repealed, so the law of the Sabbath, constituting one of these commandments, remains still unrepealed. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy daughter, nor thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.

Another fact which ought to be distinctly noticed in the history of the Sabbath, is its introduction into the civil code of the Jews. This, we believe, is a point not sufficiently understood. No people, no nation on earth were ever distinguished like the Jews. Jehovah, the Infinite God was himself their king, their lawgiver. They were chosen out of all the tribes of the earth, to be his peculiar people. He gave them a system of civil laws, which belonged to them as a nation, and were binding on no other nations. Among these laws, the Sabbath was repeatedly mentioned. With these laws were connected severe penalties. Jehovah was the Great Sovereign of that nation. In violating then their national law, they set at defiance the authority of their Eternal Sovereign. Hence, they were pre-eminently guilty, and the penalties were proportionably severer than those of some other nations. Death was the punishment for violating the Sabbath. This code of laws, with all its ceremonies, has passed away. To this subject we shall again refer. It is scarcely necessary to add how high was the rank of the Sabbath among the laws of Israel—how tremendous were the judgments which fell on the nation for profaning the Sabbath, and how forcible in its behalf were the solemn appeals of their prophets. If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable: and shall honor him, not doing their own ways, nor finding their own pleasure, nor speaking their own words. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father, for the Lord hath spoken of it.

The Sabbath was kept by the Savior.—He fulfilled not only the moral law, but all the civil and ceremonial laws of his country. He explained more clearly the nature of the Sabbath, refuted the malicious accusations brought against him, and so far was he from inculcating the least disrespect for the Sabbath, that the women who kept nigh him in the hour of his agony, although they had prepared their spices, yet refrained from anointing the body of their Lord, that they might rest on the Sabbath, according to commandment. Thus we find the Sabbath kept by the first human pair, on the first morning of their existence, preserved through successive centuries by tradition, introduced into the moral law amidst all the majesty of Sinai, holding a distinguished rank among the civil and ceremonial laws of the Jews, and kept so strictly by our Savior, that his most watchful enemies could not prove that he ever indulged in the least violation, either of the moral, or of the civil law respecting it. We would now pass immediately to consider the change of the Sabbath, did we not feel it important to bring into view one other event, viz: the abolition of the civil and ceremonial law of the Jews. In this code were included particular directions adapted to the peculiarities of their country and climate, regulations rendered necessary by their relation to surrounding nations, their ceremonies, and forms of worship, their feast days, national thanksgivings, and ceremonial Sabbaths, their sacrifices and priesthood, which were all merely types of our Great High Priest, and his atonement, and all these were gradually abolished after the death of Jesus.—At his death he cried it is finished. All the ancient observances of the Mosaic ritual expired with those last words of the Savior. The purposes for which they were established were fully accomplished; and when He, the Great High Priest, offered up himself once as a [illegible] for the people, he blotted out the handwriting of ordinances which was against us, which was contrary to us, [illegible]; having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Then the [illegible] was no more confined to his unleavened bread, or particular days, no more restricted from eating particular kinds of meat, no more bound to bring the firstlings of his flock to be sacrificed at his altars, no more to observe the ancient feasts, Sabbatical years, or ceremonial Sabbaths; or anything else which depended merely on the civil or ceremonial laws of his fathers. Let no man therefore, says the apostle to the Colossians, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ. A similar exhortation is given to the Romans in the xiv. chapter. One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day to the Lord, he doth not regard it. The context evidently shows that there had been a controversy respecting the old ceremonial law, and that the apostles had reference to the various and multiplied holy days enjoined under that dispensation.

With the same view of the subject, the passage in Galatians corresponds. Ye observe days, and months, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed labor on you in vain. In all these passages, no reproof is contained for observing weeks, or the weekly Sabbath; but they prove that for which we produced them, that the ceremonial laws of Moses were [illegible] abolished, and were considered so by the Apostles.

This view of the subject shows us that the objections sometimes [illegible] the ancient Sabbath as binding upon us, thus, that if we are bound to keep it we are bound to put to death those who violate it, is not valid. In the ten commandments spoken by the Lord on Mount Sinai, written by him on two tables of stone, there are no temporal penalties. The Jews, it is true, did put to death those who violated the Sabbath, because the civil law required it, just as men who violate the Sabbath in our state are liable to be fined; but the moral law no more required them to put to death the transgressor, than it now requires us to fine the transgressors of our statutes. As the fine, the temporal penalty is the result of our civil law, and not the penalty of the moral law; so with them the putting to death or the temporal penalty, was the result of their civil laws, and not of the law of ten commands. If God were to proclaim himself our National Sovereign, and give us a code of civil laws as he did the Jews, then what penalties he annexed to his laws, we should be bound to observe in the execution of the law. The same remarks will apply to the particular manner of keeping the Sabbath; such as not going out of our place, which was adapted especially to the Israelites in the wilderness.

Moral Reform Department.

From the Advocate of Moral Reform.

ONE OF A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

By Rev. [illegible] Davis, Colleague Pastor with Rev. Isaac Kn[illegible] of the Congregational Church in Westfield, Mass.

"Thou shalt not commit Adultery."—Ex. xx. 14.

(Concluded.)

Every individual in the community ought frequently to consider the heinousness of this whole class of sins in the sight of God. The word of God declares, that whosoever is guilty of the sins forbidden in this precept, "destroyeth his own soul." "A wound and dishonor shall he get, and his reproach shall not be wiped away." It was the sin for which God rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed Sodom and the neighboring cities.

To the Israelities, when entering Canaan, God said, respecting the sins which are forbidden in the seventh commandment—"Ye shall not commit any of these abominations, that the land spew you not out also when ye defile it, as it spewed out the nations that were before you." "For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, that soul shall be cut off from his people." In Heb. xiii. 4, we are assured that all who transgress this precept, "God will judge." There is a peculiar emphasis in the expression, "God will judge."—Many who commit these sins, conceal their guilt from men, and escape the penalties of the law of the land; but let such remember that there is a God, who seeth in secret, and will bring hidden things to light, and he has declared that he will judge all sinners of this description.

God has also expressly taught us in his word, that "neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, shall inherit the kingdom of God." It is true that any sins, unrepented of and unpardoned, will exclude the soul from heaven—but this sin in a special manner prevents those who are guilty of it from entering heaven. It destroys their moral sense, and hardens the heart, or, as the scripture expresses it, [illegible] the heart." [illegible]

[illegible] that those who violate in any form the seventh commandment are preparing to drink the wine of God's wrath, which shall be poured out without mixture.

Let us now consider some sources of temptation which are to be guarded against, that those who are now innocent, may not be overcome and ruined for this world and the next.

If you would keep yourselves unspotted from this world, you must guard against the excessive indulgence of appetite. The moral [illegible] the strength of the passions greatly increased by fermented and distilled drinks, or by food of an improper quality or quantity. It was [illegible] that [illegible] the ruin of Solomon. An apostle has said, "that every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things"—now," he says, "they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible;" and then he adds, "I keep under my body, [illegible] by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

Another source of danger is the reading of books which [illegible]

[illegible] is another source of danger. And here let me say, that the worst companions are those whose [illegible] who have the art to conceal their wickedness from the public, and are looked upon by many as respectable and worthy of confidence and friendship. The greatest danger is to be apprehended from those from whom the young, while unskilled in the arts of deception, expect no danger.

[illegible] however, to guard against [illegible] the mind must [illegible] with virtuous principles [illegible] knows the strength [illegible] therefore, [illegible] his present principles, [illegible] against temptation. There is [illegible] of every thing [illegible]

[illegible] your minds and to cultivate a relish for useful knowledge. In addition to the direct utility of the knowledge itself, the labor of acquiring it elevates the mind, and inspires it with noble sentiments. The pursuit of knowledge also keeps the mind occupied, and prevents it from forming corrupt associations.

But if you would guard yourselves most effectually against low-bred vice of every kind, you must "labor," says Archbishop Leighton, "to have the heart possessed with a deep apprehension of the holiness and purity of God, and of his presence and eye upon all your actions, and upon your most secret thoughts. His eye is so piercing, that no wickedness can escape his notice, and he is so pure that he cannot [illegible] it without indignation. The darkness is to him as the noonday—you cannot steal a single thought out of his sight, be it ever so short. If you expect ever to dwell with God in heaven, with a being of infinite purity, you must shun with great care every thing impure or unclean—Christ hath no concord with Belial. Remember that wherever you are, the eye of a holy God is fixed upon you: and when tempted to sin against him, say as Joseph did, "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?"

Another thing to be done, is to repent, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. It is true, some professors of religion have been guilty of violating this precept, and perhaps some have yielded to temptation who were real disciples of Christ, but no one who lives in the habitual practice of sins here forbidden, can be a Christian. If they have a name to live, they are nevertheless dead while they live. If they have a form of godliness, it is very certain they have not its power. No one whose heart is filled with love to Christ, as the Savior of sinners—who regards him as the chief among ten thousand, will yield to a temptation to commit any heinous sin—for if the love of Jesus Christ be strong as death, it will destroy all opposite affections. Consider how shameful it is, that a being capable of enjoying God forever, should become such a servant of sin as to forfeit the happiness and the pleasures of eternity. Said a Roman philosopher—"I am greater, and born to greater things, than to be a slave to my body."

[To be continued.]

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, December 15, 1841.

Another Laborer Gone!

It will be seen from to-day's paper that our well-beloved brother, Elder Benedict Wescote has gone to his rest. Our acquaintance with him is brief. We are not prepared, therefore, to give a fuller account of his life. From all that we have known of him, we have formed a most favorable opinion. His labors with the Church in Preston have been very serviceable. Long, very long, will that people remember their Pastor and his pious labors. On whom shall his mantle fall? And who will fill his place?

This bereavement will be deeply felt by those who remain on the walls of our beloved Zion. Our number is small, far too small, to supply the calls for the word of life, and from this God is repeatedly taking some. Little more than a year has elapsed since our fellow-laborer Campbell took his flight close in the rear of the venerable Watson; and now another is gone! The perishing condition of sinners—the destitution of our churches, cannot stay the hand of death. This affords us a favorable opportunity to refer our readers to the several inquiries that are presented in this paper.—Ponder them well, and let any who can answer them.

De Ruyter Institute.

The fall term closes to-day. The winter term will commence in two weeks from next Friday. The well-earned reputation of the Teachers, in their various departments, has been well sustained; and the term which now closes has not been inferior in interest to those which have succeeded it. The Students, so far as we can learn, are well satisfied. Nothing is wanting to raise the Institute above embarrassment and give it high standing among schools of the kind, but a hearty co-operation and support from the Stockholders with the friends of the Institute and its officers.

Will the friends of the school consider the fifth inquiry over the signature "Inquirer"? It cannot be controverted that the school would flourish to the satisfaction of the Stockholders, if they would use reasonable influence to send scholars. This is all that is wanting to raise it above embarrassment or opposition.

Hoax.

Some evil disposed person has sent afloat, on the wings of the wind, the story that a battle has been fought between the Americans and British on the disputed Territory. It is said that the American commander was ordered off in 24 hours by the British, but refusing to comply with this order, the British marched to the attack, and were repulsed with the loss of about 30. We are satisfied that the whole affair is a shameless hoax, got up for excitement. Our difficulties with Great Britain are likely to be settled amicably.

To Correspondents.

We have several communications on hand which shall receive attention soon.—"Mary" is welcome to our columns. You may send the other Nos. you mention, and rest assured that your "incognito" is safe with an Editor.

"B. F." shall appear soon. "G." is under consideration.

Errata.—An error occurred in part of our edition this week, in the Monthly Sermons, in the 11th line from the top of second column. For "It is impossible for God to be," read, It is impossible for God to lie. Also, some two or three of minor importance, which, however, the sense of the reader will readily correct.

Congress,

At the opening of the session Hon. J. Q. Adams moved to rescind the 21st rule, which lays Abolition Petitions on the table without reading or debate. The question was lost by 3 votes.

Reformed Drunkards.

It is said that 20,000 drunkards have been reclaimed since the first efforts in Baltimore.

President's Message.

We give it entire to the exclusion of much other matter.

Correspondence of the Register.

Clarence, Dec. 3, 1841.

Dear Bro. Bailey—It has pleased God to give me a safe return once more to my family and friends in Clarence. Soon after the rising of the General Conference, in compliance with a request from Br. W. B. Gillett, I visited the church at New Market, N. J., in order to attend the Yearly Meeting of the churches in that State. The meeting convened according to appointment, and continued for a number of days, and a precious season was enjoyed. Br. W. B. Maxson, from Brookfield, N. Y., was with us, and we were refreshed and comforted with his faithful and instructive labors. There were present, also, ministering brethren, D. Clawson, A. Estee, and Lucius Crandall.—After the meeting had continued a number of days, Br. Estee returned to Shiloh, accompanied by Br. Maxson; the meeting however, at New Market was continued, and a number were hopefully converted to God.

I then continued my journey to Shiloh, where I found Br. Maxson earnestly engaged in the good work of "feeding the sheep," and of turning souls to God. After some two or three days he returned to Plainfield, N. J., and I tarried behind to prosecute the work already begun by him. The meeting continued to increase in interest, and was protracted for a number of days. It was indeed a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, and I trust that lasting good was done in the name of the "Holy child Jesus."

One circumstance connected with this meeting, I mention with pleasure; and that is the brotherly feeling manifested toward us by professing christians of other denominations; and particularly, by the Pastor of the Baptist Church in Bridgeton, Br. Hopkins. His fellowship seemed indeed real.

At the close of the meeting in Shiloh, I went to Salem and held a meeting of four days, and the season was truly refreshing, and the prospect seems to be, that under the labors of Br. Clawson, this ancient church will be built up. At the close of this meeting, I returned to Plainfield, N. J., where another meeting of four days was held, which also proved pleasant and interesting. There were nineteen baptisms, in all, during my stay in this State, and I trust there will still be others as fruit of the preached word on these several occasions.

On reviewing the whole journey, I feel it to have been one of the most pleasant I have ever made; and I feel it has been profitable to my own soul, as well as to others; and I thereby acknowledge, with gratitude, the many tokens of respect and christian confidence that I have received from my christian friends in each of the places where I have visited. And may the Lord remember them when he comes into his kingdom. Amen.

N. V. HULL.

For the Register.

Br. Bailey—There are a few questions that I wish to propose, by your permission, to the readers of the Register, and I wish them carefully examined by all, and if any can give satisfactory answers to them I shall be glad to see them appear.

1. Why are so many of our ministers entangled with the affairs of this life, instead of giving themselves wholly to the ministry of the word?

2. Why are there so few ministers in the S. D. Baptist denomination, compared with the number of churches, and consequently so many churches deprived of the ministry of the word?

3. Why are so many of our churches involved in difficulties and dissensions among themselves, and sister churches?

4. Why so little done, and so little interest felt, in our Missionary operations?

5. Why such indifference felt concerning the De Ruyter Institute? and why do the Stockholders complain of want of success, while they—yes, they, withhold from it their support?

6. Why this want of action upon those great and leading features of the christian religion?

Inquirer.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Atlas.

ARRIVAL OF THE ACADIA.

The Steamer Acadia arrived at this port yesterday afternoon. She touched her berth at East Boston, at 4 o'clock. She sailed from Liverpool on the 19th instant—has made her passage in eighteen days—and brings us intelligence fifteen days later than heretofore received. We have, by this arrival, our complete files of London papers to the evening of the 18th, and Liverpool papers to the 19th of November.

The trade in the manufacturing districts continued as discouraging as ever. American Cotton had fallen full 1 8d. Flour was lower, with comparative dull sale. The money market and mostly all branches of mercantile industry were in depression.

The steamship Columbia, Judkins, hence, arrived at Liverpool on the 15th ult.

ACCOUCHMENT OF THE QUEEN—BIRTH OF A PRINCE.

The most important British news which the Acadia brings is that of the birth of a Prince and Heir to the British Throne.—The event took place on the 9th November, Tuesday, and has been ever since the almost absorbing topic.

The Queen, according to all accounts, bore her sufferings with uncommon fortitude and patience; she is certainly blessed with a vigorous constitution and sound nerves, as well as with remarkable energy of character. Her joy was unbounded when told that the infant was a son.

The new born Prince.—We perceive by the English papers, that the Prince is styled the Duke of Cornwell.

In the evening there were many brilliant illuminations at the west end of the town; and at the Theaters "God save the Queen," was sung by the whole company, the audience standing and joining in the chorus.—Additional verses, noticing the birth of the Prince, were added ex tempore.

News of the Day.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

In coming together, fellow-citizens, to enter again upon the discharge of the duties with which the People have charged us, severally, we find great occasion to rejoice in the general prosperity of the country.—We are in the enjoyment of all the blessing of civil and religious liberty, with unexampled means of education, knowledge and improvement. Through the year which is now drawing to a close, peace has been in our borders, and plenty in our habitations; and although disease has visited some few portions of our land with distress and mortality, yet in general the health of the people has been preserved, and we are all called upon, by the highest obligations of duty, to renew our thanks and our devotion to our Heavenly Parent, who has continued to vouchsafe to us the eminent blessings which surround us, and who has so signally crowned the year with his goodness. If we find ourselves increasing, beyond example, in numbers, in strength, in wealth, in knowledge, in every thing which promotes human and social happiness, let us ever remember our dependence, for all these, on the protection and merciful dispensations of Divine Providence.

Since our last adjournment, Alexander McLeod, a British subject, who was indicted for the murder of an American citizen, and whose case has been the subject of a correspondence heretofore communicated to you, has been acquitted by the verdict of an impartial and intelligent jury, and has, under the judgment of the Court, been regularly discharged.

Great Britain having made known to this Government that the expedition which was fitted out from Canada for the destruction of the steamboat Caroline, in the winter of 1837, and which resulted in the destruction of said boat, and in the death of an American citizen, was undertaken by orders emanating from the authorities of the British Government, in Canada, and demanding the discharge of McLeod upon the ground that, if engaged in that expedition, he did but fulfil the orders of his Government, has thus been answered in the only way in which she could be answered by a Government, the powers of which are distributed among its several departments by the fundamental law. Happily for the people of Great Britain, as well as those of the United States, the only mode by which an individual, arraigned for a criminal offense, before the Courts of either, can obtain his discharge, is by the independent action of the judiciary, and by proceedings equally familiar to the Courts of both countries.

If in Great Britain a power exists in the Crown to cause to be entered a nolle prosequi, which is not the case with the executive power of the United States upon a prosecution pending in a state court; yet there, no more than here, can the chief executive power rescue a prisoner from custody without an order of the proper tribunal directing his discharge. The precise stage of the proceedings at which such order may be made, is a matter of municipal regulation exclusively, and not to be complained of by any other government. In cases of this kind, a government becomes politically responsible only when its tribunals of last resort are shown to have rendered unjust and injurious judgments in matters not doubtful. To the establishment and elucidation of this principle, no nation has lent its authority more efficiently than Great Britain. Alexander McLeod having his option either to prosecute a writ of error from the decision of the Supreme Court of New York, which had been rendered upon his application for a discharge, to the Supreme Court of the United States, or to submit his case to the decision of a jury, preferred the latter, deeming it the readiest mode of obtaining his liberation, and the result has fully sustained the wisdom of his choice.

The manner in which the issue submitted was tried, will satisfy the English Government that the principles of justice will never fail to govern the enlightened decision of an American tribunal. I cannot fail, however, to suggest to Congress the propriety, and, in some degree, the necessity, of making such provision by law, so far as they may do so, for the removal at their commencement, and at the option of the party, of all such cases as may hereafter arise, and which may involve the faithful observance and execution of our international obligations, from the State to the Federal Judiciary. This Government, by our institutions, is charged with the maintenance of peace and the preservation of amicable relations with the nations of the earth, and ought to possess, without question, all the reasonable and proper means of maintaining the one and preserving the other. Whilst just confidence is felt in the Judiciary of the State, yet this Government ought to be competent in itself for the fulfilment of the high duties which have been devolved upon it under the organic law, by the States themselves.

In the month of September, a party of armed men from Upper Canada invaded the territory of the United States, and forcibly seized upon the person of one Grogan, and, under circumstances of great harshness, hurriedly carried him beyond the limits of the United States, and delivered him up to the authorities of Upper Canada. His immediate discharge was ordered by those authorities, upon the facts of the case being brought to their knowledge—a course of procedure which was to have been expected from a nation with whom we are at peace, and which was not more due to the rights of the United States than to its own regard for justice. The correspondence which passed between the Department of State, and the British Envoy, Mr. Fox, and with the Governor of Vermont, as soon as the facts had been made known to this Department, are herewith communicated.

I regret that it is not in my power to make known to you an equally satisfactory conclusion in the case of the Caroline steamer, with the circumstances connected with the destruction of which, in December, 1837, by an armed force fitted out in the Province of Upper Canada, you are already made acquainted. No such atonement as was due for the public wrong done to the United States by this invasion of her territory, so wholly irreconcilable with her rights as an independent power, has yet been made. In the view taken by this Government, the inquiry whether the vessel was in the employment of those who were prosecuting an unauthorized war against that Province, or was engaged by the owner in the business of transporting passengers to and from Navy Island in the hopes of private gain, which was most probably the case, in no degree alters the real question at issue between the two governments.

This Government can never concede to any foreign Government the power, except in a case of the most urgent and extreme necessity, of invading its territory, either to arrest the persons or destroy the property of those who may have violated the municipal laws of such foreign Government, or have disregarded their obligations arising under the law of nations. The territory of the United States must be regarded as sacredly secure against all such invasions, until they shall voluntarily acknowledge their inability to acquit themselves of their duties to others. And in announcing this sentiment, I do but affirm a principle which no nation on earth would be more ready to vindicate, at all hazards, than the people and Government of Great Britain.

If, upon a full investigation of all the facts, it shall appear that the owner of the Caroline was governed by a hostile intent, or had made common cause with those who were in the occupancy of Navy Island, then, so far as he is concerned, there can be no claim to indemnity for the destruction of his boat, which this Government would feel itself bound to prosecute—since he would have acted not only in derogation of the rights of Great Britain, but in clear violation of the laws of the United States; but that is a question which, however settled, in no manner involves the higher consideration of the violation of territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction. To recognize it as an admissible practice that each government, in its turn, upon any sudden and unauthorized outbreak, which, on a frontier, the extent of which renders it impossible for either to have an efficient force on every mile of it, and which outbreak, therefore, neither may be able to suppress in a day, may take vengeance into its own hands, and without even a remonstrance, and in the absence of any pressing or overruling necessity, may invade the territory of the other, would inevitably lead to results equally to be deplored by both.

When border collisions come to receive the sanction, or to be made on the authority of either Government, general war must be the inevitable result. While it is the ardent desire of the United States to cultivate the relations of peace with all nations, and to fulfil all the duties of good neighborhood towards those who possess territories adjoining their own, that very desire would lead them to deny the right of any foreign power to invade their boundary with an armed force. The correspondence between the two Governments on this subject will, at a future day of your session, be submitted to your consideration; and in the mean time, I cannot but indulge the hope that the British Government will see the propriety of renouncing, as a rule of future action, the precedent which has been set in the affair at Schlosser.

I herewith submit the correspondence which has recently taken place between the American Minister at the Court of St. James, Mr. Stevenson, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of that Government, on the right claimed by that Government to visit and detain vessels sailing under the American flag, and engaged in prosecuting lawful commerce in the African seas. Our commercial interests in that region have experienced considerable increase, and have become an object of much importance, and it is the duty of this government to protect them against all improper and vexatious interruption. However desirous the United States may be for the suppression of the slave trade, they cannot consent to interlopations into the maratime code, at the mere will and pleasure of other governments. We deny the right of any such interlopation to any one or all the nations of the Earth, without our consent.

We claim to have a voice in all the amendments or alterations of that code—and when we are given to understand, as in this instance, by a foreign Government, that its treaties with other nations cannot be executed without the establishment and enforcement of new principles of maratime police, to be applied without our consent, we must employ a language neither of equivocal import, or susceptible of misconstruction. American citizens, prosecuting a lawful commerce in the African seas, under the flag of their country, are not responsible for the abuse or unlawful use of that flag by others; nor can they on account of any such alleged abuses, be interrupted, molested or detained while on the ocean; and if thus molested and detained, while pursuing honest voyages, in the usual way, and violating no law themselves, they are unquestionably entitled to indemnity. This Government has manifested a repugnance to the slave trade, in a manner which cannot be misunderstood.

By its fundamental law, it prescribed limits in point of time to its continuance; and against its own citizens who might so far forget the rights of humanity as to engage in that wicked traffic, it has long since, by its municipal laws, denounced the most condign punishment. Many of the States composing this Union had [illegible] to the civilized world [illegible] long before the moral [illegible] tions had become [illegible] ties of the traffic. W[illegible] ment should now enter [illegible] taining mutual stipulations [illegible] ject, is a question for [illegible] tion.

Certain it is, that [illegible] American ships on the [illegible] justified on the plea of [illegible] deception, arising [illegible] treaties between other nations [illegible] plea may be extended [illegible] new stipulations of new treaties, to which the U. States may not be a party. The Government will not cease to urge upon that of Great Britain, full [illegible] reparation for all losses, [illegible] detention or otherwise, to which American citizens have hitherto been, or may hereafter be subjected, by the exercise of rights which this Government cannot recognize as legitimate and proper [illegible]

Nor will I indulge [illegible] sense of justice of Great Britain [illegible] strain her to make reparation for any wrong, or loss, which [illegible] engaged in the prosecution of [illegible] merce, may have experienced [illegible] of her cruisers or other public [illegible] This Government, at the same time, will relax no effort to prevent its citizens, if there be any so disposed, from [illegible] a traffic so revolting to the [illegible] manity. It seeks to do no more than protect the fair and honest trader, [illegible] lestation and injury; but while [illegible] prising mariner, engaged in the pursuit of an honorable trade, is entitled to its protection, it will visit with [illegible] ment, others of an opposite [illegible]

I invite your attention to [illegible] for the suppression of [illegible] trade, and recommend [illegible] as may give to [illegible] ency. That the American [illegible] abused by the [illegible] other nations, is [illegible] gress has, [illegible] under its consideration, [illegible] well justifies [illegible] tion.

I also communicate herewith [illegible] of a correspondence between [illegible] son and Lord Palmerston [illegible] so interesting to the [illegible] rice duties, which [illegible] the justice of Great Britain [illegible] geously to the United States.

At the opening of the last [illegible] the President [illegible] Congress [illegible] progress which had [illegible] gociating a convention [illegible] ernment and that of England [illegible] to the final settlement of the [illegible] boundary between the [illegible] the two countries. I regret to [illegible] the further advancement of the [illegible] been accomplished [illegible] is owing to circumstances [illegible] tive of any abatement of the [illegible] parties to hasten the [illegible] clusion, and to settle the [illegible] pute, as early as possible. [illegible] of the session, it is my hope to be able to announce some further degree of progress towards the accomplishment of this highly desirable end.

The commission appointed by this government for the exploration and survey of the line of boundary separating the States of Maine and New-Hampshire from the conterminous British Provinces, is, it is believed, about to close its field of labors, and is expected soon to report the results of its examinations to the Department of State. The report, when received, will be laid before Congress.

The failure on the part of Spain to pay, with punctuality, the interest due under the Convention of 1834, for the settlement of claims between the two countries, has made it the duty of the Executive to call the especial attention of that Government to the subject. A disposition has been manifested by it, which is believed to be entirely sincere, to fulfil its obligations, in this respect, so soon as its internal condition and the state of its finances will permit. An arrangement is in progress, from the result of which, it is trusted that those of our citizens who have claims under the Convention, will, at no distant day, receive the stipulated payments.

A Treaty of Commerce and Navigation with Belgium, was concluded and signed at Washington, on the 29th March, 1840, and was duly sanctioned by the Senate of the United States. The Treaty was ratified by His Belgian Majesty, but did not receive the approbation of the Belgian Chambers within the time limited by its terms, and has, therefore, become void.

This occurrence assumes the graver aspect from the consideration that, in 1833, a Treaty negotiated between the two Governments, and ratified on the part of the U. States, failed to be ratified on the part of Belgium. The Representative of that Government, at Washington, informs the Department of State, that he has been instructed to give explanations of the causes which occasioned delay in the approval of the late Treaty by the Legislature, and to express the regret of the King at the occurrence.

The joint commission under the Convention with Texas, to ascertain the true boundary between the two countries, has concluded its labors; but the final report of the Commissioner of the United States has not been received. It is understood, however, that the meridian line, as traced by the commission, lies somewhat further East than the position hitherto generally assigned to it, and, consequently, includes in Texas some part of the territory which had been considered as belonging to the States of Louisiana and Arkansas.

The United States cannot but take a deep interest in whatever relates to this young but growing Republic. Settled principally by emigrants from the United States, we [illegible] the happiness to know, that the great principles of civil liberty are there destined to flourish, under wise institutions and wholesome laws; and that, through its example, another evidence is to be afforded of the capacity of popular institutions, to [illegible] the prosperity, happiness, and permanent glory of the human race.

The great truth, that government was made for the people, and not the people for government, has already been established in the practice and by the example of these United States, and we can do no other than contemplate its further exemplification by a sister Republic, with the deepest interest.

Our relations with the independent States of this hemisphere, formerly under the dominion of Spain, [illegible]

[illegible] With [illegible] other Indian tribes, we are enjoying the blessings of peace. Our duty as well as our best interests, prompts us [illegible] intercourse with them, faithfully fulfilling our engagements, the practice of strict justice, as well as the constant exercise of acts of benevolence and kindness. These are the great instruments of civilization, and through the use of them alone, can the untutored child of the forest be induced to listen to its teachings.

The Secretary of State, on whom the acts of Congress have devolved the duty of directing the proceedings for the taking of the Sixth Census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, will report to the two Houses the progress of the work.

The enumeration of persons has been completed, and exhibits a grand total of 17,[illegible] making an increase over the Census of 1830, of 4,202,646 inhabitants, and showing a gain in a ratio exceeding 32 1-2 per cent. for the last ten years.

From the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, you will be informed of the condition of the finances. The balance in the Treasury on the first of January last, as stated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, submitted to Congress at the Extra Session, was $987,345 03. The receipts into the Treasury, during the first three quarters of this year, from all sources, amount to $23,467,052 52. The estimated receipts for the fourth quarter amounts to $6,943,095 25, amounting to $30,410,167 87; and making with the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January last $31,397,512 80. The expenditures for the first three quarters of this year amount to $24,734,346 97. The expenditures for the fourth quarter, as estimated, will amount to $7,290,723 73; thus making a total of $32,025,070; and leaving a deficit to be provided for, on the first of January next, of about $627,557 90.

Of the loan of $12,000,000, which was authorized by Congress at its late session, only $5,432,726 88 have been negotiated. The shortness of the time which it had to run, has presented no inconsiderable impediment in the way of its being taken by capitalists at home, while the same cause would have operated with much greater force in the foreign market. For that reason the foreign market has been resorted to; and it is now submitted, whether it would not be advisable to amend the law by making what remains undisposed of, payable at a more distant day.

Should it be necessary, in any view that Congress may take of the subject, to revise the existing tariff of duties, I beg leave to say, that, in the performance of that most delicate operation, moderate counsels would seem to be the wisest. The Government under which it is our happiness to live, owes its existence to the spirit of compromise which prevailed among its framers—jarring and discordant opinions could only have been reconciled by that noble spirit or patriotism which prompted conciliation, and resulted in harmony. In the same spirit the compromise bill, as it is commonly called, was adopted at the session of 1833.

While the people of no portion of the Union will ever hesitate to pay all necessary taxes for the support of Government, yet an innate repugnance exists to the imposition of burthens not really necessary for that object. In imposing duties, however, for the purpose of revenue, a right to discriminate as to the article on which the duty shall be laid, as well as the amount, necessarily and most properly exists. Otherwise the Government would be placed in the condition of having to levy the same duties upon all articles, the productive as well as the unproductive. The slightest duty upon some might have the effect of causing their importation to cease, whereas others entering extensively into the consumption of the country, might bear the heaviest, without any visible diminution in the amount imported. So also the Government may be justified in so discriminating, by reference to other considerations of domestic policy connected with our manufactures. So long as the duties shall be laid with distinct reference to the wants of the Treasury, no well founded objection can exist against them.

It might be deemed desirable that no such augmentation of the taxes should take place, as would have the effect of annulling the land proceeds distribution act of the last session, which act is declared to be inoperative the moment the duties are increased beyond 20 per cent, the maximum rate established by the Compromise Act. Some of the provisions of the Compromise Act which will go into effect on the 30th day of June next, may, however, be found exceedingly inconvenient in practice, under any regulations that Congress may adopt. I refer more particularly to that relating to the home valuation. A difference in value of the same article to some extent, will, necessarily, exist at different ports—but that is altogether insignificant, when compared with the conflicts in valuation, which are likely to arise, from the differences of opinions among the numerous appraisers of merchandize. In many instances the estimates of value must be conjectural, and thus as many different rates of value may be established as there are appraisers. These differences in valuation may also be increased by the inclination, which, without the slightest imputation on their honesty, may arise on the part of the appraisers in favor of their respective ports of entry. I recommend this whole subject to the consideration of Congress, with a single additional remark.

Certainty and permanency in any system of governmental policy are, in all respects, eminently desirable, but more particularly is this true in all that affects trade and commerce, the operations of which depend much more on the certainty of their returns, and calculations which embrace distant periods of time, than on high bounties, or duties, which are liable to constant fluctuations.

At your late session, I invited your attention to the condition of the currency and exchanges, and urged the necessity of adopting such measures as were consistent with the constitutional competency of the Government, in order to correct the unsoundness of the one, and as far as practicable the inequalities of the other. No country can be in the enjoyment of its full measures of prosperity, without the presence of a medium of exchange, approximating to uniformity of value. What is necessary as between nations of the earth, is also important as between the inhabitants of different parts of the same country: with the first, the precious metals constitute the chief medium of circulation, and such also would be the case as to the last, but for inventions, comparatively modern, which have furnished, in place of gold and silver, a paper circulation. I do not propose to enter into a comparative analysis of the merits of the two systems. Such belonged more properly to the period of the introduction of the paper system.

The speculative philosopher might find inducements to prosecute the inquiry, but his researches could only lead him to conclude, that the paper system had probably better never been introduced, and that society might have been much happier without it. The practical statesman has a very different task to perform. He has to look at things as they are—to take them as he finds them—to supply deficiences, and to prune excesses as far as in him lies. The task of furnishing a corrective for derangement of the paper medium with us, is inexpressibly great. The power exerted by the States to charter banking corporations, and which, having been carried to a great excess, has filled the country with, in most of the States, an irredeemable paper medium, is an evil which, in some way or other, requires a corrective.

The rates at which bills of exchange are negotiated between different parts of the country, furnish an index of the value of the local substitute for gold or silver, which is, in many parts, so far depreciated, as not to be received, except at a large discount, in payment of debts, or in the purchase of produce.

It could earnestly be desired that every bank, not possessing the means of resumption, should follow the example of the late United States Bank of Pennsylvania, and go into liquidation, rather than by refusing to do so continue embarrassment in the way of solvent institutions, thereby augmenting the difficulties incident to the present condition of things. Whether this Government, with due regard to the rights of the States, has any power to constrain the banks either to resume specie payments, or to force them into liquidation, is an inquiry which will not fail to claim your consideration.

In view of the great advantages which are allowed the corporators, not among the least of which is the authority contained in most of their charters, to make loans to three times the amount of their capital, thereby often deriving three times as much interest on the same amount of money as any individual is permitted by law to receive, no sufficient apology can be urged for a long continued suspension of specie payments. Such suspension is productive of the greatest detriment to the public, by expelling from circulation the precious metals, and seriously hazarding the success of any effort that this Government can make, to increase commercial facilities, and to advance the public interests.

This is the more to be regretted, and the indispensable necessity for a sound currency becomes the more manifest, when we reflect on the vast amount of the internal commerce of the country. Of this we have no statistics, nor just data for forming adequate opinions. But there can be no doubt, that the amount of transportation coast-wise, by sea, and the transportation inland by railroads and canals, and by steamboats and other modes of conveyance, over the surface of our vast rivers and immense lakes, and the value of property carried and interchanged by these means, form a general aggregate, to which the foreign commerce of the country, large as it is, make but a distant approach.

In the absence of any controlling power over this subject, which by forcing a general resumption of specie payments, would at once have the effect of restoring a sound medium of exchange, and would leave to the country but little to desire, what measure of relief, falling within the limits of our constitutional competency, does it become this Government to adopt? It was my painful duty at your last session, under the weight of most solemn obligations, to differ with Congress on the measures which it proposed for my approval, and which it doubtless regarded as corrective of existing evils. Subsequent reflection, and the events since occurring, have only served to confirm me in the opinions then entertained, and frankly expressed.

I must be permitted to add, that no scheme of governmental policy, unaided by individual exertions, can be valuable for ameliorating the present condition of things. Commercial modes of exchange and a good currency, are but the necessary means of commerce and intercourse, not the direct productive sources of wealth. Wealth can only be accumulated by the earnings of industry, and the savings of frugality; and nothing can be more ill-judged than to look to facilities in borrowing, or to a redundant circulation, for the power of discharging pecuniary obligations. The country is full of resources, and the people full of energy, and the great and permanent remedy for present embarrassments must be sought in industry, economy, the observance of good faith, and the favorable influence of time.

In pursuance of a pledge given to you in my last message to Congress, which pledge I urge as an apology for adventuring to present you the details of any plan, the Secretary of the Treasury will be ready to submit to you, should you require it, a plan of finance, which, while it throws around the public treasure reasonable guards for its protection, and rests on powers acknowledged in practice to exist from the origin of the Government, will, at the same time, furnish to the country a sound paper medium, and afford all reasonable facilities for regulating the Exchanges. When submitted, you will perceive in it a plan amendatory of the existing laws in relation to the Treasury Department—subordinate in all respects to the will of Congress directly, and the will of the people indirectly—self-sustaining, should it be found in practice to realize its promises in theory, and repealable at the pleasure of Congress.

It proposes by effectual restraints, and by invoking the true spirit of our institutions, to separate the purse from the sword: or, more properly to speak, denies any control to the President over the agents who may be selected to carry it into execution, but what may be indispensably necessary to secure the fidelity of such agents; and, by wise regulations keeps plainly apart from each other, private and public funds. It contemplates the establishment of a Board of Control, at the Seat of Government, with agencies at prominent commercial points, or wherever else Congress shall direct, for the safe-keeping and disbursement of the public moneys, and a substitution, at the option of the public creditor, of Treasury Notes, in lieu of gold and silver. It proposes to limit the issues to an amount not to exceed $15,000,000—without the express sanction of the Legislative power. It also authorizes the receipt of individual deposits of gold and silver to a limited amount, and the granting certificates of deposit, divided into such sums as may be called for by the depositors. It proceeds a step further, and authorizes the purchase and sale of Domestic Bills and drafts, resting on a real and substantial basis, payable at sight or having but a short time to run, and drawn on places not less than one hundred miles apart—which authority, except in so far as may be necessary for Government purposes exclusively, is only to be exerted upon the express condition, that its exercise shall not be prohibited by the State in which the agency is situated.

In order to cover the expenses incident to the plan, it will be authorized to receive moderate premiums for certificates issued on deposits, and on bills bought and sold, and thus, as far as its dealings extend, to furnish facilities to commercial intercourse at the lowest possible rates, and to subduct from the earnings of industry, the least possible sum. It uses the State Banks at a distance from the agencies, as auxilliaries, without imparting any power to trade in its name. It is subjected to such guards and restraints as have appeared to be necessary. It is the creature of law, and exists only at the pleasure of the legislature. It is made to rest on an actual specie basis, in order to redeem the notes at the places of issue—produces no dangerous redundancy of circulation—affords no temptation to speculation—is attended by no inflation of prices—is equable in its operation—makes the Treasury notes, which it may use along with the certificates of deposit, and the notes of specie-paying banks—convertible at the place where collected, receivable in payment of Government dues—and, without violating any principle of the Constitution, affords the Government and the People such facilities as are called for by the wants of both. Such, it has appeared to me, are its recommendations, and in view of them it will be submitted whenever you may require it, to your consideration.

I am not able to perceive that any fair and candid objection can be urged against the plan, the principal outlines of which I have thus presented. I cannot doubt but that the notes which it proposes to furnish, at the voluntary option of the public creditor, issued in lieu of the revenue and its certificates of deposit, will be maintained at an equality with gold and silver, every where. They are redeemable in gold and silver on demand, at the places of issue. They are receivable every where in payment of Government dues. The Treasury notes are limited to an amount of one-fourth less than the estimated annual receipts of the Treasury: and in addition they rest upon the faith of the Government for their redemption.—If all these assurances are not sufficient to make them available, then the idea, as it seems to me, of furnishing a sound paper medium of exchanges may be entirely abandoned.

If a fear be indulged that the Government may be tempted to run into excess in its issues at any future day, it seems to me that no such apprehension can reasonably be entertained, until all confidence in the representatives of the States and of the people, as well as of the people themselves, shall be lost. The weightiest considerations of policy require that the restraints now proposed to be thrown around the measure should not, for light causes, be removed. To argue against any proposed plan its liability to possible abuse, is to reject every expedient, since every thing dependent on human action is liable to abuse. Fifteen millions of Treasury notes may be issued as the maximum, but a discretionary power is to be given to the Board of Control, under that sum, and every consideration will unite in leading them to feel their way with caution. For the eight first years of the existence of the late Bank of the United States, its circulation barely exceeded $4,000,000; and for five of its most prosperous years, it was about equal to $16,000,000; furthermore, the authority given to receive private deposites to a limited amount, and to issue certificates in such sums as may be called for by the depositors, may so far fill up the channels of circulation as greatly to diminish the necessity of any considerable issue of Treasury notes.

A restraint upon the amount of private deposites has seemed to be indispensably necessary, from an apprehension thought to be well founded, that in an emergency of trade, confidence might be so far shaken in the banks as to induce a withdrawal from them of private deposites, with a view to ensure their unquestionable safety when deposited with the Government, which might prove eminently disastrous to the State banks. Is it objected that it is proposed to authorize the agencies to deal in Bills of Exchange? It is answered that such dealings are to be carried on at the lowest possible premium—are made to rest on an unquestionably sound basis—are designed to reimburse merely the expenses which would otherwise devolve upon the Treasury, and are in strict subordination to the decision of the supreme Court, in the case of the Bank of Augusta against Earle, and other reported cases; and thereby avoids all conflict with State jurisdiction, which I hold to be indispensibly requisite. It leaves the banking privileges of the States without interference—looks to the Treasury and the Union: and, while furnishing every facility to the first, is careful of the interests of the last.

But above all, it is created by law, is amendable by law, and is repealable by law; and, wedded as I am to no theory, but looking solely to the advancement of the public good, I shall be among the very first to urge its repeal if it be found not to subserve the purposes and objects for which it may be created. Nor will the plan be submitted in any overweening confidence in the sufficiency of my own judgment, but with much greater reliance on the wisdom and patriotism of Congress. I cannot abandon this subject without urging upon you, in the most emphatic manner, whatever may be your action on the suggestions which I have felt it to be my duty to submit, to relieve the Chief Executive Magistrate, by any and all constitutional means, from a controlling power over the public Treasury. If, in the plan proposed, should you deem it worthy of your consideration, that separation is not as complete as you may desire, you will, doubtless, amend it in that particular. For myself, I disclaim all desire to have any control over the public moneys, other than what is indispensably necessary to execute the laws which you may pass.

Nor can I fail to advert, in this connection, to the debts which many of the States of the Union have contracted abroad, and under which they continue to labor. That indebtedness amounts to a sum not less than $200,000,000, and which has been retributed to them, for the most part, in works of internal improvements, which are destined to prove of vast importance in ultimately advancing their prosperity and wealth. For the debts thus contracted, the States are alone responsible. I can do no more than express the belief that each State will feel itself bound by every consideration of honor, as well as of interest, to meet its engagements with punctuality. The failure, however, of any one State to do so, should in no degree affect the credit of the rest; and the foreign capitalist will have no just cause to experience alarm as to all other State stocks, because any one or more of the States may neglect to provide with punctuality the means of redeeming their engagements. Even such States, should there be any, considering the great rapidity with which their resources are developing themselves will not fail to have the means, at no distant day, to redeem their obligations to the uttermost farthing; nor will I doubt but that in view of that honorable conduct which has evermore governed the States, and the people of this Union, they will each and all resort to every legitimate expedient, before they will forego a faithful compliance with their obligations.

From the report of the Secretary of War, and other reports accompanying it, you will be informed of the progress which has been made in the fortifications designed for the protection of our principal cities, roadsteads, and inland frontier, during the present year; together with their true state and condition. They will be prosecuted to completion with all the expedition which the means placed by Congress at the disposal of the Executive will allow.

I recommend particularly to your consideration, that portion of the Secretary's report which proposes the establishment of a chain of military posts, from Council Bluffs to some point on the Pacific Ocean, within our limits. The benefit thereby destined to accrue to our citizens engaged in the fur trade, over that wilderness region, added to the importance of cultivating friendly relations with savage tribes inhabiting it, and at the same time of giving protection to our frontier settlements, and of establishing the means of safe intercourse between the American settlements at the mouth of the Columbia river, and those on this side of the Rocky Mountains, would seem to suggest the importance of carrying into effect the recommendations upon this head with as little delay as may be practicable.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy, will place you in possession of the present condition of that important arm of the national defence. Every effort will be made to add to this efficiency, and cannot too strongly urge upon you, liberal appropriations to that branch of public service. Inducements of the weightiest character exist for the adoption of this course of policy. Our extended and otherwise exposed maritime frontier, calls for protection, to the furnishing of which an efficient naval force is indispensable. We look to no foreign conquests, nor do we propose to enter into competition with any other nation for the supremacy on the Ocean,—but it is due not only to the honor, but to the security of the People of the United States, that no nation should be permitted to invade our waters at pleasure, and subject our towns and villages to conflagration or pillage. Economy in all branches of the public service, is due from all the public agents to the people—but parsimony alone would suggest the withholding of the necessary means, for the protection of our domestic firesides from invasion, and our national honor from disgrace. I would most earnestly recommend to Congress, to abstain from all appropriations, for objects not absolutely necessary; but I take upon myself, without a moment of hesitancy, all the responsibility of recommending the increase and prompt equipment of that gallant Navy, which has lighted up every sea with its victories, and spread an imperishable glory over the country.

The report of the Postmaster General will claim your attention, not only because of the valuable suggestions which it contains, but because of the great importance which, at all times, attaches to that interesting branch of public service. The increasing expense of transporting the mail along the principal routes, necessarily claims the public attention, and has awakened a corresponding solicitude on the part of the Government. The transmission of the mail must keep pace with those facilities of inter-communication which are every day becoming greater through the building of railroads, and the application of steam power—but it cannot be disguised that, in order to do so, the Post Office Department is subjected to heavy exactions. The lines of communication between distant parts of the Union, are, to a great extant, occupied by railroads, which, in the nature of things, possess a complete monopoly, and the department is therefore liable to heavy and unreasonable charges. This evil is destined to great increase in future, and some timely measure may become necessary to guard against it.

I feel it my duty to bring under your consideration a practice which has grown up in the administration of the Government, and which, I am deeply convinced, ought to be correct[illegible] I allude to the exercise of the power, which usage, rather than reason, has vested in the Presidents, of removing incumbents from office, in order to substitute others more in favor with the dominant party. My own conduct, in this respect, has been governed by a conscientious purpose to exercise the removing power, only in cases of unfaithfulness or inability, or in those in which its exercise appeared necessary, in order to discountenance and suppress that spirit of active partizanship on the part of holders of office, which not only withdraws them from the steady and impartial discharge of their official duties, but exerts an undue and injurious influence over elections, and degrades the character of the Govrnment itself, inasmuch as it exhibits the Chief Magistrate, as being a party, through his agents, in the secret plots or open workings of political parties.

In respect to the exercise of this power, nothing should be left to discretion, which may safely be regulated by law; and it is of high importance to restrain, as far as possible, stimulus of personal interests in public elections. Considering the great increase which has been made in public offices, in the last quarter of a century, and the probability of farther increase, we incur the hazard of witnessing violent political contests, directed too often to the single object of retaining office, by those who are in, or obtaining it, by those who are out. Under the influence of these convictions, I shall cordially concur in any constitutional measures for regulating, and by regulating, restrain, the power of removal.

I suggest for your consideration the propriety of making, without further delay some specific application of the funds derived under the will of Mr. Smithson of England, for the diffusion of knowledge; and which have, heretofore, been vested in public stocks, until such time as Congress should think proper to give them a specific direction. Nor will you, I feel confident, permit any abatement of the principal of the legacy to be made, should it turn out that the stocks, in which the investments have been made, have undergone a depriciation.

In conclusion, I commend to your care the interests of this District, for which you are the exclusive legislators. Considering that this city is the residence of the Government, and, for a large part of the year, of Congress, and, considerig also the great cost of the Public Buildings, and the propriety of affording at all times careful protection, it seems not unreasonable that Congress should contribute towards the expense of an efficient police.

JOHN TYLER.

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1841.

MARRIED,

In Binghamton, in the Baptist Church, on Sunday evening, the 5th inst., by the Rev. J. M. [illegible], Mr. ROBERT C. WHITMORE, Printer, to Miss SARAH ANN ABBOTT, both of Binghamton.

In Brookfield, on the 27th ultimo, by Rev. M. [illegible], Mr. REUBEN A. BURDICK, of Brookfield, and Miss FANNY GREEN, of West Edmeston.

In West Edmeston, on the 4th inst., by Joshua Maxson, Jr. Esq., Mr. WILLIAM LAMB, of West Edmeston, and Miss MARIA JOSLIN, of Plainfield.

"I want a wife who does not want [illegible]
Affectionate and fair;
To solace all the woes of life,
And all its joys to share,
Of temper sweet—of yielding will,
Of firm, yet placid mind,
With all my faults to love me still,
With sentiments refined." [illegible]

In Piscataway, N. J., Oct. 7th, by Rev. W. B. Gillett, Mr. JEREMIAH DUNHAM, and Miss ELIZABETH, [illegible] of Reuben F. Randolph, all of Piscataway.

On the 21st Oct. by the same, Mr. STILLMAN F. RANDOLPH, of Newark city, and Miss [name not sent us,] daughter of widow Catharine [illegible] of Green Brook.

DIED,

In Waterford, Ct., on the 26th ultimo, after a protracted illness of some months, Eld. BENEDICT WESCOTT, of Preston, Chenango co., N. Y., aged 47 years.

Br. Wescott embraced religion in early life, and united with the S. D. B. Church at Waterford, where he continued an active and prominent member, and when called to preach the word, was a zealous advocate of his Master's cause. Some years since he removed to Preston, to preside over the S. D. B. Church in that place, where his labors have been mostly continued, until disease rendered it impracticable to continue them longer. He died in the full assurance of that rest that remains for the people of God. [illegible]

In Waterford, on the 12th ultimo, with croup, JOSEPHINE, only daughter of Edmund and Grace Darrow, aged 5 years.

In New Market, on the 18th ultimo, CHARLES LYNCH, a young man in the bloom of life.

Fellow youth! you must die, and are you prepared? Are you waiting for the coming of your Lord? or are you saying, "Time enough yet?"—Such will surely be disappointed for in such an hour as ye think not Death will come and seize you as his victim, and lay you low in the dust. We ought to live so as to never be taken on surprise. W. B. G.

In Syracuse, on the 4th inst., of Measles, FRANCES ADELINE, only daughter of R. W. and C. D. Richmond, aged one year and ten months.

Oh, 'tis a mournful thing to see
How all that's fair must die;
How death will pluck the sweetest bud,
On his cold breast to lie.

In Truxton, on the 1st inst., ELIZABETH A., daughter, aged 8 years, 5 mo. 23 days, and on the 13th, CHARLES M., son, aged 5 years, 6 mo. 17 days, children of Ira C. Burdick; also, on the 1st, FRANCIS S., infant son of Elijah E. Benjamin, aged 7 mo., all died of Scarlet Fever.

LIST OF LETTERS.

"Mary," (thank you.) Eld. N. V. Hull, M. Sheldon P. M., Ephraim Maxson, (you have our thanks,) Geo. Tracy, (we are much obliged.) A. Babcock, (it is done,) B. F., (yes, soon.) I. D. Titsworth, (we will attend to your business as far as we can, as Brother Wells is not here. There are not any books bound to our knowledge.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of M. Sheldon, $2, cr. M. Bush. Isaac D. Titsworth, $6, cr. for Question Books from Church in Shiloh, $3,35; to Jacob F. Randolph, $2 vol. 2, self ,65 cts.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of [illegible] six per cent has been levied on the deposite notes in force in said company on the 25th day of October 1841, and that the same is requested to be paid to the Treasurer at the office of said Company in the village of Cazenovia on or before the first day of January next.

Dated at Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.
40a6 WM J HOUGH, Treasurer.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

NEW GOODS,
CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.
J. M. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 60 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.
Nov. 24.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.
De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.
SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, and as they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the [illegible] barterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the
October 1. STONE STORE.

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.
TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has on hand, and [illegible] a good assortment of [illegible] Harnesses, [illegible] Bridles, Martingales, [illegible] Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, [illegible] Valises, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, [illegible] Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck Yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles [illegible] in a shop of this kind, [illegible] as low as any shop west of Albany [illegible] De Ruyter not excepted, [illegible] quality and durability.
[illegible] of the above articles, [illegible] and the remainder [illegible] Notes; also, will take all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese, [illegible] every thing that is raised by the Farmer [illegible] Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible]
Fine Lumber for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. [illegible] Flooring.
J. R. RIDER.
De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he [illegible] and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.
Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.
N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.
One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.
De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of a superior quality is now offered [illegible] purchasers, at prices 10 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. M. ELMORE.
Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA
WILL find a [illegible] article at a low price at
Nov. 24 ELMORE'S.

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, and Jane Goodwin, by John Maxson their special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition therein, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, on the 26th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated in the village of De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of Le Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded, beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner thereof; thence south about one rod to lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence east on the said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by Marcus Bump; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.
Dated Nov. 15, 1841.
JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD. } Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40t3

POETRY.

From the Ladies' Companion.

The Northern Lights.

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

The Northern sky is filled with fires,
But not of lurid glow;
White in the air like icy spires
That shoot from banks of snow,
The rays from pailed-up clouds ascend
And pour a silver light,
Where Heaven's eternal arches bend
Above the halls of Night.

In vain have mortals toiled to scale
Those high and brilliant hills;
Sealed are the fountains, pure and pale,
Of all their frozen rills,
No eagle's wing can soar so far,
No sun can melt the chain,
Let down in links from star to star,
To bind them to the main.

Mysterious, solemn, cold and clear,
Their shapes majestic rise,
Like berriers round this earthly sphere,
Like gates of Paradise.
And when, at times, a glory streams
Along the shrouded land,
Like Eden's flaming sword it seems
Waved by an angel's hand.

Ye wondrous fires—that seldom give
Your splendor to our clime,
But in your Arctic regions lie
Through all revolting time--
Well may Imagination faint
Before your sacred blaze,
And baffled Science fail to paint
The source of Heaven-lit rays!

Miscellaneous Department.

From the New York Observer.

CHEEVERS LETTERS FROM SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

Excursion from Lisbon to Cintra.—The Royal Palaces.—Wilderness and beauty of the scenery.—Convent on the summit of the mountains.—Fine taste of the monks.

I am writing you from Cintra, in the kingdom of Portugal, from the scene rendered interesting as that in which Junot and Wellington held their convention—in the neighborhood of the place where Sir John Moore closed his brilliant career. They pretend to show the table at which the convention was signed, with the ink stains produced by Junot in his anger; but inasmuch as the signing was done at Torres Vedras, you are at liberty to disbelieve. We started from Lisbon in the morning, with a coach and four, the horses managed by two antique looking postillions, who drove at the usual steady and cautious pace of all the coachmen in Andalusia. For several miles after leaving the city our road lay through a series of richly cultivated and wooded fields and gardens, delightful indeed to the eye when the lofty walls permitted us to enjoy the view. Here and there a rich wall of roses overtopped the stones, clustering through a trellised frame work, and the leafy vegetation was quite as luxuriant as it is with us in the close of the month of June. The country is so rich by nature that the most miserable government seems unable to subdue its extraordinary fertility and beauty. What a melancholy spectacle, to see the inhabitants of a country inferior to the aspect of the very country they inhabit. How different from the scenes of the industry and intellectual superiority exhibited in happy New England. There, the remark from the stranger may often be heard, "How is it possible that the people contrive to live among these rocks," but never—what a degraded population in the midst of the munificence of nature!

More melancholy than all, is the dreary want of any thing like a sentiment of religion. It is impossible to describe it. It is like breathing an atmosphere exhausted of its vital properties. The moral being pants for something which will nourish it, but there is nothing,—nothing in the sentiments or usage of society, nothing in the rites or ceremonies of religion, to minister to the soul's spiritual wants, or sustain the fire of devotion on its inward altar. The whole atmosphere is distressing to the soul. No person can imagine it, who has not traveled on the continent of Europe. You cannot tell how a Christian, who has long been separated from Christian society, pants after it. You cannot tell, until deprived of it, how great a help it is for keeping near to God, how powerful an assistance towards maintaining a conscience void of offence. Here you are continually thrown into society, where a declaration of your sentiments, when they are wounded by sinful conversation, would keep you in a continual quarrel all the day long, or else make you to be considered as an impertinent intruder. Now it is not a little difficult, in such a case, to maintain that holy decorum, which conscience, the word of God, and in our happy country, the expectation of society demand.

Our party consisted of several English gentlemen, a physician from Liverpool, a merchant from Manchester, another from Glasgow, and a clergyman of the Established church, a fellow in one of the Colleges in Cambridge. Alas! it is a melancholy sight to see the holy office of a minister of Christ esteemed so lightly. He was evidently a man of much reading, of interesting conversation, and of easy manners, but one whose religion allowed him to attend the theatres, play at cards, and adopt all the habits of a gay follower of pleasure.

The conversation in the coach, for a while, was upon the prospects of America. It was interesting to observe the different opinions formed upon the probability of the duration of our government. The clergyman thought it would soon come to an end. An intelligent gentleman from Scotland maintained a contrary opinion, and thought that our internal conflicts would, in the result, only strengthen the constitution, and contribute to its prosperity. The clergyman remarked on the singular contrast between Russia and the United States, both arriving at vast power and advancing in refinement, but by means directly the reverse. The Scotch gentleman pointed out the difference between the two. The power of the United States rested upon the foundations of human society, and would increase with the interests of the mass of the people. The power of Russia rested upon an artificial despotism, and being built out of the ignorance and degredation of the people, could not last.

A paved street, over which the coach jolted and rattled with great noise, prevented the conversation from being continued with ease or freedom. After a tedious ride we found ourselves advancing towards Cintra. It was a sudden and delightful contrast. And it is quite impossible to describe the picturesque beauty, the mingled wildness and richness, the luxuriance and magnificence of the scenery of this place. Coming towards it from the east, and passing, just before we arrive at it, through the bleak and desolate portion of the country, and not being able to command more than a concentrated view of the town and the mountain, as we came near it, I was most agreeably disappointed in the rapid change from a cold air to a warm one, and from the barren heather, to a succession of delightful vistas, by which the road winds upwards to the centre of the village, and the neighborhood of its most interesting landscapes and edifices.

The royal palaces in this wild and beautiful retreat are admirably situated, commanding a most extensive reach and variety of landscape scenery. The palace of the Queen, on the eastern side of the mountains, is the finest of them all, in the beauty of its apartments, the magnificence and extent of its gardens, and the noble sweep of its prospects. Its walls within are hung with a great number of the most exquisite paintings. The palace on the western and northern sides of the mountains commands an equally beautiful view of the ocean and the surrounding country, and takes in a distant prospect of the palace built by Lord Beckford, but now in ruins. The walk to this spot winds along the sides of the mountains through overhanging cork trees, and it is well worth an hour to visit so striking a proof of folly, caprice, and extravagance. Its owner consumed, it is said, more than a million sterling. Childe Harold's description of this region are as true as they are beautiful.

> The horrid crags, by toppling convent crowned,
> The cork-trees hoar, that clothe the shaggy steep,
> The mountain moss, by scorching skies embrowned,
> The sunken glen, whose sunless shrubs must weep,
> The tender azure of the unruffled deep,
> The orange tints, that gild the greenest bough,
> The vine on high, the willowed branch below,
> Mixed in one mighty scene, with varied beauty glow

The whole region, with its unrivalled wildness and beauty, the power and variety of its contrasts, the tropical luxuriance and richness of its vegetation, and the Alpine sublimity of its granite crags and mountain summits, forms one of the most perfect and entiring combinations ever chosen for earthly paradise by royal taste and luxury. Among other points of interest you may find in the mountains at Cintra the source of the grand Roman Aqueduct, which still supplies the city of Lisbon with water. The main road passes beneath its lofty arches, and winds around the mountain at a point very near where this stupendous work terminates. At intervals its arches are visible all the way to Lisbon, and wherever it passes beneath the surface of the earth, its course is marked by small white towers dotting the landscape.

One of the sights most worthy to be seen in Cintra is the convent on the topmost summit of the highest of its mountains. It is a most romantic spot, deserted now, and the more beautiful and interesting for that; there being a degree of melancholy solemnity and sacredness in its desolatian, which it could not have possessed when the fat lazy friars made it their wine-cellar and kitchen. It is most singularly situated, being hung upon the rocky pinnacle with great daring, as upon the point of a needle, and perfectly inaccessible, save at one corner, where the cork-screw path up to it terminates in a flat space on the mountain just big enough to make a little court-yard for the friar's donkeys. In a clear day the view from the battlements is beyond expression grand and beautiful, commanding the ocean and the land for very many leagues, and overloking every palace and tangled bosky bourne in the wild glens of the valley. Most unfortunately, the afternoon we were there, the peak was enveloped in clouds, so that all that could be seen from the cenvent tower was an impenetrable chaos of mist above, beneath, and around us. This, however, was exceedingly sublime, for we seemed to be looking down, down, down, into an abysmal, unfathomable infinitude; and when we rang the rusty old bell of the convent, its musical but melancholy peal, fell upon the fog-waves with a damp dull echo, like that of falling clods in a grave. It was as if the knell of a whole past generation were tolling, while voices from the muffling of their shrowds were struggling for an answer.

"Swinging slow with sullen roar,"

The building itself is a very curious pile, with an antique gothic court, surrounded by stone buttresses, admirably carved, covered with mosses, and stained and blackened with age. The main entrance opens into a hall which communicates by a gothic arch, very beautiful, with the chapel of the convent. The altar piece in this room is composed of fine sculptures of white marble and alabaster, intermingled with pillars of jet black. The designs of course are from Scripture, and exhibit a simplicity of taste and execution very seldom to be found amidst the tawdry ornaments of the generality of the churches. The roof of the chapel is of wrought mosaic. It is possible that the beings who inhabited this elevated spot, so far removed above the stir and example of the world, and so admirably adapted for the purposes of holy meditation and worship, could have been men of like passions and manners with the race of sensual friars elsewhere? Doubtless they were, and this temple, reared among the clouds, was but one variety in the universal system of idolatry and laziness. It seems almost impossible, and yet the purposes to which these piles of superstition were every where devoted are not less certain, than the fine taste exhibited by the monks in the selection of their building spots.

Yours truly, G. B. C.

From the Puritan.

ANCIENT INHABITANTS OF AMERICA.

I might inspire some lessons of natural humility, were the fact which our antiquarians have brought to light, fully realized. While our nation is vaunting of its greatness, and pushing westward its growth, and boasting of the States and Cities that are to be reared, in western forests, we forget, that we are doing this on the very graves of more populous nations, that have been swept with the besom of destruction.

Mr. Bradford in his American antiquities, collects from various sources the facts, and gives a sketch of the mounds, and remains of walls and other relicts, of nations that once occupied a large portion of our territory, and he establishes these general conclusions:—

1. That all these relicts indicate an origin from the same nation, or from branches of the same people. There is some variety, yet certain leading features, that show that they all proceeded from nations, having similar customs and institutions.

2. These ruins extend over a wide territory—commencing in the State of New York, and stretching along the western line of the Alleghanies; at the South they bend eastwardly through Georgia, to the southernmost part of Florida. At the West we find them in great numbers, upon the margins of all the Western waters, reaching far up, towards the sources of the Mississippi, and scattered along the banks of the Missouri, and its branches, and thence down to the Gulf of Mexico; and beyond the Red River, towards Mexico; and forming a junction with the similar fields of Mexican monuments. They touch the Atlantic ocean at no point, except in Florida. At the North and West, they find a limit and do not reach the colder regions, nor the shores of the Pacific. But at the South and West they extend down into Mexico. This makes it clear, that the occupants of the ground came in through Mexico, and not over the atlantic shores. If Florida, the only point of contact with the Atlantic, had been their place of landing, they would naturally have extended along the Atlantic shores,—following the shore, as all other settlements have done.

3. Their Numbers.—The traces of these monuments are astonishingly numerous, in the Western country. Of the earthen enclosures, or fortifications, 5000 might be found, and some of them enclosing more than 100 acres each, and the mounds and tumuli are much more numerous. This remark applies only to a portion of the territory covered with the ruins, but it is no less true of the remainder. Then many have disappeared, in the cultivation of the soil, and are now lost to observation; others, probably, are covered with forests, and are yet to be discovered. From this it would seem to be difficult to form an exaggerated idea, of the immense population, which covered this wide territory.

4. Their Antiquity.—They carry their own proofs of antiquity. They are not entrenchments thrown up hastily, by migrating hordes, but the ruins of cities and temples, some of the most massive and durable dimensions, and all indicating the existence of a population permanently established. From marks which they contain, we give a superior antiquity to those of the West, and trace a gradual diffusion of population eastward. How long a period was occupied in this growth—how long the ground was occupied, and these nations flourished, we know not, and even the precise time of the desertion of the ground, cannot be told, though appearances indicate a time very remote. Most of the monuments are covered with forests of trees of great age, and with marks that several generations of wood, have come and gone since the works of man were deserted. These works at least carry us back several centuries, before the discovery of America by Columbus.

5. Means of subsistence.—The situation of the towns on the richest soil and on the shores of streams indicate, that they had selected the choicest spots for agriculture, and got their subsistence mainly from that.

6. Their vast Public Works show them to have been under some controlling form of government, and to have been regulated by law, that is, to have been in a good degree of civilization.

7. The Object of the Structures.—That the tumuli and many, if not all the truncated mounds, have served as sepulchres may be inferred from the contents of a great number of them. But we are not to conclude that this is the sole purpose of these enormous artificial elevations. Some of them bear marks of having been used as fortifications, and some of having borne the altars of gods.

The Fortifications.—The best military judges have observed the skill with which the sites of many of the fortifications have been selected, and the artful combination of natural and artificial means of defence. They must have been built for defence against a powerful enemy. They probably looked to enemies both internal and external.

And the following conclusions respecting them seem to be well established.—1. The builders of these mounds were all of the same origin—branches of the same race, possessed of similar customs and institutions. 2. They were populous, and occupied a great extent of territory. 3. They had arrived at a considerable degree of civilization, were associated in large communities, and lived in extensive cities. 4. They possessed the use of metals, such as lead, copper, gold and silver, and probably the art of working them. 5. They sculptured in stone, and used stone in building. 6. They had the knowledge of the arch, of receding steps, of the art of pottery—producing utensils and urns, formed with taste, and costructed upon the principles of chemical composition—and of the art of brick-making. 7. That they worked the salt springs and manufactured salt. 8. That they were an agricultural people, living under a government and laws. 9. They possessed a system of religion and mythology connected with astronomy, which with its sister science of geometry, was in the hands of the priesthood. 10. That they were skilled in the art of fortification. 11. The epoch of their original settlement in the United States is of great antiquity. 12. Their origin was evidently from Mexico.

The above we suppose to be the sum of all that can be known respecting that great people, and these are only known by records written upon the ground. This glimpse at an unknown nation, opens a fine field for speculation and conjecture. These former inhabitants of the country, our author proves to be of the same stock with the present Indians, and to be identical with the red race in Asia. And from the light which he affords, we should infer those to be the descendants of Shem. And perhaps here is a part of the fulfillment of Noah's prophecy, that "God shall enlarge Japhet and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem." If the Europeans are the sons of Japhet, and if the Indian empire descended from Shem, and if they have thus given place to Europeans, here is a large realizing of the idea of Japhet's dwelling in the tents of Shem.

The Newspaper Press.—The following eloquent passage is taken from an Address recently delivered in Jefferson College, Louisiana, by professor A. H. Everett:

"An orator in the British Parliament, for example, finishes his speech at 4 o'clock in the morning, and at eight receives it in his newspaper with his morning meal, reported in full, and ready to be hurried on the wings of steam, more swift than those of the wind, to the remotest corner of the globe. Though his voice is heard by only two or three hundred persons, he speaks in fact, to all his countrymen far and near—to foreign nations, to the world.

"By the joint resolution of those two prodigious inventions, a stage is erected in every printing office, around which the whole contemporary race is assembled as an audience. In this country alone, there are already more than two thousand. What a spectacle of wonders! What potent machinery for good and evil! I know the abuses that belong to this system; they are, perhaps, in a greater or less degree inseparable from it. I am aware of the frivolous and even mischievous character of much of the popular literature, of the narrowness and coarseness—I may say brutality—of a portion of the periodical press, without distinction of party. Yet, with all its faults, of omissions and commissions, how much really valuable matter is, after all, to be found in these brief chronicles of the times? How much useful information and rational entertainment does not almost any one of them—even the least conspicuous—carry home to the fire-side of the remote inhabitant of the country? It costs him a dollar to go to one of our city theatres, and assist for three or four hours at a pretty indifferent representation of, in general, or an ordinary play.

"For thrice that amount the publisher of his newspaper furnishes him for a whole year with a weekly admission to the great world spectacle to which I have alluded. He listens to the debates in Parliament and Congress; the palaces and council rooms of Princes are laid open to him; he witnesses the tumult of contested elections; the shock of contending armies engaged upon the field of battle. The progress of the letters and the arts, the stirring incidents of private life, come in as interludes. Considered as a mere entertainment, how much superior is this vast and sacred panorama to the empty pageantry of the imitative stage. It has sometimes been said that the citizens of the United States have no relish for amusement. This great world spectacle, which is regularly furnished by newspapers, is the principle amusement of the American people. What makes it far more interesting is, that the spectator is also at the same time an actor.

"The same convenient sheet which spreads out weekly upon every village table a summary of the affairs of the whole contemporary world, also informs the citizen when the election is coming on at his own door, and when he may have the delightful excitement of voting out or voting in his neighbor, or, better still, of being voted in or voted out himself, as the fiat of the sovereign people may decide. Independent however, of this consideration, the value of the general diffusion of knowledge, which is chiefly effected by the newspaper press, can hardly be overrated.—There can be little risk in saying that, without the facilities of conveying information which are afforded by the joint action of the great modern improvements of locomotion and printing, the existence of a Republican Government among a population so thinly scattered as ours, over so vast a territory, would have been entirely impossible."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT
S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, FAGLIONES &c. &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good [illegible] as any other Store in this section will sell them for [illegible].

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has [illegible] his stock is now complete, and he [illegible] least a call, assuring them that [illegible] in their line shall be put [illegible] cent less than they [illegible] Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton [illegible]

Terms of sale [illegible]

He is also [illegible] Agent [illegible] the following Valuable Medicine:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.

[illegible]

DR. WATERMAN'S

Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this [illegible] the immediate effects [illegible] [illegible] tions. As an [illegible] auxiliary [illegible] Affections [illegible] This [illegible] Davies [illegible]

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible] Coughs, Asthma [illegible] Bronchitis [illegible] N. Y. [illegible] HOREHOUND [illegible]

WANTED,

10,000 Bags.
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth.
10,000 " Kersey.

[illegible]

In conclusion he would say, [illegible] receiving Goods from New-York [illegible] CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC.

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. [illegible]

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, [illegible] hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked [illegible] by over-reach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 41tf

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and Families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices. The following, among others, may now be found at his list:—

Web's Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Town's Analysis,
[illegible] Geography,
Parley's "
[illegible]
[illegible]

Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
[illegible] Latin Reader,
Polyglot Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi "
Cap "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy
Letter Paper,
Pasteboard Ruled Books,
Cap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.
De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with [illegible] establishment, is now ready [illegible] Binding in a neat and durable [illegible] terms as at any other establishment [illegible] country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

W[illegible] WARRANT his work to be [illegible] COATS [illegible] 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible]

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—[illegible] T. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—[illegible]

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—[illegible]
New Market—W. B. Gillet.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

[illegible]
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
[illegible]

OHIO.

[illegible]
Northampton—Stephen Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson—Davis Loofborrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.---NO 43.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.——A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 95.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 22, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

MUSINGS.—NO. I.

The Bible--its Title--Indestructibility and Diffusion.

Twilight, that "little stopping place between day and night," that "shady cell for thought to enter," in its own silent but impressive language bade me lay aside my book. It found me reading Stephen's Central America, and wondering with him who had peopled those forest buried cities, whose hand had so exquisitely carved those immense columns of stone, and asking again, and yet again, if the suppliant knee had ever bowed before those altars, if the incense of a contrite and broken heart had ever there been offered to that senseless thing—an idol—a man made God. Night with slow but curtained steps advanced. Again I seated myself to pursue the reading that twilight had interrupted when my eye rested on another and more familiar volume. It was the Bible—a volume whose pages reveal deeper mysteries than those connected with buried cities—which points the worshiper of graven images to the only living and true God.—Mr. Bush in his notes says the word Bible means simply book. How comprehensive! how appropriate the title! The book. Were we to enter an extensive book-store, and with crowded shelves around us, bearing the well digested thought of ancient sages with the productions of later times, and inquire for the Book, would not the question itself tacitly admit that there was a work extant surpassing in interest all others? The Book of books! But why does the Bible claim so high a title? Why is it that for thousands of years, in whatever language found, it has silently maintained the precedence of all others? One of the first questions asked by the person of refined literary taste when a work is recommended him for examination, is, who is its author? He knows the delicate nature of taste, and would not thoughtlessly bring it in contact with aught that might sully its [illegible] familiar one,) he considers a key to the merits of the work. When we learn that the Bible claims GOD for its author, is not the mystery of its being the Book of books at once removed? Need we longer wonder that while thousands of volumes of high literary merit have perished, this alone has floated uninjured down the stream of time? Yes, methinks its indestructibility seems to say, my author was divine. While the devouring flame has encircled the martyr and dried up the fountain of life, streams have flowed on unabated from this deep well of truth. While fields have been deluged in blood for the maintenance or suppression of its holy principles, not a word has been effaced from the Book of of books. Though the self-sacrificing missionary may have found a resting place beneath the deep waters, the tide of time has safely wafted the Bible to the destined shore, where in tones deeper and more effective in each succeeding age, it has spoken of a crucified and risen Savior.—Fire cannot consume it, nor Ocean's waves overwhelm it; and shall the infidel destroy or sully its sacred pages? As well might he bid the sun withhold its cheering rays from that hemisphere upon which rosy morn is now dawning; or as well may he attempt to demolish the throne of the Eternal; for its great author has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away."

In the language of another we would say to him who lays a sacrilegious hand upon the word of God,—

> Sceptic, go thy way
> And let that old Book be,

for thy labor is useless.

Does not its unparalleled diffusion too, speak loudly of its divine origin? What mere human work claims a stereotype in every christian land, and is read by 160 nations in their native tongue. The circulation of the chef d'œuvre of the most popular author will compare with that of the Bible, as does the glimmering taper with the noon day sun; or the tiny rivulet with the mighty ocean.

Since 1816, the year in which the American Bible Society was organized, it has found its way to the abodes of millions that never heard the name of a Milton, or a Shakspeare. The Rev. J. W. Dale, in an address delivered before the Bible Society a short time since, says, "Imagination has attempted on rapid wing to trace these pathways of light through the earth made by your spread of the Bible. Her flight has been long, but not wearisome.—At one moment her wing has hovered over the snowy hut of the Esquimax, and at an other over the humble kraal of the African. Now she rests within the shadow of Indian's temples, or China's walls, and again the wave-washed islands of the sea are in her gaze; but wherever she wings her flight, her eye rests on the scattered memorials of God's love to our benighted world, and of the earth-embracing labors of this society." Its march is still onward, and every year adds thousands to the last who are brought within the magic circle of its influence, and feel as they study its sacred pages that it can be none other than the word of God. Do not the signs of the times indicate that the period is not far distant when every nation shall possess it? and as the story of a Savior's love is read, will not the full heart exclaim, "How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings."

MARY.

THE SABBATH.

From the New York Evangelist.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH.

The Sabbath, then, is based on the first laws of paradise. It was established, together with the institution of marriage, long before Moses, or Abraham, or Noah. If then all the laws that have ever since been made were repealed, still, according to that original law, we should be bound to consecrate one seventh part of our time as holy. It was afterwards, in the most solemn manner, written again by the finger of God, and placed in a most prominent part of the decalogue. Which of the other nine commands is abolished? Has God ceased to require that we should have no other Gods before him; that we shall not make us any idols; that we shall not take the name of the Lord our God in vain; that we shall not honor our father and our mother; and so continuing through the whole ten, tell, if you can, which of these laws are abolished. These laws will stand as long as the world shall stand, and sin will always be what the apostle defined it—a transgression of the law. With the rest, the law of the Sabbath and the institution [illegible] away, but invariably through them all this sweet, this venerable day of holy rest shall come, from one seventh day to another, with all its animating recollections, its redeeming power, and delightful employments, and blood-bought privileges!

Have we not hearkened to the voice of God, and heard him say, in reference to the days of millenial glory, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, all flesh shall come and worship before him? That the sons of the stranger shall join themselves to the Lord to serve him, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of his covenant? If such be the firm foundation of the Sabbath, such its heavenly origin, such and so strong the command which makes it binding, and such its prospect in the brightest day of the gospel triumph, then we thus far conclude that all are solemnly bound to "Remember the Sabbath day, and keep it holy."

One seventh part of the time we are bound to consecrate to God. And whether the Sabbath has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week or not, our obligation remains the same to rest from our labors one day in seven, and devote that day to the worship of God. If then the first day of the week is not the Sabbath, we are bound to keep the seventh. One seventh part of our time must be spent in holy rest, and holy communion with our Maker. Our own interest—the interest of our children, of our cattle, of our country—and the solemn, plain, repeated command of our God, imperiously require that we should remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

An important portion of the history of the Sabbath now claims our attention. What reasons have we for keeping the first day of the week, rather than the seventh?—What proof have we of the change of the Sabbath?

First, then, we observe the fact in the history of the Sabbath, that it is actually changed. For more than 1800 years, the great body of the Christian church have consecrated the first day of the week.—Since then this is the fact, and since the existence of the Sabbath was foretold by the prophets, may we not ask, Is it possible that God has suffered the Christian thus to wander away from his command? Is it true that during all this time the church have entirely mistaken his will? Bearing this subject in mind, look back once more to the prophets. "For behold I create a new heaven and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be you glad and rejoice in that which I create, for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." By the creation of the new heavens and earth is undoubtedly meant the introduction of the gospel, and the completion of the great work of redemption. This work of the Lord Jesus Christ far surpassed, in its glory and majesty, the creation of the material world. This world shall wax old as doth a garment, these heavens shall pass away as a scroll, but the new creation shall bloom and flourish forever. Is not the passage, then, a prediction that the glory of the first creation shall be somewhat obscured by the surpassing glory of the second, and that the church of God should more joyfully commemorate the last than in ancient times she did the former; that when rising from the celebration of the ancient Sabbath, she greeted the resurrection day of her Savior and her King, she should emphatically exclaim, "This is the day the Lord hath made: we will rejoice and be glad in it." Then would she remember what was said by the prophet—"In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentile seek, and his rest shall be glorious." When therefore we find these predictions all in harmony with the fact, ought not our hearts to burn within us, when we contemplate the predicted glory of the Christian Sabbath?

As harmonizing with the prophecy and the practice, we may now remark that the expression of the fourth command is such as to admit of the change in the day. That men should worship God, is evident from the light of nature. That in publicly worshiping God, a stated time would be important. is the dictate of reason. That one day in seven should be the consecrated portion, was the spirit of the command, founded on the fact that after the six days of creation, Jehovah rested the seventh.

So far, then, the commandment is a moral or unchangeable law, but that part which specifies the particular day was of a positive nature, and may be altered by the same authority that enacted it. These views are confirmed by the peculiar mode of expression. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" and again, "wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." As then the day might be changed without any injury to the Sabbath itself, we are next authorized to inquire, Has the day been changed by adequate authority? And as evidence of the change of the Sabbath, we shall rest on the apostolic practice. If, instead of continuing to keep the seventh day, the apostles did keep the first day of the week, they did it in perfect accordance with the directions of the Savior. We have no such positive directions from him recorded, but we are informed that he showed himself alive by many infallible proofs, being seen by the apostles forty days, speaking of the things concerning the kingdom of God: and that [illegible] have full reason then to believe, that the apostles, in all their doctrines and practices relating to the things of the kingdom of God, acted according to the command of the Savior, and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

In examining the facts of the case, we find that on the same day of his resurrection, at evening, the apostles were together, and Jesus appeared in their midst. That on the next first day of the week they were again assembled, and Jesus appeared in the midst, and said, 'Peace be unto you.' In another place we are told that Paul came to Troas, and abode seven days; and upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow. Paul in one of his Epistles says, Upon the first day of the week let every one lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

These passages prove that the apostles and primitive Christians met together one day in seven, and that the first day of the week; hence we find that the practice of the Christian church in keeping the first day of the week, originated with the apostles while Christ was with them, before his ascension to glory. Then they assembled, and prayed, and preached, and brought in their offerings for the poor, and sang praises to Christ, and celebrated the sufferings of their Almighty Savior. When they spoke of this day, they called it the Lord's day, the day which belonged to the Lord, or the day which the Lord had sanctioned for himself. It was the day on which he rose from the dead, the day on which the Holy Spirit descended, converting thousands to the faith of Jesus. Surely, we may well adopt the language of Ignatius, an ancient father in the church, who succeeded the apostle John but eight or ten years, and say, "Let every one that loves the Lord Jesus Christ keep holy the Lord's day, the queen of days, the resurrection day, the highest of all days." Surely, there is a deep and glorious meaning in that memorable expression of our Savior, "For the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath."

Children's Department.

From the Mother's Magazine.

WAYS OF RECEIVING REPROOF.

William and George were brothers.—George was a fine, frank, open-hearted boy, full of vivacity, and, of course sometimes getting into mischief. But he was also ready to acknowledge it, so good humored when reproved, so sorry for his fault, that it was impossible to be long angry with him. William's character will appear in what I am going to relate.

'My son,' said his mother, when he came into the house one day, 'I am sorry you are not more trustworthy. I only asked you to take care of Mary for half an hour, and now see what a great bump she has on her forehead in consequence of your leaving her."

'George was as much to blame as I was,' replied William. 'You told us both to take care of her, and he left her, too.'

'I was not speaking of George, but of you. He is younger than you, and might be expected to be more thoughtless; besides, I committed Mary particularly to your charge.'

'I am sure I did not know it, ma'am, George'—

'Stop, William. Unless you can say something better than accusing another, say nothing.'

One morning, when the teacher came to school, he found one of the windows broken.

'Who did this?' he inquired of the boys.

No one replied; but as it was known that William did it, the boys all looked towards his seat, expecting him to rise and own it. Seeing that there was no hope of his remaining undetected, William rose and began—

'George and I, sir,—'

'Where is George, this morning?' interrupted the teacher.

'I don't know, sir,' replied William.

Now this was very near a falsehood, for, though he did not know exactly where George was, at that moment, he knew that he had been detained at home to go of some errands for his mother.

'Very well,' said the teacher, go on with your story; but you need not tell me about George. Tell me what you did.'

The boys all smiled, for they knew William's habit of accusing others. William saw and interpreted the smile, and became still more confused than he had been before.

'I—I was playing ball, sir, with George, and the ball flew off and hit the window and broke it'

'The ball! Whose ball?'

There was no evading so direct a question.

'My ball, sir.'

'Did you not know that I had forbidden your playing ball in that part of the grounds?'

'I—I—George played, too, sir.'

'I asked nothing about George,' said the master, sternly; 'even disobedience, when it proceeds from thoughtlessness, is a less fault than this desire of criminating another. I ask, did you know that I had forbidden [illegible]

At recess, that day, a group of boys were seen earnestly conversing.

'Should you not have thought William would be ashamed,' said one, 'to try to put off all the blame on George so, when he was most to blame himself, after all, for I heard him coax George to go and play there.'

'I know it,' said another, 'and then George is so generous, and always takes all the blame to himself. Now you see, if, when he comes to school to-morrow, he don't tell the master he broke the window, and say nothing about William.'

And, sure enough, so it was; and the consequence was that George was beloved by every body, while William was always skulking apart, looking anxious and unhappy, and never at ease.

If William's mother said to him, 'William, you have spilt some gravy on the table-cloth,' he immediately looked over to George's side to see if he had not spilt some, too. If she told him his hair needed brushing, it was, 'Must not George brush his, too?' At last his mother made a rule that she would punish him every time he mentioned George's name in such a way; and I supposed this cured him of the wrong habit, if not of the wrong feeling.

A MOTHER'S INSTRUCTION.

The following quotation, from an Address of the Principal of the Flushing Institute, Rev. Dr. Muhlenburgh, should be laid to the heart of every mother:—

"We are often asked, 'What kind of boys do you want?' To this question, too, the theory of our institution furnishes an answer. Give us such boys as have been blessed with the instructions of a pious mother. This is a qualification for which no substitute can be found on earth. Never would we despair of the child who has been used in infancy to hear the precepts of heavenly truth inculcated in the accents of maternal love. Truths, thus instilled, live for ever in the memory. They are interwoven with all the sensibilities of the soul. They are the fortress of conscience; not impregnable, it is true, but indestructible. They furnish the mind with chords which, in later life, seldom fail to vibrate to the touch of faithful expostulation. They are an inextinguishable spark, which, after being seemingly smothered under a heap of corruption, may be fanned by the breath of friendly and spiritual counsel into the pure and genial flame of piety. The child of a mother's prayers, said St. Augustine, (and may we not believe it?) is never lost. It is those children who have been dedicated to their Maker under the auspices of a pious and vigilant mother, whose education we should esteem it a happy and useful vocation to continue. While on the other hand we should deem it an act of temerity, equally hopeless and presumptuous, to become responsible for the youth in whose mind a mother's voice was connected with no other associations than those of apathy to religion and devotedness to the character and frivolties of the world."

Religious Department.

DISAPPOINTMENT IN THE LAST DAY.

It appears from the representations of our Lord that many, in the last great day, will experience unutterable disappointment. They expected to find admittance into heaven, but find it shut against them, and themselves excluded. Of the ten virgins, who went forth with their lamps to meet the bridegroom, only five were received to the marriage feast. The others came and cried for admittance, 'Lord, Lord, open unto us.' But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.' 'Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity.' 'When once the master of the house has risen up, and shut the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us, and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are; then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: but he shall say, I tell you I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out.'

May it be deeply impressed upon both writer and reader, that we are hastening together to the judgment; ("I do not believe," say some Unitarians, "that there ever will be any judgment. The assembled universe, so often spoken of, as gathered at once before the throne of God, to be reciprocally spectators of each other's trial and judgment is, I believe, a mere image of the human brain. Certainly the Scriptures assert no such thing." Christian Examiner, Vol. ix., p. 30. This also is understood to be the sentiments of Universalists generally. See Universalist Expositor, Vol. i., No. 2. With such persons, I cannot enter into any dispute. The awful [illegible] stand before the judgment seat of Christ. The declarations of Scripture, on this subject, need no explanation. And those who are not convinced by the testimony of God, most assuredly would not be by the reasonings of man,) that to these eyes and ears its amazing realities will soon be revealed; and if so many, who indulged hopes of heaven, will be disappointed in that day, and find themselves forever excluded, are we sure that we shall not be of that number? The bare possibility of such an event should excite the most wakeful apprehensions, and lead to the most diligent searchings of heart. My object in this Tract—an object of sufficient importance, surely, to command attention—will be to expose some of the grounds or reasons of those disappointments with which so many at the last will be overwhelmed.

1. Some will be disappointed, because they did not suppose any particular traits of character are requisite, in order to entitle them to the heavenly kingdom. They supposed that Christ died for all, in such a sense, that all of every character were authorized to expect salvation in his name.—Or they believed that some means were provided, they hardly knew what, by which the whole race of men, without distinction, would eventually be received to heaven.—Consequently, they lived thoughtless and careless, engrossed with the trifles and the pleasures of the world, and neglected to form those holy, religious characters which many around them believed to be necessary. But—as there is any truth in the Bible—when persons of this description appear in the other world, they will find themselves most grievously disappointed. When they appear at heaven's gate, it will be shut against them; and shut, not only by the decree of the Savior, but by the necessity of the case. They will be entirely unmeet for heaven. They will have an utter disrelish for divine employments and heavenly joys. They will see, that they could not be happy in heaven, if admitted, and, to their endless confusion, they will find, too late, that the blissful regions have no place for them. They must be excluded in outer darkness, and take their portion among the despairing and the miserable forever.

2. Not a few will be disappointed, when they appear before God in the other world, because they expected to have there a space for repentance. Unlike the class of whom I have spoken, these believed in the necessity of repentance; but they did not believe that the space for repentance was limited to the present world. They hoped it would be extended to the other world; and consequently, if they neglected religion here, that they should have an opportunity of embracing it hereafter. On this ground, they ventured to waste their time on earth, and to abuse the many opportunities with which they were favored. They loved the ways of sin, and presumed to persist in them, expecting there would be time enough for repentance, and a more convenient season for securing salvation, beyond the grave. But alas! when the thread of life is severed, and their immortal spirits appear in eternity, they find that they have been mistaken. They find, that as a tree has fallen, so it must lie; and that in the miserable state on which they have entered, no change for the better is to be expected. They must now reap according to that they have sown, and must be regarded and treated forever according to the deeds done in the body. Contrary to all previous expectation, they find that their probation is ended, their space for repentance closed, and their souls irrevocably lost. Thus their once cherished hopes have vanished like a dream, and they are destroyed, and that without remedy.

3. Many will be disappointed, when summoned into the other world, because they did not live so long as they expected.—They believed that a return to God was necessary to prepare them to enjoy his presence and favor, and that this return must be accomplished on earth, or never; but still they did not think there was any need of haste. They were in the vigor of their days, in the full enjoyment of health; and if they thought of death at all, they thought of it only as a distant event. They were often warned that life was short and uncertain, and that their eternal well-being was at hazard; and they not unfrequently made resolutions that when they had arrived at a certain period, they would repent. But when the promised period came, they were not ready. They found the same hindrances and objections as before, and that these were rather increased than diminished by delay. Of course, they could not attend to the subject then, but still did not cease to hope that some more convenient season would arrive. In this way, life ran to waste, death was comparatively excluded from their thoughts, and the concerns of the immortal soul were neglected and forgotten. But in an unexpected manner and moment, disease invaded, and the dread messenger approached. They had scarcely time to look about them, and realize their situation, before all hope of life was extinguished, and the arm of the king of terrors was lifted for their destruction. At this dreadful hour their distress and horror were unspeakable.—They shuddered—they resolved—they entreated for mercy; but nothing could stay or avert the lifted hand of death. It fell—it [illegible] and we are not saved.

(To be continued.)

"WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

Send this inquiry through the territories of Zion, and let the watchman reply.—From how few could there come any other response than "It is night!" The night has been long. Month after month has rolled away, and the morning of God's reviving grace has not come! Another year is now drawing to a close, and who can deny it has been a year of the absence of the Spirit of God?

And when it is night in Zion, how deep the gloom elsewhere. If her glory is eclipsed, who awakes to righteousness? If her brightness and beauty have faded, who inquires after her King? If Zion slumbers, how certain that sinners slumber! How successful the snares of Satan! How many and melancholy are his triumphs!—The strong in sin grow stronger. The weak hasten after the strong. The great highway of sin and hell is crowded with travelers. The Redeemer is dishonored—the Spirit is grieved—the preached word is robbed of its power. Zion moves not onward in her glory, but is enfeebled and languishes.

What makes it night in Zion? Her glory is the aggregate of the eminent piety and holiness of her sons and daughters.—So her dishonor is the aggregate of personal unfaithfulness. Every member of the church that suffers piety to languish in his bosom, is an agent in gathering the deep gloom that now envelops the church of Christ.

Shall the night remain? Are there no yearnings after the rising again of the Sun of righteousness? Is there no grief over the wounded honor of Zion? Are there not at least a few that sigh over the moral desolation? How long shall they be but few?—Bost. Rec.

A REPROBATE FATHER.—At a Wesleyan class-meeting, a man rose and addressed the leader thus:—"I am very thankful to you for your Sunday School. My son, who now sits beside me, is my spiritual father. He heard me cursing, while in a state of drunkenness, and said to me, 'Oh, father, my teacher said to-day, at the Sunday School, that neither drunkards nor swearers could enter into heaven.' This so affected my mind, that from that time I was enabled, by the grace of God, to leave off those wicked practices; and both myself and my son are now members of your Society." He then laid his hand on his son's head, and repeated, 'My son is my spiritual father."

MAXIMS.

There is nothing terrible in death, but what our lives may have made so.

Our life is a passage to eternity; it ought to be a meditation of, and a preparation for eternity.

The longest life is a lingering death.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, December 22, 1841.

"History of the Sabbath" reviewed.

We have been most happy for two weeks past to present our readers with a history of the Sabbath from the New York Evangelist. The views there exhibited of the "divine authority, and perpetual obligation of the Sabbath," are in perfect accordance with the Scriptures. The argument is incontrovertible that the Sabbath was instituted at the close of creative operations, and, therefore, binding on all men. It was observed by our first Parents in the Garden of Eden the first day after their creation, and was instituted by God for the physical and spiritual good of man. Man's physical nature requires the rest of the Sabbath to recruit his wasted energies. His moral nature requires it for communion with God.

The Sabbath was incorporated in the commands of the Decalogue, and must stand or fall with the rest. "All were founded on the eternal principles of rectitude, and will stand forever unabolished." "As this moral law of ten commandments has never been repealed, so the law of the Sabbath, constituting one of these commandments, remains still unrepealed." Thus far our views perfectly accord with those of the Editor of the "Evangelist." But in the 3rd number, published to-day, we find such a wide deviation from the language of the Scripture, and such a departure from the views in previous numbers, that we feel called upon to enter our objections.

The first objection we notice, is, that the Editor has made a sudden transition from the letter and spirit of the fourth command, which he has before declared "remains unrepealed," and set up the plea that "one seventh part of the time we are bound to consecrate to God." By examining the sabbatic law, which "remains unrepealed," and comparing it with the language of Jesus Christ in Matt. v. 17, 18, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till Heaven and Earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled," we must conclude that not only the spirit, but the letter of the sabbatic law remains the same as when written by the finger of God on tables of stone. By what means our brother has been able to satisfy himself that the fourth commandment enjoins one seventh part of time abstractly, we are not able to see. But we can very easily see that that view of the subject does more than the Savior says can be done. Instead of its causing one jot or tittle to pass from the law, it changes whole words, and gives an idea that could not be inferred from the law itself. The language is made so plain that it cannot be misunderstood. The language cannot be plainer, nor the idea clearer. The words are not ambiguous, or doubtful, but declare expressly, without addition, or diminution, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." If we give the expression any other grammatical construction that it is capable of, the sense is just the same. It is just as clear if we say, "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," or the Sabbath of the Lord thy God is the seventh day. But we are not, neither can be justified in saying one seventh part of time is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, for God has never said it, and in doing it we should neither conform to the letter or spirit of the Sabbatic law.

Again, says the Evangelist, "That one day in seven should be the consecrated portion, was the spirit of the commandment, founded on the fact that after the six days of creation, Jehovah rested the seventh." We cannot adopt the inference, because God did as assuredly rest the seventh day as one day in seven, therefore, any one day of the seven, indiscriminately, is not as good as the seventh, because it was the seventh in order that God rested.

Again, we cannot adopt the sentiment that one day in seven is the spirit of the sabbatic law, because a change from the seventh day cannot be made to the first, without violating both the spirit and letter of the law. If a seventh day Baptist should change from the observance of the seventh to the first day of the week, during the week of the change he would not rest one seventh part of the time, but one eighth, or would perform a work of supererrogation and rest one sixth. He cannot, therefore, change from his practice without falling under the censure of the Evangelist's liberal view of the law of the Sabbath. And any change that has ever been made from the seventh to the first day is alike objectionable, and the Evangelist is sanctioning a departure of the sabbatic law, according to his own construction of it, when he observes the first and not the seventh day.

Having made the above named accommodating transition, the Evangelist next undertakes to prove the change from the seventh to the first day. The first proof is, that the fact is observed in the history of the Sabbath that it is actually changed. "For more than 1800 years the great body of the Christian Church have consecrated the first day of the week." As we entertain different views of that matter, and no proof is introduced, we are as ignorant that such is the fact as before. And when we admit all that can be relied on from Ignatius, or any of the fathers, we admit simply that it was their opinion that the first day should be observed as a festival, but not as a Sabbath, or a substitution for it.

We are next taught to infer that the work of redemption is greater than creation, and, consequently, that the Sabbath was changed to the first day of the week. We have looked at this idea again, and again, and after all must regard it as a mighty leap ——where? in the dark, as the Scriptures have not informed us that the work of redemption is greater than the work of creation; nor is it in the power of men to scan and comprehend either, both being the work of an Almighty hand. Till we can examine and measure the power that spoke worlds into being, and from nothing created every thing, we cannot compare it with that power that redeemed sinners from the curse of the divine law. Who by searching can find out God, or measure the depth of his wisdom and power? Alas! frail man knows not himself, and how can he know God? But the inference from this sweeping supposition is alike visionary. Allowing the supposition to be true, we are no where taught to draw such a conclusion. With more appearance of certainty may the Universalist conclude that since God created man, Jesus Christ redeemed them all. We may, with the Psalmist, look at ourselves and say, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvellous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well." And there we must stop, and gaze, and wonder, and admire, and ever remain as we were, ignorant both of ourselves and God.

We are at length told, "as evidence of the change of the Sabbath, we shall rest on the Apostolical practice." Happy are we again to find ourselves agreed. On this we are willing to rest the matter, and the Apostles shall tell us whether they observed the Sabbath of the commandment, or the first day of the week. We shall first examine the proof offered that they observed the first day, and then offer our proof that they observed the seventh.

First, then, we are told that "we find on the same day of his resurrection, at evening, the apostles were together, and Jesus appeared in their midst." Reference is here had, we suppose, to John xx. 19. Allowing that this was the first day of the week, we learn that instead of the disciples having assembled to celebrate the day, they had assembled in their usual place, and closed the door for fear of the Jews.—But the original says not a word about that day being the first day of the week, but that it was one of the Sabbaths, doubtless referring to one of the passover Sabbaths. It is next said that "on the next first day of the week they were again assembled, and Jesus appeared in the midst, and said, 'Peace be unto you.'" We have looked in vain for such scripture, and know not where to find it. In John xx. 26, we find this, "and after eight days again, his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." But we cannot make it appear that this was on the next first day, because it was after eight days had elapsed since the former meeting, which is said to have been on the first day of the week. Therefore, this must have been as late as the third day, or later, or if we reckon the day on which they first met as one, though it was evening when they met, it could not be earlier than the second day of the week. This proof fails of showing that the disciples met on two consecutive first days of the week. If any of them met to celebrate the day, they did not all, for Thomas did not yet believe that Christ had arisen as verse 25 will plainly show. The object of the meeting seems to have been to solve the doubts of Thomas as will be seen from the context.

We are next told that "Paul came to Troas and abode seven days; and upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow." This is found in Acts xx. 6 and 7. From what we can learn of this, it was an evening meeting, for he continued his speech till midnight. If this was on the evening after the seventh day, then Paul secularized the first day by traveling; if it was the evening following the first day, then it was according to the Jewish reckoning of time on the second day of the week. We care not which horn of the dilemma is taken, either of them must fail to prove that the disciples met for rest and worship on the first day of the week.

Again we are told, "Paul in one of his epistles says, Upon the first day of the week let every one lay by him in store as God has prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come." This is in 1 Cor. xvi. 2; but we find in it no intimation that the observance of the day is enjoined, or hinted at, but rather that on that day they are required to cast up what their earnings have been for the week, and lay it up, that this labor might not be performed after the Apostle arrived, and hinder him in his journey.

Again, it is intimated that the Apostles and primitive christians spoke of this day "as the Lord's day." We recollect that in Rev. i. 10, the Revelator says, "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." But we are not told whether this was any particular day in the week or year, or whether it was the gospel day, or judgment day, or what day it was. If it was any day in the week, then we shall surely claim that it was the seventh, for no other day is in the Bible called the Sabbath day, and the Savior says, "the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath day." It is also intimated that the Apostles assembled, and prayed, and preached on the first day, and that it was the day on which Christ arose from the dead, and the day on which the Holy Spirit descended, converting thousands to the faith of Jesus. But as there is no proof accompanying the assertion, we must await the proof before we can believe. And now in reviewing the proof offered us—in looking over the teaching and practice of the Apostles, and the instructions of the Lord Jesus Christ, we find ourself destitute of proof that either Christ or his disciples gave intimation that the Sabbath was ever changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, or gave sanction to its observance as such.

We have now to offer proof positive that the Apostles observed the seventh and not the first day.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE APOSTLES.

1. They were taught to observe the Sabbath of the decalogue by CHRIST himself. Besides witnessing his example, they repeatedly heard him renewing and enforcing that code of laws written on Mount Sinai, amid all the majesty and grandeur described by the Evangelist. For the example of Jesus Christ in observing the seventh day, you are referred to Luke vi. 6, xiii. 10, 15, 16, and iv. 16; "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and as his custom was, he went into the synagogue and stood up for to read." 31, "And he came down to Capernaum, a city of Gallilee, and taught them on the Sabbath days."—Matt. xii. 1—12, xxiv. 20, Mark vi. 2. "And when the Sabbath day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue." Luke xiv. 1—5. These quotations are sufficient to show the regard paid by the Lord Jesus Christ to the Sabbath of the commandment: and these things were done in presence of his disciples, and taken in connection with his teachings, that he "came not to destroy the law, but fulfill it," [i. e. obey,] the law is as strong evidence as the Apostles could have that the law of the Sabbath remained unaltered. If Christ had designed to change the day, he certainly would have left on record such design. As this cannot be found, and as we have his example and teaching to the contrary, we must suppose he had no such design.

THE PRACTICE OF THE APOSTLES.

2. Our second proof is the recorded acts of the Apostles. Acts xiii. 14, "Now when they [Paul and his company] departed from Perga they came to Antioch, in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and sat down." 42, "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath." 44, "And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." xvi. 13, "And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down and spake unto the women that resorted thither." xvii. 2, "And Paul as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures." xviii. 4, "And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and Greeks," 11, "and he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them."—Beside this evidence, we have the repeated information that the Apostles entered into their synagogues and taught, and although it is not expressly stated that it was on the Sabbath; yet, the evidence is such that we must conclude it was, as the Jews would not be assembled in their synagogues at other times. It is not needful, therefore, to introduce other evidence to prove our position.

THE INFERENCE.

3. The question is settled, then, that it was Paul's MANNER to teach in the synagogue on the Sabbath day; and, unless he is inconsistent with himself, he taught on the Sabbath two years in Rome. Unless, therefore, it can be proven that his custom was changed, we must infer that both he and the other Apostles observed the Sabbath of the commandment.

THE ENQUIRER.—Devoted to Free Discussion as to what kind of Wine is proper to be used at the Lord's Supper, &c., by E. C. Delavan.

The number before us contains 48 large quarto pages, on the following subjects:—

"Introductory.

State of Public Opinion on the Communion Question previous to 1835.

Rise of the Question.

Reason of its Suppression.

Advantages of the present time for discussing the Question.

Obstacles still in the way.

Arguments in favor of the change from the liquors now in use at the Lord's Table, to the Unfermented "Fruit of the Vine."

Argument drawn from the Reformed Converted Drunkard.

Testimony of Distinguished Physicians.

do do Clergymen and Laymen.

Of Wine fabrications.

The influence of the Clergy.

The great body of Christians to effect the change.

The Missionary Influence.

Against diluting the Alcoholic Wine now in use, with water, &c.

Dr. Lewis C. Beck's Analysis of various Wines.

Copy of a Letter addressed to E. C. Delevan, Esq., by William Goodell.

"Extract from an Essay written by Rev. J. Duffield, of Philadelphia.

On the proper Symbol of the Blood of Christ, by the Rev. Calvin Chapin, D. D.

Our course in relation to Wine.

Disclaimer of the New-York State Temperance Society, 1835.

Rev. Prof. Dewey, on the Corinthian Church.

Important Testimony from Reformed Converted Drunkards.

Dr. Sewall's Essay on the "Pathology of Drunkenness," &c., with or without plates.

Important Medical Testimony.

Letters from eminent Clergymen and Laymen.

Letter of Edward C. Delavan to the Editors of the New-York Observer.

Eli Smith, to Prof. McLean, &c.

Various methods for obtaining the Fruit of the Vine free from the Poison Alcohol.

Drunkenness of Wine Countries.

Adulterations.

The Ballston Church.

The Temperance Reform a harbinger of the Millenium.

Rev. Dr. E. Nott, President of Union College, on Sacramental Wine, &c.

The Pathology of Drunkenness, or the Physical Effects of Alcoholic Drinks, with drawings of the Drunkard's Stomach. A Letter addressed to Edward C. Delavan, Esq., by Thomas Sewall, M. D., Professor of Pathology and the Practice of Medicine in the Columbian College, District of Columbia."

From the partial examination we have given to it, we can commend it to the attention of Christians. It will be published quarterly, but no subscription will be received, as the prices of the numbers may vary. A copy of the present number, with the following Plates, may be had for $1, directed, post paid, to the Publisher at Albany, N. Y.; without the Plates, ,25. A fair deduction is made where ten or more copies are taken. The following are the Plates:—

The Human Stomach in a state of health.

The inner surface of the Stomach of the Temperate Drinker of intoxicating wine, or other alcoholic drinks.

The Confirmed Drunkard's Stomach.

The Drunkard's Stomach in an ulcerous state.

The Drunkard's Stomach after a debauch.

The Drunkard's Stomach in a cancerous state.

The Drunkard's Stomach after death by the Delirium Tremens.

Public exercises will be held at the Presbyterian Church in this village, on Christmas Eve, Friday 24th inst., commencing at half past 6 o'clock, P. M. Discourse by Rev. Mr. Fancher of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

We admit, to-day, the answer of "A Citizen," and "Vindex," to the 5th inquiry in last week's paper. We have long been of the opinion that if the Stockholders and friends of the Institute were to exert themselves in its behalf, that it would flourish to the satisfaction of all concerned. We, therefore, commend their suggestions to the attention of our readers. And let us repeat and urge the suggestion of "A Citizen," that every Stockholder furnish at least one scholar. Let them continue to do this, and the work is done. And may we not ask the friends of the school in every place, to do what they can to send Students here?

We are happy to announce to our readers that a very interesting state of feeling exists in the S. D. B. Church in this village. It is a day of rejoicing with us, and we trust our brethren in different places will rejoice when we say that whatever has tended to mar the union and prosperity of this church for years past, has been satisfactorily explained and removed, and, so far as we know, the different members are in [illegible] with each other. This is the Lord's doings, and is marvelous in our eyes. Brethren in other places will pray for us, that God's will may be perfected here, and many souls brought into his kingdom.

HYDROPHOBIA.—We are advised by a hand-bill sent from Hamilton in this county, that a dog having every appearance of being rabid, came amongst them a few days since, biting some 30 dogs and a number of cattle: he also passed through Lebanon, and bit a number there.

For the Register.

De Ruyter Institute.

MR. EDITOR,—Allow me, if you please, to give an answer in part to an inquiry in your paper of last week relative to the De Ruyter Institute. It is asked "Why is there such indifference felt concerning the De Ruyter Institute? and why do the Stockholders complain of want of success, while they—yes they withhold from it their support." For myself I believe no satisfactory reason can be offered for those who understand matters as they are.—There has been sufficient money expended to afford every advantage desirable for the attainment of knowledge. The Teachers are every way qualified for their several departments as the past has abundantly shown. The internal arrangements of the school are such as to secure the greatest possible advancement of the students, both in science, classics, and correct deportment. A well furnished Laboratory, with Scientific Lectures on two or more evenings in the week, afford the best advantages for demonstrating the laws of nature, and whatever else may come under the inspection of the student, and every advantage is offered, so that what may be taught with success in other places can be as well taught here, and at less expense than at most other schools of this grade. From what I have been able to learn, those who have attended this school have been not only satisfied, but become strongly attached to it, except such as have fallen under censure from misconduct. And I know of no school that presents equal advantages at so little expense.

It cannot, therefore, be from any adequate cause that complaint is made. The expense of teaching 150 is but little more than for 75, while it would yield twice as much for the support of the school, and could this number be secured, the Institute would at once be placed above embarrassment. More than this number could be easily obtained if the Stockholders would severally use their influence to send them here.

There are reasons, however, though entirely unsatisfactory, that have excited indifference and opposition. The reasons are not satisfactory, because improperly founded. Among these I may mention,

1. Mismanagement of the Trustees.—Since this story has been set afloat, I have examined the matter, and have concluded that the censure was entirely misplaced. It is well known that the Trustees were inexperienced at the first. If, therefore, a fault should happen from inexperience, it could easily be pardoned. But I am satisfied that their faults have been as few, and small, as could reasonably be expected.

2. Incompetency of Teachers. We have never heard this complaint from students, except such as were "addle-pated," and could not be taught, because they could not understand. While such have complained, others who were studious have made rapid advancement. I could easily mention several distinguished scholars that have attended this school, and others of the same grade that have freely given the preference to this. Complaints have more frequently been made by those who have never visited the school to witness the recitations and manner of teaching, than others.

3. Indifference on the subject of Education. The disadvantages under which the S. D. Baptists have formerly labored, has prevented their taking so lively an interest in education as its importance requires.—This indifference is now but partially removed. While some have risen from the disadvantages that have been the result of singularity in the observance of the seventh day, and entered heartily [illegible] ly on the study of the classics and sciences, others have pursued their accustomed way of ignorance. Did our people appreciate the advantages which would result to them as individuals and a community, one great cause of complaint would be removed. There are [illegible] enough young persons who both want and need the advantages of De Ruyter Institute to fill its spacious walls, and were there no wrong impressions relative to the school, or the value of education, they would be in it.

4. Penuriousness. Very many parents look more at the dollars and cents that it would cost to send their [illegible] to a good school, than at the superior advantages there held out. This [illegible] is a serious one and should be [illegible]. As evidence that this is the fact I would [illegible] the fact that there are several [illegible] patronized by many who are [illegible] in the De Ruyter Institute, [illegible] it is less expensive. Now, [illegible] that the price of tuition is [illegible] Ruyter Institute, it is equally true that the advantages are more than double [illegible] in fact, those who patronize [illegible] are actual losers, and their want of cooperation in sustaining the Institute is the chief cause of its embarrassment. [illegible] advantages are offered for Students boarding themselves. By this means they can live as cheap here as at home, and have all their time for study. Three months schooling here, is worth as much as six months in a select school, or three years in a district school. Which, then, is the cheapest?

5. Differences of opinion in religious matters. These have not entered the school. While there may have been contentions without, in the school it has been peace. If this reason has operated before, it can not now. The school is free from sectarianism. All denominations have equal advantages. As evidence, I would state that I am informed that of the three Teachers now in the school, one is a S. D. Baptist, one a Presbyterian, and one a Methodist. I would say now, in conclusion, that I am highly gratified to learn that the prospect for the next term is most flattering. And may I not urge, through your paper, [illegible] of the Institute to exert themselves in its behalf?

VINDEX.

For the Register.

De Ruyter Institute. Response to the 5th Inquiry.

"Why is there such indifference felt concerning the De Ruyter Institute? and why do the Stockholders complain of want of success while they—yes, [illegible] withhold from it their support?"

A number of years have passed by since De Ruyter Institute opened, attended with very auspicious prospects. But still the patronage of this Institution is far [illegible] what its friends had reason to anticipate. Now the arguments which I design [illegible] ence on the above inquiry, Mr. Editor, [illegible]

1. The stockholders have not [illegible] given it their support. This is a [illegible] which I would [illegible] were it not presumed in the inquiry [illegible] at the [illegible] Students' names, as they have [illegible] years, and see what proportion [illegible] furnished by stockholders. [illegible] them, truly. Their indifference has [illegible] painfully manifest. Every inducement [illegible] presented to the stockholders in the [illegible] that, a whole constitute a majority, and [illegible] whose more especial interest it was [illegible] ed, to furnish students—not for a single term merely, but for a succession of terms, until a thorough knowledge of the various branches usually taught would be obtained. There are many—yes, very many—young men in our denomination who, by undergoing a thorough training and pursuing a regular course of studies in this Institution, might qualify themselves for doing much good in society, and be efficient instruments in the hands of God for promoting his truth in the world. Why do they not qualify themselves for this important work? The question is answered in the indifference of their parents who are stockholders. They are doubtless anxious that the Institution should flourish, but still they have never patronized it so much as to furnish a scholar for a single term!—Great solicitude this! Do they suppose that, having invested some fifty or one hundred dollars in the stock of De Ruyter Institute it will flourish, and nett them a profit on their capital invested? Such airy dreams ought never to flit across the night-visions of a sensible man; nor will the man who is possessed of a moderate share of common sense, expect success in any enterprize, however laudable, without exerting a continuous effort in its behalf. I am pained to say that the stockholders of De Ruyter Institute as a body,—as prudent and enterprizing men, have never made an effort for sustaining the school as they ought. Where, then, is their patronage ? and Echo answers, " Where ?" It has been small—it has been stinted—it has been any thing but encouraging.

2. If, then, the stockholders have withheld from this Institution their support, have they any reason to anticipate success in the enterprize ? Surely not. Why, then, in the language of the inquiry, do they complain of want of success ? Who do they expect will sustain the school if they neglect to furnish students ? The disgrace of a want of success will recoil upon themselves. Upon their exertions depends the welfare and prosperity of the Institution. Upon their efforts now may hang everlasting consequences. Immortal souls, perishing for the lack of vision, on the one hand, and a few dollars of expense on the other, are the points which now claim the attention of every stockholder. Which will preponderate ?

3. The advantages to be derived to our denomination in particular, from patronizing this school, are fraught with interesting reflections. Here is an asylum for the Student who is so peculiar in his views as to observe the Bible Sabbath, as well as for those who observe the first day as such.—Here the Student may pursue a regular Collegiate course, and not subject himself to the privations and disadvantages attending most other schools of the kind, where Recitations, etc., are had on the Sabbath. Here, in short, the young gentleman, or the young lady, who design to occupy a prominent and useful station in society, may become eminently qualified for the task. And while interest, succeeded by interest, presses upon every stockholder the duty of patronizing this school, let them not forget that important results may attend their efforts. Furnish, then, if possible, one Student to every stockholder, and witness the effect. Let them come for a thorough course of studies, and the results will be cheering to themselves, and glorious to the world.

A CITIZEN.

For the Register.

MR. EDITOR.—The reading of the 5th of the questions proposed by INQUIRER, in the Register of last week, has suggested the propriety of proposing the following plan, for removing the "indifference felt concerning the De Ruyter Institute," which is therein mentioned.

Before hinting at the plan I am about to propose, I will premise that a sluggish "in-~~ter—— on the subject of education is~~ the prime cause of that indifference of which "Inquirer" speaks ; and I will venture the assertion that, for the most part, this want of interest extends not only to this Institution, but to every kindred institution of learning in the land. The great desideratum, then, for ensuring complete success to the De Ruyter Institute, is a lively interest in the subject of education, not only in the community where it is located, but among its stockholders in every part of the country. Let the public mind be fully impressed with a sense of the importance of giving an extended education to the youth of our country ; of subjecting them to a thorough course of mental discipline, to fit them for the stations they are to occupy in life. Let every lover of social order, and domestic happiness, every friend of his country, of the church, and of the world, see clearly that the best interests of society, in every point of view, are intimately connected with the progress of education, and with the spread of free, noble, and intelligent principles ; and speedily our Seminaries of learning will be filled with youth of both sexes, and undergoing a course of mental discipline.—And among these De Ruyter Institute, from the superior facilities which it affords, would occupy a prominent place. Were it necessary, I might prove, to a moral demonstration, that the importance that I have here attached to education, is not imaginary. But this might be superfluous, as I presume every one will acknowledge that it has not been overrated. The desideratum is, that men should feel the force of that to which they yield their assent.

The plan I would propose for securing the end in view, is,

1. That the Trustees should send out a traveling agent, who is a scientific man, who shall, in addition to the ordinary business belonging to a traveling agent, deliver lectures on various scientific subjects in those places which he may visit, after the manner usually adopted by itinerant lecturers. To be sure, this course may require some adventure, in a pecuniary point of view, in furnishing him with the requisite portable apparatus, for illustrating those branches of science upon which he may lecture. But I conceive that this adventure would be compensated many fold by the advantages which would be gained.—One of these advantages I will mention,—viz: He will exert, by this means, a powerful influence in increasing public attention to the importance of education, and thus greatly increasing the numbers of those who may avail themselves of the facilities which De Ruyter Institute affords, for conferring an academic education.

2. The proceeds of his Lectures will make constant additions to the funds of the Institute, enabling it to rise from its pecuniary embarrassments, and to extend its sphere of usefulness by enlarging its library and apparatus, both astronomical, philosophical, and chemical. And in connection with any project for increasing the library and apparatus, it may be important to bear in mind an act of the Legislature of this State, passed April 22, 1834, by which the Regents are authorized, at their discretion, to assign to the several Academies, subject to their visitation, certain parts of the Literature Fund, not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars each year, to be applied for the purchase of books and apparatus ; provided, the Academies shall have raised an equal sum, from sources other than their corporate property.

3. I would propose that the Trustees establish a department for the education of "Common School Teachers," according to the provisions of the law, and the instructions of the Superintendent of Common Schools, dated May 18, 1841, contained in the revised edition of the "instructions" from the Regents, page 82 to 94.

Since it is a requirement of the Regents that "this department should not be made subsidiary or incidental to the Academy, but that it should be regarded, as it really is, a separate, principal and important object in itself," it may be asked, what important advantage may be expected to accrue to an Academy from the establishment of such a department ? The answer is, a department for the education of common school teachers, if well sustained and faithfully conducted, will tend to increase the amount of public patronage which an academy enjoys ; without some degree of which it can have no existence, and its prosperity will be proportionate to the amount of patronage bestowed upon it. Though an Academy should receive no immediate advantage from the maintainance of such a department, according to the letter of the law, yet, in the language of the Superintendent, it "will realize a rich and full reward in the improvement of the common schools, and in the effect of every such improvement to enlarge the desires of the parents respecting the amount of instruction to their children, and thus add to the number of those who attend the higher Seminaries of learning."

J. A. B.

The above communication reached us after our first "form" had gone to press, and our apology for occupying so much space in our columns on that subject is, its vast importance. We commend the "plan" proposed by "J. A. B.," to the attention of the Board of Trustees, and all friendly to the cause of Education.—ED.

For the Register.

Reformed Drunkards.

MR. BAILEY—I discovered by your last week's paper it has been estimated that 20,000 drunkards have been reclaimed since the first great effort was made in Baltimore. And shall no effort be made to reclaim the poor inebriates in this vicinity ? Shall we not extend to them the friendly hand, and raise them from the polluting grasp of Alcohol and its kindred poisons ? Do not the interests of community—the welfare and happiness of wives and children without number, demand a reclaiming effort from the drunkard's friend ? Let our future acts in the cause of Temperance here bespeak our interest in the welfare of suffering humanity. What an amount of suffering and distress must have been relieved by the reformation of 20,000 drunkards !

De Ruyter, Dec. 20, 1841. X. Y. Z.

News of the Day.

Bank of Watertown.—This bank has never failed to redeem its notes, either at its counter, or its city agency.—Alb. Eve. Journal.

Exploring Expedition.—The Peacock, Capt. Hudson, was expected to arrive at Fort George about July 1. The Vincennes, Capt. Wilkes, expected to arrive at the same place July 15 ; and the Porpoise, August 1.

All these vessels were at the northward in pursuance of the objects of the expedition ; they had previously been at Fort George, at the mouth of Columbia River, where every attention was paid them by the Governor and officers of the Hudson Bay Company.

From Fort George it was believed the Squadron would sail for Singapore, and from thence home.

The above information is from an officer belonging to the Squadron, who remained at Fort George while the vessels went north, and waited for their return. The latest information direct from the Squadron left all well.—N. Y. American.

North Eastern Boundary.—We understand that Major Graham has run his line 85 miles due north of the monument, which carries him 6 miles north of the St. John's.

One of the officers attached to his party left the fort at Fish River on the very day the reported engagement took place. So far from having encountered difficulties in the survey, this gentleman says they were every where received with great kindness and civility.—N. Y. Amer.

The notes of the following banks are not redeemed by the Comptroller:—

Allegany County Bank,
Bank of Buffalo,
Commercial Bank of Buffalo,
Staten Island Bank,
Bank of Olean,
Washington Bank, N. Y.
James Bank,
St. Lawrence Bank,
Commercial Bank, Oswego,
Clinton County Bank.

Notes redeemed by the Comptroller at par:—

City Bank of Buffalo,
Chelsea Bank,
Farmer's Bank, Seneca Co., Stock Notes.
Millers' Bank Clyde, do do
Wayne County Bank,
City Trust, New York,
Commercial Bank, New York.

Notes redeemed by the Comptroller, but at a heavy discount:—

Binghamton Bank,
Bank of Commerce, Buffalo,
United States Bank, do
Erie County Bank, do
Bank of America, do
Union Bank, do
Mechanics' Bank, do
Phœnix Bank, do
Bank of Lodi,
Millers' Bank, Real Estate Notes,
Tonawanda Bank,
Cattaraugus County Bank,
Bank of Western New York, Rochester,
Merchants' Exchange Bank, Buffalo,
Farmers' Bank, Seneca County, Real Estate Notes.
Tenth Ward Bank.

The Amistad Africans.—It appears by a letter from Dr. Ferguson, the new governor of Sierra Leone, that the Mendi country is but two or three days journey from that place, and may readily be reached by the Mendi Africans, (of the Amistad,) now on their passage from this port to Sierra Leone, Gov. Ferguson says :—

Mendi is situated on the banks of the Rokelle, or Sierra Leone River, and may be reached in three or four days from Freetown. Bey Fonti, its chief, is a party to a treaty of alliance existing betwixt this Government and the confederated chiefs of the Timmaney country.

Sierra Leone is thus, from vicinity and facility of the intercourse with Mendi, preferable to Monrovia or Gallinas, (as suggested in your letter,) as the place to which these persons should be brought, in order most conveniently to ensure their return to their own country.

With respect to their removal from America, and their voyage across the Atlantic, I cannot, for these purposes, promise any aid of a pecuniary nature from this Government. I may, however, assure you that, on their arrival here, they and their teachers will be cordially received, adequately maintained and provided for, and safely conducted to their own homes, under the protection of Government and at the public expense.

Severe Gale on Lake Michigan.—The gale on Thursday last was one of the most severe that have visited Lake Michigan for a number of years, and has proved very destructive to the shipping. The "Milwaukie fleet," as our citizens proudly termed the very respectable number of schooners and sloops that were owned here, and were engaged principally in the lumber trade, has met with a severe loss. All of them, except the Columbus and the Savannah, were caught out of port by the gale, and all but two driven ashore. Some of them will be got off without suffering material injury, but many of them will be nearly, if not entirely destroyed. The following is, as far as heard, a correct list of the upper lake craft that was injured by the gale :—

Schr. Jefferson, driven ashore near Chicago.
" Ocean, do do do
" Wave, do do do
" Dolphin, do do Racine.
" McFarlane, do do do
" Manitowoc, do do Southport.
" Memee, do do Milwaukie
" Memee, do do do
Sloop Black Hawk, do do do

The schr. Henry Norton, and the brigs Francis Mills and Osceola, heavy laden with merchandize from the lower lakes, were also caught in the gale. The Norton and Osceola rode out with safety. The Winslow was driven ashore at Gros Point, 17 miles below Chicago. The vessel and cargo, it is said, will prove a total loss. The Winslow was discharging her loading at this place, when the gale struck her.—Milwaukie Gaz. of Dec. 1.

Indictments.—The Grand Jury of Philadelphia have indicted Nicholas Biddle, Samuel Jaudon, and John Andrews, for a conspiracy to defraud the Stockholders of the U. S. Bank of $400,000, and for attempting to conceal the fraud by an illegal entry. The same Grand Jury found bills of Indictment against Messrs. Biddle, Cowperthwaite, Dunlap and others for other alleged frauds.—Eve. Journal.

From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Fire Water.—The following instructions have been issued from the War Department, for the government of the superintendents, agents and other officers connected with the Indian service—founded upon the 20th section of the act to regulate trade and intercourse with Indian tribes ; which 20th section is in the following words ;

"Sec. 20. And be it further enacted That if any person shall sell, exchange, or give, barter or dispose of, any spirituous liquor or wine to an Indian, (in the Indian country) such person shall forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars ; and if any person shall introduce, or attempt to introduce, any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, except such supplies as shall be necessary for the officers of the United States and troops of the service, under the directions of the War Department, such person shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars ; and if any superintendent of Indian affairs, Indian agent, sub-agent, or commanding officer of a military post, has reason to suspect, or is informed, that any white person or Indian is about to introduce, or has introduced, any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, in violation of the provisions of this section, it shall be lawful for such superintendent, Indian agent or sub-agent or military officer, agreeably to such regulations as may be established by the President of the United States, to cause the boats, stores, packages, and places of deposite of such person to be searched ; and if any spirituous liquor or wine is found, and goods, boats, packages and peltries of such person shall be seized and delivered to the proper officer, and shall be proceeded against by libel in the proper court, and forfeited, one half to the use of the informer, and the other half to the use of the United States, or for any Indian, to take and destroy any ardent spirits or wine found in the Indian country, except military supplies, as mentioned in this section."

INSTRUCTIONS.

1st. In all cases in which ardent spirits have been introduced, in violation of the act of June 30th, 1834, or by a party falling within the description of persons whose goods are made liable to forfeiture by this act, such spirits are to be seized and may be destroyed.

2d. The persons who introduce ardent spirits into the Indian country are to be indicted in the court having cognizance of the offence.

3d. When legal measures are necessary, application is to be made for the purpose to the attorney of the United States for the district within which the offence is committed.

4th. In no case will ardent spirits be seized in the Territory where the Indian title has been extinguished, and to which the ordinary jurisdiction of the territorial or state Government extends. The authority of the officers of the Indian Department, in the execution of these instructions, is to be exercised within the country to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, and which is not within the limits of a state.

5th. Whenever ardent spirits are introduced and seized, and legal proceedings instituted, the facts will be immediately reported to the War Department.

6th. An account of all expenses incurred in the execution of these instructions, showing the items in detail, will be transmitted at the close of the proceedings in each case.—The accounts of the district attorney will be certified by the [illegible] and the Judge of the Court.

J. C. SPENCER.
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Nov. 25, 1841.

From the Madisonian.

Navy Regulation.—The practice of presenting swords, plate, or other things of value, from inferior officers or from crews, to their superior or commanding officer, in the way of compliment ; and all notes or resolutions, whether of praise or censure, from inferiors to superiors, are injurious to discipline, and of evil tendency in other respects. They are therefore strictly forbidden.

A. P. UPSHUR.

A Righteous Law.—The act of placing obstructions upon railroads is perhaps the most atrocious that a human being can commit. The Legislature of Maryland has just passed a law making it a penitentiary offence to place any obstruction upon a railroad with a view to overthrow any vehicle passing over the road, and also if the death of any person shall be occasioned by any obstruction thus placed upon the road, the offenders shall be deemed guilty of murder.

More Trouble in Southern Legislation.—Gov. Richardson of South Carolina, has just transmitted his Message to the Legislature, in which he calls serious attention to the communication of the Governor of Virginia, in reference to the recent controversy with New-York. He urges prompt measures to protect the rights of the slaveholders, and makes ominous threats in case of the resistance of the north. He says :

"If the obligations of the constitution which require one state to deliver, on demand, fugitives from the justice of another, are to be disregarded—our institutions assailed—the plunderers of our property encouraged and protected—then must we regard the perpetrator of these aggressions, 'no matter by whom committed,' as a foe to our rights, and an enemy to our peace. Whether the wrong in this case has been done to Virginia or to South Carolina, the principle is the same, the interest involved common to both, and the responsibility of protecting them should equally devolve on every State in the Union, in which justice exercises dominion, or similar institutions exist. Persisting in such a course of unprovoked hostility to the interests and institutions of the South, N. York can only be regarded in the light of any other aggressing power—in peace friends, but enemies in war."

The Rochester Aqueduct.—We have noticed the near completion of this stupendous structure, but as we find a minute description of it in the Rochester journals we shall make no apology for presenting these facts to our readers. The aqueduct and foundation were put under contract in Dec. 1835 ; they will be completed by next spring. The foundation embraces 39,600 cubic yards of rock excavation from the bed of the Genesee, 7,500 cubic yards of excavation, three arches in the mill races containing about 925 cubic yards of curb stone masonry, obtained from the Onondaga and Lockport quarries, and about 9,000 cubic yards laid in foundation walls, the materials for which were taken from the bed of the river. The aqueduct was commenced in '36. The superstructure rests on 6 piers & stone abutments—each 75 1-2 feet long, 10 thick, and 5 high, based on a rock in the bed of the river. It has seven arches of cut stone, each 52 feet span and 10 feet rise, 68 1-2 feet long, 2 1-2 feet thick at the crown, and 3 at the spring. The wing walls 12 feet thick and 3 high. The whole length of the aqueduct from rear to rear of the abutments, is [illegible] feet, and including the wing walls is about [illegible] feet. The whole work will cost about $[illegible] dollars, and is without doubt the most splendid canal aqueduct in the country.—Tribune.

Geo. D. Wall, formerly baggageman on the Syracuse and Utica railroad, has been convicted of grand larceny in robbing the trunks of passengers, and sentenced to the State prison for five years.

Three men recently in attempting to cross the Niagara river from Schlosser to Chippewa, in a boat with six barrels of whiskey, from some cause unknown, were precipitated over the falls ! The wreck of the boat, a day or two after the catastrophe, was discovered, and one body has been found.

A Court Martial has been ordered in the case of Capt. Bolton, of the frigate Brandywine, who returned from the Mediterranean in such hot haste, on hearing that there might be war between England and the United States.

The canal counties of Illinois have resolved to support no man for Governor, who will not pledge himself to support all [illegible]ble and honest plans for an immediate completion of the most important unfinished canal in America—the Illinois and Lake Michigan canal.

Accounts from St. John, state that temperance has spread like a wildfire in St. John. The tee-total pledge has been administered to 2,000 persons in a fortnight, by Dr. Fleming and Rev. Mr Walsh.

DIED.

At the residence of her son, [illegible] Esq. [illegible] ANA CARPENTER, relict of Dr. [illegible] year of her age [illegible].

In [illegible] on the 20th [illegible] Mr. [illegible] BENTLEY, aged 67. He was a member of the Methodist church.

In Truxton, on the [illegible] Mr. LUMAN [illegible] [illegible]

In [illegible], on the 17th inst. Mrs. MARY ABBOT.

The following was written for the occasion [illegible]

Oh, Mary, Mary, [illegible]
While we stand weeping [illegible]
At death's [illegible]
To leave [illegible]
Oh, did you miss [illegible]
Without a cheering [illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]

[illegible]
My faith and hope were [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
While passing death's dark [illegible]
My spirit [illegible]
Jesus sustained me with his love,
My fears to joys [illegible] turned.

So I have passed the shadowy vale,
In pleasing rapture all the while,
For Christ was with me on the way,
And cheered me with a heaven[illegible] smile.
My parting, cutting pains are [illegible]
My body yields to death's [illegible]
My fever's slaked by heavenly dews,
Loved ones of earth relieve this news.

Oh, plant upon my grass green tomb,
The sweetest flower of richest bloom,
And when they blossom fresh and fair,
In heavenly robes I'll linger there.
At summers morn and Autumn's eve,
The shining, heavenly courts I'll leave,
With Angel wings I'll hover round
That little verdant, rosy mound.

Oh, teach my sweetest dearest babe,
The sacrifice that nature made,
To give him birth, and life, and breath,
Did ope to me the gates of death.
Oh, lead him to my rosy tomb,
To cull the flowers which there may bloom,
And as he views my grassy mound
With spirit wings I'll hover round."

Then if with safety you have pass'd
Death's ocean-tempests fearful blast,
We'll dry affection's gushing tear,
That flows so free around your bier,
While one by one we all at last
Life's cheerless desert sands have past
Near thine—beneath thy grass green bed,
We'll lay each weary aching head.

Not long shall we remain in death,
But soon will breathe immortal breath,
The golden Trumpets mellow peals
Shall sound through death's most distant vales,
And one by one, each in their turn,
Will summons to that brilliant morn.
And for death's sable wreath of night,
Will give us crowns of dazzling light.

Bolivar, Dec. 8, 1841.

E. C. POOL.

LIST OF LETTERS.

J. L. Scott, (we will do it,) J. B. Phelps P. M., S. N. Sweet, G. W. Whatehead, (we will send it,) E. C. Pool, (we will accommodate you,) C. Hubbard P. M.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of E. S. Bailey, $1, cr. H. G. Saunders, ,50, J. Spencer, I. Saunders, ,25 each.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of [illegible] levied on the deposite [illegible] Company on the 25th day of O[illegible] 1841, [illegible] the same is requested to be [illegible] the office of said Company [illegible] on or before the first [illegible]

[illegible] Nov. 24, 1841.
WM. [illegible], Treasurer.

C[illegible] Pork, Oats, Timothy [illegible] at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

NEW GOODS,
CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

I[illegible] supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 [illegible] Goods with [illegible] DELLAY [illegible]

Nov. 24.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

[illegible] & QUINBY,

H[illegible] BOOT AND SHOE [illegible] W. SUTTONS [illegible] stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs ; [illegible]

LOW PRICES.

[illegible] New-York [illegible]

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible]

GEO. W. SUTTON.
WM. H. QUINBY.

M[illegible]

FARMERS AND OTHERS TAKE NOTICE.

T[illegible] Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible]

R. RIDER.
[illegible] 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS [illegible] HOUSE & BENJAMIN, [illegible] Winter Fashions for 1841-2 [illegible] Store. [illegible] Sept. 21, 1841. 20m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment [illegible] J. N. ELMORE. Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL [illegible] ELMORE'S.

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry [illegible] Goodwin, [illegible]
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in [illegible] the undersigned Commissioners [illegible] said Court to make partition thereof, [illegible] to the highest bidder, on [illegible] day of N[illegible] at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. [illegible], in De Ruyter, the premises in [illegible] plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated [illegible] of De Ruyter, and belonging to [illegible] Le Baron Goodwin, deceased, and [illegible] beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west [illegible] lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton ; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner [illegible] thence south about one rod to [illegible] owned by Oliver Mitchell ; thence east on [illegible] said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by [illegible] Bump ; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton ; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37 ; thence south about twenty-six rods ; thence west to the centre of the road ; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning ; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russell. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 23, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.

JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40tds

POETRY.

My Mother's Bible.

BY GEORGE P. MORRIS.

This book is all that's left me now!
Tears will unbidden start—
With faltering lip and throbbing brow,
I press it to my heart.
For many generations past,
Here is our family tree;
My mother's hand this Bible clasped—
She, dying, gave it me.

Ah! well do I remember those Whose names these records bear;
Who round the hearth-stone used to close,
After the evening prayer,
And spake of what those pages said,
In terms my heart would thrill!
Though they are with the silent dead,
Here are they living still!

My father read this holy book
To brothers, sisters dear—
How calm was my poor mother's look,
Who learned God's word to hear!
Her angel face—I see it yet!
What thronging memories come!
Again that little group is met
Within the walls of home!

Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
When all were false, I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.
The mines of earth no treasures give
That could this volume buy.
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Buffalo Com. Advertiser.

THE PARTED FAMILY.

Under that common heading, "Information wanted," so frequently appearing among the advertisements of city papers, how many stories of domestic anguish are hidden! The absent and lost one sought for—perhaps a husband, or wife or child, or parent—once united by many and tender ties to those sorrowing relatives or friends, who would fain seek thro' the world the object of their solicitude, may be pining in bitter sorrow, suffering the pangs of cruel want, or have found that last refuge of the lone wanderer—the grave—far from those who once loved and still mourn over the missing link in some chain-like circle of family affections.—How often, too, that little anxiously inquiring advertisement goes forth like the dove that left the ark, over the wide waste of a strange land, to return again, after a weary and fruitless quest, back to the sad bosom whence it came. Yet not always thus—sometimes they bear gladly back the olive branch of hope and joy, with tidings of the lost and sought, soon to be restored to the embraces of love and friendship. Such a happy consummation we have the pleasure to record in the following little sketch of the fortunes of a separated family, respecting whom an advertisement appeared in this paper last month.

About three weeks since, a pretty and interesting young woman, with two fine children, of the ages of one and three years, called in the office of our City Clerk, enquiring for the Mayor. That officer was absent—but her sorrowful demeanor spoke so affectingly in her behalf, and although evidently in humble life she seemed so intelligent and unassuming in her distress, that Mr. Lacy, the Clerk, was humanely led to ask the cause of her troubles, when she told him her brief story.

She said her husband—whose name was Evans—left their native place, Brecknock, in Wales, a year ago, to seek a new home for them in America, leaving them to follow when he should have found the desired spot, and earned the means to enable them to make the journey. He finally settled at Oak Hill, Jackson county, in the southern part of the state of Ohio, where he worked industriously at his trade, that of a tailor, until he had laid by eighty dollars for the passage money of his family. This amount he enclosed to his wife, with directions as the best route to reach her destination, which would be via Liverpool and New York. She accordingly bid adieu to her birth place, and started on her lone and distant voyage, cheered with the prospect of soon rejoining her husband in their new western home.—On arriving at the nearest seaport on the coast, she was persuaded by the mercenary captain of a trading vessel, that it would be much cheaper for her to go by way of Quebec, where he was bound, and she therefore took passage with him. It was two long months after they set sail before the tardy craft reached port, during which time her stock of provisions had been exhausted, and she was compelled to purchase of the captain, at his own rates, to supply the wants of herself and children. The extortions to which her inexperience rendered her an easy prey, and the increased expenses of the inconvenient route she had ignorantly taken, left her without a shilling on her arrival at Buffalo. She was still five hundred miles from her journey's end, without a friend or acquaintance, a truly helpless "stranger in a strange land" with her little children dependent upon her for bread.

The energies of a woman's nature so strikingly developed by necessity, did not leave her to despair. She obtained a shelter for herself and children in a cellar room in the Trowbridge block, for which she had to pay five shillings a week, and succeeded in procuring a little sewing from a clothing shop, which barely sufficed to purchase their coarse and scanty fare.—She sent a letter to her husband informing him of her arrival and destitute situation, and patiently awaited his expected relief. Daily did she ask with trembling heart at the post office, for the wished for answer, and daily did she turn away, with a heavy heart, as the same cold disappointing "no" responded unvaryingly to her anxious inquiry. She wrote again and again.—Weeks wore away in this cruel suspense, and the thousand fears that agitate the female breast in such a crisis, may be supposed to have swayed her mind. The fearful apprehensions that sickness or death, or even his possible desertion of the wedded wife of his bosom and their little ones, might have left her to the sharp miseries which are the common lot of women in such utter destitution, were more poignant than the pangs of hunger. At length her employer had no more work for her, and she was obliged to pledge articles of her clothing to procure necessary food. Several weeks rent for her poor accommodations were due, which she was unable to pay, and in her extremity she thought of applying to the Mayor for advice and relief.

Mr. Lacy became interested in the poor woman's behalf, at the recital. He instituted the necessary inquiries as to the sum necessary to take her and her children to their sought for home, and drew up a subscription on paper, which he placed in the hands of Mr. W——, one of her countrymen who is a worthy mechanic residing here, and who with prompt philanthropy took the suffering family to his own house. Here he found on talking over matters pertaining to their "father land," that his guest was born within half a mile of his old home, which he had left twenty years before; and the long chat which followed about the familiar scenes and incidents of birth-place; the family histories of an entire neighborhood as far back as her earliest recollections which had to be told—may well be imagined to have repaid the kind Welchman for his hospitality.

Mrs. Evans remained with her new found friend for three days, during which time he raised the money ($15) for her passage—one of our well known and oldest merchants, Mr. W——, who was a native of the same country, generously giving five dollars and Mr. Cleveland, as overseer of the poor adding five dollars and the balance made up of smaller contributions. Her passage was accordingly engaged by her friend, Mr. W., who accompanied her to the boat. While waiting its departure, she mentioned that her shawl, which had been pawned for a small sum, yet remained pledged, and she was urged by her companion to return for it, being furnished by him with the amount necessary for its redemption. While absent on the errand, the boat cast off, and on her return was under way. Lamenting this disappointment of renewed hopes she turned away and———her husband stood before her! He had been in the city ten days in search of her—had boarded at the United States Hotel, just over the low and squalid apartment in which his family were staying—he, comfortably lodged and living upon the luxuries of a well served table, while they were famishing but a few feet distant! He had started, immediately on the receipt of her letter, and since his arrival here had been assiduously seeking to find her, until, almost despairing of success, he inserted in this paper the advertisement of which we have spoken. Happening that same day to be at the wharf gazing with the crowd at the departing boat, his attention was excited, with that of others, to the little group who were bewailing the loss of their passage, and thus he found the object of his search.

It was a joyful meeting—and after returning to the charitable donors the money which had been contributed, the re-united and happy family took boat the next day for their western home.

From the Geneva Advertiser.

GENEVA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

It is but a few years since this Institution was founded in the village of Geneva; and it must be highly gratifiying to our citizens generally, as well as to every lover of Medical Science, to witness the rapid strides it has made to emulate the older and more eminent institutions of a similar character in the country. The Faculty is composed of gentlemen qualified in an eminent degree by their talents, learning and attainments in the particular departments of Medicine, and its auxiliary branches, to which they have been designated to impart instruction; and their unassuming manners and courteous deportment enhance the value of their other accomplishments. In this passing remark the writer of this paragraph disclaims the intention to flatter these gentlemen—less could not be said in justice to them.

The school now consists of about one hundred and fifty Students—showing a gradual increase in number from the first term. By the indications thus exhibited from year to year, it was readily foreseen that the Building at present occupied, although constructed for the purpose, was wholly inadequate to the growing wants of the institution and of the country. In consequence of this, application was duly made to the Legislature, and at the close of the last Session, with a praise-worthy liberality for which our State is distinguished, an appropriation of five thousand dollars a year for the term of three years, was granted. Notwithstanding the late period at which the law was passed, yet with surprising energy have the walls of a large and commodious Edifice been erected, which, when completed, will be an ornament to the village. It will be finished previous to the next Term of the College; and we venture to assert, from the explanations made to us of the plan, that it will afford ample accommodations and be found, on comparison, as convenient in all respects as any building of the size in the country devoted to this object.

Doubtless further appropriations will be required to procure a Library, apparatus and the necessary appendages, to enable the Institution to disseminate the greatest amount of useful information in that branch of science which has for its object to lessen the evils and alleviate the sufferings of the human race.

At the present time there are in attendance on the Lectures, but more especially the Anatomical course by Doct. WEBSTER, a considerable nnmber of Practitioners in the Medical art, from the surrounding country to the distance of many miles, who are embracing the present facilities for refreshing their memories and obtaning a more practical knowledge of the human system than is afforded in the ordinary course of the profession.

B.

MEDICAL.

A meeting of fifty-one Medical gentlemen who were convened in this village, for the purpose of hearing Professor WEBSTER'S extra course of Surgical Anatomy, was held on the 15th inst. Dr. PELATIAH B. BROOKS was called to the Chair, and Dr. J. E. HAWLEY was appointed Secretary.

The following gentlemen were elected a Committee on Resolutions:

INCREASE W. CHILD,	of Hopewell,	Ontario Co.
JOEL GRAY,	Geneseo,	Liv. Co.
ELISHA DOUBLEDAY,	Italy,	Yates Co.
JAMES A. HAHN,	Waterloo,	Seneca Co.
A. S SPRAGUE,	Buffalo,	Erie Co.
J. E. HAWLEY,	Ithica,	Tomp. Co.
PELATIAH B. BROOKS	Binghamton, N. Y. "

The subjoined Resolutions were presented and passed unanimously;

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt thanks and gratulations to Professor JAMES WEBSTER, for the novel, highly interesting, able, and efficient manner, in which he has demonstrated for our benefit, the anatomical structure of the human system; and the practical simplicity with which he has exhibited the surgical relation of its parts.

We embrace this occasion to express our thorough conviction of the superiority of his analytic method of accompanying his demonstrations with dissections at the time.

Resolved, That we extend our cordial acknowledgements to Professor DE LA MATER, for his perspicuous, learned, and instructive Lectures on Pathological Anatomy, as illustrated by the accurate and ingenious drawings of Cruvelhier and Carswell.

To Professor SPENCER, we would express our high sense of his learning, ingenuity and indefatigable research, as evinced in his excellent and instructive Lectures on Cholera, and the theory of Epidemics.

To Professor HADLEY, we would say, that, although we, (in a body,) have heard but one of his Lectures, his well-known, well-earned, and substantial reputation requires neither comment or commendation from us: and to the other gentlemen, connected with the Academical and Medical Institutions of Geneva, we desire to add our acknowledgements for their urbanity and courtesy to us, during our visit to this delightful village.

Resolved, That we are pleased to avail ourselves of the present opportunity, to indicate our approbation of the deportment, application, and moral appearance of the Students of this Institution. We look to them, as the future supporters of the professional interests and character of this portion of the State, with pride and gratification.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Geneva Courier and Geneva Advertiser; and that other editors who feel an interest in the welfare and prosperity of this Institution, be respectfully requested to copy them.

PELATIAH B. BROOKS, Ch'n.
J. E. HAWLEY, Sec'y.

WATER.

MEDICAL QUALITIES OF SEA WATER.—The October number of the American Repertory contains some facts pertaining to the peculiar effects of sea water upon the human system, that are well worthy of the attention of medical men, and invalids generally. The virtues referred to as entering into the composition of water, are dependent upon the presence of iodine and promine—both of which have been detected by recent analysis in sea water. Independent of these, there are other very active ingredients in sea water. The first is chloride of sodium, which exists in the proportion of one to thirty-five, or in other words a pint of sea water contains 216 1-2 grains—that is to say, something less than half an ounce of common salt. The second is what medical men call muriate of magnesia, which is a combination of chlorine with magnesium—a salt endowed with well marked properties on the human frame, and which constitutes one of the active ingredients of Pullna water. To complete this analysis, it should be stated that the same pint of sea water contains also 18 1-2 grains Epsom salts, 11 1-4 grains of sulphate of lime, with a very trifling quantity of carbonate of lime.

After this account, it will be readily admitted that sea water is in fact a mineral water, to all intents and purposes, and that we may, therefore, look with as much confidence for beneficial effects from its employment, whether externally or internally, provided it be judiciously recommended, as from the employment of other mineral waters—proportionate to, and in accordance with their respective chemical composition.

NAPOLEON AND AN ENGLISH SAILOR.—The following anecdote appears in a recent French paper: While the French troops were encamped at Boulonge, public attention was much excited by the daring attempt at escape made by an English sailor. This person having escaped from the depot and gained the borders of the sea, the woods on which served him for concealment constructed, with no other instrument than a knife, a boat entirely of the bark of trees. When the weather was fair, he mounted a tree and looked out for an English flag, and, at last observed a British cruiser, he ran to the shore with his boat on his back, and when he was about to trust himself to the mercy of the waves, he was pursued, arested, and loaded with chains. Every body in the army was anxious to see the boat, and Napolean having at length heard of the affair, sent for the sailor and interrogated him. "You must" said Napolean, "have had a great desire to see your country again since you could resolve to trust yourself on the open sea in so frail a bark." "No" said the sailor, "but a poor and infirm mother whom I was anxious to see!"—"And you shall see her," said Napolean, giving at the same time orders to set him at liberty and bestow upon him a considerable sum of money for his mother, observing that she must be a good mother who has so good a son.

A BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.—Two young men belonging to one of our neighbouring cities, who were very popular throughout a large circle of acquaintance, not long since took leave of their friends for the purpose of traveling through the Southern States. While they were sailing down the Mississippi river, a serious accident occured which occasioned the instant death of them both. Soon after the news of their unhappy fate had reached their native city, one of the ministers of the place closed a discourse, the object of which was to impress the minds of the people with the importance of more personal piety, the following impressive allusion to the two unfortunate young men:

"And need I appeal to the young men of this assembly, and plead with them thus to live? And we plead with you to begin now, or you may begin never. What low and melancholy moan of unwonted sadness is that stealing on our ears. It comes from far—from the turbid Mississippi, & is like the mingled voices of two sinking beneath its gurgling waves. Miller! Garthwait! your last farewell still lingered in our ear; and so soon, so suddenly ye wave to us from the shore of eternity. O ye two, so young, so bright, so buoyant, companions in travel, companions in death, ye speak to us, and bid us work while it is day."

MOUNTAINEERS OF HAYTI.—Mr. Granville, the Agent of President Boyer, has communicated the following interesting facts concerning a people denominated the Mountaineers of Hayti:

"They are a secluded people devoted to peace and the simplest modes of life.—When the island is in peace, they come down from the heights of the mountains and cultivate their little lots on its sides, or wander in the sloping forests; and sometimes, though very seldom, and in few numbers, enter the large market towns of the island. They raise cotton, which they manufacture into coarse cloth for their own use, also coffee and vegetable enough for their own consumption; but very seldom carry on any trade, or offer any of their productions for sale. On any alarm of war, they retire to their caves and glens in the heights of the mountains, and are no more seen 'till the peace is restored. What their numbers are is not known. They have no letters nor education, speak a language peculiar to them, though it is evidently of French origin in part. They are whites in complexion, their hair also white, but wooly, like the Africans. They are but little known, as they take no part in the transactions of the government, and seem only to be solicitous to live separate from the rest of mankind, unknown and unacquainted with the world."

WIRE BRIDGE AT FAIRMOUNT.—This novel yet beautiful structure, is going ahead rapidly, and will be ready for use early in the Spring. The bridge itself is composed of wood, suspended from wire cables. Ten cables, consisting of about 300 wires each, are stretched from the abutments on each side of the river. They pass over the tops of abutments and the cables are secured on the eastern side in the solid rock and on the western side by huge blocks of granite above the excavations. The cables as they pass the tops of the columns, rest upon iron axles which yield a little as the action of the bridge needs relief.

The distance from the granite columns to the centre of the span of the inverted arch formed by the cables, is about 350 feet. The curves, of course, will be very beautiful. The bridge itself runs in a horizontal line, from abutment to abutment, cutting the curve at its base. It will be twenty-six feet wide, afford ample space for the carriage way, and foot paths on each side of generous width. The bridge is simply a platform with railings, made light and graceful. It will hang from the cables by wire ropes, securely fastened. The whole structure will combine beauty, strength, durability, for freshets can never reach it, and the cables are incapable of decay. Repairs upon the wood work can always be made with the utmost ease.—Phil. Amer.

It has been found that the vast beds of chalk composing thousands of miles of the surface of Europe, and extending to unknown depths, are almost wholly formed of the shells of mycroscopic animalculæ, so small that a pound weight of chalk contians 10,000,000 of them. Each of these was a living being, with the organs and functions of vitality, each curiously formed, and dependent upon a Universal Providence, the same that guides the stars and planets in their orbits.

"Not a bad lunch that," said a hungry fellow at one of our hotels yesterday; "but the cow which furnished the milk from which that butter was manufactured must have been a cow of extraordinary, unequalled, yea, Herculean power."

"Why?" asked the bar keeper.

"Because, that very butter is the strongest I ever tasted."

The butter plate cracked in an instant.—N. O. Picayune.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines.

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant.
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases, such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks.
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey.

☞For which the highest price will be paid.☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills.	Godfrey's Cordial.
Morrison's Hygean "	Foster's Anodyne Cordial.
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "	Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc.
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr Phelp's Tomato "	Dr McMunn's Elixir Opium.
M. Graffen's Lion of the Day "	Hive Syrup.
Dr Pannel's "	Laudanum.
Moffat's Veget Life "	Paregoric.
Gregory's Billious "	Oil Organum.
Harlem Oil	" Spike.
British "	" Lemon.
Pectoral Bal'm Honey	" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC.

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞ A certain cure in all cases ☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web's Dictionary, large.	Novum Græcum Testamentum
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon,	Colloquial Phrases,
" Legendre,	Greek Reader,
" First Lessons,	Greek Lessons,
" Arithmetic	Jacob's Latin Reader,
Comstock's Chemistry,	Polyglott Bibles,
Phelps' Philosophy,	Quarto "
Brown's Grammar	Medium Drawing Paper,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,	Demi " "
	Cap " "
Town's Analysis,	Drawing Pencils,
Olney's Geography,	Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,	Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store, together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M., Gran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Asa Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear
Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis [illegible].
New Geneva—B. P. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Sodus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

H. Crandall

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 44.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 96.

TERMS.—Two dollars in advance.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, DECEMBER 29, 1841. [$2,50 at the end of the year.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

MUSINGS.—NO. II.

The Bible—a slight glance at its Contents—its Literary Merit.

As well can the untutored son of the forest appreciate the beautiful imagery of a Homer, or the lisping child fathom the depths of a Newton or Locke, as can my inexperienced pen do aught like justice to the subject before me. As we open the sacred pages, heaven's pure light dawns upon subjects that have ever baffled the unassisted reason of the philosopher.

To appreciate the first chapter of Genesis, let us look at a few of the absurd theories of man's invention to account for the origin of the flower-enameled earth, the glorious sun, "the moon, that lovely orphan of the sky," the glittering stars, heaven's own poetry, and man for whom they seem to have been made. The ludicrous theory recorded in the inspired Shastah of the Brahmins, with others of a similar character, we will pass by, and refer to those of the learned only. Buffon, a modern infidel philosopher, conjectures that the earth was originally a globe of liquid fire, struck from the sun by a passing comet, as a spark is produced by the collision of flint and steel. Darwin, another infidel, supposes that the mass of chaos suddenly exploded, like a barrel of gun-powder, and in that act exploded the sun, which in its flight by a similar convulsion, exploded the earth,—that the moon, and that, in like manner, the stars. Were Buffon here, I would like to ask him if chance presided over that eventful meeting; and here I would love to hear Darwin explain that strange phenomenon, the explosion of perfect order from that confused mass—old chaos.

From a world thus absurdly starting into existence, we shall not be surprised to find it no less strangely peopled. If we turn to classic Greece, we find two of her most distinguished schools, the Epicurean and Stoic, believing man to have sprung with plants and the lower animals from the tender soil of the new-formed earth. In later times we find Buffon, and Linnæus too, to whom has been awarded the high titles of "Northern Light," and "Prince of Naturalists," tracing their origin to that caricature of man—the Monkey; while Darwin, to complete the absurdity, seriously conjectures that the lord of this lower world may trace his origin to the *oyster. What lover of reason does not turn from such theories to the Mosaic record, with feelings simiiliar to those that light up the eye and quicken the step of the eastern traveler, as he descries the beautiful oasis, with its verdant carpet and sparkling waters, amid that cheerless sea of sand.

Considered as a history only, the book of Genesis contains more of absorbing interest than the numerous vols. of a Rollin, a Hume, and a Gibbon. Man, with his exquisite symmetry of form and god-like intellect, and the beautiful world he inhabits, with the teeming multitudes of earth, air, and water, stand before us the workmanship of God's own hand; a Being possesing every conceivable perfection in an infinite degree. As we examine that enigma, the human heart, we find in its intricate labyrinths seeds whose fruit would be bitter indeed.—The sacred historian alone informs us how man, once holy, became corrupt. As the naturalist in his excavations discovers the remains of some huge monster that has long since disappeared from the surface of the earth, and asks what hand buried him so low, the Bible comes to his aid, and tells him that in olden time the waters from under the earth rushed from their hiding places to mingle with the sheets issuing from the open windows of heaven, to show, in the ruin of man, he could not sin with impunity against his God.

As we follow, with the sacred historian, the descendants of Noah to the plain of Shinar, and behold the majestic tower rising heavenward—as we look again and see the mighty fabric deserted, its builders widely dispersed, and learn here the origin of the Titan's war with heaven, and the discomfiture that followed, we see that heathen Mythology is indebted to the Bible for some of its brightest gems. Are you a lover of the pathetic, the heart-melting, and do you seek it in the writings of a Scott and Bulwer, a James and Dickens? Turn to the history of Joseph and others of a similar character. What novelist, though he wield the pen of genius with a master's hand, has created a hero like Jacob's favorite son? Whether in the prison or the palace, a servant or ruler, the same unspotted virtue is his constant attendant. The moral grandeur of his character excites our admiration, and we feel that his biographer was an inspired penman. Do you have those stirring scenes far removed from the monotony of every-day life? and do you seek them in fictitious writing, in the God-fought battles of the blind bard of Chios? The Bible invites your perusal. Follow that infant, confided by a mother's hand to the frail rush cradle—perchance, to the Nile's dark waters, to the court of that king who had condemned him to die. Go with him to the burning bush—to the Red Sea—to Sinai's awful mount, and there on consecrated ground read, admire, and love, that God-enacted law, and as you remember its dread penalty, estimate if you can its restraining influence upon a sin-loving world. Go with Joshua to the siege of Jericho, and behold its walls falling before a greater than a Minerva or Jupiter. Look again and behold the king of day stopping in his onward course to see Israel's God complete the victory over the proud enemy.

Again, see heathen Mythology borrowing its mighty Hercules from the character and super-human deeds of the Bible Samson.—Accompany Daniel into the lion's den, and his companions to the fiery furnace; and then witness that tragic scene at Belshazzar's feast, and point to the human author, who in the wildest flights of his imagination has pictured scenes half so thrilling as are found in the volume of truth, the only Book that bears not the impress of the wisdom or folly of erring man. Has virtuous friendship, that pure and holy thing, divested the rose of its thorn in your pathway of life—presenting a beautiful redeeming trait in the character of selfish, mercenary man? How beautifully are its ennobling principles illustrated in the touching story of David and Jonathan? Does patriotism's pure flame burn brightly upon the altar of your heart, and have you turned with mingled piety and contempt from the perfidious Tarpeia who could betray her country for the useless ornaments its enemies wore? Admire, then, with me, Jeptha's heroic daughter, as she entreats her afflicted father to fulfil his rash vow, though that vow fulfilled, condemns her to death, or separation from all she loves. Have the deep feelings of your heart been stirred within you as you have seen a Roman Brutus, losing, as it were, the character of the affectionate father in that of the just judge as he condemns his conspirator sons?—What, then, have been your feelings as you have seen the gray-haired sire slowly wending his way up Moriah's Mount—have beheld Isaac with willing hand unconsciously assist in erecting his own funeral pile? Has not the quick gathering tear left its impress on the holy page as you have seen that father take his only son, the child of promise in whom his future hopes were garnered, bind him to the altar, and raise towards heaven the implement of death? Why falls not that uplifted hand? Abraham is obedient, God is faithful who has promised, and Isaac lives. As we leave the thrilling scenes of the Old Testament for the yet more thrilling ones of the New—as we see a greater than Abraham's only son bearing the ponderous cross to Calvary—as the stroke of justice falls and we hear the innocent victim exclaiming, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me," the pen almost refuses to perform its allotted task. How can it, inexperienced as it is, trace the history of God manifest in the flesh. That loved Volume in whose pages life and immortality are brought to light, is familiar to all.—The story of a Savior's love and suffering, like a strain of sweetly melancholy music has fallen upon our ear from childhood's early hour, and lest we mar its deep pathos we will pass it in silence by.

From this brief and imperfect sketch of its contents, we find the Bible in interest surpassing all other books combined. But can the lover of literature glean food from its pages for a refined literary taste? When our own loved Franklin was a resident of the French Court, he chanced to be one of a circle in which literary merit was the topic of conversation. Authors were criticised with such impartiality and discernment, that Franklin solicited the privilege of submitting for their decision of its merits, an extract from a favorite work brought from America. From a pocket Bible he read the book of Ruth. Silence, and the tearful eye evinced the deep interest the simple sketch of rural life had awakened. When the reader ceased, unqualified approbation was the language of all. Strange as it may seem, they knew not its source, and they withheld not the meed of praise. Beautiful in its unaffected simplicity as is the book of Ruth, in literary merit it stands not alone, or pre-eminent. "The history of Joseph," says a distinguished writer, "considered merely as a human composition, as a specimen of simple, graceful, and pathetic narrative, has no parallel. Here is found all that gives beauty to the finest drama—a perfect unity of design; a richness and variety of incidents involving the plot in obscurity, yet gradually drawing to its intended developement; and the whole issuing happily, rewarding pre-eminent worth with appropriate honors and blessings, and visiting iniquity with deserved humiliation and punishment." Are you a lover of poetry? If you find not its true spirit embalmed in the inimitable Psalms of the Shepherd king, or flowing from the hallowed lips of Isaiah—if you perceive it not interwoven with the history of Job, or the prophecies of "Elijah, who stood up as a fire, and whose word burned as a lamp"—hope not to find it in the polluted pages of the gifted Byron, of the almost heart-searching Shakspeare, or soul-elevating Milton. If beautiful imagery, grandeur, and sublimity have not left their impress on the pactical parts of the Bible—if the substance of true poetry is not found in the Book of books, you will seek in vain for its shadow even elsewhere. Lover of literature, in sweetly persuasive tones the Bible invites your critical, your prayerful perusal.

MARY.

---

*The shadow of reason thrown around this strange hypotheses, together with the other theories mentioned, may be found in Series 2d, Section 3d, of Good's Book of Nature.

Religious Department.

DISAPPOINTMENT IN THE LAST DAY.

[Continued from our last.]

4. Numbers will be disappointed hereafter, because they have mistaken the true character of God. They believed that persons must love God in order to enjoy him, and they flattered themselves that they did love him. They supposed, indeed, that they had always loved him, and that the love of God was one of the most natural affections of the human heart. They could not doubt that they were the friends of God, and that the judgment scene would test the sincerity of their friendship. But when they appear in the eternal world, to their unutterable confusion, they find, that the God they loved so well is not there. They discover that their God was a mere fiction, and had no existence save in their own imaginings; for instead of taking the character of God as he had himself revealed it, they fashioned it after their own fancies, and no wonder they loved it. No wonder they pleased themselves with the airy delusion. But though the phantom has fled, they find that the God of the Bible, the God of heaven remains. He remains, just as he revealed himself, glorious in holiness, angry with the wicked, delighting to show mercy to the penitent; but he will by no means tarnish the honor of his law, or clear the guilty. How shall they meet this holy and just God? How shall they stand before him, and answer for denying him? They feel that they cannot do it; and in consternation and confusion they cry to the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne.

5. Another class will be disappointed in the judgment, because they have mistaken the nature of true religion. They believed religion necessary, as a preparation for death, and they clung to something which they thought was religion. They continued to cling to it to the last. But the moment they step into eternity, they find that they have been deceived. They have mistaken the shadow for the substance, and have clung to that which cannot support them.

Some mistake their orthodoxy for religion, and because they are speculatively correct in their religious opinions, flatter themselves that they shall be accepted.—But let such persons remember, that self-flattery like this is no part of orthodoxy—that there is such a thing as 'holding the truth in righteousness'—that an enlightened head renders an unsanctified heart the more inexcusable—and that mere speculation, however correct and extended, cannot save them. 'Thou believest there is one God,' and believest many things which he has revealed; 'thou doest well: the devils also believe and tremble.'

Some mistake their sincerity for religion, and think it enough to ensure their salvation that they are not chargeable with conscious hypocrisy. They sincerely believe what they profess, and this is all that can properly be required of them. Persons of this character—and it may be feared they are not few—seem not to know, that in the search of truth and duty, men may be blinded and deceived; that they may be sincerely wrong, as well as sincerely right; and that "there is a way which seemeth right unto some, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The Hindoo may be sincere, in his self-immolation. The Mohammedan may be sincere, in his long and tiresome pilgrimage to the birth-place of the prophet. The Catholic may be sincere in attempting to buy the grace of God for money. Paul was very sincere, in the sense in which the word is here used, 'in persecuting the church of God. 'I verily thought,' says he, 'that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.' Yet he was at this time 'a blasphemer and injurious,' and had he persisted, he must have perished forever.

Some mistake external morality for religion, and because they treat their fellow men with justice and kindness, and perform the relative and social duties, fancy that they have all the religion which they shall ever need. They feel no deep sense of sin, and no need of a Savior's cleansing blood; and though they live in a neglect of prayer and all the duties which they owe to God, they are content to rest on their own supposed righteousness, as the foundation of their hopes, and their preparation for heaven. Notwithstanding the absurdity of views such as these, there are multitudes, it may be feared, who entertain them. Thousands under the gospel are living, dying, and going into eternity, with no better religion than this. How great must be their disappointment, when summoned into the presence of God in all the confidence of self-righteous expectation, to find that heaven has no place for them: to find that a preparation for heaven is a very different thing from what they had supposed: to find that all who rise to that world go there, not on the ground of their own righteousness, but as those who have been pardoned for the sake of Christ: to find that the feeling which pervades all heaven is, 'Not unto us, not unto us, but to Him who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, be all the glory of our salvation.'

Others mistake the nature of religion in a different way. They think it enough that they had convictions of sin; that they have passed through something which they call conversion; that they have made a public profession of their faith; and are commonly regarded and spoken of as Christians. They do not love the duties of religion, and they neglect these duties as often as decency will allow. Their hearts are set upon the world, and they pursue it with unremitting ardor. Still, strange as it may seem, they do not doubt that their hearts have been renewed, that they have the essentials of religion, and that they are prepared to die in peace. Such persons seem to suppose that, in order to be religious, it is only necessary to pass through a certain process usually denominated conviction and conversion; and that prayer, and watchfulness, communion with God, and a strict religious life (though well enough for those who like them) are wholly unnecessary. Consequently, though they live after the manner of the world, and perhaps more loosely than many who make no pretensions to piety, they never doubt the reality of their religion or the goodness of their hope. But, if the representations of the Savior are at all to be credited, such persons are preparing for an overwhelming disappointment. A shoreless eternity is before them; time, with resistless current, is bearing them on towards it, and the moment they enter there, they will find that they have no support. They will discover, at a glance, that they have been deceived, that they have mistaken the nature of true religion, that the gate of heaven is shut against them, and their souls are lost.—And though they may stand without, and cry, 'Lord, Lord, open unto us; we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets;' a voice of thunder will reply, 'I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, ye workers of iniquity.'

6. Many will be disappointed at the last, because they have mistaken the character of their own exercises and feelings. They believed that religion was necessary as a preparation for heaven, and that true religion is in its nature spiritual, having its seat in the affections of the soul. They trusted, also, that their own affections were of the right kind, and consequently that their title to heaven was sure: but in this respect their hearts deceived them.

Some mistake the excitement of mere animal sensibilities for the glow and fervor of religious affection. We are so constituted as to be susceptible of a variety of feelings connected with our animal nature, such as fear, joy, grief, natural affection, &c. These animal feelings are not unfrequently excited by religious considerations. The sufferings of Christ, the worth of the soul, the joys of heaven, and the pains of hell, may be so presented to the mind, as to excite hopes and fears, desires and sympathies which are entirely of an animal nature. Feelings of this kind are usually ardent, strong, palpable to the sense, and peculiarly calculated to deceive the unwary. In many instances, they have been mistaken for holy affections, and persons, on the ground of them, have made high professions and indulged confident hopes. A religion of this character is usually transient. The gust of passion quickly subsides, and the sleep of worldliness returns. Or, where this is not strictly the case, the character is unstable, fitful, subject to inconsistencies and extravagancies, and easily distinguishable from the course of the just, which shines brighter and brighter to the perfect day. Still, those who are deceived by feelings such as have been described, are usually fond of the delusion, and refuse to renounce it. They think much of their high religious exercises, perhaps boast of them, and regard themselves as elevated almost above the region of doubt, or the ordinary necessity of self-scrutiny. O what must be the disappointment of such persons, their weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, when they shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, and all the ransomed of the Lord, in the kingdom of glory, and they themselves thrust out!

But there is another mistake in regard to the nature of religious exercises, by which many are preparing themselves for disappointment hereafter. They do not distinguish between holy and selfish affections, and because their selfishness assumes a religious aspect, they please themselves with the idea that it is religion itself.—They have something which they call the love of God, but it is a mere selfish love: they love him because they think he loves them, and is determined to save them.—[Some may think that the same selfish love which is here condemned is inculcated by the apostle John. "We love him because he first loved us." 1 John iv. 19. But a moment's attention to the previous verses will convince any candid person that this is a mistake. The apostle does not describe the love of God to us personally as the motive which should excite our love to him; but the love of God, in sending "his Son to be the propitiation for our sins," and in "giving us of his Spirit" to renew our hearts, he represents as the first cause of all religious affection; so that it is strictly true, that had he not first loved us, and had he not manifested his love in the ways which have been pointed out, we never should have been brought to the exercise of a true love to him. Had he not given his Son to die for us, and his Spirit to sanctify us, how should we have been delivered from the bondage of corruption? And how should the true love of God ever have been shed abroad in our hearts? This love is a very different thing from that selfish affection of which I have spoken, and by which so many, it may be feared, are fatally deceived.] Their repentance too is of the same character. If anything more than mere compunction of conscience, or animal grief—if it is a sorrow of the heart at all, it is selfish sorrow; a sorrow for sin, not because it is wrong in itself, and has been committed against God, but because it is likely to injure them. With the same kind of affection they embrace the Savior. They believe he has died for them, and will certainly save them, and they love him for the favors which they expect to receive from him. Under a delusion such as this, persons may also experience a joy in religion, which they mistake for holy joy, but which is entirely selfish. They believe that God loves them, and has pardoned all their sins, and will certainly make them happy forever; and with such impressions, who would not rejoice?—These selfish affections may at times be ardent, may rise very high, and may leave the possessor of them in no doubt as to the reality of his religion, while it is obvious to other eyes that they have nothing of the nature of true religion in them. They are spurious, counterfeit, terminating on self and not on God, and such as a holy God cannot approve. Persons deceived in this way will be very likely to go on, trusting to their false hopes and selfish affections, till the light of eternity undeceives them; and then their disappointment will be extreme. Thinking nothing but that they have religion, and their foundation is strong, till their eyes are opened in the other world; what fearfulness must surprise them, what untold horrors must come over them, to find that they have been deceived, that they have no religion, that their lamps when most needed are gone out, and they are left in eternal night!

It may be very easily conceived, that the disappointments, with which so many will be overtaken at the last, must be unutterably dreadful. Disappointments are painful, often almost beyond endurance, in the comparatively trifling concerns of the present life. Who then shall describe the anguish of disappointed, despairing souls, when the curtain of sense is withdrawn, and the scenes of the invisible world appear? Who can conceive the misery of those, whose unsuspected, long-cherished hopes suddenly vanish, in the blaze of eternity, and under the searching eye of Jehovah? They see the celestial city afar off, but it is shut against them. They see the happy company of the redeemed, but they must never be of their number. Instead of the approbation of God, they meet his frown. Instead of his favor, they endure his wrath. In place of expected glory and peace, they feel the gnawings of the never-dying worm, and the burnings of unquenchable fire.—And what puts the seal upon their destruction is, they know it is irreversible. They know their dreadful state is fixed. Could they look forward to any period, however distant, when they should enjoy again the offers of the gospel, it would be some relief; but no such prospect is presented. All around them is the blackness of darkness. All is horror and despair. And to meet this, in place of an expected heaven of glory and bliss,—what a difference! What a depth of disappointment and wo!

To conceive of the subject more fully, make it, reader, your own case. You now indulge a hope of heaven. You flatter yourself that you have reason to hope.—Your hope is dear to you, and you are unwilling to relinquish it. But admit it as possible, at least for a moment, that you may be deceived, and that were you called away in your present state, you must be found among the miserable. Suppose also that your summons had arrived, that the scenes of eternity had opened, and your future miseries were now disclosed. O tell me, fellow traveler to the judgment, tell me, if you can, what would be your feelings under such circumstances! What a fearfulness would surprise you! What a shuddering horror would come over you! What a disappointment would overwhelm you! Such a destruction of your fondest hopes—such a dashing of your most cherished expectations—such a fall—such a ruin;—how could you or I sustain it!

And yet, is it not possible, beloved reader, that we may be deceived? Is it not possible that we are preparing all this disappointment and ruin for ourselves? I put these questions, not to inflict needless pain, but to give seasonable warning. We need not be deceived. We are under no necessity of urging our way onward to the judgment with 'a lie in our right hand.' Some of the more common grounds of deception and disappointment have been pointed out. Are we resting on them? Let every reader search his deceitful heart to the bottom, and determine for himself. There is a hope which, in the hour of trial, will be as an anchor to the tossed soul; and there is a hope which is as the spider's web. There is a hope of more value than worlds; and there is a hope which is worse than nothing. Both, reader, are before you. Both are within your reach. Give all diligence, and you may secure the one; sleep on in false security, and you must hold to the other. Every thing invites to instant watchfulness, examination, and effort. The suggestions of reason, the whispers of conscience, the decisions of God's word, all unite in saying, 'Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' Heaven lifts its portals to allure you upward; hell warns you with terrific murmurs to turn away and come not thither; while a voice from the throne of judgment, loud as seven thunders, breaks upon the ear, 'Prepare to meet thy God.'

From the Philadelphia Enquirer.

THE CHRISTIAN'S FUTURE.

How apt poor human nature is to regard only that which is immediately before or around it.—The present and its objects and pursuits engross the multitude of minds. We seem to fancy that our own world formed the mightiest effort of the Creator, and that all planets that glitter in the heavens, are slight and inferior when compared with the "ball" on which we live and move. It is perhaps well enough to turn aside occasionally for the purpose of dispelling this delusion. The celebrated Dick has made some curious calculations with regard to the real magnitude of the bodies connected with the solar system. He makes the amount of area, or the superficial contents of all the planets, primary and secondary, 78,165,916,784 square miles, and suppose a population of 21,894,974,404,480. The results show that the surfaces of these globes are 397 times more expansive than the whole surface of the terraqueous globe—or in other words, that they contain an amplitude of space for animated beings equal to nearly four hundred worlds such as ours. A single individual however self-sufficient or really important, is, after all, a very small affair, when we select him out of the millions and millions above alluded to!

But, observes the same author, great as these magnitudes are, they are far surpassed by that stupendous globe which occupies the centre of the system. The surface of the sun contains nearly two and a half millions of miles, and a surface equal to twelve thousand three hundred and fifty times the quantity of surface of our globe. In short, that great body is five hundred and fifty-five times larger than all the planetary bodies taken together. "Such" says Dick, "is the vast and incomprehensible magnitude of this stupendous luminary whose effulgence sheds day over a retinew of revolving worlds, and whose attractive energy controls their motions and preserves them in one harmonious system." "If this immense globe be flying through the regions of space at the rate of sixty thousand miles an hour, as it is supposed, and carrying along with it all the planets of the system, it presents to the mind one of the most sublime and overwhelming ideas of motion, magnitude and grandeur which the scenes of the universe can convey."

But may there not be other systems—more ample, more sublime, above and beyond ours? May not our sun, with myriads of others, pass round some still more resplendent luminary? Who indeed will venture to describe the extent, the vastness, the variety and infinity of that being who said, "Let there be light, and there was light." Who may say what multiplied worlds of enjoyments—of new faculties, and powers and senses are in store for the faith possessing—the duty-fulfilling and the conscience-regarding! May it not be that we shall pass onward and onward and upward and upward, each change imparting to us some new faculty and taking from us some of the dross and impurity of earth!—We are told in the "Book of Books," that God created man in his own image, and after his own likeness. We have elsewhere in its pages promises of the most buoyant kind as to our ultimate destiny, under certain conditions. Taking these things into consideration, in connection with the wonders of creation, as we have briefly sketched them, how golden and sunny and adorned by a thousand rainbows must be the christian's Future!

Beautiful Sentiment.—The proclamation of Governor Kent, of Maine, appointing a day of thanksgiving and prayer according to the good old custom of the Pilgrims, contains the following fine passages.—Louisville Adv.

"Let us, on this time-honored anniversary, review with grateful hearts, the many public and private blessings we have witnessed and experienced. Let us thank God for health, for peace, for plenty, for the guardian care which has given protection and support to all living things; for the beauty which has delighted, and bounty which has fed us; for the comforts and joys of domestic life; for all the consolations which have sustained, and all the hopes which have cheered us; for the light which has been shed upon our path, and all the good influences which have advanced us in moral strength and Christian holiness, and awakened and cherished the kindly sympathies and benevolent feelings of our nature; and particularly for that moral movement, which has already rescued thousands in our land from the degradation and misery of intemperance, and carried joy to the hearts, and happiness to the homes of the desolate and despairing.

"By the associations and intercourse of this religious festival, may the ties of family affection and social union be strengthened, and may love to God, who is our father, and love to man, who is our brother, be awakened, and purified from all the dross of hypocrisy and selfishness. In remembrance of all the loving kindness of God to us and our fathers, let us, from the heart, thank HIM for the past and take courage for the future, in the undoubting assurance that his mercies are measured, not by our merits, but our wants."

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, December 29, 1841.

WOOD.—Will those who have wood for us, bring it on?

Post-Office Department.

The present Post-Master General is making sweeping work in his Department.—He has commenced a system of reform that will materially affect the revenue, if successfully carried out. Post-Masters are now forbidden to advertise letters in any paper except in the town or city where the office is located. This provision will curtail the expenses of the Department not a little, since the law gives 2 cts a letter for all advertised.

Measures are likewise taken to prevent extensive frauds practiced, such as writing on any newspaper sent through the mail. Letter postage is chargeable on every paper that contains any memoranda whatever, by writing, dotting, or any other means.—If the person to whom such is sent refuses to pay letter postage, it becomes the Post-Master's duty to return the paper to the office where mailed, with instructions to prosecute the person guilty of the fraud, and collect the established fine of five dollars.

Post-Masters are permitted to remit money, free, to publishers of papers from subscribers, but not from agents. We trust our agents will bear this in mind, and make remittances to us with as little expense as possible. This may be done by sending as large bills as possible.

Mutiny on the Creole.

Another Amistad case. The brig Creole, from Baltimore to New Orleans, with a cargo of some 138 slaves, was forcibly taken in charge by 19 of the slaves on board. The males and females were placed in different apartments, with orders that they should not enter each other's apartment. When near the West Indies one of the slaves entered the apartment of the females, and on being discovered called upon his fellow slaves to defend themselves. A scuffle ensued in which one man was killed and some others wounded by the slaves, who then took possession of the brig, and ordered the mate to put into some of the British isles. This order he was obliged to obey, as he was continually watched by the slaves, who had sufficient knowledge to detect any effort to sail to another port. They finally reached one of the British isles, and after much delay by the authorities, 19 were retained as prisoners, and the others set at liberty and taken on shore. The prisoners will await the decision of the Britisn Government.

The Board of Trustees of the De Ruyter Institute will meet at their room in the Institute, on Thursday, the 6th proximo, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

CONGRESS.—It will be seen by our congressional, that Mr. Adams has succeeded in having Abolition petitions referred. We shall now see what can be done.

For the Register.

WHO KILLED THAT WOMAN?

A Mr. Maynard, of Columbus, is said to have brutally murdered his wife, while under the influence of ardent spirits. Now, let me press the question home to the conscience of the vender of the liquor drank by Maynard, and ask "Who killed that Woman?" The vender is the moving cause, while Maynard was his mere besotted tool, the sole instrument, under the guidance of a stimulus or poison administered by the soul-destroying vender.—Shame on that man, who, at this enlightened age, will rob a poor man of his hard earnings, his wife and children of the comforts of life, and pour liquid poison down the throats of a man, and urge him on to deeds of horrid murder! Let every friend of humanity—every friend of temperance, pass around the name of that foul murderer, who administered the fatal poison to Maynard, under the influence of which he took the life of the partner of his bosom.

X. Y. Z.

For the Register.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

"I was sick, and ye visited me."

To do thus is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices, fasting and prayer; without this is mockery of Him who tryeth the reins of the children of men, and public or private professions of religious zeal and engagedness, but as the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

How many of us, old or young, have brought ourselves to this test at the present time, when sickness prevails around us?—There is a family in this vicinity, several of the members of which are now suffering for the help of women. Two or three of the daughters are apparently drawing nigh to the gates of death.

"The cause which I knew not I searched out."

"To him that is afflicted, pity should be showed from his friends."

Is IT DECENT at such a time as this, when "The Lord God of Hosts calls to weeping and to mourning, and to baldness and to girding with sackcloth, and behold joy and gladness," the music of the viol and the sound of dancing instead.

Eccles. vii. 2, 6.

While others crowd the house of mirth,
  And haunt the gaudy show,
Let such as would with Wisdom dwell,
  Frequent the house of woe.
Better to weep with those who weep,
  And share th' afflicted's smart,
Than mix with fools in giddy joys
  That chant and wound the heart.

When virtuous sorrow clouds the face,
  And tears bedim the eye,
The soul is led to solemn thought,
  And wafted to the sky.
The wise in heart revisit oft
  Grief's dark sequester'd cell;
The thoughtless still with levity
  And mirth delight to dwell.

The noisy laughter of the fool
  Is like the crackling sound
Of blazing thorns, which quickly fail
  In ashes to the ground.

D.

Correspondence of the Register.

WESTERLY, R. I., Dec. 19, 1841.

BRO. BAILEY,—I have never been more pressed with the duties of my calling, than of late, having preached most of the time once, and frequently twice a day for about six weeks past; so that I have scarcely had time even to write a single letter to a friend. God is doing a great work in Hopkinton and Westerly; a work that is marvelous in our eyes, and wonderful in our hearts.—Backsliders are being reclaimed, and sinners converted to God; and it would seem as though the windows of the holy kingdom were open wide. The tide of life is rising, while Heaven blows the auspicious gale, and the waves of salvation are breaking over us. Truly, this is a day of God's mercy; a time when God hears and answers prayer from Heaven, and the gospel is preached in the power of the Spirit.—Some more than 70 souls have been added to the churches by baptism since the revival commenced, about five weeks since; and more expected soon. It is impossible for me now to say how many perishing sinners have been hopefully converted to God since the commencement of this revival.—I expect that Br. Daniel Coon will furnish you with a more particular and satisfactory account soon.

Yours, &c.
ALEX. CAMPBELL.

For the Register.

Celebration at Rock City.

BR. BAILEY—By request I forward to you for publication the following brief account of a Celebration at Rock City, in the town of Genesee, Allegany co., N. Y., 1841, with a concise description of the city itself.

It was early in the morning that we met in the beautiful valley of Genesee, to take an excursion to Rock City, which is located on one of the high hills of Allegany. As the visitants flocked from all parts to the starting point, it was obvious that curiosity excited them. At the hour appointed, the gate at the house of Dennis Saunders was opened, and the adventurers, alighting from their carriages and taking their seats upon their noble steeds, galloped off across the opening towards the forest which skirted the surrounding plain; thence conducted by their faithful guide along the foot-path which led in a zigzag direction up the mountain.

To behold hastening through the woodlands people of all ages, and especially the females, was a scene of too much interest to pass unnoticed. The glowing countenance, the high strung nerve, and fluent tongue, all bespoke the interest of each heart. The aged and the youth were apparently upon a level; each ascending with eagerness the rugged way. The sturdy oak, the chestnut, and the lofty pine, interspersed with the smaller productions of nature, together with the chittering squirrel, the songsters of the wood, and bounding deer, comprised the scenery through which we passed. Thus, for about two miles, we climed the steep ascent until we hove in sight of those stately mansions of the forest. And were there inhabitants to greet us? No! all was silent as the grave. Not a voice, nor the sound of a hammer, nor the roll of a chariot wheel, nor the clammer of arms was heard. All was still and motionless within as tho' locked in death's eternal slumbers, and nought to be seen but those conglomerate monuments. And as we approached them, the company which a moment before appeared like one living instrument, vibrating on every cord, tuned to its highest note, sunk down in silent reverence and holy awe before them. And as we fastened our eyes upon those temples descriptive only of God's eternal power, astonishment was depicted on every countenance. The gigantic mind, letting go its mighty grasp, relaxed back into activity—every nerve was still—and those grappling powers of man, failing in a moment to conceive any philosophic cause, sunk into utter confusion, and nought but the eye of reason, originating from divine revelation, penetrated the dark curtain, so suddenly dropped, and hastening on with its own native velocity, crossed the wide expanded plain of human research and investigation, and in that unfathomable abyss found the cause returned with this heart-cheering intelligence, IT IS GOD.—The soul, which with all its powers had precipitately huddled to some dark sequestered spot, now started as from eternal hopelessness—with joy received the intelligence—looked up to God and adored him. The mystery being solved, and the silence broken, the delighted company again marched forward to view the scene around them.—Here we beheld upon the pinnacle of the highest hill in this entire region, above one hundred and fifty magnificent rocks, composed of pebble stones of various dimensions and sand united by a calcareous cement, bearing every appearance of a sea-beaten shore—routed from their native bed by some mighty convulsion in nature—hurled through the ethereal regions by some invisible power—placing them in this forest, where they may remain for ages to come, as they now are, a wonder to every beholder. Many of them will compare in size with some of our most stately edifices, and range from that down to the smallest cottage. Some of them also present almost as smooth a surface as though they had passed through the hands of the artist.—Their material, location, and external appearance, together with the diversity of soil, conspire to add to the astonishment of the spectator. Here we were again struck with surprise. While standing at their base, we could but view our own insignificance, and compare our strength with that arm that brought and placed here these wonders of the forest. Soon, however, many ascended them and with the same admiration examined their lofty heads. Having thus surveyed one after another, until lost in this unbounded field of contemplation, we were happy to be conducted to a place beautifully adapted for the worship of Him who alone can comprehend His eternal power and wisdom. The rocks here were so situated that they presented something of the appearance of a hollow square, walled upon three sides. Here the body of the congregation reclined themselves, while the speakers were conducted to the surface of one of the rocks, and the choir to that of another. The inclined surface of the one occupied by the singers was so beautifully adapted, that as they arose one above another, we had almost forgotten that we were in the forest rather than a chapel. As the first notes were struck, the sound was so melodious that at this pitch of our excitement, the mind could but take the fire, and we imagined ourselves far away with that innumerable company that sing upon the Rock of ages. As the accent fell, the echo was caught, and together they played from rock to rock, and in close succession followed each other, until this entire city seemed, if possible, to wear a more magnificent hue, and with their mossy heads to welcome the solemn scene, and greet with their incomprehensible grandeur their happy visitors. As the choir paused, all appeared monumentally fixed, following the echo of the last high tuned note as it reverberated amidst these monumental figures, and sank away in death-like silence, and with one steady gaze obeyed the mandate of the poet:

"Cease, cease your songs, the daring flight control, Revere him in the stillness of your souls."

But their attention was soon turned by Rev. Z. Campbell, who bowing before God followed up the spirit of the same poet when he exclaims,

"With silent duty meekly bow before him,
And deep within your inmost hearts adore him."

While thus elevated, no wonder the servant of God could approach him with holy boldness, remembering that "Christ is as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Oh! how sacred was the season, never, never can we forget that solemn, interesting hour; and as we write can feel some of the relics of that rich repast, the memory of which can never be obliterated. After the singing of another psalm, a subject was brought before the listening audience in which the power and wisdom of God and that of man was contrasted; at the close of which the rolling thunder warned us of an approaching storm. We then dispersed, and returned down the mountain to the valley, from thence to our respective homes, pondering in our minds, the spirit of those poetic strains.

"He dwells within his own unfathomed essence,
And fills all space with his unbounded presence."

Richburgh, 28th Nov. 1841.

J. L. SCOTT.

For the Register.

An extract from the Minutes of the Executive Committee of the A. E. Board of Directors, for Disseminating Religious Truth among the Jews.

December 20th, 1841.—The Executive Committee met at the call of the President at the house of Br. Lucius Crandall. Prayer by Eld. W. B. Gillett. Minutes of last meeting read. On motion, Resolved, That in considering the plan of operations for the ensuing year, (adopted by the general Board,) we take up that part of it which refers to publishing a Tract.

Resolved, That we offer a premium of $25 for the best critical original Essay, upon the subjects embraced in the following Title, viz: An Exposition of the unfulfilled predictions of God respecting the nation of Israel, together with an elucidation of the causes which prevents their restoration to God—the means by which it will be effected—the benefits to result therefrom, and an appeal to all men, (whether Jews or Christians,) who pray and look for the salvation of the world. On motion,

Resolved, That the manuscripts be forwarded to our Secretary, Thos. S. Alberti, Plainfield, Essex Co., N. J., by the 1st of April, 1842, and that we appoint the following brethren a committee to examine the same and decide upon their comparative value:

SOLOMON CARPENTER,
Dea. WM. STILLMAN,
AZOR ESTEE,
JOHN DAVIS,
GEORGE B. UTTER.

And that the premium be awarded by the first of June.

The Annual Report of the Treasurer was presented and read, and, on motion, was received and adopted, and ordered to be forwarded for publication in the Register, with his explanation why it was not before the General Board at their last meeting, viz: that the person to whose care he committed it for conveyance, by some means left it behind.

TREASURER'S ANNUAL REPORT.

1810.		Dr.
Sept. 1.	To balance from old account,	1,24
Oct.	To cash paid Draft of Exec. Board, No. 9, per President in favor of Wm. B. Maxson,	89,39
1841. Feb'y.	To payment of Draft No. 10, in favor of Wm. B. Maxson, per Pres't. of Exec. Board,	6,00
	To payment of Draft No. 11, in favor of G. P. Maxson and J. B. Wells, per the Pres't.,	10,00
	To postage of remittances from Alfred,	,18
Aug. 1.	To balance on hand this day,	34,31
		$141,11
1840.		Cr.
Sept.	By cash from Nancy Clark,	,50
	" " L. Champlin,	,25
	" " G. P. Maxson,	1,83
	" " Wm. D. Cochran, Treas. Aux. So. De Ruyter,	10,13
	By cash from D. Clawson, collection in Salem, N. J.,	3,00
	By cash from Thos. B. Brown, for Church in Hayfield, Pa.	5,00
	By cash from Enoch Davis, Trea. Miss. So., Shiloh, N. J.	20,00
	By cash from Lucius Crandall, collected in R. I.	22,00
	By cash from W. B. Gillet, collected in N. J.	18,69
	By cash from Benj. Platts, Treas. So., Brookfield,	8,00
	By cash from Ephraim Maxson, Treas. So. in 2d and 3d Churches, Brookfield, N. J.	21,73
	By cash from Ray Green, Treas. J. M. So. in Western Association,	30,00
		$141,11

THOS. B. STILLMAN, Treas.
New York, Aug. 1, 1841.

T. S. ALBERTI, Rec. Sec'y.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Daily Mail Extra.

ARRIVAL OF THE COLUMBIA.

15 DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The British Royal Mail Steamship Columbia was telegraphed a little past 10 o'clock, and arrived at the wharf a little before 12.

Some part of her voyage was mild and pleasant, but for the last few days she has encountered bad weather and heavy gales.

By this arrival, we have Liverpool dates to the 4th inst., and London to the evening of the 3d.

The London money market was tolerable easy, and plenty of money could be obtained on good securities. The heavy importations of specie from the United States and from South America, would, it was thought, be an ample guaranty against any further panic in the money market for some time, and capitalists were looking about them for safe means of investment.

Her Majesty the Queen.—On Monday afternoon last, her Majesty, in company with her illustrious consort, was able to take an airing in a close carriage for the first time since her accouchment. The Queen and Prince Albert were absent from the palace nearly an hour. Several statements have been circulated respecting the christening of the infant prince, but we understand nothing has yet been determined upon, and that all such assertions are mere conjecture.

It is rumored in circles likely to be well informed that her Majesty the Queen dowager will be the [illegible] of the infant prince, which cannot fail to give the greatest satisfaction to the country. The christening as far as can be learned, is to be as private as the exalted birth of the prince will allow, but the banquet which is to be given on the occasion will far exceed in splendor the entertainment that was given when the Princess Royal was baptised.

The Health of the Queen Dowager fluctuates between better and worse, according to the bulletins issued, from day to day, by her medical attendants, but there is now, we believe, no hope of her eventual recovery from her insidious disease, which is gradually undermining the springs of life.

There was no material [illegible] of the distress in the manufacturing districts—the contributions from every part of the kingdom, though apparently [illegible], being totally inadequate to meet the emergency of such a general want of employment. [illegible] the crisis had passed [illegible] causes of depression [illegible] and that business would soon resume its wonted energy at home.

The [illegible] prevailed so long [illegible] over the whole of [illegible] was felt very severely [illegible] hundred and fifty [illegible] in Mess[illegible] ber at St. [illegible]

[illegible] was at first [illegible] the but too apparent indications of a severe winter, caused many melancholy forebodings of distress among the [illegible] poor of that oppressed and [illegible] country. The spread of the temperance reform, it was hoped, would go far to mitigate the evils of scarcity, and to ameliorate the condition of the suffering poor, but it could hardly atone for the great falling off of a crop, which, to Ireland, is more important than all others combined.

There was a great meeting of deputies from all the Anti-Corn-Law Associations, at Manchester, on the 27th of November, at which speeches were made and resolutions passed, verging very near to what would have been considered "treason" some twenty years ago.

It is said that the British Parliament is to meet during the last week of January, probably on Tuesday the 25th.

Death has been busy among the great. The Earl of Harewood; the Earl of Elgin; the Queen dowager of Bavaria; Chantrey, the sculptor; Dr. Birbeck, and others, have died very suddenly.

O'Connel has given notice, at the Corn Exchange, of an address to the House of Commons, calling on that house to address the Queen to remove Lord De Grey and Lord Elliot.

It is proposed by the friends of Mr. O'Connell, in Dublin, to make him permanent Lord Mayor of that city by re-electing him every year.

The Queen, it is said, has already sketched a likeness of the infant prince, which will immediately be lithographed.—The resemblance is said to be perfect, and the circumstances under which it was made cannot fail of giving to it an interest peculiarly its own.

SERIOUS DISTURBANCES IN SYRIA.

The following is a letter from the Sardinian Consul at Beyrout, dated the 20th of October:—

"Serious events have taken place in the mountains—events amounting to a civil war. The Emir, as is known has established himself at Deir-el-Kammer, and given orders for the levy of tribute; but the Druses, instead of bringing their contributions, attacked the town on the 13th, and the fighting lasted till the 17th. There were 42 Christians killed, and 100 Druses; the latter to the number of 5,000, besieged the Christians, not numbering more than 800; but the latter fought, protected by their houses. There would have been no end to the combat, had not Col. Rose and the English officers interfered with Eyab Pasha, [illegible] and conclude [illegible] left the Pasha [illegible] Maronite patriarch [illegible] to arms. [illegible] Druses [illegible] Christians [illegible] the Christians [illegible] which made the village declare for the Druse party.

Congressional News.

[illegible]

For a young [illegible] he presides with great dignity and efficiency—which is [illegible] praise, when you remember that the House is the most disorderly legislative body in the world!

The Senate held brief sessions every day, till Thursday, in which a great amount of preliminary and formal business was transacted. The Senate, too, have a passion for economy, now and then, and have appointed a committee to superintend the printing, to save expense. Mr. [illegible] of Ill., introduced a bill to grant the stock owned by the U. S. in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, to the States [illegible]

[illegible]

Tuesday morning, Mr. Adams presented a petition from [illegible] against the [illegible] rule, which he moved to refer to a select Committee, with instructions to report a substitute for the gag rule, so called. This excited much feeling among the slaveholders. Mr. Meriwether, of Ga., moved to lay the motion on the table. But this was rejected, by a vote of 87 yeas to [illegible] nays, the Democrats of the Leggett school voting nay. Half an hour more was wasted in a call of the House; and a vote by yeas and nays, on a motion to suspend the call, stood 90 to 90. Mr. White gave his casting vote in the affirmative. As the only means of delaying action any longer, Meriwether declared he wished to debate the question. Under the rules, this deferred action upon it till the next day. But it also gave Mr. Adams an opportunity to present a variety of petitions, and have them received and referred, a result Mr. M. did not anticipate. Petitions in favor of the acknowledgment of the independence of Hayti, were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which Mr. Adams is Chairman. Mr. Wise, of Va., attempted to stop this, on the ground that they were abolition petitions. "No," said Mr. Adams, "they relate solely to the Black Republic of Hayti. There's no Slavery there." The emphasis given to the implied comparison with our own proud republic, by Mr. Adams' tone and manner, made its effect very great. Petitions against the admission of Florida, as a slave State; or of Texas; for the repeal of all laws authorizing the existence of Slavery in this District, or the recovery of fugitives; for the suppression of the coast-wise slave trade, and to relieve the North and the nation, as such, from all Constitutional or legal obligation to uphold or protect Slavery, were received and appropriately referred. We shall have able reports, and ample discussion on many of these topics, before the session closes. The "gag" rule proves, in its present shape, almost without effect, in excluding petitions—since, by a change in the language merely, those which the rule specifies, are receivable, under the strict construction given to the rule by the Speaker. So discussion we shall have; and if Slavery cannot endure it, it must die. Many other members offered similar petitions from all parts of the country.

Notices were given of bills to repeal the Bankrupt and Distribution Acts of the called session. The inefficiency of the former, in its present shape, is admitted by all. It is hoped by our Northern merchants, and many members, that it may be rendered useful by amendments. As it is, no Southern debt can be renewed under it, while it operates as a repeal of State laws in many cases, which are useful to all classes. It is admitted by the warmest partizans, that the measures of the late session all need careful revision. Political fevers impart no legislative wisdom.

Thursday and Friday were consumed in a long and rambling debate on the Tariff, which will be resumed to-day. It is hardly worth reporting. The whole object of it seems to be to compel the friends of the Protective system to decide now, at the opening of the session, whether they mean to go for the revival of that system, in opposition to the declared views of the President and Cabinet, or not. If they do, they separate themselves finally from the administration, to which, on the Bank question, they are most of them now unfriendly. If they do not, they yield up the whole Tariff system for a generation at least, to the views of the ultra-Democrats, and Southern opposers of all domestic manufactures. These two classes seem to act in unison on a mere question of form, as to what committee that part of the Message relative to the Tariff shall be referred. The present debate is important chiefly on the reference to its bearing on the future character and position of parties. Those who favor the views of the President are evidently increasing in numbers and confidence.

The Creole case, the details of which you have no doubt seen in the daily papers, creates much feeling in this great centre of the American slave trade. In all respects it presents a complete parallel to the case of the Amistad. You will remember that the Supreme Court decided that Cinque and his companions being on the high seas, out of the jurisdiction of the local municipal law, which alone authorized any man to hold them in bondage, were guilty of no crime in using such means as they could to free themselves from illegal detention. So in this case, the slaves have evidently violated no law. The bearing of their case upon the coast slave-trade, it is easy to see must be important, as by that decision, these slavers, when three leagues from shore, are pirates in law, as well as in fact; and they must become armed pirates for their own security—a result which I think will hardly be tolerated.

News of the Day.

Brutal Murder.—Twice the annals of Chenango have been stained by the crime of murder. On the night of the 15th inst., David Maynard, residing in Columbus, brutally took the life of his wife, under the influence of liquor, by whipping her to death. From the testimony before the Inquest, A. Berry, Coroner, it appears that he returned home during the evening and found his wife somewhat intoxicated. Addressing a question to her and receiving no answer, he sent his oldest son, a boy ten years of age, after a whip, with which he beat her for about 30 minutes. Then he bound her to the bed, and retired himself, shortly after falling asleep. On waking up, he found her a corpse. He then sent two of his children to a neighbor's house, requesting his presence. This gentleman, in company with another, proceeded to his house, where a bloody scene presented itself. She was literally malled to a pumice. There were many blows on her person, which, had they been given single, would have caused her death. On being questioned, he confessed the deed, was arrested, examined, and committed to prison, his boy, the oldest of six children, testifying to the murder of his mother by the hand of his father! He will not be tried before next September, we believe.

Maynard is a man about 35, and a farmer. He is represented as a fine, neighborly man, before he imbibed dissolute habits. He has frequently abused his family in a shameful manner, and finally, murder finishes the catalogue of his crimes.

Here is another instance of crime from intemperance. What a warning to the inebriate! If we have any in our own vicinity who repair to their homes in a beastly state of drunkenness to beat their wives, whose cries arouse their neighbors, let them pause on the brink of destruction, and reform while moral power may yet work the end of salvation.—Chenango Telegraph.

The Right of Search.—Among the documents accompanying the President's Message, is the correspondence between Lord Palmerston, late Foreign Minister of Great Britain, and Mr. Stevenson, minister to Great Britain, on the matter of the late searches which have been made of American vessels, suspected of being engaged in the slave trade. The letters are nine in number. Lord Palmerston admits that the search of American vessels is irregular—but in several of the first instances which occurred, he pleads the provisions of a special agreement between the commanding officers of the British vessels on the African coast, and Com. Payne, of the United States, for searching and detaining ships found trading in slaves. Subsequently Lord P. alleges that the sole intention of British vessels in searching, was to ascertain whether the vessel really had a right to the colors under which she was sailing—the search extending only to the papers, to which he is sure the U. S. Government cannot object. This distinction between the right of search, and the right of visitation, for the purpose of ascertaining the national character of the vessel, Mr. Stevenson promptly denies, in his letter to Lord Aberdeen, Lord P's. successor. He contends that public law secures to the vessels of all nations in time of peace, exemption from every species of interruption, as well as detention: that slave trade is not piracy, by the law of nations. Lord Aberdeen replies that the slave trade is carried on by the ships of other nations under the American flag, justifies the examination of papers of suspected vessels. He renounces all right to visit and search American vessels, and contends that it is not as American vessels that they are visited. This has been the custom, for a long time, of all nations: and Great Britain claims no right which she is not willing to grant. The reply of Mr. Stevenson reiterates his former position, and makes the decisive intimation that the continuance of these searches would necessarily lead to unhappy consequences.

The Editor of the Charleston Courier gathered a mess of green corn from his garden on the 8th inst., and had at that time a sunflower in bloom in the open air. A mild climate truly.

The House of the Alabama Legislature, in accordance with the popular decision, has passed a bill repealing the general ticket system of choosing members of Congress, with which the Senate will probably concur.

The necessity of an armed steam vessel is receiving serious attention from the inhabitants of towns bordering the lakes.—The municipal authorities of Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago, and Detroit, have all moved in the matter, and others are preparing to follow their example.

The rail road between Batavia and Buffalo will probably be constructed within the following year. The portion of it beyond Attica is to be done by the 4th of July.—When this is finished, the chain from Boston to Buffalo will be completed.

We learn from the Pittsfield Sun, that an Irishman named Granger, a breakman on the Western railroad, while on the top of one of the freight cars adjusting the bell string, came in contact with a bridge, near the burying ground in Pittsfield, and was instantly killed.

The Chancellor of Maryland has issued an injunction to the Lottery Commissioners, and Messrs. Gregory and Co., prohibiting the further drawing of schemes in the State Lottery, and also forbidding the sale of tickets in foreign lotteries.

It is said that the licensed grog shops of Baltimore have declined the last year to about 650 less than the preceding year.

By a letter from Central America, says the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer, we learn that the whole town of Carrago, C. A., of about 20,000 inhabitants, was, with the exception of two houses, destroyed by an earthquake, about the middle of September last.

An Education Convention, comprising delegates from upwards of thirty counties in Virginia, commenced its sittings in the hall of the House of Delegates in Richmond, Va., on Thursday last.

Edwin Croswell, Editor of the Albany Argus, has been elected President of the Canal Bank in that city.

The Comptroller has made requisition upon the Safety Fund Banks of one-half per cent. of their capital, to meet the deficiency caused by the recent failures of Safety Funk Banks.

It is rumored that Gen. Waddy Thompson has been nominated by the President for Minister to Mexico.

We learn that the mail for Watertown, Jefferson Co., which left Albany on the morning of the same day, was stolen from the boot of the mail stage some time in the night.

The Alabama Legislature has passed a bill reducing the pay of its members from five to four dollars a day.

Two of the guns for the U. S. steam frigate Missouri, N. Y., have a ten inch bore, weigh 8600 pounds each, and are called 107 pounders.

It is stated in a Canadian paper, that there are now eight men-of-war lying in the port of Halifax, an unusual number since the peace. During the late war, upon one occasion, the number is said to have been eighty, of all rates and size, within the waters of our harbor.

The Planters' Hotel in St. Louis, was a few days since sold for the sum of $130,000. The building was erected at an expense of over $200,000.

By the last packet, we have the cheering intelligence that the mighty temperance reformation in Ireland still goes bravely on. Father Matthew is still devoting himself with renewed vigor.

Clayton, the famous æronaut, recently ascended at Nashville, in the presence of thousands, about 1 1-2 miles, and moved off only a few miles, till he was becalmed, when, after the sun had set to those on the earth, though visible to him, he descended.

The Wiskonsan Whig says that a bed of new lead, of great value, has been discovered on the School Section, near that town.

No less than 50,000 pounds of poultry were transported over the Stonington rail road for thanksgiving, on Friday and Monday, for the Boston market.

The nett increase of the Free Will Baptists in the United States, during the last two years, has been about 6000; and their present number is about 47,000.

During the last five years, 2464 fires occurred in London, of which 330 were occasioned by defective fire-places, and 358 by candles setting fire to bed and window curtains.

M. D'Aubigney, captain of the French Navy, has arrived here, being sent by the French government to find out the practicability of establishing a line of steamers from Havre to New York. He thinks that at the close of 1842 four steam packets will be put in operation.

The bills of the Alleghany Co. Bank are no longer redeemed at the Agency in New York. This is one of the Free Banking institutions, and has deposited with the Comptroller, as security for its bills, State stocks which have fallen much in value.

The present Pope is said to be dangerously ill. He is regarded as a man of good morals and great learning.

In one of the most fashionable resorts of Paris is a cannon loaded and primed, and so placed that the focus of a burning glass falls upon the powder precisely at 12 o'clock; of course, every pleasant day, the hour of noon is indicated by the firing of the cannon. On every such day a crowd gathers round it, to watch the progress of the sun spot, and the manner in which the motion of the earth on its axis, is made to fire off artillery.

An uncommonly long season of dry weather has left Great Dismal Swamp in so combustible a state that fires are raging in all its borders to a furious extent. There has been a great destruction of lumber in the vicinity of the Northwest Canal, and in the opposite direction the fire has approached to the line of the rail road a few miles from Suffolk.

Miss Jane Dunlap, aged 94 years, died recently at Portland, Me., having resided with her bachelor brother, still living, and aged upwards of 90, in one house for nearly 90 years.

Management of the President's House.—We learn that the affairs of the White House at Washington, are all conducted by a colored man, by the name of Wilkins, whom the President hires at a salary with perquisites, of $1700 per annum, and who disburses all the expenses of the palace.—He has his office, where he keeps his accounts, employs or discharges whomsoever he pleases. His son, much of a gentleman, it is said, is employed at $1000 a year, and introduces all strangers to the President. His daughter is also employed at $400 a year. President Tyler has in all 18 colored persons hired—he has but two of his slaves with him, as servants.—This is the first time that any of our Presidents have made a colored man the chief butler of his household.—Colored American.

Seizure of Letters.—We learn from the Bunker Hill Aurora, that some packages, per steamship Acadia, from England, purporting to be samples and pattern cards, have been opened at the Custom House, and found to contain a large number of letters. The letters were in charge of the collector, Saturday. We understand that it is the determination of Mr. Lewis to have them returned to England, under charge of the government officer. If so, they will go to the General Post Office in London, where each letter will be opened and returned to the writer, with a legal letter notifying each of the fact, and of their liability to a fine.

Canal Tolls.—The Albany Evening Journal of Saturday contains a detailed statement of the tolls received on each of the canals down to the 1st of December, since which time it is estimated that from $30,000 to $40,000 have been received.—The results are subjoined, first column shows the receipts of 1840.

	1840.	1841.
Erie Canal,	$1,597,331	$1,812,668
Champlain,	102,127	117,728
Oswego,	29,552	38,169
Cayuga and Seneca,	18,843	23,541
Chemung,	4,958	9,396
Crooked Lake,	1,723	5,012
Chenango,	14,001	18,763
Genesee Valley,	6,930	9,926
Oneida Lake,		460
Seneca River		831
Total,	$1,775,747	$2,033,504
		1,775,747
Increase,		$257,756

Effects of Intemperance.—The Bangor Whig says that two men named Thurston and Brown, who lived in the same house at Ellsworth, Me., engaged in a quarrel on the 8th inst., when Thurston's wife interfered. Thurston turned on her and followed her flying into another room. In the meantime, Brown and the family retreated up stairs, whither Thurston immediately followed them, and was received by a blow from a club in Brown's hands. He then went to get his gun, and on returning found that Brown had one also. They both fired, and Thurston was seriously though not mortally wounded. The whole affair originated in rum, and both parties have since joined the Washington Society.

Wooden Nutmegs outdone.—Somebody in New Jersey has been manufacturing indigo. It is a curious composition which seems to be made of plaster of paris and rye flour, with a small modicum of prussian blue, enough to color it sufficiently. It is moulded into the form of indigo cakes, and the whole thinly coated with the real "Simon Pure" indigo. Where will invention cease?

Common Schools of New Jersey.—By the report of the Trustees of the Legislature, it appears that reports have been received from only 891 districts. There are in the State about 1400 districts. In those which have reported, there were 54,430 children between the ages of 5 and 16; of whom 41,310 attended school. The number of children in the State between the same ages is estimated at 96,954. The number of children attending primary and common schools was stated in the census to be 51,335; leaving the number without education in the State at 45,619

Good Return in Silk.—From the eggs of five breeding millers hatched this year, and fed on the premises of Charles Starkweather, Esq., of Northampton, Massachusetts, were taken two thousand four hundred cocoons, of which only five were defective; from this lot of cocoons Mrs. Starkweather reeled one pound of very superior Raw Silk. This tells to the finger's end; here is ample proof that worms may be profitably fed in small families, if not upon a large scale.

American Wonders.—Two of the greatest natural curiosities in the world, are to be found within the United States, and are yet scarcely known to the best informed of our geographers and naturalists. The one is a very beautiful waterfall in Franklin county, in the State of Georgia; the other is a stupendous precipice in Pendleton District, South Carolina. The Tueco Fall is much higher than the Falls of Niagara. The column of Water is propelled beautifully over a perpendicular rock, and when the stream is full, passes down the steep without being broken.

The Table Mountain, in Pendleton District, South Carolina, is an awful precipice of nine hundred feet. Very few persons who have once cast a glimpse into the almost boundless abyss, can again exercise sufficient fortitude to approach the margin of the chasm; almost every one looking over involuntarily falls to the ground, senseless, nerveless and helpless, and would inevitably be precipitated and dashed to atoms, were it not for the measures of caution and security that have always been deemed indispensable to a safe indulgence of the curiosity of the visitor or spectator. Every one, on proceeding to the spot whence it is usual to gaze over the wonderful deep, has in his or her imagination a limitation, graduated by a reference to distances with which the eye has been familiar; but in a moment, eternity, as it were, is presented to the astonished senses, and the observer is instantly overwhelmed. He soon recovers from the first surprise, and in a wild delirium surveys a scene which for a time he is unable to define by description or limitation.—Phila. Enquirer.

The number of offences punishable with death by the laws of the United States, is nine. One hundred and fifty-two crimes varying in atrocity from that of stealing property to the value of a shilling, to that of treason, were formerly capitally punished in England; but that number has now been reduced to ten. So says Judge Story.

Liberality.—A correspondent of the Philadelphia Gazette complains that West's great picture of Christ healing the sick, the proceeds of which are devoted to the Pennsylvania Hospital, is not visited as it should be by the public; and he very liberallly suggests "That editors should keep a gratuitous advertisement standing, for the picture, and notice it constantly."

We make a better suggestion. The writer is probably a richer man than any editor in Philadelphia. Let him thrust his hand into his pocket once a quarter, and draw therefrom a ten dollar bank-note.—Enclose that to some one of the editors—changing from paper to paper—to have the picture properly advertised.—And as it is for a charitable purpose, our word for it every editor in Philadelphia will advertise the picture fifteen dollars worth for ten. The picture will then produce an income; and the correspondent of the Gazette will have the sweet consolation of doing something for charity, as well as writing about it.—These exactions upon the press are too severe. Charity is a capital good thing. We wish there was more of it. But it ought to be diffused. The conductors of the press do not wish to monopolize it.—Com. Adv.

Rapid growth of Rochester.—Some idea may be formed of the onward march of our inland city, from the fact that notwithstanding the deranged state of the currency, there has been erected as nearly as can be ascertained, From four to five hundred Buildings during the year 1841—some of them noble structures, as well for business as for dwellings—and all included in this estimate comfortable residences for ordinary sized families. And yet the cry is still for room.—Rochester Democrat.

The Cherokees.—The principal chief of the Cherokees has sent his annual message, which is a highly interesting document, and will compare with any of the Governor's messages. The chief says there is due from the U. States to that nation more than $2,500,000; and he recommends that this sum be obtained, and in part distributed among the people, but that the interest of the School Fund be devoted to the maintenance of Schools and the diffusion of the blessings of education.

Shipwreck and loss of life.—We learn from the Norfolk Herald, that the sloop Emily, about 32 or 40 tons, C. J. Houseman, master, of Staten Island, from up the bay, bound to Nansemond river to finish loading with oysters, was capsized about a mile to the northward of Old Point Comfort, on Friday last, about 9 A. M., by which accident three of the persons on board were drowned—to wit: Capt. Houseman, a man by the name of Decker, and another, name unknown. The owner, Mr. Sleight, was the only person saved.

The Lead.—One of the most important items of western commerce is the lead from the Galena, Illinois, mineral region. We learn from the St. Louis Republican that in 1839 there were received at that city 335,000 pigs; in 1840, 325,000; in 1841, thus far, 295,000. This nearly all goes to New Orleans. At the same city there were received, in 1839, [illegible] pigs; in 1840, 252,000; and in 1841, to the middle of November, 340,000. A pig of lead weighs about 69 lbs. The amount of lead received at St. Louis is therefore 26,395,000 lbs., which estimated at 3 1-2 cents, gives the value of this trade alone at $917,325.

A letter was received at Philadelphia on Sunday evening, from Williamsport, stating, in effect, that Major Robert Fleming, State Senator, whose mysterious absence some time since was announced in the Harrisburg papers, has returned, and is now at home, ready to take his seat at the ensuing session of the of the Legislature. His business led him several miles further than he had contemplated, and hence the apprehensions which were excited concerning him.

A resolution passed both branches of the Tennessee Legislature on the 15th inst. to go into election on the 3d inst. of an U. S. Senator, to fill out the unexpired term of the Hon. Felix Grundy, deceased.

The Hon. Dixon H. Lewis, of Alabama, whose death was recently reported, has arrived at Washington, in good order and condition, weighing some 400 lbs. as usual.

MARRIED.

On the 16th inst. by Dennis Harden Esq., Mr. AVERY BROWN, and Miss ALMIRA CLARK, all of Brookfield.

DIED.

In Michigan, in Nov. last, Mr. EZRA ABBOT, formerly of this village, aged about 35.

Mr. Abbot left here some time in August, on a visit to a brother who lived in Michigan, since which time he has not been heard from until a few days since when the intelligence came that he sickened and died at his brother's.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Dennis Harden, P. M. (it is done.) "Mary," accept our thanks. We use the "instrument" you mention oft and freely, when circumstances require.) M. J. N. Haskins, P. M., Wm. P. Langworthy, P. M. (the two dollar note you sent for B. Edwards is a counterfeit on the bank of Romeo, Mich., instead of Rome, N. Y., we return you the bill by the next mail.) Alonzo Maxson, P. M. (we know of no reason why the package of papers directed to D. Hale, do not reach there as soon as others. They are all sent from here at the same time. The fault cannot be with us, nor with the Post-Office here.) T. S. Alberti, [illegible]

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

H. C. Coon, $2, [illegible] W. W. Whitford, $1, [illegible] [illegible] M. J. N. Haskins, $1, [illegible] Wm. Reynolds, [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ABRAHAM N. ANNAS,

LATE of the firm of [illegible] Annas & [illegible] has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore, La Fayette Block, where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be obtained in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Cash [illegible] CASH [illegible] [illegible] in payment for any article in his line of business.

The subscriber [illegible] all kinds of Stove [illegible] [illegible]

BRASS AND TIN WARE

[illegible]

LOW PRICES

[illegible] LEAKY

Eave Troughs

[illegible]

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale, a full assortment of Western [illegible] Climax Stoves and Cannon [illegible]

JOB WORK

☞Done well, on short notice, and at reasonable prices. N. B. Persons wishing to buy will please call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block, No. 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

☞BOOTS & SHOES,☜

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than any ever sold before in this town (for the especial reason that I have "Peculiar advantages in purchasing") that is to say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34yl

DR. CARLTON'S VEGETABLE INDIAN GREEN PLASTER.

THIS plaster is unrivalled in curing scrofulous swellings, scurvey sores, lame back, and limbs, and seldom fails to give relief in local Rheumatism. If applied to the side it will cure many of the common Liver complaints, and if applied to the neck in season, it will cure the Quinsey. It is also an excellent remedy for diseases of the spine.

The virtues of the Plaster have been witnessed by thousands of the most respectable individuals in the states of Vermont and New-York who have tested its efficacy.—Price, 25 cents per roll.

For sale by S. D. DELLAY.

De Ruyter, Nov. 10. 37tf

L. W. BLISS' Window Sash
" Bliss' & Co. " Blinds.

Holme's Sampson & Salisbury Edged Tools, consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE,
October 1. Manufacturers' Agent.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of [illegible] has been levied on the deposit notes of said company on the 25th day of [illegible] and that the same is requested to be paid to the Treasurer at the office of said Company in Cazenovia on or before the first [illegible] next.

Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.
[illegible] WM. J. HOUGH, Treasurer.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the
NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

NEW GOODS,

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the veriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the
October 4. STONE STORE.

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, [illegible] and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, [illegible] Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all [illegible] and Valises, [illegible] and Brussels Carpet [illegible] Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, [illegible] Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck [illegible] Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles [illegible] kept in a shop of this [illegible] I can sell as low as any shop west of [illegible] or Utica, and even De Ruyter not excepted, [illegible] durability.

Will [illegible] exchange for any of the above articles, Wool, [illegible] money, and the remainder [illegible] also [illegible] all kinds of Grain, Butter, [illegible] and every thing that is raised by the Farmer [illegible] vicinity, Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible] Lumber, &c. &c. &c.

Pine Lumber for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. [illegible] first rate Ash Flooring.

J. R. RIDER.

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage [illegible] He would say that he [illegible] business will be continued [illegible] HOUSE & BENJAMIN, [illegible] at all times to do work [illegible]

[illegible] at the shortest notice, and warranted [illegible]

N. B. [illegible] Winter Fashions for 1841-2 [illegible]

[illegible] S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 20m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality [illegible] purchasers, at [illegible] offered by any Dellay [illegible] J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

W[illegible] at a low price at
Nov. 24 ELMORE'S

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah E. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, Jane Goodwin, [illegible] Maxson, the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
} IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in [illegible] the undersigned Commissioners [illegible] to make partition therein, will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the 26th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated in the village of De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of La Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded, beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner thereof; thence south about one rod to lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence east on the said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by Marcus Bump; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
} Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.

JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD,
} Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40tds

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

POETRY.

From the Christian Advocate and Journal.

Missionary Ode.

BY D. O. YORK.

Hark! the gospel trump is sounding,
Calling man from sin to rise,
O'er the mountain summits bounding,
Round the world its echo flies;
Till earth's chorus
Swells the rapture of the skies.

Lo! the star of day is beaming
With a lustre strong and bright;
Far its healing rays are streaming,
Filling earth with heavenly light;
Still increasing,
Fast dispelling nature's night.

Now among earth's scattered nations
Gospel light begins to shine;
Lo! a voice of supplication
Calls from every heathen clime,
"Come and help us,
Messengers of life divine."

Hear the sons of nature pleading,
From each distant pagan shore;
While their wounded hearts lie bleeding,
Crushed by superstition's power;
Send the gospel,
Bid earth's children sigh no more.

See the gospel banner waving
O'er its fallen, conquered foes;
Christ a ransomed world is saving,
Vain the powers of hell oppose,
For the desert
Soon shall "blossom as the rose."

Hasten, Lord, thine own appearing—
Haste the triumph of the skies,
Victory to thy people bearing,
Make our earth a paradise;
On all nations,
Sun of righteousness, arise!

Miscellaneous Department.

THE DYING MOTHER.

"There is sweetness in woman's decay,
When the light of beauty is fading away;
When the bright enchantment of youth is gone,
And the tint that glowed, and the eye that shone,
And darted round its glance of power,
And the lip that vied with the sweetest flower
That ever in Pæstum's garden blew,
Or ever was steeped in the garden dew—
When all that was bright and fair is fled,
But the loveliness lingering round the dead."

PERCIVAL.

It was a summer day, so bright and beautiful, that an angel wandering from his heavenly sphere might have fancied himself still in paradise, and forgotten that man had ever sinned. Streams of water danced and sparkled in the sunbeams, sweet flowers sent forth their fragrance upon the air, and the birds warbled their wildest songs in the shady grove. All seemed joy and gladness; but at that very hour, in the stillness of her chamber and surrounded by her sorrowing friends, one of the loveliest of God's creatures was bidding adieu to earth and all its joys. In the spring of youth, and hope, and feeling, when life seemed sweetest, and the ties that bound her to earth were strongest, her spirit was slowly passing away. They had moved her couch to an open window, and now the golden rays of the setting sun streamed richly into the chamber of the dying. The warm breeze kissed the pallid cheek, and played upon her bright tresses thus clustered around her brow, for the last time. She knew that she should never look upon the bright, beautiful world again. She felt that life was ebbing fast away, and few were the moments left to her on earth, and as she looked that last long look, her eye beamed with "unwonted fires," and a bright smile lighted up her countenance. Her lips parted, and a low, sweet voice broke the solemn stillness: "Bring hither my child, let him receive his mother's dying blessing."

They brought to her bedside a young and happy boy, who had never before known sorrow; but now his joyous laugh was hushed, the smile had vanished from his lip, and his bright eyes were sad and wondering. They had told him that his mother was dying, and although he knew not what death meant, he felt that death was something terrible. He placed his little hand in hers, and looked fearfully into her face; but that smile re-assured him, and he lisped that word so dear to every woman's heart, "mother!" What a host of agonized feelings were stirred up in the heart of the invalid as he uttered that word. She closed her eyes, and for a moment her countenance was convulsed with the intense struggle. It was only for a moment; she was calm, and the same bright smile was there again. All were hushed in breathless silence until she spoke.

"My son, you will soon be deprived of a mother's love and care. You hear me speak for the last time on earth; but when my voice is hushed in death, and my body laid low in the tomb, remember my dying words. Resist temptation, and if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. Pray to thy God morning and evening; and when you kneel alone, remember how often I have knelt with you, and told you that you had a parent in heaven, who would always take care of you. May your mother's dying blessing rest upon your head through all the trials of this life, and when you are tempted to sin, remember her last breath was spent in prayer for you." She paused for a moment, and when she spoke again her voice was faint and husky.

"My husband, come hither; place your hand beneath my head, and let me rest upon your bosom, I would feel your breath upon my cheek, and hear your voice once more."

He did as he was desired, but a convulsive sob shook the strong man's frame as he pressed her to his heart, and the tears that he struggled not to restrain, flowed down his cheeks. She raised her eyes, beaming with the intensity of woman's love, and exclaimed with sudden energy, "Oh! 'tis very hard to part with you; but we shall meet again—in heaven."

Her head sunk back, a slight convulsion passed over the pale face, and was succeeded by a smile, and all was still. The mourners were alone with the dead. The eyes that beamed with gladness were closed, the toungue that never spoke but to bless was silent, and the heart that beat with all the woman's generous feelings and warm affections was still forever.

The wife and mother was dead, but she still lives in the hearts which had loved her. The son never forgot her dying words; in after years, when upon the verge of crime, the same sweet voice seemed to whisper in his ear, "My son! resist temptation." That husband never suffered another to beguile his heart from its homage to the dead, but ever treasured her memory, and looked forward to the time when he should meet her in a happier world, never again to part.

THINGS AGAINST REASON.

It is a hopeless task to enumerate all things without reason. How little of the conduct of multitudes springs from just considerations, and how much of the conduct of the best men is wrought in heedlessness and folly? But we might expect to find actions against reason to lie somewhere within the pale of calculation.—How this is, let each reader judge, after having subjected his own conduct to thorough scrutiny.

Conjugal discord is against reason. Your husband spoke hastily and too sharply; you retorted with equal asperity; he acted without reason; you against it. A mild gentle answer, or silent endurance of wrong were much better. Your tart reply will bring you as much pain as it inflicted. The esteem, the love, the tenderness of your husband were all wounded by it. He is now more liable than ever to blame you without reason; and you need only to retort against reason to complete, in process of time, the utter alienation of his affections—the utter ruin of your own happiness. Did you ever know a family, where is waged this war upon reason, enjoying any permanent, heart-felt peace, any real prosperity? What evil work is not where strife is?

The neglect of parents is against reason. What is worse than filial ingratitude, if we except impiety toward God, which always accompanies it? We know not. But this great sin is as common as the air we breathe. Who is innocent of it? The youth is not innocent who disappoints parental care by self-neglect, by idleness, or vice, or who goes out into the world to toil for himself alone, or for strangers, or for new kindred, forgetful of those who love him best, and whose chief solace it is, in declining life, to hear often from their absent child, and know that they are gratefully, reverently, tenderly remembered. The wise man foretells in the expressive imagery of his day, the calamities which shall come on ungrateful children. "The eye that mocketh his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." What can the state, or church, or heaven, expect from filial ingrates, whether young or old?

The quarrels of Brothers are against reason. We have seen the golden chain which binds together the hearts of the same family ruthlessly rent asunder for the sake of a few dollars in the division of an estate. What a happy circle of loving families might they have formed, had it not been for this coveteous spirit. They quarrelled. They parted with the spoils which each could force from the stores which parental industry had gathered for them. But they were not happy. None but hearts that love where love is due, that are united where union shall reign, can be happy.

Parental unfaithfulness is against reason. Children do not grow to excellence without discipline. They are to be trained to goodness and usefulness. The spontaneous growth of the soil of the mind, like that of the earth, are rank weeds, since the lapse of human nature by the first transgression. Whoever would reap the first fruits of righteousness from this garden, must act the part of a faithful cultivator. And on none does this culture so much concern as parents. They must teach their children self control, sobriety, industry, economy, and instil into their minds lessons of piety and well-doing, or their neglect, will return into their own bosoms floods of bitterness. If love to your child is not enough, let self-love prompt you to bring it up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

He is wise who never acts without reason, and never against it.

INDIAN ELOQUENCE.

Many years ago, when the French governed Canada, the Canadians were indignant at the powerful "Five Nations" in New York, because they were so friendly to the English settlers. At length the French Governor, De La Barre, raised an army of 700, and went against them. His men suffered much from hardship and sickness, and many of them died. The Indians were all around him, and he was obliged to beg peace of them, instead of destroying or subduing them. Still he tried to keep up the appearance of strength. He sent for the chiefs of the Five Nations to come and see him. Three of them came. De La Barre addressed the Onondaga chief as follows:

"Chief, listen to what I have to say. I am sent to this country by a great king, who commands armies. He is good to his friends, but terrible to his enemies. What are ye, his friends or his enemies? I tell you that ye are his enemies. You protect the English, and you fight for them. You have made a league with them for peace and war. You have led them into the country, and shown them the trading grounds of the French, and now they carry away the furs which the French ought to get. Such is your conduct, and that of the Five Nations, and what shall the king my master do to you for these things? He can send an army into this land that shall scatter your tribes as the dry leaves of autumn are scattered by the whirlwind; and this he will do, unless you change your conduct, and instead of enemies become his friends."

Garangular, the Indian Chief, knew the distress of the French army, and therefore replied as follows. He calls the French Governor Yonnondio, and the English Governor of New York, Corlear.

"Yonnondio, I honor you; and the warriors that are with me honor you. Your interpreter has finished your speech, I now begin mine. My words make haste to reach your ears; hearken to them. Yonnondio, you must have believed when you left Quebec, that the sun had consumed all the forests which render our country inaccessible to the French; or that the great lakes had overflown their banks and surrounded our castles, so that it was impossible for us to get out of them. Yes, Yonnondio, you must have dreamed so; and the curiosity of so great a wonder has brought you so far.

"Now you are undecieved; for I, and the warriors here present are come to assure you that the Senecas, Onondagas, Oneidas, and Mohawks, are yet alive. I thank you, in their name, for bringing back into their country the pipe of peace, which your predecessor received from their hands. It was happy that you left under ground that murdering hatchet which has been so often dyed in the blood of the French. Hear, Yonnondio—I do not sleep—I have my eyes open; and the sun which enlightens me, discovers to me a great captain at the head of a company of soldiers who speaks as if he was dreaming.

"He says that he only came to smoke the great pipe of peace with the Onondagas. But Garangular says that he saw the contray; that it was to knock them on the head, if sickness had not weakened the arms of the French. We carried the English to our lakes, to trade with the Utawas and Quatoglioe as the Adisoondoes brought the French to our castles to carry on a trade which the English say is theirs.

"We are born free—we neither depend on Yonnondio nor Corlear. We may go where we please, and buy and sell what we please. If your allies are your slaves, use them as such. Command them to receive no other than your people. Hear Yonnondio, what I say is the voice of all the Five Nations. When they buried the hatchet at Cadaracai, in the middle of the forest, they planted the tree of peace in the same place, to be there carefully preserved, that instead of a retreat for soldiers, the fort might be a rendezvous for merchants. Take care that the many soldiers who appear there do not hurt the tree of peace, and prevent it from covering your country and ours with its branches. I assure you, that our warriors shall dance under its leaves, and will never dig up the hatchet to cut it down, till their brother Yonnondio or Corlear shall invade the country which the Great Spirit has given to our ancestors."

De La Barre was filled with rage at this speech, but was obliged to make peace. Not long after, another French Governor foolishly invaded the magnanimous people, who had permitted De La Barre to retire.

The cunning Indians concealed themselves till the French were within reach, and then sprang upon them suddenly, and forced them to retreat. These wars made the Five Nations hate the French, while they were still more friendly to the English.

It is disgraceful to the Americans, that the remnants of this noble race have been so nearly driven away from the graves of those fathers who protected our ancestors, though it brought war upon themselves.

THE SCHOOL-MASTER ABROAD.

The Baltimore Clipper tells a good story, of which the following is the substance;

A board of school commissioners, encumbering a consequential little village in Maryland, being in want of a teacher, advertised in the newspapers for "a well disposed, moral man, who was capable of teaching dead languages, and did not chew tobacco or drink whiskey." After a fortnight of this advertisement had been elaborated, a raw-boned Yankee made his appearance, with a knife and a pine stick in one hand, and a Cape Cod Protection, alias a cake of gingerbread in the other, and held the following dialogue with the commissioners aforesaid:

'Well,' said the chairman, eyeing the candidate from head to foot, 'do you possess the necessary requirements for a public school teacher?'

'Iguess I do,' answered Slick, whittling his stick.

'Do you understand Latin?' asked one of the commmissioners a dutch farmer.

'I guess I do,' replied Slick, again rounding the end of his stick with his knife.

'Well let's hear some of your Latin,' said the chairman.

'Quimbo hic squashicum, et punkinitum lingum,' said Slick drawing his coat sleeve closely under his nose.

'Humph!' exclaimed the Dutchman; 'ish dat Latin? who's de author?'

'Josephus,' replied Slick; 'he says in his life of Governor Hancock, Sic transit gloria Monday morning—Hancockibus quod erat demonstrandum.'

'Dat's goot!' exclaimed the Dutchman, rubbing his hands, 'tere never vas better Latin.'

'Now, sir,' said the chairman, 'I suppose you understand geography?'

'I guess I do,' said Slick, sharpening the end of his stick.

'How far have you been?'

'As far as the District of Columby.'

'What State is it in?'

'A state of desperation.'

'What latitude are we in?'

'According to the thermometer, we're ten degrees below zero.'

'Which is the most western point of North America?'

'Cape Cod.'

'Good. Now, sir, let us know how far you studied mathematics. What's the area of a square acre of land?'

'That depends upon the quality,' replied Slick, snapping the blade of his knife.

'Well, suppose it be good corn land?'

'Why, it depends upon the number of hills.'

'Say—five hundred.'

'Guess you might as well tell a fellow how many grains to a hill.'

'Five.'

'Then according to Euclid, it would be 742 feet horrizantally perpendicular.'

'Excellent! Pray, sir, where are you from?'

'Staunton down in the Bay State—and I can do most any thing.'

'No doubt; but there is one thing you cannot do—You cannot humbug us. You can go.'

DRUNKENNESS.—To record all its mischiefs would take volumes. Governor Everett enumerates the following as among the evils it has inflicted upon the country within the last ten years, viz:

1. It has cost in direct expense 500 millions of dollars.
2. It has cost in indirect expenses 600 millions of dollars.
3. It has destroyed about 300 thousand lives.
4. It has sent 100,000 children to the poor houses.
5. It has consigned 150,000 persons to jails and prisons.
6. It has made at least 1,000 maniacs.
7. It has instigated the commission of 1,500 murders.
8. It has caused 2,000 persons to commit suicide.
9. It has burned and otherwise destroyed property to the amount of five millions of dollars.
10. It has made not less than 200,000 widows.
11. It has made 1,000,000 orphans.
12. It has endangered the inheritance left us by our fathers, and fixed a foul stain on the fair fame of America.—Western Temperance Journal.

VIRGINIA AND MASSACHUSETTS.—Side by side have these old States continued from the early days of the Revolution until the present time.—Their intercourse has always been dignified, and their feelings fraternal. Both of them have supplied more public officers than any of the other States. They might justly claim parentage of the Union. The great drama of the Revolution opened at Lexington in one, and closed at Yorktown in the other. The President of the first Congress was from one, the first President of the Union was from the other. The first signer of the Declaration of Independence was from one; the first signer of the Constitution was from the other. The great leaders of the Federal and Democratic parties Adams and Jefferson, resided in Massachusetts and Virginia; each was Vice President and each was President; each a signer of the Declaration of Independence; each a negotiator of his country's treaties in Europe, and having both served with noblest integrity their day and generation, they were together summoned hence on the fiftieth anniversary of that immortal day which saw them together, pledging "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors," in the cause of Independence.—North American.

THE ROSE.—I saw a rose perfect in beauty; it rested gracefully upon its stalk, and its perfumes filled the air. Many stopped to gaze upon it, many bowed to taste its fragrance, and its owner hung over it with delight. I passed it again, and behold it was gone—its roots had withered, and the enclosure which had surrounded it was down. The spoiler had been there; he saw that many admired it; he knew it was dear to him who planted it, and beside it he had no other plant to love. Yet he snatched it secretly from the hand that cherished it, he wore it upon his bosom till it hung its head and faded; and when he saw its glory was departed, he flung it rudely away. But it left a thorn in his bosom, and vainly did he seek to extract it; for now it pierces the spoiler, even in his hour of mirth. And when I saw that no man, who loved the beauty of the rose, gathered again its scattered leaves, or bound up its stalk which the hands of violence had broken, I looked earnestly at the spot where it grew, and my soul received instructiom. And I said, Let her who is full of beauty and admiration, sitting like the qneen of flowers in majesty among the daughters of women, let her remember that she standeth on slippery places, 'and be not high minded, but fear.'—Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.

RAISING PIGS.—Cleanliness greatly promotes the health and growth of swine. In Norfolk, England, an experiment was recently made on six pigs of equal size. Three were kept as clean as possible by a currycomb and brush; the others left to themselves as to cleanliness. All were supplied with litter and as many peas as they would eat. At the end of seven weeks, the first weighed (dressed) 18 pounds each more than the last; and they were found to have eaten a less quantity of peas by five bushels, than their dirty competitors.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases, such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c &c &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, aad several other vegetable substances Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr Phinney's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlæm Oil,
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey
Godfrey's Cordial,
Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Hive Syrup,
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organium,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cradked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web's Dictionary, large,
" " small,
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,
Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M., Oran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Asa Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel B. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—Jonathan Maxson, Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers, Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.--NO 45.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.——A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO 97.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, JANUARY 5, 1842. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Just in Time.—An Authentic Narrative.

BY REV. D. FOLTS.

In the town of F——, in a distant part of this State lived Abram Smith, a youth of promise—but soon to be an inhabitant of another world. In early life he had left the home of his childhood to qualify himself for the duties of riper years. He saw as youth always seem to see, a long life and brightening prospects open before him; and pressed forward with youthful zeal and fire to snatch the golden prize. Alas, how oft does disappointment intervene, and youthful hopes and brilliant expectations are dashed in their very buddings! Such was Abram's destiny. But as the sequel will disclose, his apparent present loss was sanctified to his eternal advantage.

He sickened, and rosy health waned into deathlike paleness. A dark cloud came over his cherished prospects, tossing and dashing his golden hopes into its utmost gloom. Disease unfitted him for his employment, and he retreated beneath the paternal roof. Here his resources were expended upon physicians, but all was of no avail. "He grew no better, but rather worse." Consumption, under which he languished, assumed a confirmed and inveterate state, and it was but too evident that death was stealing on with silent but certain tread. To Abram Smith now gazing upon the portals of the next world, the future teemed with horrors unutterable. The wing of expectation was broken—his hold on life gave way, and death, already near, seemed but the horrible prelude to that agony—

Whose pang
Survives the dying breath.
Yes, what amazing terrors hang
Just o'er the rebel's death!

Happy for him, however, before the dreadful scene was consummated by the exchange of worlds, the heart of a young man who was himself a snatched brand from the burning depths beneath, became exceedingly interesting in Abram's situation and peril. He saw him ready to launch into another existence utterly unprepared. An immortal soul just trembling on the confines of two worlds! How solemn the spectacle! Well might angels proffer their agency to lead to a rescue—much more a soul enriched with God's salvation, devote its influence and redeemed powers to the well being of a fellow spirit in its perishing. The young man sought and obtained an interview with the languishing youth. By expostulation and earnest entreaty, he pointed him to the Crucified for refuge. There was an apparent interest, but no decision to submit the heart to the service of God. The second interview was as unavailing. What iron strength is developed in the obstinacy and infatuation of the sinner! Abram Smith was conscious that he must die. As conscious of his impending doom, yet seemingly determined never to submit to Jesus Christ for salvation from the dread interminable before him. The third interview was had, old excuses were plead and new ones urged by the perishing youth. But there was an evident and increased anxiety of mind. With deep conviction of sin, yet how loth to break away from its tyranny, and cleave to Him who is the Resurrection and the Life! It was during this interview that He who led captivity captive, stood by and plucked this precious soul from the adversary's grasp. But I must pen a brief sketch of the struggle and the victory.

There was a solemn stillness succeeded in import by the conversation which follows:—

Abram, you soon must die.

Abram.—I know it. I cannot live.

Soon you will be an inhabitant of Eternity.

A.—It cannot be long.

But O, how unprepared! With your present character, your passage through the dark valley and shadow of death must terminate in the "blackness of darkness forever."

Here Abram appeared exceedingly agitated and troubled.

When his friend continued—Mercy's offers and entreaties are still extended to you. If you will improve them, Heaven may yet be yours. The Spirit's voice is still upon your ear, if you heed that voice, and "harden not your heart," then may you still be blest forever. "Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation." But in your case, a little delay, and God's last invitation will die away, and the last ray of Hope will be quenched FOREVER. Submit now to the Savior with a confiding, believing heart, and with deep contrition and repentance for your numerous sins, and you have the divine pledge that he who thus comes to the Savior, shall not be sent empty away. Will you come and make this cheerful and full surrender of yourself to Christ?

A.—I cannot—I CANNOT—my body is all weakness and pain—my mind is all anxiety and distress. No—I cannot.

How awful was that moment! What interests were clustered around the scene! What powers were at work! Hell and earth conspired to dash, and Heaven stooped to save the priceless soul.

His friend continued—Your pain and distress will probably never abate, unless soothed by the mercies of the everlasting Gospel. Be not deceived. Without pardon and justification through the atoning blood of Christ, the pains and anxieties you now endure, will prove but the precursors of unutterable wrath that awaits you. O, think of the insupportable and eternal misery of the lost, and escape the gathering storm of retributive vengeance!

His anxious concern deepened with every moment.

And now he was pointed to the tenderness and love of the Savior in the provision of glorious salvation for the soul, and that salvation offered without price to those infinitely ill-deserving. He was cited to the unparalleled sorrows and sufferings of Christ to secure us joy unspeakable and full of glory.

To his extreme poverty to secure us an eternal and glorious inheritance.

To the appropriateness of repentance and faith to our peace with God.

To the aggravated nature of sin committed against such manifestations of love and favor.

Again was he pointed to the sinner's refuge in Christ, and urged to decide and act as a dying man, and prepare to meet his God.

Here Abram again referred to his multiplied infirmities. O! says he, you cannot realize the distress, and weakness, and pain of my poor body.

His friend proceeded—The decision must be made, and you will never be in more favorable circumstances to make it than now.

"Death at the farthest can't be far,
O think before thou die!"

You must break from your sins by confession, and from your iniquities by turning to the Lord.

The case of the wretched prodigal was here rehearsed as an illustration of his own.

And, said his friend, as this profligate son forsook his father's house, so have you departed from your God and Savior. As he squandered his father's bounty, so have you wasted God's mercies and grieved his Holy Spirit. As he famished in a strange land, so you are perishing away from your only refuge in Jesus Christ. As he thought of the bread in his father's house, so your thoughts now dwell upon the rich provision there is in Christ for you. As he was convinced that he must die of hunger unless he sought his father's favor, so you are now conscious that you must perish eternally unless you haste for mercy to Christ. As the prodigal resolved, "I will arise and go to my father," so you must resolve that you "Will go to Jesus, though your sins

Have like a mountain rose."

"And as he straightway arose and came to his father;" so you must come to an immediate decision, and repent and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ for the eternal safety of your soul. Not a moment should be lost. O! stay not.

"Stay not for the morning's sun;
Longer wisdom you despise,
Harder is she to be won."

Come confessing with the prodigal, "I have sinned against heaven and before Thee," thou neglected Savior. And as they rejoiced over the prodigal's return, so will there be joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. The language of all God's dealings to you still is—

"O! wretched prodigal return
And seek your Savior's face,
The warm desires that in you burn
Were kindled by his grace."

But a little delay may grieve his Spirit from you forever. Shall the decision be recorded in heaven that you now yield to the influences of God's Holy Spirit, and give yourself unreservedly to Christ?—That here you make the full surrender, and devote yourself to God's service forever. O will you do it? Will you come like the repentant prodigal to Christ?

Abram, who had listened to every word with intense interest, now exclaimed with the deepest emotion, I will—I will—I WILL—I come with all my sins—Jesus have mercy—Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me—forgive my sins—my cruel sins—and with many like expressions he ceased not to confess and implore mercy, until his heart broke and melted into deep contrition and penitence. Here he made the entire consecration. It was nothing less than a free and full surrender of all to CHRIST, and here atoning blood cancelled all his guilt. No doubt it was a scene over which angels rejoiced.

During this melting season of confession and surrender, the burden of soul his friend had borne thus far, was removed, or gave place to unison with heaven's rejoicing over the repentant sinner.

O the change wrought! The room was indeed a BETHEL, for there God revealed his face. It was a BETHESDA for mercy reigned. Abram's countenance but just shaded with despair, was now kindled up with indescribable joy. His weakness and pain of body were forgotten in the rich fruition of God's deliverance. With his wasted frame half raised from his sick couch, and clasping his hands, he exclaimed, My Jesus! My Jesus! O my Savior! MY SAVIOR! Turning to his friend, he says—don't you see the angels—the dear angels are here!

What a transition! His anguish and distress of mind had now passed away, and he was filled with joy unspeakable, and peace that passeth knowledge. What a fulness of enjoyment! It was indeed a heaven on earth.

Now was manifest the indescribable interest of the closing scene of the parable which had made so deep an impression on his mind. It was the prodigal's reception by God's paternal heart, through the mediation of his beloved Son. How rich the grace of the adorable Savior, that sought out and clothed this wretched wanderer with the garments of salvation and praise! It was the exchange of miserable rags for kingly apparel! Yes, more. It was the exchange of a vile and degraded slave of Satan, into an adopted heir of heaven!

His friend, after imparting suitable advice, and commending him to God and the word of his grace, by prayer, bade him adieu.

Contrary to expectation, Abram Smith still survived twelve or fourteen days. But it was indeed lingering in the gates of bliss. Earth and Satan were conquered foes—earthly and sordid conversation grieved him to the very heart. His whole soul seemed fixed to resist every thing the tendency of which was to shade or mar his heavenly contemplations. He delighted in nothing so much as to lie at the Savior's feet, and adore him for that amazing love manifested to him in the time of his extremity. Meanwhile he was most faithful to those around him. Christians were urged to holiness of life, and to untiring faithfulness in the service of Christ. Sinners were exhorted to immediate repentance, and preparation to meet him around the Throne.

When the time for his departure drew on, he despatched a messenger for the friend who had directed him to Christ. On his arrival he found Abram in his dying strife. Still there was something unearthly in his appearance—something that pointed to a brighter and better world. As he drew near the bed-side, Abram was asked if he recognized who it was. He could still speak with difficulty, and replied, "O yes," and repeated the name of his friend, who now for the last time knelt by his side and committed his departing spirit to his Savior and God. His last struggles were severe in the extreme. With his poor body, owing to the nature of his disease, it was in agony; but grace sustained his soul. As his day and conflict, so was his strength from God, and he emerged from the darkness of the valley and shadow of death with palms of victory. Some dozen or fifteen minutes after, those around him supposed his unfettered spirit had fled to paradise, he again raised his pale and emaciated hands, and clasping them, exclaimed, "O MY GOD." It seemed like the victor's shout of TRIUMPH from the world of glory.

The sepulchre conceals his body in its moulderings to dust. But Abram Smith lives. He lives—

Where the weary are at rest,
And the wicked trouble not.

His salvation was "JUST IN TIME."

Scott, Cortland Co., Dec. 8th, 1841.

THE SABBATH.

From the New York Evangelist.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH.

In the Christian dispensation, the Sabbath had risen to a higher degree of moral importance than even under the Patriarchal or Mosaic. Falling upon the first day of the week, rather than upon the seventh, yet retaining the great principle of consecrating one seventh portion of time, it combines all the associations arising from the work of creation, with those connected with the work of redemption. These associations are pure, elevating and salubrious to the human mind. While the cessation of labor gives opportunity for reflection, the themes suggested by the day are calculated to quicken the intellectual powers, and awaken the most reverential and benevolent emotions. In the Christian dispensation the light from the Supreme Throne shines more clearly than before, and will become more and more glorious as ages roll away. The Sabbath being the natural and appropriate day for the special diffusion of religious truth, will, therefore, become correspondingly richer and mightier in its moral bearings.

As the Sabbath is in its nature equally adapted to all climates and all ranks—as it is especially adapted to the later ages of time, it has been connected in the Christian church with the preached gospel, and its influence is ordained to be co-extensive with that of unparalled importance as an instrument of effecting the great design of the gospel on mankind. When all nations shall submit to the Prince of Peace, the Sabbath will collect them all around his altars, and waft with the revolving globe, its full continual incense in his holy presence. Such is the position of the sacred day in the Christian dispensation.

It is to be regretted, however, that the value of this day has not been sufficiently appreciated by Christians. In the early ages of the church, while the constitution of civil society was averse to its influence, its claims as a part of the moral law were not so clearly developed as they have been since. It has always been preserved in the church as a day of remembrance of our Lord's resurrection, but with different degrees of light. Some have kept the first day of the week, simply because of the resurrection and the apostolic practice, while they regard the Sabbath as done away, forgetting that on this theory they cannot account for the continuance of the week itself. If the week is not a permanent division of time, how can we keep the first or seventh? How can we number its days at all? If it is a permanent division, what can be its foundation but the appointment of the original Sabbath, dividing the course of time into periods of seven days?

Some, as the Jews, have even among Christians kept the seventh day instead of the first. This denies the argument from the practice of the apostles, and separates the Sabbath from all the peculiar glory of the Christian system. In the general corruption of religion, the Sabbath has suffered. On continental Europe, both the influence of Romanism and rationalism have made it a day of pleasure and licensed sin, as much as of devotion. Far different from this was the influence of the Presbyterian church in Scotland, the Puritans in England, and their descendants who settled New-England. They regarded the Sabbath as sustained by all the authority of the moral law; as changed by divine authority from the seventh to the first day of the week, and as fraught with the excellency of the gospel associations, promises, and designs. The effect of this due honor of the Sabbath has been brilliantly illustrated in their history. The knowledge and reverence of religious truth; the eagerness for intellectual improvement; the endearing sanctities of domestic life; and the extraordinary religious and civil freedom which have characterized the communities of Puritans wherever established, are directly the effects of a just regard for the Christian Sabbath. Just in the degree in which the Sabbath has been reverenced and improved, religion, purity of morals, education, and liberty have been promoted.

As the Sabbath is best adapted to ages when revelation is the fullest, so it is also best for lands where society is most intelligent and free. Hence the preservation of its honor in such a land as ours, ought to be the chief care of our civil and ecclesiastical authorities. It procures the best and cheapest system of education; it promotes the greatest amount of physical comfort; it is the most powerful agent of national wealth; it is able at once to originate the safest legislation, and to execute most efficiently the established laws, and therefore, is in all respects adapted to such a country and to such a government as ours. These being indisputable truths, we earnestly implore all American Christians and patriots to give them the most earnest attention.

THE SABBATH AT HOME.—If the moral, intellectual, and spiritual nature of the Sabbath be such as we have described, then the prosperity of a family circle must depend much on the manner of its observance. Many Christians who mean to keep the Sabbath day holy, have yet no proper sense of its adaptation to their highest moral good. True, it accomplishes much even where it is not fully known; but it might do much more, were its provisions more fully appreciated.

Every family should endeavor to make the Sabbath as useful to them as possible. Hence, suspending all secular business, they should consider in what way its hours can be best employed. For this purpose they should make such arrangements previously, as will tend most to preserve the day from petty interruptions. Quietness should be sought and hurry avoided. The preparations for public worship are so often made with so little system, and so much bustle, as greatly to unfit the mind for religious service. This often arises from general want of method. With proper attention, all this can be avoided, and much time be gained for private and family devotion, before the hour of public worship arrives.

The services of the sanctuary are capable of imparting essential benefit to those who know how to improve them. It should be a matter of principle with every one to enter with earnestness into every portion of divine worship. The Scriptures, the hymns, and the prayers, should be marked and inwardly digested by the soul that is wafting its holiest incense before the Creator's throne.

The sermon is designed to impart knowledge on the grandest, purest, and most important themes which can possibly occupy the human mind. If the preacher is faithful to his trust, his sermon has been prepared on his knees, with severe and laborious study. It is the hearers privilege to receive the advantage of all this. If he will therefore carefully apply his mind when the speaker delivers it, he will not only receive the thoughts of the preacher, but these will suggest trains of thoughts of his own. On returning home, the doctrine, argument, and appeals of the speaker, should be matter of free, familiar, and appropriate conversation. The habit of preserving in a book the plans of discourses, and the most important reflections which they contain and suggest, is full of advantage. It enables you after many years to look back over the path which you have traveled, with feelings of singular delight.

The labors of the Sabbath school, and the hours of reading and reflection which the evening brings, or of usefulness and prayer in the spiritual efforts of the church for the salvation of men, are calculated to enlarge the mind, to promote its activity and to cultivate its best affections.

With such a view of the day, how shameful must be the practice of light and frivolous reading. How directly an insult and mockery of all that is holy in religion, is the publication, and circulation, and perusal of the Sunday papers by which our city is abominably disgraced! In such transactions, the natural aversion of the human heart to the holiness and worship of God is glaringly manifest.

Religious Department.

ATTENDANCE ON PUBLIC WORSHIP.

The christian pastor needs the constant attendance of his parishioners at the stated seasons of public worship. If it be his duty to preach, it is their duty to hear. Let him see his efforts appreciated, the house of worship crowded, and it will invigorate him to redoubled exertions. Hope will inspire his mind and warm his heart. But his energies are palsied, should he fear that if the Sabbath be a little too warm, or a little too cold, a little too sunny, or a little too cloudy, should the mist sweep through the air or the beautiful snow-flake fall, the empty walls of the church will send back in chilling tones the echo of his voice. It is hardly in human nature to triumph over such discouragements. I plead not that the invalid should be imprudent. I plead only that the healthy should be conscientious; I plead only that the congregation be not a fair weather congregation—a Sabbath morning congregation. Comforts are now so multiplied that all ordinary weather may be safely encountered by all but the feeble or infirm. Let habit become nature. Come with your families. Like Israel's tribes, to this spacious and beautiful temple. Go out into the highways and hedges, and invite guests. Throw open your doors with cordiality to the stranger, and let congregation and pastor be animated by the sublime spectacle of a thronged sanctuary. Be assured that there is no other way in which you can pass your Sabbaths so happily; there is no other way of employing these sacred hours, which will be so promotive of both the temporal and the spiritual prosperity—the moral and the intellectual improvement of yourselves and your families. The sublime contemplations of the pulpit alike tend to expand the intellect, and to purify the heart, to diffuse those virtues which grace the hours of domestic privacy and affection; and that sobriety, integrity, and industry, which constitutes the foundation of individual happiness and national prosperity. And it is thus alone that you can prepare for those fearful scenes of death, resurrection, judgment and eternity, to which all are so rapidly hastening.—Rev. J. S. C. Abbott.

THE MORAL COURAGE OF PAUL.

The appearance of Paul before the Areopagus of Athens, involved an exhibition of moral courage that has seldom been equalled, and perhaps never surpassed, in the history of man. He was in the presence of the statesmen, philosophers, orators, and poets of the most intellectual and refined nation upon earth. He was there to humor no popular sect, to flatter no national vanity, to move upon no springs of ambition or future fame. He was there to unfold, to fortify and rivet upon the judgment and conscience of his enlightened auditory, doctrines at variance with every previous conviction and present impulse; doctrines totally subversive of that faith in which they were born; in which their fathers died, and which they wished to bequeath to their offspring.

He had no splendid and imposing forms of worship, or mythological mysteries, to aid his argument, or conciliate the pride of his audience. He had no temples, statues, or altars to substitute for those which he would make desolate. He had no divinities peopling each hill and vale, and grove and fountain, to take the places of those whom he dethroned. He had only the pure abstract conception of the one supreme, holy and self-existing God; his universal providence, and man's final accountability. He delivered his message as one raised by his mighty theme above the frown, or the commendation of his hearers. He was too clear and discriminating for the subtle sneer; too earnest and impressive for the sceptical jest, and too cogent and massive in thought for the dialectical evasion. And though no corresponding results were immediately obvious, yet convictions were planted there which struck at length into the very heart of Greece; and which finally enthroned a forsaken God upon the affections and allegiance of a repentant nation.—N. Amer.

CALLS FOR GRATITUDE.

Said Bishop Heber, "When we witness the many dangers which threaten the springing of the rising corn; when we reckon up in our thoughts the opposite dangers of drought or moisture, of parching heat, or of pinching and untimely cold; the blights which may taint the ear; the worm which may consume the root; and all the other alarms which the husbandman feels or fears, we cannot but be aware that something more than the industry of man is required to make him happy or prosperous, and that it is with good reason, that in our daily prayers we ask our "daily bread" of God; since no day in the year can be found in which his blessings is not needed, either to preserve the seed; or to prosper the tender stalk; or to fill the ear; or to shake the mildew, or the storm, by which the maturer crop is endangered. And, even when the food of many days is waving before our eyes, we cannot choose but feel an anxious joy, a solemn, and in some degree a mournful thankfulness, when we compare our unworthy lives with the unbounded mercy of God; when we recollect how little and how seldom we have thought of him who careth for us continually, and when we tremble, lest, even now, our sins should interrupt the stream of his mercy, and the improper use which we too often make of plenty, should, even yet, turn our abundance into hunger.

THE PASTOR'S VISITS.—The christian minister must visit his people. Without this, though learned, though eloquent even, he cannot be in the highest degree useful. By personal acquaintance alone can he ascertain the temptations, the conflicts, the trials, the spiritual condition of the members of his charge. He must visit, not a few families merely, but all his flock. He must sacrifice, if necessary, the attractions of friendship, and of congenial habits and taste, to his duties as a laborious and impartial parish minister, who must account to God for each soul entrusted to his care. And especially wherever poverty lays its heavy hand, or age is crushed with infirmities, or the suffering invalid, with weak and perishing body, lingers on the bed of pain, or the widow's heart is bleeding with anguish. Wherever there is any one bowed down beneath the burden of life, it is there, there peculiarly that the christian minister is bound to go. The sick and bereaved must be visited often; weddings must be attended, and funerals. There are days of sickness, and of storms, when no visits can be made. The reception of parishioners and other friends, and various family cares necessary engross an important portion of one's time. There are public duties of associations and councils and societies of benevolence which claim attention. And seasons of relaxation are absolutely indispensable to the hard student, that the exhausted system may recover its tone. How often then can a minister, with his utmost diligence, in the midst of these interruptions and cares, go through the families of his parish? The most faithful pastors usually think they do well, if they succeed in visiting every family in the parish each year. There are few, having the charge of large congregations, who are not able to do even this. If a minister does much more than this, it is pretty certain that he is neglecting his study, and that his congregation are complaining that all his sermons are alike. Any person, by a slight computation may see the utter impossibility of a faithful minister's visiting his people, with that degree of frequency which is generally desired and expected.—Rev. J. S. C. Abbott.

The true tears of repentance flow from the eyes of faith.

Though faith be necessary to our justification, good works are necessary to our salvation.

Keep good principles, and they will keep you.

Humility is the mother of contentment.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, January 5, 1842.

The N. Y. Evangelist and the Sabbath.

We insert two articles from the Evangelist on the Sabbath, to show some things in them that are good, and ought to be remembered, and also to show how inconsistent a man must be who undertakes to prove a Sabbath from the Bible, that is not so much as mentioned or hinted at in any part of it.

In a former number, the Editor of the Evangelist agreed to rest the argument on the practice of the Apostles. When this annunciation was made, we had hope that we should soon hail him as a Sabbath-keeper, because there is nothing plainer in the Bible than that the Apostles kept the Sabbath, and not the first day. But we now fear that the corruptions of the church in the dark ages, have so blinded his vision that he will not come to the light.—Look at this,—"Some, as the Jews, have even among Christians kept the seventh day instead of the first. This denies the argument from the practice of the Apostles, and separates the Sabbath from all the peculiar glory of the Christian system."—Can such a remark be accounted for, otherwise than from ignorance of the practice of the Apostles? We must believe that our brother has derived his arguments from some other source than the Bible. We have long been persuaded that some men read the Bible to prove the system of religion recorded from tradition, and not to form their system. We think that all who undertake to prove a first day Sabbath from the Bible, have gone to work in such a way. It can not be that the idea of a change of the Sabbath was ever derived from the Bible, and all the proof derived therefrom to sustain it, is hypothetical and visionary, and would as soon prove any thing else as that. We forbear other remarks at present, and invite our brother of the Evangelist, and as many others as will, to examine the references we gave in a former number. If the Sabbath of the commandment cannot be sustained from the practice of Christ and his Apostles, we wish to know it. If our references are not satisfactory, we hope to have it shown. If they are, then they who keep the first day instead of the seventh, deny the argument from the practice of the Apostles, and separate the Sabbath from all its divine glory which it received at the creation, at Mt. Sinai, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, and borrow in its stead all their light from the church in its degeneration.

A correspondent writes thus:

"I noticed in the 90th No. of the Register an article headed, "Gambling Christians," which closes thus: 'But it must be evident to any one who has any idea of the religion of Jesus Christ, that he who will do this, [that is, buy a lottery ticket,] has not a vital spark of religion in his heart, though he may be clothed with the name.'"

What we said of "Gambling Christians" we yet believe. There cannot be such an anomaly. A man may gamble, and wear a christian name, make long prayers, wear a sanctimonious face, and perform a great many external duties of religion, and deceive both himself and others; but he cannot be in the exercise of christian feelings and principles when he gambles. We are asked if this is worse than to vend or use intoxicating drinks. Between moral evils we never judge. These are matters for God to determine. But we say, without reserve, that to vend or drink intoxicating liquors, is not good. It is sinful—it is murderous—it is soul-destroying, and must and will bring down the curse of God. It is no less murderous to burn than to bleed one to death. It shows no more depravity to do it at once, than by degrees. The evil consequences of vending ardent spirits are frequently more perceptible than of gambling; but this is no evidence that it is more unchristian. To do either, is to act contrary to the genius and spirit of christianity, and any person having any just apprehensions of the principles of our holy religion must condemn them both.

Correspondence of the Register.

HOPKINTON, R. I., Dec. 22, 1841.

BR. BAILEY—Believing it the duty of every thing that hath breath to praise the Lord, and the duty of man to speak of His goodness and of his wonderful works to the children of men, and feeling that God has recently displayed his mercy and grace to us in granting us a precious revival, and being assured that the friends of our beloved Zion will rejoice to hear of it, ask a place in your paper for the following.

The quarterly session of the churches in Hopkinton and Westerly took place on 6th day before the 2d Sabbath in November, by course, with the first church in Hopkinton, but it was thought by the brethren best to have a meeting one day previous, that we might get together and confess our wanderings, and pray for the blessing of God on our meeting, which was attended, and the Lord evidently met with us, and approved the measure. The result was that a deep anxiety rested on many of the members, with strong and fervent desires that God would visit his people, and revive his churches. These desires were put forth in solemn prayer to God, and we believe were heard and answered; for the church did arise and shake herself from the dust, and Christ gave her light. The consequence was, the saints were quickened, backsliders were reclaimed, and come back to their Father's house, and filled their place, and as soon as the church unitedly put forth their cry to God, the cloud seemed to rise from the mercy-seat, and the windows of Heaven were open, and salvation poured down upon our land, and scores of precious souls have been translated from natures darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. (Hallelujah!) Seventy-four have been buried with Christ in baptism at this place, (some of whom united with the other churches,) and a number at the 2d church, and a number at Westerly, and more are expected in all three of the places soon to follow the example. Entire families who have been in the observance of the first day of the week, have embraced the Sabbath of the Lord and followed their Savior, and it appears that the work is still spreading in different directions. Richmond has experienced something of its divine influence, and other places also. The Lord grant that it may continue to spread until the nations and kingdoms of the world shall become the nations and kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. May the Lord hasten the time.—Amen, and Amen. DANIEL COON.

For the Register.

Conversion of the Hebrew Nation.

MR. EDITOR—The extract from the Minutes of the Ex. Committee of the A. E. Board of Directors, &c., has suggested the following thoughts, which if you think proper you will lay before your readers.—A more correct understanding of the predictions relating to the Hebrew nation, yet to be fulfilled, is apparently much needed among christians, and would unquestionably do much towards rectifying their steps in the cause; for, with their present impressions, they seem neither to be prepared to engage in the work of the evangelization of that people, or contented to rest therefrom, which is not only a very unhappy frame of mind to be in, but equally unprofitable both to Jews and Christians.

Again, if any thing can be learned as to the consequences that will follow the conversion of Israel, that too will have its influence and use. But if the causes which prevent that desirable event are at all within the power or under the control of the friends of the Redeemer, then, of course, an acquaintance with those causes would afford a presumptive argument and hope they would soon be removed. Or, should it be discovered that Christians, in attempting an interference in the matter, are only intruding upon the high prerogatives of GOD, then as some seem to think, they might learn patiently to wait the sovereign accomplishment of the same, and in either case I suppose the appeal would partake of the nature of the discoveries going before. In reflecting upon this subject, the magnitude and importance of it seem to enhance. It will require no small labor to do the subject justice, but should the truth be shown, it may effect vast good. May it not be that the Jews (having turned to Christ through the instrumentality of the Gentiles) will become the honored agents in the hands of God to bring the church to the one faith, and at the same time redeem the honor of the name of God blasphemed through them among the Gentiles, and so restore to man the paradise he has lost?

I am glad that the Committee has seen fit to offer the "Premium" found in the "Extract;" but if any should think it insufficient to compensate an author for his labor in writing, I hope still that the object in view will afford the necessary inducement to enlist those who are able to render the cause of God the important service it requires in this department at this time.

A FRIEND TO ISRAEL.

For the Register.

Conversation.

The power of conversation is one of the highest and noblest faculties which man possesses. It is by this faculty that we are able to receive and impart knowledge, give and receive pleasure, cheer the low spirited, and give life and animation to society. It makes one's presence in all circles agreeable, and acceptable, and is the delight of the social party.

How often is the question asked, when returning home from an evening party, or some other social circles, how have you enjoyed yourself? O, I was highly entertained, and extremely delighted; we all parted as though the evening had not been spent in vain, for we all left the room with our countenances shining, and hearts overflowing with happiness received from the pleasant and agreeable manner in which the conversation was conducted. It has been a highly interesting evening.

But that stranger was the life of the company. He is quick and apt, appears to be well informed, and seems to know where to make good use of his knowledge. He conversed with so much ease and elegance, that he enlisted the attention of all those who were in his presence, and yet he appeared unconscious of the high conversational powers he possesses. But I perceived that the high degree of perfection to which he has obtained, is mostly from cultivation. He has made this a part of his education, and in his hands a sceptre is placed that will secure him friends, and the esteem and respect of all those with whom he may become acquainted. It makes him welcome in all circles and societies, and his company will be sought by all. A person with this faculty so highly cultivated, has in his hands a powerful auxiliary for doing great moral good in the world.

Why is it, if we wish to warn a friend, or court a personal friendship, when all other means have failed that we fly to the powers of persuasion? Because we feel conscious that if we cannot reach his heart by using words that are chosen, and applied in the most tender and endearing manner, that we have done all that lies in our power.

If we wish to gain information on a particular subject, and have it drawn out on paper, and also a friend at hand who perfectly understands the subject, why do we apply to the latter instead of the former? Because the latter is easier; the enquirer can ask questions on different points; states his objections; the other discusses them; and he will soon know all about it that his informer does.

When we are traveling in the stage, or by other public conveyance, how pleasing and interesting it is to meet a passenger with high colloquial powers; he enters into conversation, the attention of all the company is attracted while the time passes swiftly, and we are surprised when we notice how rapid we have approached the place where we must part.

We can see from what has been said the importance of this faculty, that it ought to be highly cultivated and refined.

I conceive it to be a faculty which ought to be highly cultivated from another fact, viz: that a great amount of thought abounds in the world that will never be committed to paper, and, furthermore, from the fact that community through this medium obtains the greater portion of the knowledge which it possesses. Conversation may also be a substitute when we cannot obtain books, or have not time for their perusal. How many that scarcely open a book once a month, and yet they are enlightened and well-informed? We can see this every day in our cities, and other similar places, where the great mass of men are so leisurely employed that they have little time for reading. And yet, if we meet a person from the city, we expect to find him intelligent and interesting. If he has been there only a short time we are seldom disappointed. The reason is, social conversation brings mind in contact with mind, where this vast amount of thought is afloat. It not only excites and influences, but receives as well as gives light.

There are dangers in which persons are apt to fall, who derive all the information they possess, entirely from conversation and society. The one is, they daily cultivate and use the language that tends to soften and refine the feelings, while they neglect that of the heart, when they unconsciously make dupes of society, and soon of themselves.

Another is, information obtained from this source may appear to come from good authority, and, yet, be inaccurate, and cannot always be relied upon. This, of which we have spoken, is that kind of conversation which tends to please the fancy, soften and refine the soul, enrich and elevate the whole moral character.

There is a kind of which we have not spoken. It may be termed trifling conversation. Of this, little need be said, for it is so prevalent that it comes every day under our observation. The trifling and narrow-minded, (apparently with great pleasure,) will dwell whole hours upon the most trifling and unwholesome topic. And how often do they lose from their circles the high and noble-minded man, who listens, is disgusted, and soon withdraws.

E. F. S.

Extracts of Correspondence.

"I feel that the subject of the Hebrew Mission is a subject that claims our attention most ardently. If we lack funds, our first-day brethren are willing and ready to help furnish them, believing that we are the only people who can have access to the Jews.—I believe we ought to sustain as many as two or three missionaries among them, and that we ought to distribute the Testament among them as far as it can be done."

* * * * * * *

"I am somewhat surprised at the concluding remarks of the "Evangelist" on the subject of the change of the Sabbath, after substantiating the ten commandments, including the fourth, so fully and so ably as he did." * * * * "I am very sorry to hear some talk of stopping the Register for want of ability to support it, while they yet take a political paper; and some say they get the news a fortnight earlier in other papers than they do in the Register—but they would not, if they did not take any other paper. I hope to get a few more subscribers in the Spring."

Another correspondent writes:

"I intend soon to furnish several of my neighbors with the "Register" gratis.—I think there is no other way in which I can promote the cause of Truth so cheap.—Public mind is fast preparing here for a change from first to seventh day. The Lyceum at —— ——, is composed of all the literati of the village, and one of its members will endeavor to introduce the subject of the Sabbath for discussion this week, and to give me the privilege of taking part in the debate. You will hear from me again before long.

Yours, in the bonds of love."

Br. C. M. Lewis writes under date of Rome, Dec. 27th:

"Through the blessing of God I am permitted once more to behold a precious revival of his work of grace and salvation at a place where I have attended meeting statedly, through the summer past, among the first-day people, situated between the 1st and 2d churches in Verona. Though the work has prevailed mostly among them, yet a number of our own brethren and sisters in both churches have shared its blessings. Sixteen have manifested hope in Christ. A very few in this number have once indulged a secret hope, but never before publicly declared what God had done for their souls. Five have been buried with Christ by baptism. Last evening between twenty-five and thirty were with us at the anxious seat, mostly young people, apparently deeply awakened and anxious sinners, but I fear not yet genuinely converted to God. Pray for us, that this work may spread far and wide, and prove deep and lasting."

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Imposition of Hands.

NUMBER I.

Under this head the writer proposes to make some remarks upon what some may consider a mooted subject. Old-fashioned it is admitted to be, and on this account it will be viewed by many as quite unpopular, perhaps too much so for the taste of the present enlightened age. Be this as it may, the reader may find it not altogether unprofitable or uninteresting.

As an apology for intruding this subject upon the consideration of the public, and of the denomination particularly; we wish to state in all christian kindness, that hitherto, or until recently, our denomination has very generally practiced this rite upon baptized candidates for church membership; perhaps without duly considering whether it is supported by scripture authority, or from an erroneous construction of what is found in the New Testament upon the subject. It is, however, believed that there is not a uniformity of opinion and practice among our churches upon this point, which is the probable reason of its claiming the attention of the General Conference at its recent session. And the fact that that body was not prepared to express itself decidedly upon the subject, and finally referring it to the churches, is presumptive evidence that the members were not all of the same mind respecting it. On this, as well as all other points, our motto should be truth and union. For it is as true in relation to the church as it is to the state, that united we stand, divided we fall. Our object is to unite, not to divide.

Respecting the laying on of hands, different views are expressed. By some it is contended that it was used by the apostles in conferring extraordinary spiritual gifts. Others consider it merely as an imposing and impressive manner of receiving members into the church; but as entirely extra-evangelical. Some limit its proper use to the ordination of ministers and deacons, while others believe that the scriptures authorize the practice of the laying on of hands upon every baptized believer in the Lord Jesus as a scriptural method of seeking the Divine influence. This has ever been our opinion with this simple modification, viz: that it might be at the option of every candidate to submit to it, or to omit it. In this particular, I think I am more consistent, if not more correct than formerly. If the practice as we have used it, and still used it, be according to apostolic usage, no church, or body of men has any right or power to set it aside, or to countenance the omission of it in any member of the church, even were the terms of our fellowship such that we could dispense with it in any, or hold in fellowship such as neglect it. For the apostles had the mind of Christ, and acted accordingly, and His mind is the supreme law of the church. On the other hand, if it be not warranted by apostolic precept or example, it matters not how ancient, solemn, or imposing it may be; it should not be canonized by the church, nor allowed to encumber its simple and hallowed service.

Laying on of hands appears to have been religiously used for various purposes. Our Lord laid hands on children when he blessed them, and applied his hands to the sick when he healed them, and he directed his disciples to do so after his ascension. "They shall lay their hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Mark xvi. 18. In this manner Paul healed the father of Publius. Acts xxviii. 8. Hands were laid on such as were set apart to important services in the church, Acts vi. 6 and xiii. 3, and it was through the laying on of the apostle's hands the Holy Ghost was given, Acts viii. 18. And it is supposed by some that the apostles laid their hands on the disciples in order to confer extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, but we have no evidence that this was ever proposed as a reason for doing so.

The first passage we shall examine, which is claimed as authorizing the laying on of hands upon baptized believers occurs in Acts viii. 18, and is as follows:—"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost. Then they laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Now the object proposed for laying on of hands upon these disciples, was not miraculous gifts of the Spirit; for these had never been promised to all believers, and unless by special revelation, they could not have had faith to ask for them; but there was a promise that those that believe should receive the Holy Ghost. The promise I refer to is recorded in John vii. 39. "But this he spake of the Spirit which they that believe should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given."

Again, in Acts ii. 38, Peter said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And this promise the apostle said was, to as many as the Lord our God shall call. The fulfilment of this promise was proposed by the apostles when they laid their hands on the Samaritan disciples and prayed for them, and it was fulfilled. But there is no evidence that they either expected or received any distinguishing gift. It is, however, believed by some, that there was some external display of gifts on this occasion, because it is said, verse 18, "And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostle's hands, the Holy Ghost was given." They suppose that Simon saw something which led him to this conclusion. But this construction of the text is by no means necessary. It would be as correctly construed, should we understand it that Simon considered, or observed, as that he saw, for the text can only signify his mental perception. He saw this as Barnabas saw the grace of God in Antioch, Acts xi. 23, and as they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto Paul, Gal. ii. 7. It appears further, that the apostles laid their hands on these Samaritan converts without distinction of sex; for as there were females among these baptized converts, we may justly infer that hands were laid on the women as well as the men. They were baptized, both men and women, v. 12. When the apostles came to Samaria, they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost; that is, the men and women whom Philip had baptized, v. 15.—Then laid they their hands on them, [the men and women,] and they received the Holy Ghost, v. 17. And from the manner in which this case is related, it is just to infer that it was their usual custom to do so by all other baptized believers.

The next passage we shall notice is Acts xix. 1—7. In this case Paul found about twelve disciples who had been baptized with John's baptism, but who appeared to be uninstructed in the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. When the apostle had instructed them on this subject, and had taught them the way of the Lord more perfectly, and they were made to see more clearly the nature of their baptism, or were re-baptized, we shall not now stop to enquire which, the apostle then laid his hands on them, and "the Holy Ghost came on them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." This passage is relied upon as evidence that the apostles had power to confer those miraculous gifts which were then so common in the church, and that the design of laying on of hands was to confer them. But, I conceive that we are not entitled to these inferences.—For in regard to the first, it should be remembered that the apostles never claimed to have this power conferred on them.—And as the case of these twelve disciples at Ephesus is the only one in which extraordinary spiritual gifts were conferred in connection with the laying on of hands, it is reasonable to conclude that the apostle never had power to confer them. The gift of which Paul speaks to Timothy as having been given him by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, 1 Tim. iv. 14, and the gift of God which was in him by the putting on of Paul's hands, which he exhorted him to stir up, 2 Tim. i. 6, was evidently not one of those extra-spiritual gifts which are termed miraculous; for it was one that needed culture and improvement, which cannot be said of the gift of tongues, and of healing the sick. And I will here just state that the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, and the putting on of Paul's hands, may be one and the same thing; for as the phrase του πρεσβυτεριου of the presbytery, is in the singular number and means but one man: so as Paul was also an Elder, he may have referred in both of the above cited passages, to the same act.

In regard to the second inference, viz: that the design of laying on of hands was to confer gifts: I see not that there is any more reason for this conclusion, than that this was the design and object of Peter when he preached on the day of Pentecost, or that the miraculous display of the Spirit upon the company convened in the house of Cornelius, was the special object he had in view in addressing them. And it was never proposed as the object to be gained by laying on of hands, but it was uniformly stated that the object was that they might receive the Holy Spirit. And this appears to have been given according to promise, by the laying on of hands.

I will close this article by bespeaking the attention of the reader to one more text of scripture in another article.

W. B. MAXSON.

Congressional News.

From the Jour. of Commerce.

IN SENATE.

Relations with England.

Dec. 23.—Mr. Barrow of Louisiana, presented the memorials of the New Orleans Insurance Company stating that they had insured a number of slaves (38,) shipped in the Formosa from Richmond, which vessel was wrecked, and the slaves set at liberty by British authorities at Nassau; that they had paid the policy of insurance, and now pray for relief from the Government.

Mr. Barrow moved the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and made some excited remarks on the subject.

Other members spoke with great feeling on the subject.

The memorial was referred.

Bankrupt Act.

Mr. Benton gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to postpone till July next, the operation of the Bankrupt Law, and to bring under its provisions Insolvent Banks.

Dec. 27.—Mr. Wright presented some petitions from New York, praying the suspension of the operation of the Bankrupt Law for two years, from the 1st of July last, which was referred.

Mr. Benton introduced his bill to postpone the operation of the Bankrupt Law till July next, and to extend its provision to insolvent Banks, and accompanied the same with a long and interesting speech on the subject.

He vehemently objected to the bill, as it passed, and on the following grounds, viz:

That it was not a Bankrupt system according to the Constitution.

That it was an insolvent law.

That it was a law relating to property, and entirely within the jurisdiction of the States, and without the jurisdiction of the Government.

That it brings causes properly triable in the State tribunals before the Federal Judiciary.

Some debate followed, in which it was contended by Mr. Henderson, that Banks were included in the act.

Individuals engaged in banking were, severally, subject to the law;

It would purge the country of spurious banks;

The petitions for the postponement of the act came from insolvent banks.

The bill was twice read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Veto Power.

Dec. 28.—Mr. Clay gave notice of his intention to introduce three joint resolutions on the subject of the Veto power, &c.—Mr. Clay will propose to restrict the Veto power;—to vest the appointment of the Secretary of the Treasury in Congress; to prohibit the appointment to office of Members of Congress; and, fourthly, to limit the tenure of the Presidency to one term.

Bankrupt Bill.

Mr. Benton's bill to postpone the operation of the Bankrupt Act, till July next, with a view to amendment, came up, in order, and Mr. Berrien moved its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Benton was for prompt action on the bill, and opposed the reference.

Mr. Calhoun said there was a great reaction of public opinion in opposition to this Act. He opposed the reference of the bill and said he moved its entire repeal.—But even if the bill should go into operation, those interested in it should have an opportunity to perfect it.

After much debate, Mr. Mangum spoke in favor of postponing the act, believing it to be impracticable. He wanted time to mature amendments to the bill.

Mr. Clay took part in the discussion. He was convinced that there had been no change of opinion unfavorable to this law; and, as to its details, the Committee would examine and report, without delay, whether they needed amendment or not.

Mr. Buchanan stated that twenty years ago he investigated this subject, and was satisfied that any Bankrupt Bill would be impracticable, unless the Federal Courts were greatly increased.

Few, and scattered as they now were, they would be broken down by the accumulation of business forced on them. If there were five hundred thousand, or even one hundred thousand bankrupts, the District Courts could not, in twenty years, attend to their cases. The law could not be executed.

Mr. Tallmadge made a very animated speech in reply to the attacks on the Act. He said it was as popular as it was salutary. So far from having lost popularity, he could answer for it that, in his State, many who once opposed it, now favored it. He believed it to be one of the most salutary laws that ever passed, and he was opposed to any postponement of it. The law was well and deliberately considered here for four years, and though, in its details, it may be imperfect, yet it is far more practicable than gentlemen represent. Most of the cases would require nothing but the registration of an order, in the vacation of the Court. It was only the contested cases that would be brought before the District Courts. The greatest portion of labor that would fall on any Judge, would be on the Judge of the New York district—and that gentleman, he well knew, would not shrink from the discharge of the whole duty. At all events we should hear from him what the difficulties were, and would then be enabled to remedy them.

Let the law go into operation—let those who supported it stand by it now,—and experience will soon shew us how to modify its defective provisions.

After some further debate, the motion to refer the bill was rejected, by the following vote:—Ayes 15, Nays 25.

The bill remains on the Calendar of the Senate, to be disposed of in order.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Dec. 24.—Mr. Fillmore asked and obtained leave to present a bill to extend the time of the loan of $12,000,000 and add $5,000,000 thereto.

The bill was read twice and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Cushing offered a privileged resolution that when the House adjourn to-day, it adjourns to meet on Monday next, which was agreed to.

Dec. 27.—The discussion of the tariff was resumed on the question of reference.

Dec. 28.—The question of reference was discussed through the day, without coming to a decision.

News of the Day.

The Sultan of Muscat.—We find there is a difference of opinion among our maratime friends whose trade carries them to Zanzibar, as to the fact, whether or not the presents of the American government were valued and honorably received, or were treated with neglect. One of our most respectable shipmasters assured us, some time since, that the presents were highly satisfactory, and that a building was about to be erected to contain them. On the other hand, we learn, by more recent arrivals, that the presents were treated with entire neglect, and that the beautiful boat which was one of them, was falling to pieces, in consequence of exposure to the weather. It is supposed that the Sultan's desire was to receive a vessel of war, in return for his own presents, and the substantial kindness he has rendered to American interests. The Sultan intends, we understand, to send another of his vessels, a brig, to this country at an early day.—Although these vessels are the property of the Sultan, their cargoes are, at least in part, private property.—Salem Gazette.

Arrival of the Kamschatka Steamer at Cronstadt.—The Kamschatka left Southampton on the 20th of October at noon, having repaired the damage to her side houses and bulwarks, received in crossing the Atlantic. In her passage through the North Sea, and along the coast of Denmark, she encountered some severe weather and almost continued fogs, and was at length compelled to come to anchor at the entrance of the Cattegat for 24 hours. She arrived at Copenhagen on the 3d of November, and during the time she remained in that port, excited much interest, and was visited by the King of Denmark, incog., and by the Princesses and ladies of the Court, together with many distinguished officers of the Government, receiving from all expressions of high admiration.

On the 7th of November, at noon, she left Copenhagen in charge of a Danish pilot for Cronstadt. The usual storms of the Northern Seas, at the commencement of the winter, were, of course, encountered, in the Baltic, but the Kamschatka with from 10 to 12 pounds of steam, and from 11 to 14 revolutions per minute, making headway at the rate of 10 to 12 knots per hour, had no difficulty in reaching the Dagaroot light, at the entrance of the Gulf of Finland, on Tuesday at 5 P. M., and in the course of Wednesday night cast anchor in safety at Cronstadt. Her machinery uninjured in every respect. A few hours after her arrival, she was visited by an aid of Prince Menschikoff, Minister of Marine, and they were led to expect the Emperor the next day; but unfortunately for the Kamschatka, on the morning of the 12th of November, the Neva was closed by ice, and navigation for the season at an end.

The Emperor with the Empress and suite, designed to have made an experimental trip in the Kamschatka, and to have compared her powers with those of the war steamer Bojotia, considered the finest steamer in the Russian Navy; but this plan was also frustrated; and she was immediately hauled into one of the splendid granite docks at Cronstadt, while those of the crew who wished to return home were just enabled to get out of port.—Cour. & Enq.

Joe Smith's New Peeping Stone.—We learn from the most indisputable authority that Joe has found a new peeping stone. The circumstances of its discovery are rather curious, and we give them as received. He was walking some evenings ago with a young lady, (or woman, which ever you please,) when suddenly he darted aside and leaped into a celler, where he presently cried out "how came I here!" and "how shall I get out?" The lady with this seized him and raised him as though he had been a child. Joe then stated the miraculous manner of his being drawn by the power of God into the cellar, and to the very spot where laid the stone, which he says has remarkable property of enabling him to translate unknown languages, discover the place where treasures are hidden.

Look out for miracles soon—Joe no doubt intends to find lots of money before long that for months have been lying by him.—Warsaw Signal.

From Florida.—By the steamer Cincinnati, Capt. Smith, arrived on Saturday from Palatka, we learn that the expedition of Lieut. G. W. Patten to the head waters of the St. Johns, after an absence of ten days, returned to Fort Mellen on the 8th inst. The country south of Lake Harney was inundated, and it was next to impossible to ascertain the true channel. The consequence was that the canoes were frequently endangered amid the intricacies from which it was difficult to liberate them. Lt. Patten examined several places, on two of which he discovered fields containing sweet potatoes, Lima beans, peppers, &c., which the Indians had planted during the summer. The Indians, however, had left the Islands, probably to join the forces of Sam Jones or Halleck Tustennuggee.

We farther learn that Lt. Col. Riley had arrived at Fort Pierce, and was daily expected by the land route to Fort Mellon.—Savannah Rep. Dec. 19.

Awful Calamity.—A private letter received yesterday, details an accident at the town of Jackson, Louisiana, which appals one's very soul. It is one of the most curious as well as the most heart-rending we have ever heard of. A dray loaded with several kegs of powder was being discharged, when, by the carelessness, (some say drunkenness,) of the drayman, one of them was suffered to fall. A scissor grinder was near, busy in his avocation, and his rapid wheel emitting a shower of sparks. These fell upon the spilled powder, blew up the man, scissors, grinder, horse and dray, and killed four negroes belonging to Mr. Seth Parker. The shock was felt all over the town, and many windows were broken. One leg of the drayman and his hat were found several hundred yards off. The mangled remains of the scissor grinder were collected and decently buried—His wheel, it appears, had been sent about sixty yards, and lodged on the balcony of a neighboring house. When will people learn to be careful with powder?—Crescent.

Breach of Promise of a Marriage Case.—A breach of promise of marriage action has been brought in London by a beautiful young lady, aged 18, against a gentleman of advanced years and of great wealth.—The damages are laid at £5,000 (about $25,000.) The trial was set down for the 7th of December, and had created an immense interest in the fashionable circles. One of the late London papers states that the old gentleman has written the young lady seven hundred letters and billetsdoux, all breathing the warmest sentiments of love, and couched in the most eloquent language. The lawyer's brief in the case, the same paper states, runs to 2,000 folios; we should judge from this, that all the letters are included in the brief. It will certainly prove a most interesting case.

Quick Work!—Flour and Salt!—The completion of the "Western Rail Road" has aroused the energies and quickened the enterprise of our Western friends. Among the incidents connected with this event; those which we are about to mention will produce a thrilling effect.

The Delegation from Syracuse, which left here for Boston yesterday, took with them a barrel of Salt manufactured at that place on Tuesday from water raised 300 feet below the surface of the earth. The staves and hoops of the barrel which contains the Salt were taken from the tree on the morning of the same day! So that this Salt, manufactured on Tuesday at Syracuse, which laid over fifteen hours at Albany, arrived at Boston (350 miles,) on Wednesday!

The Canandaigua Delegation took with them, as the most appropriate offering from old Ontario, a barrel of Flour, manufactured on Monday from Wheat "thrashed out" on that day, and packed in a barrel, the staves and hoops for which were taken from an Oak Tree and Hickory Poles waving that morning in their native forest! Flour, therefore, which was in the Sheaf, and a Barrel which was in the Tree at Canandaigua on Monday, was at Boston (400 miles,) on Wednesday!

Sperm Candles manufactured by Mr. Penniman, in this city, yesterday morning were burning at Faneuil-Hall and the Tremont, in Boston, last evening!—Alb. Eve. Jour., Dec. 30.

From the Watertown Jeffersonian.

Watertown, Dec. 22.

GREAT FIRE AT WATERTOWN!

Another Factory Destroyed!!—Between the hours of one and two this morning, a fire broke out in the large Woolen Factory owned and occupied by the Black River Woolen Company, situated in the upper part of this village, and in a very short space of time, all the buildings and most of their contents were a heap of ruins. The fire when discovered was too far advanced to be arrested, and notwithstanding the greatest efforts, but very little property was saved. Loss estimated at from $33,000 to $36,000; insured only for $11,000 in one of the Boston offices.

One of the hands employed in the Factory, who slept in the room where the fire originated, was very seriously burned; two others narrowly escaped with their lives.

The loss falls heavily upon the enterprising proprietors, and must seriously affect the prosperity of the village. About thirty hands are thrown out of active employment, many of whom have large families dependent upon their daily industry for support.

The event is the more afflicting in consideration of the season, and the extreme difficulty of finding employment.

The Mormons.—The Warsaw, Ill. Signal complains bitterly of thefts committed by the Latter Day Saints. Their neighbors lose horses, cows, clothes, &c., and have little difficulty in tracing them to Nauvoo.—The same paper suggests that Joe Smith has pocketed all the money arising from the sale of lots, and hints that he will ere long take the "Sabine Slide."

From the Boston Post.

License for Rum-selling.—Mr. Pierpont delivered a temperance lecture at Cabotville, the other evening, and said as he had been accused of bearing down rather heavily on the venders of intoxicating drinks, he proposed on that occasion to volunteer his services to the injured individuals aforesaid, as counsel and advocate. He then went on (as the Chronicle informs us) to state the various pleas which men make to excuse their continuance in the traffic; and, seriatim, one by one, to answer them. The last plea which he put and answered was the LICENSE. Yes, said the speaker, you have a license—and that is your plea. Well, my friend, if that is your plea, I would adjure you to keep it—lock it up among your choicest jewels—guard it as the apple of thine eye—and when you die, and are laid in your coffin, be sure that this document is placed within your cold and clammy fingers, so that, when you are called upon to confront the souls of your victims before God, you may be ready to file in your plea of justification, and boldly to lay down your license on the bar of the Judge. Yes, my friend, keep it—you will then want your license, signed by the commissioners of Hampden, and endorsed by the selectmen of Springfield.

A wretch, named Peter Cauble and his wife, have been arrested at Salisbury, N. C., for having whipped a little negro boy so cruelly that he was not expected to survive. They had but a short time previous buried a negro girl, who it was supposed had died a natural death: but the boy disclosed, and on examination of the disinterred body confirmed the horrible fact that she had been actually beaten to death. Both these brutes are in jail awaiting their trial.

Canada Frontier.—The Canada papers complain that the system of incendiarism is again in progress in the vicinity of the scenes of Grogan's devastations. There are threats of retaliation. It would be better to exert every effort to apprehend the miscreants engaged in such acts.—Baptist Advocate.

Providence, R. I.—More than four hundred conversions are believed to have taken place in Providence and its vicinity since the commencement of brother Knapp's labors in that city.—Bap. Adv.

Postmasters.—The Madisonian says:—Removals have in many cases already been made, under the requisition of the Postmaster General, that Postmasters shall personally and actively superintend their offices.

False lights.—Capt. Loring, of packet schooner Mail, from New York, arrived at Boston on the 22d inst. states that on Saturday night, 18th inst. when off Cape Elizabeth Island, between Quix's Hole and Cutterbunk light, he discovered a bright light, and supposing it to be Tarpaulin Cove light, stood accordingly, when suddenly the light disappeared, and he discovered that he was standing in among breakers. The wind was blowing freshly, and he had hardly time to go about in time to save his vessel. The schooner Benj. Bigelow, also from New York, passed the same place a few hours afterwards, and was decoyed by the same light, and came near going ashore.

Domestic Industry.—At the cattle show and fair of the State Agricultural Society, held at Syracuse in Sept. a premium of $20 was awarded to Mrs. DARIUS CARTER, of East bloomfield, Ontario Co. who exhibited:

1st. A sample of fair cocoons of the Peanut variety.

2d. A large sample of sewing silk, pretty well manufactured, and very successfully dyed, exhibiting (as she informed us) seventy different shades of color.

3d. A very handsome pice or specimen of black fringe.

4th. One pair of ladies' stockings, black, and a pair of mitts.

5th. One elegant reticule, 1 purse, 2 pair mitts, all of net work, manufactured from yarn prepared from floss.

6th. One piece of cloth, 1 apron, 2 handkerchiefs, together with yarn enough already colored to make 20 yds. of cloth, all of which articles and yarn prepared from floss, the whole of which is the work of her own hands. She informed the committee that her cocoons measured one hundred bushels; the manufucturing all performed with household implements only. Enterprise, industry and success like this (say the committee) should not pass the Society, unheeded or unrewarded.

Large Forgeries.—Officer Gilbert F. Hays on Saturday arrested a man named Henry W. Shearman on two several charges of forgery. It appeared that on the 17th inst. he presented a forged check for $850 at the Chemical Bank, purporting to be by John Campbell, No. 110, Nassau-street, and payable to B. & L which was paid—and on the 24th inst. he presented a check of $306 08 at the Mechanics' Bank, purporting to be signed by Daniel Fanshaw, 150 Nassau-street, payable to B. Hunt, Esq. which was also paid, and which Mr Fanshaw, deposed was a forgery, as was also the other check. He was committed to prison to answer.—New York Tribune Monday.

Accident.—Horace Blaisdell, of this city, baggage master at the Nashua depot of the Lowell and Nashua Rail Road, attempting to leap from the baggage cars as they passed out of the car house at that depot on Tuesday afternoon, was caught between the cars and the door post of the building, and seriously injured. His collar bone was dislocated, and his chest compressed in a very dangerous manner. He is now doing well, however, and hopes are entertained of his recovery.—Lowell Courier.

The December term of the Court of Common Pleas commenced at Ipswich on Monday last. There is not a single person confined in either of the three jails in the county of Essex for trial at this Court. Is it not fair to give Tetotalism some credit for the existence of this fact?—Salem Gazette.

Frozen to Death.—A man named Sacket Blakesley, was found this noon dead and frozen about a mile north of Fair Haven. He was seen last evening traveling on foot upon the road in a state of intoxication. He belonged in Northford. One more warning.—New Haven Palladium.

Shocking Accident.—The Hagerstown Democrat says that on Friday or Saturday last a young lady, Miss Lawrence, was thrown from an affrighted horse near Waynesboro' and killed. Her leg, which became entangled with the stirrup, while the horse was running, was literally torn from her body. So infuriated was the horse, that it became necessary to shoot him before he could be caught.

Robbery in Washington.—The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce gives the following account of an extraordinary robbery, which took place at the Patent Office on Monday:—

"I am extremely sorry to say that a robbery of the Patent Office was committed to-day under a light of a brilliant sun, and at noon day. Much excitement has been caused by the affair. You must know that a few months ago, the War and State Departments sent to the National Institute their curiosities. The are placed in the splendid hall of the new Patent Office. A portion of the curiosities of the State Department were deposited in a small room adjoining the Institute Gallery, and in a glass case.

The articles taken have, I presume, been seen by many of your readers, and can easily be traced and identified. They are, 1st, the snuff box presented by the Emperor Alexander to Consul Harris, valued at several thousand dollars, a string of pearls' containing 148 pearls, presented by the Imaum of Muscat to the President of the United States;—the scabbard of a sword presented to Com. Biddle in South America, and ornamented with diamonds.

I understand that a person supposed to be an Englishman, and a practised hand from his adroitness, was the robber. His name was unknown. He was seen about the Hall of the Institute for several days. The robbery was committed by false keys, at mid-day, while the officer an old gentleman, who had charge of the Hall, was taking down in a book, the name of the robber, as given to him."

United States Hotel, at Oswego, destroyed by Fire.—We regret to announce that this splendid edifice, the property of Mr. E. Knower and others, and occupied by Mr. Foreman was nearly destroyed by fire this morning. The fire originated in the upper part of the building from the burning of one of the chimneys, and at the time of its discovery had made such progress as to baffle every effort to check the raging element until the combustible materials of the main body of the building were consumed. Through the exertions of the firemen and citizens, the wings of the building were saved, and the walls of the main edifice, it is supposed are not materially injured. Most of the furniture was saved. We have heard no estimate of the loss, but it cannot be less than 10 or 15000 dollars. There was an insurance of $5000 on the building.—Oswego Palladium.

Persons writing letters to Texas, must pay the postage to the boundary line.

The N. Y. Herald says a distinguished Virginian is to lead one of President Tyler's daughters to the altar, in the month of February.

Tucker, the Governor elect of Mississippi, was a blacksmith in early life. His opponent, Shattuck, commenced as a pedlar.—Trenton Gaz.

Joe Smith, the Mormon Prophet, was in Syracuse last week, on his way hence to Nauvoo, from an eastern visit.—N. Y. Tribune.

New Classification of the World.—England is a vast manufactory, a great laboratory, a universal counting-house. France is a rich farm, intending to turn itself into a manufactory. Germany is an ill-cultivated field, because they are philosophers and not peasants who till it. Southern Italy is a villa in ruins. Northern Italy is an artificial prairie. Belgium is a forge. Holland is a canal. Sweden and Denmark are carpenters' yards. Poland is a sandy heath. Russia is an ice house. Switzerland is a chalet. Greece is a field in a state of nature. Turkey is a field fallow. India is a gold mine. Egypt is a work shop for apprentices. Africa is a furnace. Algiers is a nursery ground. Asia is a grove. The Antillies are sugar refiners. South America is a store. North America a till full. Spain a till empty.

The First Locomotive from Boston.—About half past three o'clock on Monday afternoon two locomotive engines, the Hampden and the Norfolk with their tenders, arived at Greenbush from Chatham. They came over the road without encountering any other obstacle than that presented by a foot of snow. Thus the railroad chain between Albany and Boston is at length complete. The Claremont Eagle, speaking of this important work, says:

"The road runs to the grand depot of the Erie Canal, and manufacturers' fishermen and importers of Massachusetts will pour over it the treasures from fifteen tributary railroads into the lap of the boundless West, and receive in return the products of 25,000 miles of canals, railroads, lakes and rivers.

Earthquake at Cartago.—A few days since it was stated that the city of Cartago, in Central America, which contained 30,000 inhabitants, was on the 6th of Sept. last wholy destroyed by an earthquake. Subsequent intelligence from Guatimala states that so total was the destruction, that scarcely traces of the foundation of a single edifice could be found. An immense number of lives were lost—no estimate could be formed of the number.

Vast numbers of people from the adjacent departments were engaged in removing ruins to disinter those who had perished. Great suffering prevailed among those who escaped, in consequence of all the provisions being buried beneath the ruins. The ruin extended to the cities of Heredia, Sanjose, and Alajuela, and many lives were lost at each place.

Thames Tunnel.—A thoroughfare was on the 25th November effected in this work, and made use of for the first time, by the whole of the directors and some of the original subscribers, who had assembled on the occasion. The shield having been advanced to the shaft at Wapping, a considerable opening was cut in the brick work, and it was through this the party who had met at Rotherhither was enabled to pass, thus opening the first subterranean communication between the oposite shores of the river.

A new mathematical instrument has just been invented, of singular value and simplicity, to which is given the name of "Triangular Omnimeter." This instrument is universally applicable in projecting and measuring all kinds of rectilineal figures, maps, plates, designs, etc., thus obviating the use of a scale, protractor and dividers, than which it is more acurate and simple in its construction and application, and less expensive.

A miser in Philadelphia, a chimney sweep by trade, lately died worth $100,000.

Notices.

SABBATH SCHOOL COUNTY CONVENTION.

The undersigned, feeling the want of interest, and consequently the want of vigorous action in promoting Sabbath Schools, recommend holding a Convention in the Methodist Chapel in Morrisville, on Wednesday the 26th of January next, at 10 o'clock, A. M., for the purpose of consultation upon measures best adapted to promote Sabbath Schools. In order to throw a pervading influence through the country, and awaken in the hearts of Christians and Parents a stronger, and still stronger desire for the intellectual, moral, and religious culture of children and youth generally, it has been deemed important and highly desirable that all who feel interested in this cause, should concentrate their powers and influence by forming a County Sabbath School Association.

Allow us to urge one and all to attend.—Christians of all Evangelical Churches, the call is to you. The common feelings of humanity, the perpetuity and stability of our Republican Institutions, the deep feelings of our hearts for the triumphs of truth as disciples of Christ, call loudly and beseechingly upon you to attend, and there commence vigorous and unflinching efforts in this department of God's vineyard. Sabbath Schools are essentially, nay, vitally connected with the success, and ultimate triumph of the Cross.

The above call is signed by a great number, from most of the towns in the County, the names of whom, for want of room, we omit.—[ED.

MARRIED.

In Traxton, on the evening of the 30th ult. mo. by Rev. James Bailey, Mr. OLIVER CURTIS, and Mrs. LURANIA CHAMPLIN, both of Traxton.

In Traxton, on 30th ult. by Rev. Mr. Fancher, Mr. DAVIS B. WILCOX, and Miss LEAH HOLLENBECK, all of Traxton.

In Edmeston, on the 25th inst., by Joshua Maxson Esq., Mr. SILAS CRUMB, of Edmeston, and Miss BETSEY WILCOX, of Plainfield.

In Rome, on the 29th ult., by Rev. C. M. Lewis, Mr. WILLIAM LEA, of Westmoreland, and Miss CAROLINE A. HAZARD of the former place.

In Verona, on the 26th ult. by Rev. C. M. Lewis, Mr. GEORGE A. CASTLE, and Miss MARY SPRING, both of Verona.

LIST OF LETTERS.

C. Hubbard P. M. (alteration made.) Bethuel Church (you have our thanks.) Jeremiah Barrett, (your paper is sent by the same mail with the others.) Paul Stillman (your business shall be attended to in season.) Daniel Coon, C. M. Lewis, A. J. Ellis (too indefinite.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of B. [illegible] 58, of A. P. Hatch, Hon. H. T. Jones, T. [illegible] self, $2 each, of Ephraim Maxson $11 25, of Roswell P. Dowse, Joseph Bridgman, Mrs. Olive Coon, Ethan K. Crandall and Elijah Coon, $2 25, each, vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on book account of three months standing, are respectfully solicited to call and settle the same by the 15th day of January next, or he will be obliged to put them in other hands for collection, as he is in debt and his creditors WILL have their PAY.

HALSEY STILLMAN.

De Ruyter, Dec. 24th, 1841.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of six per cent has been levied on the deposite notes in force in said company on the 25th day of October 1841, and that the same is requested to be paid to the Treasurer at the office of said Company in the village of Cazenovia on or before the first day of January next.

Dated at Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.

40w6 WM. J. HOUGH, Treasurer.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the

October 4. STONE STORE.

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, and Valises, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck-[illegible], Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles [illegible] in a shop of this kind, which he will sell as low as any shop west of Albany or Utica, not even De Ruyter not excepted, according to quality and [illegible].

Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wood, and [illegible], and the remainder in Notes; also wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese and every thing that is raised by the Farmers in this vicinity. Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, Pine Lumber, &c. &c. &c.

Pine Lumber for sale, also any quantity of Lime. 10,000 feet first rate Ash Flooring.

J. R. RIDER

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 20m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered in lots to suit purchasers, at prices 10 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at

Nov. 24. ELMORE'S.

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, and Jane Goodwin, by John Maxson, the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order made by the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition therein, will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the 26th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situated in the village of De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of Le Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded, beginning at the centre of the road leading north through the said village at the north-west corner of a lot owned by Geo. W. Sutton; thence east along the north line of the said lot to the north-east corner thereof; thence south about one rod to lands owned by Oliver Mitchell; thence east on the said Mitchell's north line to lands owned by Marcus Bump; thence north on said Bump's west line to lands owned by Abraham Sutton; thence west to the east line of Lot No. 37; thence south about twenty-six rods; thence west to the centre of the road; thence south in the centre of the said road to the place of beginning; reserving therefrom two lots, one sold to Geo. W. Sutton, the other to Thomas Russel. The said premises will be sold in such parcels and on such terms as may be made known on the day of sale.—Dated, October 20, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.

JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, } Commissioners.

Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40td

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

POETRY.

For the Register.

Evening Reflections.

The sun is set, the day is closed,
The night is come, the world's compos'd,
And cares are laid aside;
So fly my days, without control,
Like rolling spheres around the pole,
Or swift as meteors glide.

My life, at best, is but a span—
The days are few laid up for man
To number here in pain;
Each moment clips the little space—
Contracts the span, cuts short the race,
And winds the mortal chain.

Soon will the wheel to pieces break,
The fountain dry, the fabric shake,
The silver chord untie;
My day will end—my night will come,
My body lodg'd in yonder tomb,
My soul above the sky.

Well if my days must end so soon,
My morning sun go down at noon,
The present I'll improve;
I'll watch the moments as they fly,
And none misspent shall pass me by,
While I have power to love.

I'll strive to make my peace secure,
To reach the mark—the prize make sure,
And wait the crown in view;
I'll take the cross, the shame despise,
And seek my mansions in the skies,
And bid this world adieu.

Then break, thou wheel, thou cord untie,
Thou fabric fall, thou fountain dry,
And night thy curtain spread;
Go down, my sun, wind up my chain,
Contract my span and end my pain,
And lodge me with the dead.

L. L.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Family Magazine.

THE PIASA,—AN INDIAN TRADITION OF ILLINOIS.

BY JOHN RUSSELL.

No part of the United States, not even the high-lands of the Hudson, can vie, in wild and romantic scenery, with the bluffs of Illinois. On one side of the river, often at the waters edge, a perpendicular wall of rock rises to the height of some hundred feet. Generally on the opposite shore is a level bottom or prarie, of several miles in width, extending to a similar bluff that runs parallel with the river.

One of these ranges commences at Alton, and extends with few intervals for many miles along the left bank of the Illinois. In descending the river to Alton, the traveller will observe between that town and the mouth of the Illinois, a narrow ravine through which a small stream discharges its waters into the Mississippi. That stream is the Piasa. Its name is Indian, and signifies in the language of the Illini, "THE BIRD THAT DEVOURS MEN." Near the mouth of that stream, on the smooth and perpendicular face of the bluff, at an elevation which no human art can reach, is cut the figure of an enormous bird, with its wings extended. The bird which this figure represents was called by the Indians, the Piasa, and from this is derived the name of the stream.

The tradition of the Piasa is still current among all the tribes of the Upper Mississippi, and those who have inhabited the valley of the Illinois, and is briefly this:

"Many thousand moons before the arrival of the pale faces, when the great magalonyx and mastodon, whose bones are now dug up, were still living in this land of the green praries, there existed a bird of such dimensions that he could easily carry off, in his talons, a full grown deer. Having obtained a taste for human flesh, from that time he would prey upon nothing else. He was artful as he was powerful; would dart suddenly and unexpectedly upon an Indian, bear him off into one of the caves in the bluff, and devour him. Hundreds of warriors attempted for years to destroy him, but without success.—Whole villages were nearly depopulated, and consternation spread through all the tribes of the Illini. At length, Ouatoga, a chief, whose fame as a warrior extended even beyond the great lakes, separated himself from the rest of his tribe, fasted in solitude for the space of a whole moon, and prayed to the Great Spirit, the Master of life, that he would protect his children from the Piasa. On the last night of his fast, the Great Spirit appeared to Ouatoga in a dream, and directed him to select twenty of his warriors, each armed with a bow and a poisoned arrow, and conceal them in a designated spot. Near the place of their concealment, another warrior was to stand in open view, as a victim for the Piasa, which they must shoot the instant that he pounced upon his prey. When the chief awoke in the morning, he thanked the Great Spirit, and returning to his tribe, told them his dream. The warriors were quickly selected and placed in ambush as directed. Ouatoga offered himself as the victim. He was willing to die for his tribe. Placing himsef in open view of the bluff, he soon saw the Piasa perched on the cliff eyeing his prey. Ouatoga drew up his manly form to its utmost height, and planting his feet firmly upon the earth, began to chant the death-song of a warrior. A moment after, the Piasa rose into the air and, swift as the thunderbolt, darted down upon the chief. Scarcely had he reached his victim, when every bow was sprung, and every arrow sent, to the feather, into his body. The Piasa uttered a wild, fearful scream, that resounded far over the opposite side of the river, and expired.—Ouatoga was safe. Not an arrow, nor even the talons of the bird, had touched him. The Master of life in admiration of a generous deed of Ouatoga had held over him an invisible shield. In memory of this event, the image of the Piasa was engraved on the face of the bluff. Such is the Indian tradition. Of course I do not vouch for its truth. This much, however, is certain; the fiigure of a large bird cut into the solid rock, is still there, and at a height that is perfectly inaccessible. How and for what purpose it was made, I leave for others to determine; even at this day, an Indian never passes that spot in his canoe without firing his gun at the figure of the bird. The marks of balls on the rock are almost innumerable.

Near the close of March of the present year, I was induced to visit the bluffs below the mouth of the Illinois and above that of the Piasa. My curiosity was principally directed to the examination of a cave conected with the above traditions, as one of those to which the bird had carried his human victims. Preceded by an intelligent guide who carried a spade, I set out on my excursion. The cave was extremely difficult of access, and at one point of our progress I stood at an elevation of more than one hundred and fifty feet on the face of the bluff, with barely room to sustain one foot. The unbroken wall towered above me, while below was the river. After a long and perilous clambering we reached the cave which was about fifty feet above the surface of the river. By the aid of a long pole, placed on the projecting rock and the upper end touching the mouth of the cave, we succeeded in entering it. Nothing could be more impressive than the view from the entrance of this cavern. The Mississippi was rolling in silent grandeur beneath us; high over our heads a single cedar hung its branches over the cliff, on the blasted top of which was seated a bald eagle. No other sound or sign of life was near us. A sabbath stillness rested upon the scene. Not a cloud was in the heavens; not a breath of air was stirring. The broad Mississippi lay before us, calm and smooth, as a lake. The landscape presented the same wild aspect as it did before it had yet met the eye of the white man.

The roof of the cavern was vaulted, the top of which was hardly less than twenty-five feet in height. The shape of the cave was irregular, but so far as I could judge, the bottom would average twenty by thirty feet. The floor of this cave throughout its whole extent was a mass of human bones. Sculls and other bones were mingled together in the utmost confusion. To what depth they extend I am unable to decide, but we dug to the depth of three or four feet in every quarter and still found only bones. The remains of thousands must have been deposited here. How, and by whom, and for what purpose, it is impossible even to conjecture.

From the Saturday Courier.

SUGGESTIONS FOR LIFE.

Much of our disquietude is consequent upon derangements in secular business, and mental perturbations, occasioned by other events. This will not be denied.—Nor will it be denied that in the lives of men there are causes of error and grief, which, with proper prudence and foresight, might have been avoided.

It is with men, as it is with nations. As a community we examine the history of former ages with the view, among other things, of ascertaining the means of their growth and prosperity, no less than the causes of their decline and fall; with the purpose of observing the one, and shunning the other. Every nation has its own distinguishing features; and is rich either in models for imitation or examples to deter, or in both. Hence, in our social intercourse, when alluding to the calamity of some fellow man, how often are we pointed to some particular act, as the rock against which all his former bright and cheering expectations foundered. Here, we are certainly taught what enterprise or course of conduct involves disappointment and ruin. But if that man is wise and resolute, even he may retrieve his character and redress his loss, by making his former shipwreck serve as a beacon to direct his course in subsequent life. Again, when we witness the happy success of another individual, our attention is at once directed—not to any strange fortune as the cause, but, to his own wise management, based upon a proper system of economy, industry, and care. Here then, is something that can be safely imitated. A man, let it be remembered, can be frugal, without being niggardly; actively industrious, yet amiable and agreeable.

Probably there are no men, as a class, more liable to err, than those just entering upon the busy scenes of life. It is equally certain, too, that occurrences of this kind would be less frequently if proper attention were given to the course pursued by men of age and experience, wherein may be found those things which are calculated to increase or diminish human comfort.—And even in their own short experience, they may find room for improvement. The young man who boasts of being able to row his own boat, may ply his oars under favorable auspices, yet he is often in danger of plunging into Sylla or Charibdis. Extremes must be avoided. An imprudent step, a wrong motive, or a miscalculation may dash in pieces his fragile bark. With what facility do the fascinating charms of time and of sense allure and captivate the soul! If the gratification is pleasant for the time, the resulting disquiet is bitter in the extreme. Then is the time to pause and reflect; a repetition may bring ruin and dismay. And if he would put to a wise, practical account, the lesson he has learned from past delinquencies, he will be careful to avoid what he has found so detrimental to his peace and prosperity. He will find it his positive interest to lay aside whatever would tarnish his reputation or defeat his hopes of future usefulness; and if in any subsequent instance, the turbulence of rising passion or the violence of pursuit sway him from duty, he should return to it with more determined resolution never to be thus influenced again. In doing so, he will have an additional incentive to the practice of virtue, a conviction derived from experience, that happiness depends upon regularity and order, and that a disregard to justice and propriety never fails to be punished with shame and remorse.

The enjoyments which we receive from a review of life, will always be measured by the manner in which that life has been spent. Let this fact be borne in mind. And he who would examine with pleasing satisfaction, the scenes and actions of a past life, must be careful to live and act in such a way as will subserve the great end for which he has been created—the glory of God. From such a course, enjoyment, pure and permanent, must necessarily flow.

J. A. M.

THE PRINTER'S APPRENTICE.

A young man was once apprenticed in this city as a printer. He boarded at the house of his father, who was in easy circumstances, but who required his son to pay for his board from the avails of special perquisites, which furnished his fellow apprentices with a liberal supply of funds for pleasure. This the young man thought was hard, but when he was of age, and master of his trade, his father called him and said: "Here, my son, is the entire amount of the money paid to me for your board during your apprenticeship; I never intended to retain it, but have reserved it for your use—with it I give you as much more, as a small capital to commence business." The wisdom of the old man was now apparent to the son. His fellows had contracted bad habits in the expenditure of similar perquisites, which his father had withheld from him, and were now penniless in vice. He was enabled with a good character to commence a small business & now stands at the head of publishers in this country. Most of his companions in apprenticeship are miserably poor, vicious and degraded.

The same man has told me that he never was but once in a theatre. On that occasion he had been persuaded to go by his fellow-laborers, who were accustomed to it and who furnished him with a ticket. On taking his seat in the box, he remembered that it was precisely the hour his mother was accustomed to retire for prayer, and he well knew that the burthen of her prayers embraced the salvation of her children. He rushed from the room, and never returned to it. Those sons are privileged who have praying mothers, and fathers to discipline and restrain them. Faithful parents make their children to be blessings to the world, and crowns of glory to themselves. Who does not honor the parents, who are honored in their children?—Patriarch.

THE ART OF PRINTING.—Of all the discoveries which have been made, we conceive the reflecting mind will admit, that none have tended more to the improvement and comfort of society than PRINTING; in truth, it would be almost impossible to enumerate the advantages derived by all professions from the streams of this invaluable fountain, this main spring of all our transactions in life. It was justly said by a celebrated writer, that, were the starry heavens deficient of one constellation, the vacuum could not be better supplied than by the introduction of a PRINTING PRESS. The more we reflect, the greater becomes our surprise till at length we are lost in wonder and astonishment that the art should have lain dormant for so many generations, when the principle was so very well understood.

WONDERS OF PHILOSOPHY.—The polypus, like the fabled hidra, recieves new life from the knife which is lifted to destroy it. There are four thousand and forty-one muscles in a caterpillar. Hook discovered fourteen thousand mirrors in the eyes of a drone; and to effect the respiration of a carp, thirteen thousand and three hundred arteries, vessels, veins, and bones, &c., are necessary. The body of every spider contains four little masses pierced with a multitude of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads, to the amount of a thousand to each mass, join together when they come out, and make a single thread with which the spider spins its web; so that what we call a spider,s thread consists of more than four thousand united. Lewenhock, by means of microscopes, observed spider's no bigger than a grain of sand, which spun thread so fine that it took four thousand of them to equal in magnitude a single hair.

ROMAN ETIQUETTE.—Cato, when censor of Rome expelled from the senate Manilius, whom the general opinion had marked out for consul, because he had given his wife a kiss in the day time in the sight of his daughter. "For his own part," he said, "his wife never embraced him but when it thundered dreadfully," adding by way of joke, "That he was happy when Jupiter pleased to thunder."

When the heroic Dieneces, a Spartan, was informed, before the battle of Thermopylæ, that the Persians were so numerous that their arrows would darken the light of the sun, he bravely replied, that it would be a great convenience, for they then should fight in the shade.—Butler.

CREDIT.—A boy at a crossing having begged something of a gentleman, the latter told him he would give him something as he came back.—The boy replied, "Your honor would be surprised if you knew how much money I loose by giving credit in that way."

LAKE PUNGO (in Hyde County, North Carolina,) is a most beautiful sheet of water, about three miles long and two wide. Its average depth is now about seven or eight feet, having been reduced some four or five feet by the canal connecting it with Pungo river. On this lake is to be found one of the most remarkable echoes perhaps in the whole country—an echo which not only repeats words distinctly, but whole sentences.

On portions of the timbered land, near Lake Pungo, the trees are of almost incredible size; and it is not to be wondered at, standing as they have done for centuries undisturbed, and imbedded in a soil of surpassing fertility. A cypress was recently found there measuring 37 1-2 feet in circumference, which gives a diameter of about 13 feet! Only think of a tree large enough for a horse stable, with room enough inside of it to admit of two carriages passing abreast of each other! We were assured too, by a respectable gentleman, that 1 3-4 bushels of corn was raised by a neighbor of his in the hollow of a cypress swamp!

The contractor for the tributaries to Pungo canal informed us that "he has killed the present year, almost within sight of his dwelling, seventy deer!" One day he killed two bucks and caught, with a common hook and line, 40lbs. of fish!—Raleigh Register.

TOO COMMON.—Stranger. Have you any newspapers?

Editor.—Certainly.

Stranger.—You will give me one, I suppose sir?

Editor.—O, yes sir, (handing him a paper.) Those are fine chickens in your basket; have you more of them?

Stranger.—Right smart chance of them at home.

Editor.—That's a fine one; you will give me that, I suppose, sir; will you not?

Stranger.—I brought these to market to sell; I should like to sell you a dozen at 75 cents.

The above absolutely occurred in our office last week, and we doubt not that it is a lesson not soon to be forgotten.—State Sentinel.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

WINTER.

There is no season of the year without its peculiar interest—none that does not furnish us a fruitful theme for profitable meditation. Winter may not revivify as the spring, or mature the fruits of the earth as the summer, it is eminently the period, however, in which to enjoy the labor of our hands. Its clouded skies, pelting storms, and piercing blasts greatly increase our pleasures, as they render more invaluable in our esteem, the bounty of our heavenly Benefactor.

The winter furnishes us with a magnificent display of the power of God. He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold? The frosted earth is hard as the impenetrable rock—and the impetuous brook is manacled with icy chains. Old ocean itself is bound—and the poles still baffle by their wintry horrors the daring of man. The rain congeals as it falls—or the snow comes with its winding sheet. Occasionally the sun may smile from behind its curtains, and the icicle glitter in its beams—but it is too transient to be efficient, and would seem to love the slumbers of its long and dreary nights. Wo to the wanderer that has no shelter, and a speedy death to the drunkard that falls in the streets.

Winter furnishes to us a fine opportunity for mental cultivation. Its long evenings, its comfortable fires, its cheering lamps, almost necessarily invite to reading and study. We would know how it fares with the church and with the state. Besides the interesting news of the day, we may be inclined to engage in close investigation. One may pry into the arcana of nature, and attempt to trace the steps of a Newton or a Fulton. Another, with more devotion, may apply himself to search into the mysteries of redeeming love. The result is an enlargement of intellect unattainable by those who have no taste for knowledge, who almost sleep existence away, and scarcely rise above the level of instinct.

No less favorable is the winter for the growth of the heart. In the strains of our excellent hymn we may mourn over our coldness—

> "The sun withdraws his vital beams,
> And light and warmth depart;
> And drooping, lifeless, nature seems
> An emblem of my heart."

Or we may drop our tears in anticipation of the winter of death, or we may look through all the gloom and darkness of the grave, and bless God for the prospect of a joyous immortality where the heart can never chill, where love will glow with intense, unabating increasing ardour. We would simply add, winter may be finely improved for the purpose of doing good. Our happiness should not be selfish. We ought not to be content because we are fed and clothed and warmed. If we would enjoy our blessings with a peculier relish, let us share them with those less favored than ourselves by the dispenser of all things. It is an uncertain world. Whilst we have wherewith to do, we should be active. A change may come that we ourselves shall be objects of charity. Or should we luxuriate in the bounty of God, his word assures us if we neglect the poor, it will cost us an eternity of sorrow. How easily might the rich man have comforted Lazarus and been with him in glory. Let us then do good, and break out if necessary into the storm, for the purpose that we may bring upon us the blessing of him that was ready to perish.

ACTIONS BEFORE WORDS.—"I didn't like our minister's sermon last sunday," said a deacon who had slept all the sermon time, to a brother deacon. "Didn't like it, brother! Why I saw you nodding assent to every proposition he made."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT
S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills, Godfrey's Cordial,
Morrison's Hygean [illegible] Foster's Anodyne Cor-
Samuel Lee's [illegible]
Doctor Bishop's [illegible]
Cheeseman's Ara[illegible]
Dr. Phelp's Toma[illegible]
M. Griffin's L[illegible]
of the Day
Dr Phinney's [illegible]
Moffat's Veg[illegible]
Gregory's B[illegible]
Harlæm
British
Pectoral B[illegible]

The above [illegible] found in his ex[illegible]

In conclusion [illegible] receiving Goods [illegible] undersold; [illegible] CHEAPEST [illegible]

ROOF'S [illegible]

FOR the cure of [illegible] WIND GALLS, &c [illegible] in all cases.☜ Many certificates [illegible] shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web.'s Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons,
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,
Novum Græcum Testamentum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M., Oran Vincent
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Asa Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin. H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott— Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander [illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

[illegible]ford—Lester T. Rogers. Wm Maxson.
[illegible] Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

[illegible]field—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
[illegible]—Isaac D Titsworth
[illegible] — David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 46.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.——A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 98.

TERMS.—two dollars in advance.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, JANUARY 12, 1842. [$2,50 at the end of the year.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Imposition of Hands.

NUMBER II.

I will commence this article by redeeming my promise to consider another passage of scripture on the subject of laying on of hands. This is Heb. vi. 1, 2. "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and the laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." In this passage St. Paul makes the laying on of hands a principle of the doctrine of Christ, and a part of the foundation, or primary instruction of the Christian religion, and he has completely fenced it in by those immutable principles of the Christian faith, which are admitted by all evangelical Christians to be as lasting as the commission of Christ to preach and to baptize. It would seem that there could be no room left here to question either the importance of the duty, or its permanent standing among other gospel doctrines and duties. The only question that can arise, is, what sort of laying on of hands is intended? and for what purpose is it to be done? To suppose, as some do, that the laying on of the hands of the presbytery for the purpose of ordaining ministers and deacons in the church is intended, is, I conceive, without good reason; for why in this case should it have a place with repentance and faith, baptism, the resurrection, and the eternal judgment? Do not these things equally concern every person who hears the Gospel? They certainly do; and it is yet to be seen why the laying on of hands should be an exception from the same general application. One important reason urged for the perpetual and universal obligation to the fourth commandment, is, that God saw fit to place it among other precepts universally acknowledged to be moral and perpetual. This reason is as good, and as strong for all christians to submit to laying on of hands; for the apostle has placed it in juxta-position with baptism, and other indispensable things. It being thus associated, is calculated to impress the mind with its importance and durability. And as it was placed thus by design and not from accident, it is evident that it was intended that we should re-consider it.

What then was the proposed object or end of the laying on of hands, as it is here presented to us? It cannot be that any christian should be endowed with the gift of speaking with tongues, or healing, or working of miracles: nor could it be for ordination to official posts in the church, for such a state of things cannot be imagined was ever intended to take place in the church. It therefore follows, that the laying on of hands in this place is for the express object proposed by the apostles to the Samaritan converts; and by Paul to the twelve apostles at Ephesus, viz: that they might receive the Holy Ghost. For although the Spirit of God was given at all times, and in every way when, and in what way it pleased God to bestow it; yet the imposition of hands was 'η διακονια του πνευματος, the ministry of the Spirit, performed by the ministers of Christ mentioned in 2 Cor. 3 chap.

As much depends upon a correct construction of Heb. vi. 1, 2, I am not willing that my opinion of it should stand alone. I shall therefore add some authorities for this understanding of the text from the Rev. David Jones, A. M., and Mr. Keach who quoted extensively from authors, ancient and modern, who wrote upon this subject. They mention Didoclavius, Major Hooker, Parker, Piscator, Beza, and Parens as concurring in the sentiment expressed by Rivet thus: "Imposition of hands, whereof mention is made in Heb. vi. 1, 2, is to be referred to the solemn benediction of the baptized, which was used to be performed by the pastors confirming them in the calling of christianity."

Calvin, in speaking of this text gives this as the chief thing intended by the apostle, and adds: "This one place abundantly testifies that the original of this ceremony, viz: Confirmation, or laying on of hands, flowed from the apostles, which yet afterwards was turned into superstition. —Wherefore to this day this pure institution ought to be retained; but the superstition to be corrected." Illyricus, Deering, Hyperus, and others, state in substance, that Heb. vi. 1, 2, "was the confirmation of those who had been baptized, and rightly instructed, that they might receive the Holy Ghost." Mr. Keach also quotes the assembly of divines who were of the same judgment respecting Heb. vi. 1, 2. He quotes Dr. Jeremy Taylor on confirmation, thus: "We have seen the original from Christ, the practice and exercise of it in the apostles, and first converts to christianity; what I shall now remark is, that this is established and passed into a christian doctrine; the warrantee for what I say is Heb. vi. 1, 2, where the holy rite of confirmation, so called from the effects of this administration, and expressed by the ritual part of it; imposition of hands is reckoned a fundamental, or beginning of the institutions of the christian church; and, therefore, they who deny it, dig up foundations." He adds many reasons for his sentiments, and quotes Chrisostome, and Calvin, as speaking the same things on the subject. Mr. Keach also cites Estius, Grotius and Fleming on Heb. vi. 1, 2, and other modern authors on the same plan as agreeing with Erasmus on this text. The latter author says, "The first step to christianity is repentance of our former life; next, that salvation is to be hoped for from God; next, that we are purged in baptism from our filth; next, that by laying on of hands, we receive the Holy Ghost." Many others might be added to the same point, but I will close this long array of names with something from the excellent Richard Baxter relative to this text. "As the universal church have used prayer and laying on of hands, as a practice received from the apostles, and no other beginning of it can be found: so we may have no reason to think this ceremony ceased, or to interpret the foresaid scripture contrary to this practice of the universal church."

I have not quoted the opinion of these persons, supposing that they can add authority to the scriptures, but to show that this passage in Heb. vi. 1, 2, was anciently, as well as in latter times, generally understood by those reputed for piety and learning, as affording a precept sufficiently authoritative to warrant the practice of laying on of hands upon all baptized believers. We grant that their opinions and practice are not decisive on the subject; but, surely, they are as weighty as those of more modern times, who would give us new interpretations of scripture. And to say the least of these men, their learning and piety have distinguished them as luminaries in the church, and entitle their sentiments to consideration and respect.*

The practice of the church in all ancient times was as decidedly favorable to the laying on of hands, as their opinion was uniform on the text we have been considering. This is affirmed by the writing of many of the most ancient and distinguished fathers of the church. The testimony of these men show very conclusively the usage of the church in regard to this matter, the source from which they derived it, and the end they hoped to gain by it. Mr. Jones, who has been already mentioned, quotes a number of authorities on this subject, some of which I will present to the reader. I will notice first Tertullian, a celebrated christian writer of Carthage, who lived in the second century, and who must have understood correctly what was the earliest practice of the church, and who was very highly esteemed by the ancient fathers, as a man of great piety and learning. He states, "After baptism, the hands are imposed by blessing, calling and inviting the Holy Spirit, who willingly descends from the Father on the bodies that are cleansed and blessed." And again. It is the fleshly or outward act of baptism that we are dipped in water; the spiritual effects, that we are freed from sins. Then follow the laying on of hands, the dispenser inviting the spirit of God by prayer, and being cleansed by baptismal water, we are disposed for the Holy Spirit under the hands of the angel of the church."—From Tertullian we see what was the practice of the church, both in regard to baptism, and its kindred right, the laying on of hands, before the anti-christian power had corrupted her institutions by her polluting touch. Eusebius, Eccl. Hist. b. 7. ch. 2, states that Dionysius wrote to Stephen, bishop in the church of Rome, about fifty years after Tertullian, "that baptized persons, turning from any heresy, should, as the practice prevailed with regard to such, receive imposition of hands with prayer." Cyprian in his letter to Jubar, A. D. 250, having spoken of the apostles going to Samaria to impose hands on those whom Phillip had baptized, added, "which custom is also descended to us, that they who are baptized might be brought by the rulers of the church, and by prayer and imposition of hands may obtain the Holy Ghost." And Cyprian states in his epistle to Stephen, concerning heretics, "It is of no purpose to lay hands to receive the Holy Ghost, unless they receive the baptism of the church. Origen, in his 7th Homily upon Ezekiel, says the same.—Jerome, in his dialogue with Jurfer, said, "He that is baptized in the church, doth not receive the Holy Ghost, but by laying on of hands." Mr. Keach also cites Ambrose, Augustine, Chrisostome, and Theodoret, with other eminent men as supporting the same sentiment.

Some remarks from Calvin on this point shall close this article. He says, "For neither can this holy institution be enough commended for its utility; nor the papists be sufficiently upbraided with their so flagitious corruption of it, that by turning it into childish fopperies, they have not only taken it away; but have also so far shamefully abused it for the color of an impure and impious superstition; for they do beyond measure deck that adulterous confirmation which they have substituted in its room like an harlot with great splendor and ceremony. If, therefore, confirmation shall be drained from these mixtures of human inventions, calling it a sacrament; if their popish matter of anointing with the consecrated chrym the forehead of the confirmed in the form of a cross, be removed; if neither infants or children, who are not yet arrived to years of discretion, be admitted, but such only as are adults, who are able to give account of their faith, and work of grace on their hearts: finally, if those feigned effects mentioned by them as the end and use of it, together with the idle additions that have betided it in the declining times of the church, be rejected and cast off; and if done only with prayer and laying on of hands for the admission of persons as full members, to the enjoyment of all church privileges, as most agreeable to that of the apostolic and primitive times; it will, I conceive, be found to be exceedingly useful and advantageous as a thing requisite, if not necessary to a right reformation, and the reducing the churches of Christ to their native beauty, and primitive, purest state and condition."

W. B. MAXSON.

Religious Department.

RELIGIOUS EXCITEMENT.

The present is emphatically an age of revivals. Thousands and thousands of souls in our own country have, within a few years, been hopefully converted to God. Ministers are encouraged, and private christians are stirred up to prayer and vigorous effort. The good work goes on graciously and gloriously.

In view of this mighty achievement of Divine Grace, many of the people of God themselves are differently affected. Some, out of the fulness of their hearts, are ready to exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes." Whilst others, fearful that improper measures are employed, and that too much is made of the passions, attribute this great movement to excitement. Too much excitement! too much excitement! is heard from various quarters.—Some have gone so far as to deny that there is any excitement in true religion; maintaining that it is wholly a matter of the head having very little to do with the heart. We propose to examine this sentiment a little.

That eminent divine, President Edwards, in his book on "Religious Affection," which one says was written with all the acumen of a Locke, and all the piety of a Watts, remarks, "True religion consists in holy affections." Now do the sacred scriptures bear out the writer in this remark?—What is the feeling awakened in the soul under its first conviction for sin? The multitude heard Peter preach on the day of Pentecost, and cried out, "men and brethren what shall we do?" Was there no excitement here? Did not these anxious persons feel that sin had killed them? Is it possible for a man to see danger hanging directly over him and not feel? Can a sinner be perfectly easy, perfectly mute, with more than a mill-stone's weight of guilt upon his conscience?

Saul of Tarsus, deeply sensible that he was a sinner, inquired in a tone of humble submission, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Was Saul in earnest? Did he feel emotion? or did he make this inquiry with a Stoic's indifference?

There is something in the first exercise of faith that usually excites the tender sensibilities of the soul. When the man who was born blind, and whose eyes Christ had opened, beheld his benefactor, he was greatly moved and said, Lord I believe, and worshipped him. When the incredulous Thomas looked upon the wounded hands and pierced side of the risen Savior, the deep feeling of his heart gushed out in the exclamation, My Lord and my God,

There is too, in the hope of the christian something that stirs his inmost soul. Can he think, and not feel, of being delivered from sin, from sorrow, from death? Can he cast his eye upon his future crown?—Can he think of those mansions of unspeakable bliss, which the Lord has gone to prepare in the heavens for his faithful followers, and not be sensible of a heavenly joy playing about his heart?

Then there is love—love to God, love to man. Who can be the subject of this heaven-born passion and not have his heart burn within him?

Isaiah we suppose was excited, when having his mouth touched as with a live coal from off the altar of God, he felt the full burthen of his prophetic office resting upon him? Jeremiah was excited, when he wished his head were waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears that he might weep for the slain of his countrymen. The book of Psalms is a fountain of feeling. The Saints of the Most High in every age, have been the subjects of deep feeling—of a vast variety of feeling.

Our brethren, however, who are so much afraid of excitement may tell us, that it is only a particular kind of feeling to which they stand opposed. There is so much spurious excitement in the world! Granted.—But are we to fall out with a thing altogether because that thing may be abused? Are we to discard any matter because in it there is found a mixture of evil? Upon this principle there would be in the world, no church, no government, no society.

But then the measures employed to produce excitement are so objectionable! Stirring sermons, stirring exhortations,—the songs, the anxious seats—O these are intolerable! Well, would these dear brethren have sermons less stirring? Would they have exhortations from frozen hearts and frozen lips? Would they have a minister, under a sense of the tremendous responsibility resting upon him, stand up before them and talk as though he did not believe what he said! Would they have him stand by the cross of Christ, that amazing monument of God's hatred to sin, and of his mercy to man, as perfectly unmoved as though he stood by an iceberg? Would they have him exhort sinners to repent, to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as if he did not care whether they repented or whether they believed? And as to the anxious seat, it is our honest conviction, that there is not half the danger in this seat, that is to be apprehended from the sleepy, careless seat. What if the poor sinner feels himself an outcast, that he is undone by his shameful departures from God, is there any thing wrong in his saying publicly that he so feels? He comes to the house of God to know what he must do to be saved; he is told that he must repent, must pray, must believe. Is he to blame if he asks the minister to pray for him, to pray with him? Doubtless he is not. Nor can the minister be to blame if he inform any that may desire special prayers to be offered in their behalf, that their request will be regarded.

The truth is upon this whole subject, if we were only in earnest, if we took God exactly at his word, and labored as in his immediate presence, we should not be surprised or startled at any excitement. Were half the breath thus vainly spent, in decrying revivals and revival measures, sent to heaven for God's mercy upon poor sinners, Zion's gates would be crowded with converts, and the blessed cause would be onward, onward! For ourselves, we are free to say, if we be beside ourselves, we trust it is to God; if we be branded as an enthusiast, we bear it rather than to be covered with confusion at the bar of God, under a charge of sleeping over the destinies of immortal souls.

From the Oberlin Evangelist.

THE CLOSING YEAR—IS IT WELL WITH THEE?

The year 1841 will soon be numbered with the years that were. What report has it borne to heaven? Have we done what we could to advance the holiness of the world? Have our hearts grown better under the influence of the gospel? Is our love to God and to man stronger than ever before? Have we preserved a conscience void of offense towards God and towards man? Have we more of the spirit of Christ, more of the benevolence of the gospel, more of love, than at the close of any previous year? Do these questions give peace? To some we know they do. It has been to them as the beginning of years. God has not left Himself without a witness this year. There are those who can testify to the preciousness of the grace of Christ. Were they asked, 'Is it well with thee?' the reply would be, 'It is well.'

'In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider.' In many respects this has been a year of prosperity. There has been no 'famine that consumeth'—no 'pestilence that wasteth at noon-day'—and no severe and general suffering. Collisions that threatened to imbue the hands of this nation in blood, have happily passed away. Temporal blessings have been abundant. In this do we rejoice in God?

The gospel has been continued to all who before enjoyed it. It has been given to some who did not. The spirit has been poured out here and there a place, enough to show that God has not forsaken his people—that He has not said, 'They are joined to their idols, let them alone.' In this do we rejoice?

Some of you have experienced sore afflictions. While the current was passing on smoothly, God has put forth his hand and taken a child, a parent, a brother or sister, a companion, & your house has been left desolate and your heart a desert. Christian, was it well with thee when the only flower that bloomed in thy bower, perhaps, was cut down; when the light of thy happy home went out in darkness, when the merry laugh of that loved one would cheer thee no more—was it well with thee then? Yes, if thou wert in the secret of thy covenant God. If thou wert subdued and child like, He sent his Comforter to dry up thy tears, and give to thee 'beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Thy sorrow has been followed by that joy that the world knoweth not, and that peace which passeth all understanding. And when the Lord has asked, 'Is it well with thee?' the ready reply has been, 'It is well.'

Christian, is it well with thee? The question is a test of character. It is well with those and those only who have found peace in believing. Perhaps you are poor. Perhaps you have struggled hard with adversity. Perhaps you are in want. Perhaps in affliction. But you have an inheritance that fadeth not away. You have an interest in the very bosom of your Savior. 'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' And such joy: nothing can describe it but the language of inspiration—'that your joy may be full.'—Christian, is it well with thee? Ah, as you look up into the face of the Lamb, and meet the smile of his transporting love, do you exclaim, in the fulness of your soul, 'It is well?'

Sinner, is it well with thee? In that awful hour when you stand in the presence of God alone, when your own heart condemns you, and thus anticipates the condemnation of God, when the torments in your own bosom are but the forebodings of the torments that await you, when you feel the gnawings of the worm that never dies, the burnings of the fire that is never quenched—is this well? Is it well to be an enemy of God? No, your inmost soul cries out, it is not well. But it may not be too late now. Shall it be well with thee?

From the Clinton Seminary Advocate.

The End of all True Knowledge.—All knowledge should tend to enable us, 1st, to know ourselves, and 2dly, to help us know God. Man, undoubtedly, stands pre-eminent among terrestial objects, and is distinguished by his endowments above all other beings. He is introduced on earth apparently helpless; but his Creator has given him mental faculties which "grow with his growth, and strengthen with his strength." These faculties, metaphysicians have divided into three classes; the faculties of the understanding, the faculties of volition, or power of willing, and the passions, or faculties of emotion. These combined, form the mind, which, when properly trained, fits its possessor for the Paradise of God, the Eden of love. Mind is so constituted that it will expand, and one of the three leading faculties, the understanding, the will, or the passions will predominate. By looking at the history of the world, we learn the sad lesson that the last two have had almost unlimited sway. When we view man in his crimes, wars, and devastations, he might be mistook for the abode of an evil spirit; but view him in his discoveries in the sciences, his plans of charity, and his labors of love for the welfare of his race, he seems a bright beacon in the universe of God. Can not this difference be justly attributed, on the one hand to ignorance and superstition, and on the other, to knowledge and wisdom. If the intellectual and moral faculties are not cultivated, the others will spread their roots wide and deep over all the soul. Here we acknowledge that he who improves his intellectual faculties alone, falls as far short of his duty to himself, to the world, and to his Maker, as the earth falls short of heaven; but, at the same time, we must say that he who improves his moral faculties only, is verily guilty for neglecting his intellectual powers. Wisdom and knowledge are twin sisters, and they must be permitted as they were designed, to go hand in hand. Whoever separates them is as great a loser, as he who prays without watching, or watches without praying.

2d. We judge of the wisdom of the artist by examining his production; so we form our minds of the goodness, mercy and greatness of the Great Architect, by examining the wonderful works with which we are surrounded, which form sublime impressions on our minds of the unlimited wisdom of their Creator. When the mind of man is illuminated by knowledge, he does not feast upon the pleasures of his animal nature; but he tastes higher, more refined, and more endearing delights of his moral and intellectual capacities, and then he grasps for education, as indispensable to the full enjoyment of his rational powers, in viewing the works of his great Creator. The mind is delighted in studying that science which reveals to it those perpetual fires, which are continually modifying and forming the rocks; in that which discloses the elements and properties of the different metals; in that which classifies and brings to its imagination the entire vegetable kingdom; in that which decomposes and submits to its examination the water, which fertilizes the earth; in that which separates the constituent particles of the air which we breathe; in that which teaches that the world of matter in which we live, in all its forms is influential in the production, support, and happiness of our own lives; in that which brings the whole animal kingdom under its inspection, especially in that which teaches the physiology of our own wonderful and delicate frame, and in that which teaches the more delicate structure of our own immortal minds; finally, in that which elevates our thoughts to the heavens, and teaches us the forms, magnitudes, laws and distances of those mighty orbits of light. In contemplating each of these natural, though mighty wonders, man learns his littleness and his dependence, and his mind is truly and almost enrapturedly conducted "thro' nature, up to nature's God." Hence, truly the end of all true knowledge is wisdom.

BENEVOLENCE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANS.

The custom was every one in turn to bring under public notice the case of a brother or sister, of whose necessitous circumstances he had any knowledge, and forthwith a donation was ordered out of the funds of the church which the voluntary contributions of the faithful supplied. No stronger or heart-stirring appeals were necessary to reach the hidden source of their sympathies; no cold calculations of prudence regulated the distribution, or doubtful propriety suggested delay for the consideration of the claim; no petty jealousies as to the preference of one recommendation to another were allowed to freeze the genial current of their charity. By whomsoever the case was recommended, or in whatever circumstances the claim was made, the hand of benevolence had answered the call almost before the heart found words to express its sympathy, and with a unanimity surpassed only by boundless love, they dealt out their supplies from the treasury of the church, whenever there was an object to receive, or a known necessity to require it.

Where the poor in one place were numerous and their brethren were unable, from their limited means, to afford them adequate support, they applied to some richer church in the neighborhood, and never was it known in these days of active benevolence, that the appeal was fruitlessly made, or coldly received. Though they had poor of their own to maintain, neighboring and foreign churches were always ready to transmit contributions in aid of the Christians in distant parts, and many and splendid are instances on record of ministers and people, on intelligence of any pressing emergency, hastening with their treasurers for the relief of those whom they had never seen, but with whom they were united by the strong ties of the same faith and hopes.—Colman's Ch. Antiquities.

What is Religion?—Not that which, meteor-like, shines for a brief period, and then fades and disappears. Not that which talks most—prays longest—sighs deepest—shouts loudest—and reproves with the greatest severity. Not that which can reject a widow's petition and the orphan's cry. Not that which deceives in a bargain—deals closely with the poor—withholds the just requital of labor—breeds jealousies—alienates friends—embitters enemies—betrays confidence—promotes sectarian strife and renders evil for evil.

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this: to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Pure religion is a vital principle—a fountain of living water springing up in the soul, and cleansing it from the pollutions of sin. A radiance shining into the heart, giving it new light, new life, new principles of action, and new modes of action—giving higher aims, brighter hopes, and sweeter joys. Pure religion teaches us to love our enemies, to pray for our enemies, to pray for them, and in all things to render good for evil. It requires us to act on principles of perfect justice. All things that we would that men should do to us, it teaches us to do to them. To do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God.

Christian Comforts.—How delightful to be able to repose securely in the providence of God—to trust to his tender mercies—to sink entirely into his will—to feel, even amidst the war of elements, and the jar of worlds, safe in the hands of a Sovereign God—to know that when we sleep, an eye that never slumbers watches over us—when we wake, a Spirit ever present marks our pathway, for it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. These are sources of joy and comfort known only to the christian.—Western Reserve Cabinet.

Grace.—Nothing perhaps more clearly defines christian character, than a full realization of our dependance upon God for salvation—than to feel that if we have been taken from the horrible pit and miry clay, we have not done it ourselves, but it is all of grace, free grace—and that nothing but the free and sovereign grace of God causes us to differ, in moral character, from the inhabitants of the pit, and assures us of a blessed immortality. And yet this free, this exhaustless grace, was purchased by a Savior's blood. Shall we not then love that Savior?—Ibid.

Grace and glory differ, but as the bud and the blossom: What is grace but glory begun? What is glory but grace perfected?

---

*If the foregoing exposition of Heb. vi. 1, 2, be admitted, then the laying on of hands is a permanent rite in the church, & should be submitted to by all believers; but if it be not satisfactory to our dissenting brethren, we conceive it to be their duty to give us a more correct interpretation of it.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, January 12, 1842.

Church Organized.

A Seventh-day Baptist Church, consisting of 16 members, was organized in Clifford, Susquehannah co., Pa., on the 27th ultimo, by the assistance of Eld. Russel G. Burdick and others. There have been for some years a few Sabbath keepers in that place, who have been visited by some of our ministers, viz., Eld. Eli S. Bailey and D. Clawson, under the direction of our Missionary Society. Lately several families have come to the observance of the Sabbath of the commandment. Among that number is Rev. ALSON HAYNES, who was a Free-Will Baptist minister, and had the care of three churches. He became a member of the church at its organization, and will labor in it.

Governor's Message.

We present our readers with an abstract of it to the exclusion of much other matter. Most of our readers will wish to see it. Its great length prevents its insertion entire.

Accompanying the Message were several public documents embracing a correspondence between Gov. Rutherford, of Virginia, and Gov. Seward, which would well repay a perusal; but their length forbids a publication in a paper like ours.

De Ruyter Institute.

The winter Term has commenced favorably. The number of scholars is greater than has entered at the commencement of any term for nearly two years past. A little more energy on the part of its friends, will secure to this Institution all the advantages enjoyed by others of a similar grade in our country. Parents may rest assured that the utmost pains will be taken to cultivate the intellects and guard the moral character of all students sent to this school.

☞We this week send out our Prospectus for Vol. 3d. Six Nos. more will complete the present Vol. We hope our Agents will make as full returns previous to the close as is practicable. We are quite willing to render them a reasonable compensation for their services. We wish the Register to be placed in every family of S. D. Baptists.

PROSPECTUS
OF
VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-Day Baptist Register will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance, or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for fair a discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

For the Register.

Change of Opinion.

MR. EDITOR,—The subject of this article has appeared to me to be of no little importance. The thoughts presented, (though brief and imperfect,) may tend to wake up attention to truth, and to inspire courage in its defense wherever, and whenever discovered.

I proceed, therefore, to observe, that a man who finds occasion to change his views of a subject, whether religious or political, is regarded by many in an unfavorable light. It is no uncommon thing for the current of prejudice to set in strong against him. Change of opinion is frequently attributed to mental imbecility, or to some mercenary motive. There is an amazing lack of that candor in the public mind which allows that a man, by investigation, may see good reasons for thinking differently on a subject from what he once did; and that he may change his views and his practice, from the simple love of truth, and a desire to please God and serve his generation. Indiscriminate censure for change of opinion is manifestly unkind and unjust. For as long as man is finite and mutable, he can not, of course, obtain, at once, to such a thorough knowledge of the various subjects presented to his view, as to preclude the possibility of improvement; and, therefore, may find occasion, on being better informed, to vary his judgment of them. It may become necessary to relinquish opinions previously formed as founded in error, and to embrace others which rest upon a more solid basis. It is manifest, therefore, that a wide difference ought to be made between those cases, in which opinions are suddenly changed, without proper examination, or from mere love of change, or instability of purpose, or with a view to conciliate the feelings of a party, or to gain some post of honor or advantage; and those cases in which a change of opinion is the result of sober investigation, and juster views of a subject than those previously entertained, and from a desire to conform in all things to the principles of truth and rectitude.

It is not to be inferred that no change in one's preconceived opinions is allowable, or commendable; because men sometimes change through weakness, fickleness, ambition, or the love of gain. Nothing is more manifest than that men may become wiser to-day than they were yesterday—that after months' and years' experience, they may form juster conclusions on various matters than those at first embraced—and that, in some cases at least, they will necessarily find occasion to vary their opinions. Hence, if they are honest men, they will give up error for truth; and ought to be commended for so doing. Change of opinion, instead of being an evidence of mental weakness, or depravity, may be an evidence of mental strength, and of tried virtue. Men of the strongest intellects, and of the best dispositions, have frequently changed their opinions on different subjects of high concern; and this richness of intellectual and moral furniture, was the legitimate cause of such change. Were it not for instances of this kind, the state of society would be vastly less improved than it is. And are we to suppose that no further changes in the opinions of individuals, and of the public, are necessary? Has every existing error been corrected? Have the great body of Christians, philosophers, and statesmen arrived at the summit of knowledge in their respective departments? Is the knowledge of any class, or of any individual so perfect, and the judgment so matured, on all subjects, that no occasion will be formed for correction? We may answer all these questions, without hesitation, in the negative. Hence, let not the censure passed upon change of opinion be indiscriminate. Before an odium is made to rest upon any one who now thinks differently of some religious, moral, scientific, or political subject from what he formerly did, let his reasons and motives be thoroughly and impartially canvassed. Let the proscribing and the fault-finding part of community divest themselves of their prejudices, and enter soberly upon the examination of those subjects which are viewed in a different light than formerly by their neighbors, and they would often find occasion to change their own opinions also. It is to be feared that the reasons, in many cases, for not changing an opinion, are to be discovered in the natural pride of the heart; the dread of public censure and scorn; and the fear of losing some temporal advantage. And what are these things but evidences of mental weakness and depravity? Men may glory in being steadfast—in not being given to change—in not deserting the creeds and customs of their forefathers:—but such may be the manifest reasons for a change—reasons, clustering around them from the acquisitions of science—the more clear illustrations of divine truth—the increased facilities for exploring the fields of knowledge—and the many advantages for independent thinking and research above what existed in past ages—that their glorying is but "glorying in their shame." It evidently will not do for men to maintain that past attainments are to be rested in, when so much remains to be corrected: when the existing discordance of views among the different sects and bodies of men, call so loudly for a change of opinion and practice, at least, among some of them: and when the present age of the world, and the signs of the times, call so loudly upon all to come out fully from the great anti-christian apostacy, which has so long darkened the horizon of the visible church.

In conclusion, therefore, let every one be duly intent upon ridding himself of error and of sin. And for that end, let him "prove all things," and "hold fast that which is good." Respectfully yours,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, Jan., 1842.

Congressional News.

From the N. Y. Observer.

Jan. 8.—The proceedings in Congress during the holidays have been of no special importance.

IN SENATE.

In the Senate, the President's plan of Finance has been under discussion on a motion of reference.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

In the House, the motion to refer so much of the President's Message as relates to discriminating duties and domestic manufactures, to the Committee on Manufactures instead of the Committee on Ways and Means, has been debated at great length, and finally decided in the affirmative. The Committee is composed as follows:

Leverett Saltonstall, of Massachusetts; Joseph L. Tillinghast, of Rhode Island; Joseph F. Randolph, of New Jersey; Wm. Slade, of Vermont; Hiram P. Hunt, of New York; Thomas Henry, of Pennsylvania; Richard W. Habersham, of Georgia; Aaron V. Brown, of Tennessee; Patrick C. Caldwell, of South-Carolina.

A majority of these gentlemen are favorable to discriminating duties. Of course they will recommend a higher duty than 20 per cent. on various articles which come in competition with domestic manufactures.

The question of Petitions on Salvery was brought up by Mr. Adams, and on motion of Mr. Wise, the whole subject was laid on the table. Yeas 115; nays 84.

News of the Day.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and Assembly:

The inhabitants of this State have been permitted again to till the earth in peace, and gathered its fruits with gladness. Industry has enlivened our towns, and health has cheered our dwellings. Benevolence has been assiduous in all its interesting offices, and eminently successful in diminishing intemperance, the chief source of suffering and vice. Learning has imparted its instructions, and religion has diffused more widely than ever, its renewing and consoling influences. With such distinguished blessings has the Divine goodness crowned the year, although its seasons as they passed were shadowed by accidents, on land and water, fearfully destructive of human life; by apprehensions of want; the terrors of mysterious crime; alarms of war; rumors of conspiracy and popular commotion; and the death of a revered Chief Magistrate, amid the rejoicings which attended his accession. It becomes us, therefore, to commence our deliberations for the public good, with humble acknowledgments of dependence on the Most High, and fervent supplications that he will be pleased to vouchsafe to our country a continuance of the Divine protection and favor.

The duties of the several departments of the administration have been performed with diligence. The new State Hall has been completed, and is no unfit monument of the prosperous condition of the State. I respectfully suggest that engineers and architects should now be required to deposit in the public archives their plans, estimates, maps, and models of canals, rail roads, and public edifices.

The Asylum for the Insane is ready for the reception of those who are to be its inmates, and it devolves upon you to prescribe the management of the institution. While your sedulous care will overlook none of that unhappy class, prudence, justice, and humanity recommend that persons acquitted of crimes on ground of mental aberration, should be brought under sanitary discipline.

The Geologists are engaged in arranging our extensive cabinet, and in publishing their final reports. The sum of $104,000, in four equal annual payments, was appropriated for the survey. Its prolongation for another year, by a law passed in 1840, renders it necessary to replenish the fund.

The Journals of the Provincial Congress have been printed in pursuance of a resolution of the Legislature; and the volumes will be found to contain abundant memorials of the virtues and sacrifices of our ancestors.

The Government of Netherlands has opened its archievos to our researches, with such liberality and kindness as will increase our affectionate veneration for the people to whom the State traces its origin. Great Britain has received our application with less favor. The history of the American Colonies is, at least, no unworthy episode in that of England, and its interest will increase with the lapse of time.—We can not illustrate the character of our ancestors without illuminating the principles of English liberty, and the genius and virtues of Englishmen. The President of the United States has, at my request, instructed our Minister to renew the application.

The resolutions proposing amendments of the Constitution having been published, invite your reconsideration to that spirit of candor, concession and patriotism which ought especially to prevail in changing fundamental laws. If the amendments shall be found suitable to promote a more efficient administration of justice, they will be hailed with much satisfaction by the people.

I lay before you a law of Virginia, calculated to embarrass our commerce. The effect of the act is postponed until May next, and the Governor is authorized further to suspend it whenever the executive authority of this State shall surrender three persons heretofore demanded by the Lieutenant-Governor of that Commonwealth as fugitives from justice, and the Legislature shall repeal the law extending the trial by jury. I have respectfully informed the authorities of Virginia, that my convictions of the illegality of that requisition are unchanged; and that although New York, from motives of self-respect and devotion to the Union, will not retaliate, nor even remonstrate, yet she cannot consent to remain a respondent, since Virginia has seen fit to transcend the sphere assigned her by the Federal Constitution, and to pass an aggressive law; but that this State will cheerfully return to a discussion of the subject, with a sincere desire to arrive at a conclusion mutually satisfactory and conducive to the general harmony, whenever the effect of that unfortunate statute shall be removed by the action of our sister State, or by an overruling decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Legislature will decide whether the trial by jury shall be relinquished, and whether a State, which acknowledges no natural inequality of men, and no political inequality which may not ultimately be removed, shall wrest that precious shield from those only, whose freedom is assailed, not from any wrong doing of their own, but because the greatest of all crimes was committed against their ancestors.—Taught as we have been by the founders of the Constitution, and most emphatically by the statesmen of Virginia, we can not renounce the principle, that all men are born free and equal, nor any of its legitimate consequences. But we can, nevertheless, give to Virginia, and to the whole American family, pledges of peace, affection and fidelity to the Union, by relying upon legal redress alone, and by waiting the returning magnanimity of a State, whose early and self-sacrificing vindication of the rights of man has entitled her to enduring veneration and gratitude.

I submit, also, for your information, a correspondence between the Governor of Georgia and myself, which my respected contemporary has made a subject of some comment in communications to the Legislature of that State.

Nineteen associations under the General Banking Law, and five Safety Fund institutions, have been closed. I recommend that measures be adopted to replenish the Bank Fund without delay, and that it be exempted from liability for private deposites. To guard hereafter, against fraudulent excesses of circulation, I suggest that the Safety Fund Institutions may be required to receive their circulating notes from the Bank Commissioners or the Comptroller. While I can not doubt that you will adopt these or more suitable measures to sustain the currency, and correct abuses in banking, I am sure that no harsh or injurious spirit will be indulged towards institutions which, deriving their powers from public grants, have performed their trusts with general fidelity, and whose stability is intimately connected with the public interests and the general welfare.

More than a hundred years ago, the legislature solemnly denounced a forcible seizure of the lands of the Six Nations, as an act that would be not merely unjust, but perfidious and ungrateful to time-honored and faithful allies. The lapse of time has wonderfully changed the condition and relation of the parties, but it has not diminished the sanctions of justice, nor weakened the motives of philanthropy. I invite your attention, therefore, to the allegation of the survivors of that heroic and unfortunate people, that the late treaty by which they surrender the remnant of their lands, under the sanction of the Government of the United States, was procured by circumvention and fraud.

It is supposed that in reorganizing the Congressional Districts, you will, as far as possible, adopt the principle that representation is most perfect where the districts are not only equal, but as numerous as the delegates; and it is confidently expected by our fellow-citizens, that you will divide large towns and wards into convenient districts, and direct that the annual elections shall hereafter be held on one and the same day throughout the State.

According to reports received at the State Department, there have been 187 convictions of felonies, including six capital cases, and about 4,000 convictions of misdemeanors and minor offenses, showing an increase of felonies by 57, and of inferior violations of law in a greater proportion. The reformation of offenders has been steadily kept in view, in the discipline of the prisons, and no complaint of inhumanity has reached me. The fiscal condition of those penitentiaries is satisfactory; but the employment of the convicts in departments of mechanical industry which bring their fabrics into competition with those of citizens, is a subject of complaint so general and so just, that I am constrained to commend it to your earnest consideration.

Every philanthropic mind will cling to the hope, that ultimately, the supremacy of the laws may be maintained, without exacting, in any case, a forfeiture of life. Nevertheless, the subject requires most cautious deliberation. The substitution of imprisonment for life would be signally successful, without such a modification of the pardoning power as might prevent its being employed except in cases where it would seem to be necessary to correct error. One hundred and ninety-seven persons have been consigned for life to the State Prisons within the 25 years, all of whom were pardoned after terms averaging 5 years and 2 months, except those who escaped, 32 who died, of whom 24 did not reach that average period, and 22 now in prison, of whom 14 have not yet been confined so long a term. The average of limited sentences, is 4 years and 8 months.

Although more than 4,000 persons are annually confined in our county jails, those penitentiaries often exhibit scenes revolting to humanity; and many a youthful prisoner, instead of being subjected to a salutary discipline, becomes more depraved. I indulge a hope that this interesting subject, so often fruitlessly submitted to the Legislature, will receive your enlightened consideration.

The administration of justice has encountered many and novel difficulties. The sheriff of Albany has been obliged to call forth the armed power of his county in executing civil process. Executive interposition has been invoked to suppress tumultuous disturbances in the counties of Rensselaer and Schenectady; unremitted efforts have failed to bring to light the perpetrators of an appalling crime in the vicinity of the city of New York; and high offenders, who had maintained respectable relations, have escaped, in some instances, after arrest. These incidents suggest the inquiries whether the efficiency of the police might not be improved, and whether the number of magistrates authorized to accept bail, and discharge on habeas corpus, has not been improvidently enlarged. A subject of Great Britain, who, for several years, pursued a desperate enterprise of bringing on a border warfare, by crimes which caused him to be proscribed in both countries, was, with extraordinary efforts, and after irritating delays, brought to justice.

The detention of another British subject, who, having come voluntarily into the county of Niagara, was held to answer an indictment for a murder committed at Schlosser in 1837, was made the subject of complaint by the British Minister to the President of the United States, on the ground that the aggression was an act of public force committed under authority of Her Majesty's Government. The then President having decided that the subject belonged to the judicial jurisdiction of this State, and that his interposition was not required by any principle of reason, justice or international law, and having communicated that decision to me, I expressed my acquiescence, and assured that the supposed offender should be brought to trial, and have a legal acquittal if innocent, and suffer just punishment if guilty of so [illegible] a crime. The Government of Great Britain soon afterwards formally avowed the aggression, and reiterated the demand for the discharge of the accused. The late Executive of the United States on this new [illegible] Washington, if a con[illegible] These views were also [illegible] ent Chief Magistrate of the [illegible] After due consideration I [illegible] President that now, as before, the subject seemed to me to belong to the judicial tribunals of this State, and [illegible] their proceedings ought not to be [illegible] by any interposition of the Federal or State authorities. The accused appeared on habeas corpus before the Supreme Court and challenged its jurisdiction, upon the grounds maintained by Great Britain and conceded by the Executive of the U. States; but the plea was overruled, and the prisoner having been remanded, was tried in Oneida County in September last, and having proved an alibi, was acquitted. Interesting as a capital trial, [illegible] necessary to maintain the dignity of the State, the case acquired [illegible] from the grave questions of constitutional and international law which it involved. It became a subject of legislative debate in London and Washington, as well as in our own Capitol, and popular feeling was intensely stimulated on both sides of the Atlantic. Thus a trial for felony seemed likely to involve in war two enlightened Christian nations, which had every motive to perpetuate peace and friendship. Agents of the Canadian authorities, and credulous persons among ourselves, alarmed the National Executive, and the Representative of the British Government, with reports of imaginary conspiracies to convict the accused by perjured testimony, and to render war inevitable by his assassination in prison. During these proceedings my action was guided by a desire to maintain, but not without proper deference to the Government of the U. States, the judicial jurisdiction of this State—to conduct the prosecution with energy, but with fairness towards the accused—to preserve order, and not merely to prevent any unlawful violence against the prisoner, but also to manifest a jealous care of the public honor in that respect—to sustain the Government of the U. States in demanding redress for the aggression at Schlosser as a national indignity, and to co-operate in the execution of all necessary measures for public defense. The papers now submitted, together with those already before the legislature, will furnish a full history of these interesting events. Your authority is necessary for paying some expenses for which no provision was found in existing laws.

New-York, like her sister States, and not less assiduously than they, pursues a policy of material improvement, commercial enterprise, and virtuous refinement, to ameliorate her social condition and recommend republican institutions to the favor of mankind. She deprecates war, therefore; and especially would she avoid incurring its calamities, for objects or from motives peculiar to herself. But recent occurrences admonish us, that pacific interests and dispositions are not always a guaranty of safety and peace. Although the American Government rigidly observes neutrality, and especially so, where British interests are involved, yet this is far from satisfying a distant monarchy that retains provincial Colonies under the shadow of our republican institutions. It has not been enough that a military force [illegible] our citizens [illegible] Colonies, but [illegible] of a free people [illegible] sense. [illegible]

[illegible]

It is a gratifying indication of the patriotism of our citizens, that notwithstanding the diminution of the penalties for omissions of military duty, [illegible] every where expressed.

Agricultural associations have been formed under the auspices of the State Agricultural Society, and [illegible] Legislature [illegible] to your favorable consideration [illegible] that will be made for [illegible] agements of the arts of husbandry.

The present condition of [illegible] the State [illegible] of that institution [illegible]

[illegible]

[An abridgment of the school laws [illegible] of New York is urged [illegible] the equal advantages in the system [illegible] the State.]

The condition of the treasury will be fully presented by a report of the proper officer. The revenue from every source exhibits a prosperous [illegible] The revenue derived from auction duties was [illegible] being an increase of [illegible] over the corresponding revenues of the previous fiscal year. The amount received by the superintendent of the salines at the manufacture of salt, was [illegible] being more than was received in the previous year by [illegible]030. The manufacture of salt, and consequently the revenue, have been improved by allowing drawbacks upon salt exported to distant markets. I suggest an inquiry into the expediency of reducing still lower the duty upon the manufacture, with a view to an improvement of the revenue, under a belief that such a measure would secure a market for our salt in the valley of the Mississippi. The superintendent renews his complaint of the unskilful process used in manufacturing fine salt, and suggests efforts for discovering a corrective.—Confident anticipations of reviving the manufacture at Montezuma are expressed.

Although the harvests were less abundant than heretofore, and there has been a considerable diversion of western trade through the valley of St. Lawrence, the tolls upon each of the canals exhibit a gratifying increase. The income from all during the season of navigation, was $2,034,878, exceeding the tolls in the previous year, by $259,131 equal to 14 59-100 per cent. The tolls in 1831 were $1,223,801.

The revenues of the canals during the fiscal year, after deducting only the expenses of collection and ordinary repairs, was $1,551,098. The permanent public debt, at the close of the last fiscal year, exclusively of temporary loans, contingent liabilities, and the balance of the Erie and Champlain canal debt, for the payment of which equivalent funds are set apart, is $15,510,330, to which must be added ten porary loans amounting to $4,855,000, making the aggregate debt $17,395,530, and the interest annually payable thereon, including also interest on the stocks loaned to the railroad companies which are in default, is $919,704. The debts consist of stocks chiefly redeemable in 1845, 1850, 1855, and 1860. The amount of stocks issued to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and rail road companies, is $5,035,700. You will, of course, give immediate attention to proper measures for reimbursing temporary loans.

[After discussing the question of the enlargement of the Erie canal, at length, the Governor comes to the following conclusion:]

If, therefore, we would preserve the inestimable benefits of inland navigation which we now enjoy, if we would save the treasury from embarrassment, if we desire the accomplishment of the other public works, if we would in any degree extend our interior communications, if we would maintain the public faith, prevent general distress, retain our commercial precedence and political influence, and guard against the dismemberment of our territory, it is necessary to complete the enlargement of the Erie canal throughout, and with all convenient diligence.

The New-York and Erie railroad was at first estimated to cost six millions of dollars, but the subsequent adoption of a plan securing greater durability and usefulness, will, with other causes, raise the expense to above nine millions. The Legislature, in 1836, appropriated to the improvement a loan of public credit for three millions, but the conditions of the act being impracticable, the work was suspended until the law was modified in 1840, since which period the enterprise has been vigorously prosecuted. Contracts have been made for constructing the unfinished part of the road, except a section of forty miles between Deposit and Binghamton. Portions, 232 miles in length, will be ready for a superstructure in the present month. A sum exceeding four millions of dollars has been expended, of which $2,800,000 was derived from the State loan. If prosecuted with the same energy as during the last year, the road will be completed in 1843. Too deeply indebted to the people to cherish any local partialities or prejudices, I cannot withhold an expression of my satisfaction, that this enterprise is attaining its true rank, as second only among the physical improvements of New-York and of the Union. Regarded at first as a rival of the Erie canal and of the central roads—a pioneer of railways, seeking aid while the general feasibility and usefulness of such communications were yet in question—proposing to open a way through a thinly inhabited region, which, as was believed, presented obstacles insurmountable even by modern skill, and whose condition contrasted unhappily with the prosperity of parts of the State earlier visited by public enterprise—this great project, doomed as it was by the Legislature to rely upon private capital alone, and then denounced for the insufficiency of that support, has been especially subjected to the distrust and opposition which it is the fate of all ameliorating enterprises to encounter. The auspicious results of the partial completion of the work, exceed alike the early expectations of its advocates, and all our experience of railways. It conveys daily, with regularity, through those passes once deemed so formidable, numerous passengers, at an average fare of less than two cents per mile, and agricultural productions, merchandise and fabrics, at rates proportionably reduced: and in its very beginning, like the Erie canal, give pledges of a speedy reimbursement of its costs, and guaranties, if there be wisdom in the public councils, a wider diffusion of the benefits of improvement than has been before conceived. I recommend its vigorous prosecution, upon the same general considerations which have been urged for completing the enlargement of the Erie canal. The question, however, involves an inquiry concerning the most suitable manner of promoting that object.

A governmental management of railroads would be an experiment here, and is supposed to have been unsuccessful elsewhere, although it is not obvious why, with diligence, skill and experience, equal to what are employed in managing the canals, a system of supervision of railroads could not be adopted. There is much force in the argument, that it would increase central influence; yet, it is not clear that the influence of corporations would be more harmless, and there is much reason to believe that the more speedy diffusion of intelligence will neutralize such influence in either form.—Railways, like other property, cannot be obtained by the public more than by individuals, without cost. Until the investment becomes productive, that cost must be paid out of present revenues, loans or taxes; while resort should be had to neither of these, except to obtain adequate public benefits. But capitalists select the projects which are most feasible, and promise most speedy returns; while there is a class of even more extensively useful improvements, the magnitude of which surpasses the capacity of such association. Such are the Erie canal and the New-York and Erie railroad; and as a whole, such would be a central line of railways from New-York to Lake Erie, through the valleys of the Hudson and the Mohawk. To wait for individual enterprise to accomplish such improvements, is to delay them for a subsequent, perhaps remote generation. The State may well claim a right to make or improve highways, and whatever profits she permits to be exacted, for their use when so constructed. The public welfare requires that the rates of toll shall always be kept as low as possible.—But all associations have a disposition to increase more and more their gains, and consult less and less the public convenience; whereas agents, directly responsible to the people, are obliged to consult the general welfare diligently and constantly. Surely no one can suppose, that the vast amount of private capital invested in railroads in the United States is unproductive. On the contrary, although there are many injudicious and incomplete works of that kind, the whole combined, yield returns, and every year increases their productiveness. If observations made with some care, are not altogether inaccurate, time will soon disclose the gratifying truth, that in this State a judicious system of railways, with proper branches and extensions penetrating every district, reaching every resource and affording facilities for travel and transportation, with rates of toll not considerably exceeding those of steamboat or canal navigation, would, as one entire system, yield an adequate nett revenue. This would indeed be apparent, if we consider the great economy of time and money resulting from such improvements, or even if we remember that private capital is seldom gratuitously devoted to the public good. We are therefore, near the time when conflicting interests and local jealousies concerning internal improvement, will cease, because the more the system is extended the greater will be the facility of extension. No abrupt change of policy is necessary, however, to reach such a result, if it be attainable.

When we remember that the first iron rail in this State was laid only ten years ago, that we now have eight hundred miles of railways, that during a period of pecuniary pressure, an average of ninety miles is annually added to the chain, and that a longer extent is in progress at the close than in the beginning of every year, we shall be convinced that even as we now proceed, we are approaching to the result indicated. I advise, therefore, no unnecessary departure from that system at this system at this time: but, I respectfully recommend, that all such improvements be henceforth regarded rather as parts of the general system of interior communications, designed to promote the general welfare, than as mere investments for gain: that a careful supervision of all such roads be established, to ascertain the accommodations afforded to the public, the fares received, and the profits realized; and the right of resumption stipulated in charters, shall be, as hitherto, carefully preserved. The Legislature would thus always be enabled to decide in regard to each road, whether the public good required interposition by way of regulation or resumption. Entertaining such opinions, and especially applying them to the New-York and Erie railroad, but with none other than feelings of respect for the benefactors under whose auspices it has thus far been prosecuted thro' so many and great embarrassments, I shall cheerfully approve any mode for continuing the enterprise, that shall seem to the Legislature expedient, assuming of course that the measure will involve no unnecessary public sacrifice.

* * * *

Nor can I omit to invite your attention to two suggestions of improvement yet unattempted. A railway from the St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain, and ultimately to be extended to tide water, is manifestly required as a preparation for public defense—to develop the rich mineral resources of the border counties—to retain the trade of Lake Ontario—and to counteract the efforts of the Canadian Government to guide the travel and trade of those countries, and of the far west, down the valley of the St. Lawrence. The delay of the undertaking exhibits a presumptuous confidence in our ability to retain, without effort, advantages which it should be remembered are altogether acquired. The other proposed improvement, would be a similar communication between the city of New-York and the central points of our northern, eastern and western trade. The enlightened citizens of Massachusetts have constructed a railway to invite to her flourishing capital the winter trade, which our metropolis seems so much to undervalue; and that enterprise is sure, under existing circumstances, to divert a portion of the trade during all seasons. There is undoubtedly abundant capital in the city of New-York, and sufficient zeal for its welfare, to induce an accomplishment of the proposed communication; but if, for any cause, that city should remain unmoved by rivalry so close, it may be wise to consider whether the inhabitants of our interior districts can longer submit to a periodical exclusion from its warehouses and wharves, and whether they will permit their commercial emporium to be deprived of any of the advantages it has already derived from the enlightened policy of the State.

* * * *

Since the last adjournment of the Legislature, the public wealth has been augmented by a virtual restoration to the State of its stipulated share of the National Domain. This estate, of which the National Government is now our trustee, consists of lands five times exceeding the territory we possess, and exceeding the surface of the islands of Great Britain. Even in the present season of extreme depression it yields an annual revenue of about $200,000, which must continue to increase at least throughout the present century. Internal improvement is forever, as now, to constitute the defense and ornament of the State; and it will be an interesting fact in the history of that policy that its severest trial was coincident with the triumphant practical demonstration of the safety and usefulness of the system, and with so vast an augmentation of the public wealth. Beyond all these resources, moreover, there is another to which we need never resort for internal improvements, but a reference to which should be sufficient to dispel any lingering doubt of the fiscal ability of the State—the untaxed wealth of the people equal to seven hundred millions of dollars. Former periods and other States are often brought into favorable contrast with our present condition; whereas a moment's reflection, will convince us that the State was never so truly rich as at the present time; nor would it be an unprofitable inquiry, whether in ancient or modern times there have existed two and a half millions of people so eminently blessed with the means of physical, moral and social improvement.

But although the causes affecting our public securities lie beyond the reach of direct efforts, we can nevertheless mitigate the evil and contribute to a remedy. It is an urgent duty to fortify our credit, not merely for the purpose of securing a discrimination in our favor, but also to furnish an encouraging example to our sister States. I suggest, with a view to this purpose, a rigid adherence, under all circumstances, to the rule hitherto observed, that the whole public debt shall not be raised above such an amount as that its interest can be paid out of the current surplus revenue of the canals; and to remove all question concerning the fiscal soundness and moral integrity of the State, I recommend that all future revenues from the National Domain shall be pledged as a sinking fund to the extinguishment of the principal of the debts, annually, paying, or providing for the payment of a part of the principal, and absorbing first the older debts. If seventeen millions of dollars are yet required to complete our public works, the system I have suggested would in 1855 discharge the whole of our present and future indebtedness, and after that time leave us unincumbered annual revenues. If we adopt this, or some more judicious fiscal system—if enterprises, we may prosecute them diligently and firmly, and with even higher confidence in their perfect success and unbounded usefulness than has ever before been entertained. If, moreover, we declare that at no time, nor under any circumstances, can this State justify or palliate a violation of public faith by any of our sister States, but at the same time yield to those States in performing their obligations our sympathy, support and such as is within our costitutional province; if we stand by those younger, less wealthy and less powerful, but equally patriotic members of the confederacy in this crisis—as we know full well they would stand by us if menaced from abroad—we shall then see them rapidly recovering from their embarrassments, and worthily regaining the confidence of mankind. Then each star will be firmly fixed, the clouds now gathering will speedily disperse, and the constellation continue to shed its cheering light upon the way along which the nations of the earth are advancing to constitutional liberty.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Albany, January 4th, 1842.

We understand that Gov. Seward, in his preparations for the New Year, has substituted Lemonade and Cold Water for Punch and Wine. This is a bold innovation, but one which the spirit of the times demanded. The Temperance cause has a right to claim an example from the highest authorities. The amount heretofore expended for Wine, &c., by the Governor, will now be given to the Poor.—Alb. Eve. Jour.

From Florida—More Indian Murders!—We learn from our correspondent at Jacksonville, that the Indians made their appearance on the 20th inst., within three miles of Mandarin, near the St. Augustine road, burned a house, and murdered the whole family, consisting of a Mr. Hartley, wife, and child. They were destroyed in the flames. Where are the troops? It appears that Indians can be found somewhat nearer than the everglades.

We further learn that a Mr. La Costa was also killed. Also, that the Indians burned three houses, and carried off several negroes, one of whom escaped. It is said that the Indians numbered twenty-one, and were supposed to be a part of Halleck Tustennuggee's tribe.

We also learn that Lieut. Col. Riley returned to Pilatka, on the 21st, from his expedition to the head waters of the St. Johns. He had discovered no Indians.—Col. Worth is at Tampa. A company of regulars was to be sent from Fort Russell to Jacksonville, in quest of the Indian mercenaries.

St. Augustine, Dec. 22.

Last night a negro man arrived at Picolata, from Mandarin and reported that some three or four persons had been murdered near that place.

—

Important from Tampa Bay—Letters have been received in this city from Tampa, says the St. Augustine News, stating that Tigertail and his whole party are in at that port. Col. Worth is now operating towards Sam Jones' camp, and great hopes are entertained of his being captured. The number of Indians now in, including those lately captured by Capt. Wade, amount to about two hundred.

Two of the Indians lately sent out by Col. Worth to treat with the Indians, were murdered in the neighborhood of Fort Fanning, by a party of the Michasukie tribe.—Savannah Rep.

A. D. Burnett's Cabinet ware room in Elizabethtown, N. J., took fire on the 25th, and was nearly consumed, together with the adjoining dwelling house of Mr. Moses Ogden. Insured.

271 Reformed drinkers have joined the Syracuse Total Abstinence Association since Oct. 14th, of whom at least 200 were confirmed drunkards, many among the most degraded. At least three hundred drunkards have been reformed in that place within two months, and the Ladies' Temperance Society now numbers 275 members, and is increasing.

The New-Haven Palladium says, that a woman, named Susan Gillan, was found drunk and half frozen in bed a few days since. Her child, some two years old was also speechless with cold, and her husband was intoxicated. The child is likely to recover.

Charles and Mary Seymour have been convicted, at Rochester, of having stolen $7,300 in notes, and a certificate of deposite for $300, from Mr. Holmes.

The Indiana House of Representatives has passed a law abolishing entirely imprisonment for debt, by a vote of 86 to 10.

The Legislature of S. Carolina, at their late sessions, passed an act to make the unlawful whipping or beating of a slave an indictable offence. Also an act to prevent the emancipation of slaves and other persons.

John Randolph once said in the United States Senate, that he had discovered the philosopher's stone. It consisted in these four plain monosyllables. "Pay as you go."

The Boston Telegraph says that it is in contemplation to establish a line of steamships from Boston to Bremen. The agent of the Bremen Company came out in the Britannia, the last trip Captain Cleland made. There will be two ships, to run once a month—they will land at East Boston.

We learn from the Madison (Wis.) Express, that the Ottowas and Chippewas of Michigan have again refused to emigrate West of the Missouri river, and there is no prospect that they can ever be induced to go there.

The late alderman O'Neil, of New-York, has bequeathed in his will $500 to Daniel O'Connell, to be by him appropriated to the advancement of the Repeal cause in Ireland.

At a recent fireman's celebration in Baltimore, there was exhibited a suction engine which was imported in 1734—107 years ago, and is still capable of doing good service.

The number of clergymen in this country is represented at 15,000—white population 15,000 000 or one clergyman to a thousand souls.

We learn from the Cincinnati Journal that over one thousand drinking men have been reformed in that—the Queen city of the mighty West.

The population of Great Britain is 28 millions, and of them 20 millions may be said in homely phrase, to live from hand to mouth, by precarious labour and with scanty supplies of the necessities of life.

The case of the United States vs. the sureties of Samuel Swarthout, is to be submitted to the Supreme Court for decision.

A numerous meeting was held at Niblo's on the 28th inst. in behalf of the New-York and Erie railroad, when liberal individual efforts to aid the company were strongly recommended, and also the Albany and New-York railroad company. Boston enterprise has awakened considerable emulation.

By order of the Mexican government, raw cotton, tobacco, and cotton twist, are forbiden to be imported into that country. Cotton goods are to be seized and burnt, and not sold as formerly.

Rhode Island.—The Constitutional Convention of this State has formed a Constitution which corrects some of the defects of the old Charter by which that State has been governed. The representation is more equally apportioned between the several towns; no change with regard to the Senate. Public schools are to be established. The elective franchise is only extended to holders of personal property to the value of $500, who shall have paid taxes on the same for two years, and taken away from the sons of freeholders, as such, except those already admitted. Of course this will not satisfy the non-freeholders.—Tribune.

Benefits of Advertising—We once heard of a merchant who undertook to expend his first year's profits in advertising. After trying four months, he found his profits so great, that he could not find enough papers to advertise in, and gave it up; but continued to advertise in every paper in this region, until in six years he quitted business with half a million of ready change.—Reading Times.

The Revenue of Kentucky—From the report of the commissioners for 1841, it appears that the revenue of the State of Kentucky, derivable from various sources of taxation, has amounted to $339,356.12, being an increase over that of last year, of $124,002.72, resulting from a farther tax of 25 cents, imposed last year. The value of the taxable property of the State is returned at 263,815,749.—Tribune.

Disgraceful Legislative Affray—A most disgraceful scene occurred between two blackguards in the Tennessee Legislature on the 28th ult. which resulted in a recontre with pistols, in which, however, the only one injured was a third person, a clerk in a store, who was wounded in the knee.

It seems that in the morning one Haskell, remarked in the House that he would not submit to a repitition of language used on the Democratic side. He then walked to the fire place where the other bully, whose name was Rowles, met him, and asked whether the remark was intended for him. Haskel answered that it was. Rowles answered that he held himself responsible at all times for all that he said on the floor. The other told him that if he would say as much out of the House he would chastise him. Hereupon ensued a regular set-to, which was interrupted by the bystanders.

In the afternoon they met in front of the Capitol and fired pistols at each other, with the result already stated. If they are not both expelled the House, the Tennessee Legislature will sink almost as low in the estimation of all lovers of order, as our Lower House of Congress:—lower it could not well be.—Tribune.

Two of the clerks in the United States Bank have been sued as endorsers on the post notes of the Bank.

Notices.

SABBATH SCHOOL COUNTY CONVENTION.

The undersigned, feeling the want of interest, and consequently the want of vigorous action in promoting Sabbath Schools, recommend holding a Convention in the Methodist Chapel in Morrisville, on Wednesday the 26th of January next, at 10 o'clock, A. M., for the purpose of consultation upon measures best adapted to promote Sabbath Schools. In order to throw a pervading influence through the country, and awaken in the hearts of Christians and Parents a stronger, and still stronger desire for the intellectual, moral, and religious culture of children and youth generally, it has been deemed important and highly desirable that all who feel interested in this cause, should concentrate their powers and influence by forming a County Sabbath School Association.

Allow us to urge one and all to attend—Christians of all Evangelical Churches, the call is to you. The common feelings of humanity, the perpetuity and stability of our Republican Institutions, the deep feelings of our hearts for the triumphs of truth as disciples of Christ, call loudly and beseechingly upon you to attend, and there commence vigorous and unflinching efforts in this department of God's vineyard. Sabbath Schools are essentially, nay, vitally connected with the success, and ultimate triumph of the Cross.

The above call is signed by a great number, from most of the towns in the County, the names of whom, for want of room, we omit.—[ED.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mr. [illegible] town, on the 6 [illegible] by Z. T. [illegible] Mr. WM. GALE, of [illegible] and Miss MARTHA J. THORNTON, of [illegible].

In Brookfield, by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Dec. 30, Mr. SILAS WHITFORD, and Miss MARY BURCH, both of Brookfield.

In W[illegible] Mr. GEORGE MARTIN, of [illegible] and Miss PHILINDA HARRINGTON, of M[illegible]field.

DIED.

In Georgetown, on the 9th of [illegible] ELLEN M., daughter of Joseph and Barbara Peckham.

In Otselic, on the 8th inst., Mr. LUTHER STAUNTON, aged 18 years. Also, Miss CALISTA, Daughter of Mr. Alexander and Laury Butts, aged 5 years, both of [illegible] fever.

In Milton, Wisconsin, of Inflammation on the brain, on the 20th ult., SAMUEL, son of Eld. Daniel Babcock, formerly of Alfred N. Y., aged 10 years.

LIST OF LETTERS.

N. V. Hull, (the request is important. We think a compliance with it would be of invaluable service.) Joel Green, (we have written.) Philander Carpenter, (the alteration is made to your request.) Joseph Goodrich, "Hibernicy," (our custom is not to publish "facts" without a responsible name. We presume all is right, but we do not know it.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of A. Babcock, $2,25, cr. Daniel Brown, vol. 2

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DENTAL SURGERY.

BERTHIER M. SMITH.

HAS opened an office at the house of WILLIAM C. GAGE, where he will hold himself in readiness to attend to any business that may be presented in the line of DENTAL SURGERY, and pledges himself to perform, in a manner which shall combine neatness, permanency, utility and comfort, any operations which come within the scope of his profession—such as filling, inserting, cleaning &c.—healing diseases of the mouth and gums, arising from a bad condition of the teeth—correcting irregular dentition &c. &c. In short, he will do all that can be done towards preserving & cherishing those important and beautiful organs, the human teeth.

Parents, have your children's teeth examined in season; [illegible] may save you much trouble, and [illegible].

Examinations and advice [illegible] given [illegible] free of charge.

Ladies will be attended at their residences if particularly desired.

A few boxes of TOOTH POWDER on [illegible] an excellent article for the teeth [illegible].

De Ruyter, Jan. 10th, 1842.

N. B. The length of time which Mr. SMITH will spend in De Ruyter will depend [illegible] the amount of patronage received.

TO FARMER'S FAMILIES, AND TO ALL AFFECTED WITH DISEASE.

January 12, 1842.

I have this day been appointed [illegible] agent [illegible] place for the sale of Doct. D. JAYNE'S celebrated medicines consisting of JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, TONIC VERMIFUGE and SANATIVE PILLS.

All articles sold by me are direct from Doct. Jayne, and warranted pure. Printed circulars will accompany articles of his, attesting their worth and virtues, and will be given to any one who may wish to become acquainted with them.

I have the pleasure to inform those afflicted with diseases of the lungs, Consumption, Spitting of Blood, Coughs or Influenza, that I have also been appointed agent for the sale of Joshua Fish's celebrated and so called LILLY SYRUP, which for the last year has affected more cures for the amount used than any other medicine ever offered to the public. Those upon the brink of the grave have been called to health by its powerful effects, the weak have become strong, and the consumptive man has been cured of his pale cheek and haggard look and racking cough. Should the incredulous doubt, let them try it and if it fails to cure, you shall have it free of expense. I have in my possession recommendations from some of the most distinguished men of the age which I shall be glad to show at any time.

PARKER'S PULMONARY BALM.

One of the best medicines for common colds Influenzas &c. &c. &c., to be found in the whole catalogue of patent medicines. Give it a try, it is first rate, call and read one of his circulars.

S. D. DELLAY.

NOTICE. The notes and accounts of the late firm of ELMORE ANNAS & AYER, are placed in the hands of George Sears for settlement, and collection where they may be found previous to the first day of March. All demands remaining unsettled at that date, will be left with the proper officer for collection.

J. N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
WILLIAM ! AYER.

Jan 10, 1842.

DISSOLUTION. Notice is hereby given that the [illegible] partnership heretofore existing under the firm of E. ELLIS & Co. is this day dissolved [illegible]. The business hereafter will be [illegible] E. ELLIS. All notes [illegible] are assigned to E. ELLIS, and [illegible] ELLIS,
ELEAZAR ATKINS Jr.
[illegible] 1842. 46w3

NOTICE.

ALL [illegible] the subscriber, on book [illegible] respectfully [illegible] by the 15th [illegible] will be obliged to put [illegible] for collection, as he is in debt [illegible] Will have their PAY.

HALSEY STILLMAN.

D[illegible] Dec. 28th, 1841.

Madison County Mutual Insurance Company.

NOTICE is hereby given that an assessment of [illegible] levied on the deposite [illegible] on the 25th day of October 1841, that the same is requested to be [illegible] of said Company [illegible] before the first [illegible]

[illegible] Cazenovia, Nov. 24, 1841.

WM. J. HOUGH, Treasurer.

CASH [illegible] paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy [illegible] produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better [illegible]
STONE STORE

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.
TAKE NOTICE.

THE [illegible] on hand a good assortment [illegible] Harness, [illegible] Whips, Trunks, [illegible] Carpet [illegible] De Ruyter not excepted. [illegible] Green Butter, [illegible] Calfs [illegible] of Lime [illegible]

R. RIDER.

D[illegible] 1841. 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
S. M. HOUSE.

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work [illegible].

[illegible] warranted to fit [illegible]

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

[illegible] S. D. Dellay's Store.

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 29w6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered to [illegible] purchasers, at prices 10 per cent less than is charged by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE.

Nov. 24.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at
Nov. 24. ELMORE'S

MADISON COM. PLEAS.
Sarah L. B. Goodwin,
vs.
Mary L. Goodwin, Henry Goodwin, and Jane Goodwin, by Joel Maxson the special Guardian of the said Henry and Jane.
IN PARTITION.

IN pursuance of an Order [illegible] the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Madison, in this cause, we the undersigned Commissioners appointed by said Court to make partition therein, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, on the 29th day of November, at 12 o'clock, M., at the house of Wm. C. Gage, in De Ruyter, the premises in the Plaintiff's petition mentioned, situate [illegible] De Ruyter, and belonging to the estate of Le Baron Goodwin deceased, and bounded [illegible] beginning at the centre of the road leading [illegible] northwest [illegible] Geo. W. Sutton [illegible] Geo. W. Sutton [illegible] Dated October 5th, 1841.

BENJAMIN ENOS,
JAMES NYE,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 34w6

POSTPONEMENT.

THE above sale is postponed to the 17th day of January next at the same place and time of day.

Dated Nov. 15, 1841.

JAMES NYE,
BENJAMIN ENOS,
EPHRAIM ARNOLD, Commissioners.
Z. T. BENTLEY, Attorney. 40tds

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st. 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the veriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

POETRY.

For the Register.

Slavery.

What sound is this that strikes mine ear
Along the southern breeze?
It is the wail of deep despair,
Comes through the evening breeze.

It comes from Afric's tawny sons,
When at the throne of grace,
In open ether they send up
Their prayers before his face.—

That he would send them some relief
From Slavery's cruel chain,
To cheer their drooping hearts from grief,
From sorrow and from pain.

But, hark! my brethren hear the groans
That from the south doth come,
The husband sever'd from the wife—
From daughters and from sons.

And handcuffed by some cruel men
With chains around their feet,
And sent into some distant land
As traffick they are made.

But, oh! that bitter, bitter groan
Springs from that broken heart,
To think of friends they've left behind
That they must with them part.

Oh, cursed be that cruel man,
The Bible it doth say,
That severs husband from the wife
And send them far away.

Oh hasten on that happy day,
When Afric's sons are free,
And never more to wear the yoke
Of cruel Slavery.

Great God, then, help us all to raise
The voice of LIBERTY,
And break oppression's cruel yoke,
And set the prisoners free.

LEZONA LINA.

De Ruyter January 7, 1842.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE FALSE LIGHT,

OR THE CORNISH WRECKER.

"A wreck, a wreck!" is the most tremendous sound to a wretched mariner in the howling midnight tempest on our iron bound coast, but the most welcome to those guilty men called "wreckers," who consider the winter as their harvest season for rapine and plunder. Often have we seen five hundred or a thousand men, women, and children, rushing through the breakers to seize upon their prey from some hapless vessel just dashed to atoms on the rocks, and wondered that more prompt attention is not paid by local authorities to guard the property of wrecks, and reward the honest and diligent who endeavor to save it. Thousands of our seamen perish every winter, crying, "Refuge failed me, no man cared for my soul." The preaching of the gospel on our sea-coast has so far improved its inhabitants, that the horrid system of alluring a vessel to destruction by lights on shore, and murdering the crew, is now happily abolished; we wish we could say as much concerning the general plunder of every part of the vessel and cargo. Upon this subject we have often heard in Cornwall, handed down from father to son, the awful legendary tale that we now submit to our readers, in which the important doctrine of divine and retributive justice is strikingly exemplified:

"Towards the close of the sixteenth century, a horrid custom prevailed on the coast of Cornwall, of luring vessels to their destruction in stormy weather, by fastening a lantern to a horse's head, and leading it about on the top of the cliffs, in order that the bewildered mariner, mistaking it for the light of a vessel, might be induced to shape his course towards it. This atrocious expedient was often successful. The devoted crew dreamed not of their danger, until warned of it, too late, by the foaming breakers that burst upon them from the shore; and the vessel speedily became the prey of a set of ruthless barbarians, who, to secure themselves impunity in their plunder, often murdered those who escaped drowning, and then called their booty a god-send.

"In a small hovel, on the craggy shore of a deep and dangerous bay on the coast of Cornwall, dwelt one of those wretches, whose name was Terloggan—an old and hardened desperado, who united in himself the fisherman, the smuggler, and the wrecker, but the last was his favorite occupation; and such was the confidence of his companions in his experience in this capacity, that he was usually appointed their leader, and rarely failed in his office. His wife, too, encouraged him, and not unfrequently aided him in his iniquitous exploits. Disgusted with the wickedness of his parents, their only son left his home in early life, and sought to obtain an honorable subsistence as the mate of a West India trader.

"It was at a period, when a long and profitless summer and autumn had nearly passed away, that Terloggan, like the vulture, ever watchful of his prey, was more than usually observant of the signs of the heavens; nor was any one more capable than himself of discovering the most distant indication of a tempest. Nature had for several months worn a placid and encouraging aspect. The soft and azure sky seemed to rest upon the transparent sea, and the slowly expanding waves swept with slow mumurings along the shining sands of the deep bay with a wild and monotonous plashing, that seemed to strike like the voice of a prophesy upon the ear. Nor more hateful were the glorious beams of the orb of day to the fallen Lucifer, as described by our great poet, than was the quiescent state of nature to the dark mind of Terloggan. In his impatience, he cursed the protracted season of tranquility, and hailed the approaching period of storms as more congenial, not only to the "gloomy temper of his soul," but to his interests. At length he saw, with a smile of savage satisfaction, the sun sink in angry red beneath the dim and cloudy horizon; heard with secret exultation the hollow murmuring of the winds, and beheld the blackening waves rising into fury, and lashing the lofty rocks with their ascending spray.—As the night advanced in chaotic darkness, the horrors of the tempest increased; and the long and loud blast of the contending elements rung upon the ear like the death-knell of a departing soul. "Now's thy time," ejaculated the old hag, his wife; "go thy ways out upon the cliffs, there's death in the wind." Terloggan speedily equipped himself, and ascended the steep promontory at the entrance of the bay.—The usual expedient was resorted to; and he soon observed a light at sea, as in answer to his signal. His prey seemed already in his grasp. The light evidently approached nearer; and before an hour had elapsed, the white close-reefed sails of the vessel could be dimly discovered through the darkness, and the appalling cry of the seamen at the discovery of their danger, distinctly heard. Signal guns of distress were immediately fired, and the loud commands, "All hands on deck," and "About ship," were vociferated in wild despair. Every exertion was made to wear the vessel from shore; but the redeeming moment was passed, the ship was completely embayed, and neither strength nor skill were of any avail, in averting her impending fate. In a few minutes a tremendous crash, and a heart-rending, but fruitless cry for help, announced the horrid catastrophe; and the last flashing signal-gun revealed for a moment, a scene too terrible to be described. The stranded vessel, hurled repeatedly against the jagged rocks of the bay, soon parted; the waves dashed over her shattered hull with relentless fury, bearing to the shore the shattered cargo, broken pieces of the wreck, and the tattered rigging; while the mingled shrieks of the drowning, blended with the roar of the conflicting elements, rose upon the ear like the despairing cries of an army of dying Titans.

"There was one, however, in whose eyes such a scene was joyous—in whose ears such sounds were melody—and that being was Terloggan. He waited impatiently until the storm had somewhat abated, and when silence began to indicate that the work of death was well nigh over, he descended the well-known cliffs, to dart upon his prey. Unmoved by the horrid spectacle, (for the moon had broken from the clouds by which she had before been concealed,) he stood a while gazing upon the scene of desolation around him, as if at a loss where first to begin his work of rapine But to his surprise, and momentary dismay, there was yet one living soul on board, who, should he survive, would interpose between him and his hard earned booty, and who was even now loudly supplicating his assistance. To dispatch this unhappy creature in his exhausted and helpless condition, was a resolution no sooner formed than executed. Whilst he was appearing to aid his escape from the jaws of death, one stroke of his hanger laid him a livid and mutilated corse upon the sands before him. Terloggan then rifled the pocketes of his victim, took a ring from his finger, laden with the most portable articles of plunder, retraced his footsteps to his hut. "What luck?" exclaimed his fiend like helpmate, as he crossed the threshhold of the door.—"Never better," rejoined Terloggan, pointing to his booty. He then described the success of his hellish stratagem, without even concealing the particulars of the murder; after which he displayed some pieces of foreign gold coin, and the ring which he had taken from the finger of the stranger. "Give me the light, Meg," said the hoary villain. The hag obeyed. But no sooner had he examined the ring, than he recognized its form and certain marks upon it. His countenance changed, and, with a groan of agony, he quickly handed it to his wife. She knew to well from whose hand it must have been taken, and, after glancing at it for a moment, yelled out with supernatural energy, "Oh, my son, my poor son!" and fell senseless at the feet of her husband. Terloggan tried to master his feelings until the fact should be ascertained. He arose with the dawn, and hastened to the spot where he had left the murdered corse. It was indeed his son. The stroke of retribution had been complete. Overwhelmed with despair, and stung by remorse to which his heart had ever before been impervious, he determined on self destruction. A few days afterwards, his mangled body was found among the rocks, and was interred on the spot where he had perpetrated his last deed of blood. The chief incidents of his terrible story are still narrated in the neighborhood which was the scene of its hero's manifold atrocities. His wretched wife perished a few weeks afterwards by the fall of her hut, occasioned by one of those dreadful storms, which she and her savage helpmate had so frequently invoked."

From Graham's Magazine.

COTTAGE PIETY.

> "Early had they learned
> To reverence the volume that displays
> The mystery, the life which cannot die"

There is no piety like that in our cottages. Go through the land from one end to the other,—enter if you will at every door you pass,—seek out the dying in lordly hall, and lowly dwelling,—and you will find that the humble tenants of the humblest roof, are often the most acceptable in the eyes of their Maker, and that in the words of Holy Writ, "not many wise, not many noble are called," but "God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty." And there is a philosophy in this. The rich have wherewithal to enjoy themselves in this life, and what care they for one to come? but the poor find no peace from toil on earth, and hail the message which bids them to a better and brighter world, where "the weary are at rest." Then, too, the Sabbath of the cottager!—They who live in cities, or dwell in stately palaces in the country, have no idea of the soothing calm of this day to the poor man. All through the weary week, in summer or in winter, amid cold, or rain, and heat, he is compelled to toil for the scanty pittance which barely keeps his wife and little ones alive—and when the Sabbath morning comes, and he sees all so tidy about him, while the sun smiles pleasantly through the casement, and there is an eloquent stillness on all without, a feeling of freedom and of untold peace, comes stealing over his soul, such as those who have never shared his toils cannot imagine. If he has a heart it is melted into gratitude. If he is a godly man—and do not these very things purify his heart insensibly?—he will call his little ones around him, and, together they will lift up their thanksgivings for the blessings of another week. Oh! how often—in some old country house, far, far away from the crimes and cares of the town—have we listened to the morning hymn, sweetly rising on the air, and seeming to go up to heaven all the sweeter for the songs of birds and the murmurs of the stream, with which it mingled.—Yes! we love

> "The sound of hymns
> On some bright Sabbath morning, on the moor
> Where all is still save praise; and where hard by
> The ripe grain shakes its bright beard on the sun;
> The fresh green grass, the sun, and sunny brook—
> All look as if they knew the day, the hour,
> And felt with man the need of joy and thanks."

Children's Department.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

About ten miles south of Boston, is a venerable old house, which the stage driver will be sure to point out to his passengers, as the residence of John Quincy Adams. It was here that his venerable father died, July 4th, 1826, the same day in which President Jefferson died in Virginia, just fifty years from the day when they both signed the Declaration of Independence. In this house, or some other near it, John Quincy Adams was born, in 1767. He received his first education in the family of his father, who was then an eminent lawyer. In 1767, in the midst of the revolutionary war, his father was chosen commissioner to France, and he took John Quincy with him, who was then only eleven years old.

His father returned in about a year, but went again to Paris, in 1779, to act with Franklin and Jay, in negotiating a peace with Great Britain.

At Paris, the youthful John Quincy was then placed at school. In June, 1780, when his father was appointed in place of Mr. Laurens, ambassador to Holland, he attended a public school in Amsterdam, and also attended the University at Leyden. In 1781, when fifteen years of age, he went to St. Petersburgh, as a private Secretary to Dana, the American minister. After remaining there a little more than a year, he again joined his father in Holland, and in 1785, he returned to the United States. He graduated at Harvard College in 1787, and soon began to study law with Theophilus Parsons of Newburyport. On completing his law studies, he repaired to Boston, and commenced the practice of his profession.

He soon became known for his signal abilities, and having attracted the attention of President Washington, in 1794, he was appointed Minister Resident at the Netherlands, a post which he retained until near the close of Washington's administration. Just before retiring from office, Washington appointed him minister to Portugal; but while on his way to Lisbon his destination was changed to Berlin. While in Prussia, he made an excursion into the Province of Silesia. When Thomas Jefferson became President in 1801, he returned to this country. In 1802, he was elected to the Massachusetts Senate. In 1803, he was chosen a Senator of the United States, and gave his support to the administration of Mr. Jefferson—a course which was offensive to his constituents, and he resigned the office. In 1806, he was called to the chair as Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory, in Harvard College. In June, 1809, he was appointed by President Madison as Minister to Russia, where he won the confidence and esteem of the Emperor Alexander, and laid the foundation of the friendship which that great nation manifests towards this country. Mr. Adams remained in St Petersburgh until appointed by Madison at the head of the commission of five, by which the treaty of peace was negotiated at Ghent, in 1814. After the conclusion of peace, and of a convention of commerce with Great Britain, Mr. Adams was appointed Resident Minister at London, where he remained until the accession of Mr. Monroe to the Presidency, in 1817.

In organizing his cabinet, Mr. Monroe selected Mr. Adams as Secreteary of State, an office which he filled with great honor to the country and to himself, until the close of Mr. Monroe's administration. In the Presidential contest of 1824, Mr. Adams was a prominent candidate, together with General Jackson, Mr. Crawford, and Mr. Clay. There being no choice by the people, Mr Adams was elected by the House of Representatives. He encountered, however, at the threshhold of his administration, a vigorous and overwhelming opposition; and his rival, Gen. Jackson, uniting the friends of the other candidates in 1825, succeeded to the Presidency in 1829.

In 1831, he took his seat in Congress again, not in the Senate, where he had been sent by the Legislature twenty-eight years before, but in the House of Representatives, to which he was chosen by his worthy neighbors of Plymouth and Norfolk counties. There he has remained ever since, and has been a bright example of industry and devotion to the public good.

On the 30th of April, 1830, he delivered an able address in New York, at the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of the Inauguration of George Washington.

It is said he has about fifty large manuscript volumes which he has written with his own hands, containing facts and observations on public affairs. Coming from such a gigantic intellect, placed in such favorable circumstances for gaining knowledge, they must be intensely interesting. But the crowning act in his career of greatness, is his masterly defence of those intersting Africans, who were rescued by a wonderful Providence, from the pittiless Spaniards, and, in a great degree, by his eloquence and skill, from the scarcely less cruel grasp of a government administered by "a northern man with southern principles."

SAGACITY OF A LIONESS.

The following story is from the English Monthly Magazine, and may be depended upon as being accurate.

Part of a ship's crew being sent ashore on a part of the coast of India, for the purpose of cutting wood for the ship, one of the men, having strayed from the rest, was greatly frightened by the appearance of a large lioness, who made towards him; she laid down at his feet, and looked very earnestly, first at him, and then at a tree a little distance off. After repeating her looks several times, she arose and proceeded on towards the tree, looking back several times, seemingly wishing the man to follow her, which he did; and upon coming to the tree, he looked up and perceived a huge baboon, with two young cubs in her arms, which he supposed were the lioness's as she crouched down like a cat, and seemed to eye them verry steadfastly; upon which the man being afraid to ascend the tree, he thought to cut the tree down; and having his axe with him, he set to work, when the lioness seemed more attentive to what he was doing. Upon the falling of the tree, she sprang forward on the baboon, and tore him in pieces; she then licked them over and over again; after which she returned to the man, who was greatly frightened at seeing her in such a rage with the baboon; but she came and fawned around him, rubbing her head against him in great fondness; and which seemed to show her gratitude for the service which he had done her: she went to the cubs, and taking one of them up in her mouth, went away with it, and returning soon after for the other, she went away with that also; when the man made the best of his way off to the shore, where he was taken aboard, and did not get rid of his fright for some time after.

STATISTICS OF MUSCULAR POWER.—Man has the faculty of imitating every motion but of flight. To effect these; he has, in maturity and health, sixty bones in his head, sixty in his thighs and legs, sixty-two in his arms and hands, sixty-seven in his trunk. He has, also, 434 muscles. His heart makes sixty-four pulsations in a minute; and therefore, 3,840 in an hour, and 92,160 in a day. There are also three complete circulations of his blood in the short space of an hour. An elk can run a mile and a half in seven minutes: an antelope a mile in a minute; the wild mule of Tartary has a speed greater than that; an eagle can fly eighteen leagues in an hour; and a Canary falcon can even reach 250 leagues in sixteen hours. A violent wind travels sixty miles an hour; sound 1,242 English feet in a second.—Bucke.

MORAL EDUCATION.—Rev. Mr. Breckenridge once said, "When we speak of education in common terms, we lose sight of one of the most important points in an education. He who educates the intellect, and leaves the moral nature uneducated, falls as far short of the true objects of education as eternity exceeds time." As the earth naturally bears briers and noxious weeds, so does the human heart by nature bring forth the works of the flesh. But as the earth can be made to bear good fruit by cultivation, so the human heart, by a proper religious culture can be made to bear the fruits of the Spirit But as the garden needs an early and faithful cultivation, so does the moral nature of man. The education of the mind and cultivation of the heart should both be commenced at an early age, and they both should be carried on together.—An intellectual education, unsanctified, is of but little use.—Clinton Sem. Advocate.

BEAUTIES OF EDUCATION.—"Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no enemy destroy, no despotism enslave. At home, a friend—abroad, an introduction—in solitude, a solace—in society an ornament. It chastens vice, it guards virtue, and gives at once grace and government to genius. Without it, what is man? A splendid slave: a reasoning savage."

A sub contractor of the New-York and Erie railroad lately decamped, with some 1200, funds which had been given him by the company to pay his labourers. He was last heard of in Buffalo.

The famous Niger expedition has suffered very much of late from fever. 60 European adventurers were taken ill at once, and 20 had died at the last accounts.

The Baptists of Rochester are about constituting a new church. The first church is full to overflowing. The colony to form the new church is said to possess ample means for the enterprise.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW GOODS AGAIN AT S. D. DELLAY'S.

Sept. 28, 1841.

BUNDLES of SILK GOODS, cords of SHEETINGS, heaps of CALICOES, piles of CLOTH and stacks of plain and fancy BEAVER CLOTHS, are now being offered by

S. D. DELLAY,

at his CHEAP CASH and BARTER STORE, in connexion with an unequalled assortment of MERINOES, BOMBAZINES, SHAWLS, TAGLIONES &c., &c. &c. at prices greatly reduced, and which he unqualifiedly pledges himself to sell less than his neighbors in this Town or County.

His Purchases have been for cash. Goods will be sold equally cheap for good notes as any other Store in this section will sell them for cash.

TEAS SUGARS AND MOLASSES

as usual, cheaper than the cheapest.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and request from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

DR. WATERMAN'S
Rheumatic and Strengthening Plaster.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,
10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13. 1841. 63y1

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,
Morrison's Hygean "
Samuel Lee's "
Doctor Bishop's "
Cheeseman's Arab'n "
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "
Dr Phinney's "
Moffat's Veget. Life "
Gregory's Billious "
Harlæm Oil.
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey "
Godfrey's Cordial.
Foster's Anodyne Cordial.
Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium.
Hive Syrup.
Laudanum,
Paregoric,
Oil Organium,
" Spike,
" Lemon,
" Anise.

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

In conclusion he would say, that he is constantly receiving Goods from New-York, and will not be undersold; but on the contrary will undersell the CHEAPEST.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

DRUGS & MEDICINES

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

WANTED,

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery, at very low prices.

The following, among others, may now be found on his list:—

Web.'s Dictionary, large.
" " small.
Dames' Bourdon.
" Legendre,
" First Lessons.
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry.
Phelps' Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar.
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,
Novum Græcum Testamatum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Fools-cap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office
De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russell, P. M., Oran Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Asa Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M., Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott— Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson. Rev. Alexander Campbell.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem.— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months. $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discon tinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 47.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 99.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, JANUARY 19, 1842. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

MUSINGS.—NO. III.

The Bible.—Its Influence.

Similar in its influence to the Sun that enlightens and beautifies our earth—to the heart that propels the current of life through the thousand windings of vein and artery, is the influence of the Bible in the moral world. 'Tis the glorious harbinger of light and life—of light intercepted by no intervening cloud—of life over which the king of terrors is powerless. Should the Sun, as it sinks to-night behind the western hills, bid us a last farewell, what imagination can conceive the result? A world without a Sun, who could inhabit? Its beauty has fled. Nature's sweetest songsters are mute—the sweet incense unexhaled lingers within the flower-cup—all that could fascinate the lover of Nature lies buried beneath a pall no human hand may raise—man himself is paralyzed. And that heart, no sooner does its action cease, than the freed spirit wings its way to another sphere, leaving its earth-born companion, bright and beautiful though it be, to mingle with its mother earth. Could the Bible and its influence to-night be banished, similar darkness and death would invest the moral world. Is the picture an exaggerated one? Let us examine it, then, more in detail. Following the suggestions of Dr. Nelson in his cause and cure of infidelity, let us spread before us a map, and with pencil in hand mark those parts of our earth destitute of the Bible. Turning to the old world we will first take a cursory view of Africa with its 90 millions of inhabitants. From the shores of the Mediterranean to the Mts. of the Moon, the crescent emits its doubtful light, tending but "to bewilder and to blind." Pursuing our way into Southern Africa, Paganism with its fearful rites reigns without a rival. In this sunny clime where nature has so lavishly strewn her fruits and flowers, how degraded is man! In rosy morn and twilight deepning into shade, in opening bud and expanded flower, in lofty mountain and murmuring rivulet, or mighty river, as they pursue their way musically along to the far off ocean, in the lightning's flash and thunder's roar, or zephyr's gentle whisper, he perceives neither beauty or sublimity. The social feelings that give to life its "couleur de rose" slumber unconscious within—the arts and sciences, cradled in Egypt, have found a home in other climes; in vain shall we look for aught that renders life desirable, save mere animal existence. If we turn to Asia, the theatre upon which have been performed scenes the most thrilling our world has ever witnessed—the earthly home of the Son of God,—the residence of man as he came from the hand of his Maker, pure as the sparkling fountains of his own bright Eden, we find it enveloped in moral darkness deep and death-like. Its 420 millions are the deluded followers of the false prophet or the worshipers of Pagan idols. But why pursue this train of thought farther?—Ocean's countless islands will but repeat the scenes just witnessed. Catholic Europe with here and there its Protestant kingdom, presents a brighter scene—but twilight, without the repose of that loved hour, invests the moral world where reigns "the man of sin." As the eye wandered over these dark regions, now and then a light-house has dispelled the gloom, revealing to the traveler the only way where rocks and quicksands could not wreck his frail bark, and engulph him in the regions of despair—need we say in the faithful keeper we recognised the Protestant Missionary? that the pure light that pointed out the way of life emanated from the Bible? While lingering within the influence of its life-giving rays, I marked the changes wrought by that wonderful volume. Its influence reached a mother as she stood by the river's side about to sacrifice her infant son to the idol she feared, but could not love. It explained the crime of infanticide, it bade her spare her little one and train him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. She turned from the river's brink, a tear bedewed her dark eye, and anon was kindled in her once cold heart the deathless love of a christian mother. To that lone widow about to be consigned to the devouring flame, or the yet more fearful grave, it comes a messenger of life. It bids her live, be useful and happy; and, for obedience to its holy precepts, it promises her, through the merits of another, a home in heaven—a happiness the Elysian fields can not offer—a bliss, unknown in the seventh heaven of Mecca's prophet. The Car of Juggernaut pauses before it. The children of sorrow, the victims of disease, cease to throw themselves beneath its wheels as they learn that our God is a God of love and requires no sacrifices save those that spring spontaneously from a broken and contrite heart. To that multitude pursuing its way to Mecca, to Thibet, or Orissa, it says, our life is but a pilgrimage. If you would meet your God and hold sweet converse with Him, go to that consecrated spot—the closet. He is every where. Earth claims no spot where His voice speaking forgiveness to the penitent heart cannot penetrate—and in no place does that voice assume a sweeter tone, than in the loved sanctuary of home.

But we need not linger on heathen shores to witness the influence of the Book of books. Are you a christian? Read it on the closely written tablets of a heart now reconciled to God—in unholy desires suppressed—in passions subdued—in the once truant affections now fixed upon Him who is chiefest among ten thousands and the one altogether lovely. Are you a woman? Read it in every line of your history. Whence comes that voice that calls you an heir of immortality rather than the soulless being of a day? What has exalted you from the degraded slave to be the loved companion of man? What hand has thrown open wide the portals of knowledge, bade you enter and fearlessly pluck its sweet, unfading flowers? If there be one class bound by ties more strong and tender than all others to love the Bible, 'tis that sex lastly represented at the cross, and first at the sepulchre, for the woman of christian lands is emphatically a creature of the Bible, owing all she enjoys that is worth the possession of an immortal being to the religion it inculcates. The influence of the Bible, who can estimate it? At its bidding, humanity asserts its sway in the heart. The social feelings, roused from their long slumber, are refined and elevated, waking into melody a thousand chords till then unstrung. The arts and sciences finding a congenial soil, spring up and soon convert the wilderness into the fruitful garden, and reduce the elements even to the power of man. The sources of happiness are multiplied and refined—the deity within us asserts its sway, and man under its transforming power becomes emphatically a new and better being. Let the influence of the Bible pervade every avenue of the heart, and its holy principles become the rule of action, & the happiness of heaven would find a home on earth. Does the sceptic affirm that reason rather than revelation has affected the change? Then with Dr. Nelson would we ask, why are these blessings found only in company with the Bible? Why does "the celestial lamp" ever burn most brightly when a companion of revelation? 'Tis true, a Confucius, a Socrates and Plato, with a few other sages of antiquity, reasoned well. But a child of christian climes pointing to his Bible, may affirm with all the confidence of a Plato, I am immortal. But if reason alone is competent to prove the immortality of the soul, and guide to heaven, why is not the mass of mind in heathen lands enlightened—for man is every where "an animal capable of reasoning"? The history of our race forces upon us the conviction that though "the celestial lamp," when trimmed by a philosophic hand, may partially dispel the gloom that hovers around the grave, with the multitude it does not, if it can, unaided by revelation cast one clear ray beyond the Jordan of death. Should our laws and the institutions they foster, be transferred to some dark region of our globe unaccompanied by the Bible, a happy change would pervade every department of society. But does not "the sceptic's frozen eye" perceive that every thing valuable in those laws is borrowed from the Book he spurns—that the light beaming upon the social and literary institutions owes its origin to the Sun of the moral world? Unhesitatingly then do we repeat the assertion, that a moral world without a Bible is involved in gloom as deep as the physical without its sun. That as a body with a pulseless heart—that tuneless harp of thousand strings, is dead to the world around, so is that individual virtually dead to the finer and better feelings of his nature upon whose heart beams no ray from that better world awaking him to those high resolves, those noble deeds so befitting an heir of immortality; and hope, in the absence of that light, its polar star, resigning her reign over the heart of man to her dark rival, fear may wing her way to oblivion's shore, and plunging beneath its dark waters, rise no more.

MARY.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

The Laying on of Hands.

NUMBER III.

In the preceding articles on the subject of laying on of hands, I have examined those passages of scripture which are usually plead for the authority of the practice; and although I do not pretend that any one of them contains a command that hands shall be laid upon all baptized believers, or upon any other class of persons; unless Mark xvi. 18. "They shall lay their hands on the sick," may be so construed: still they evidently show that this was the practice of the primitive church. And I have shown that the church in succeeding ages so understood the subject, and that it appears to have been considered as important, and as essential to full membership in the church as baptism. And it adds not a little to their influence in favor of this matter, that among all who have written in defense of it, whether ancients or moderns, they have expressed but one thing as its end, viz: that the candidates might receive the Holy Spirit. And this practice appears to have been universal in the church until since the reformation. Mr. Keach in his essay says: "There are few or none, as I can gather, who do oppose this ordinance, save some of the Baptists." In the same light the subject was generally viewed until, comparatively speaking, a few years ago, at which time the Baptists in this country appear generally to have practiced it. And I think the first ecclesiastical decision, making the laying on of hands a non-essential to the fellowship in the churches in this body, was passed in the Philadelphia Association in the latter part of the last century. The Seventh-Day Baptists in the U. S. appear to have maintained their integrity in this particular rite of the christian church in its primitive simplicity, perhaps, more than any other branch of the church, and, as far as the writer knows, a happy uniformity of opinion has prevailed, both in regard to the practice, and the object sought in it, until very recently. In this allusion to a difference of opinion, far be it from me to make an unkind reflection, or to impugn the sincerity of those who dissent from us. The objections to the use of this rite in the church, however erroneous in our estimation, are entitled to our respectful consideration. And although we design to investigate them, we shall remember that we are treating with brethren, and not with aliens and strangers. It is probable that there is no new light on the subject, nor any new objection to it. What is now said against it, has been said before.

The first objection which I recollect to have heard against it, and which is probably the most common, is, that we have no command in the New Testament for the practice. I readily admit that we have no precept in just so many words, that all who are baptized shall have hands laid upon them. But none of us are disposed to require an express command for all we religiously do. It would be difficult to produce a precept for female communion, or that we should partake of the Lord's Supper more than once.—For the ordination of ministers and deacons, the right hand of fellowship, that ordained ministers are the only proper administrators of the ordinances, or even that we shall be baptized in water; and many other things which we conscientiously do. But we find in the scriptures enough to satisfy us that those things should be religiously done. Wherein we are satisfied of an apostolic practice, we are bound by the New Testament to follow it. So in regard to the subject under consideration. Although there is no express command for it, there is apostolic examples to enforce it, as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and embraced in its foundation.

2. It has been objected, that the laying on of hands was performed in order to confer extraordinary spiritual gifts; that as these gifts are not continued in the church, the rite should not be now used. To this I will reply,

1. That the conferring these extraordinary gifts was never the avowed object of the rite, and whether they are continued, or not, our duty in this thing is not affected thereby.

2. If we should admit that by laying on of hands gifts were conferred; and that this was the design of it, the objector would gain nothing, unless he could show that God has no longer any gifts for the church. Allowing that speaking with tongues, healing, and working of miracles are not continued in the church: what then? Were these gifts the most important qualifications for the disciples? These gifts were never given to all men, nor at all times; neither were they necessary at all times, more than they were to all men. Some have gifts after this manner and some after that, according to the will of God. The apostle says, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal," but all did not speak with tongues; nor did all work miracles.

I would ask the objector, what he thinks of the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, faith, exhortation, preaching interpreting the scriptures, helps, governments, &c.? Are not these gifts of the Spirit? and are they not more important in edifying the church than the gift of tongues and of miracles? Tongues are but for a sign, and not even that to believers. And I would ask further, if these more important gifts are not now as much needed in the church as formerly? and whether these gifts are not now in the church? To all these interrogatories, I may safely anticipate an affirmative reply. I say then, that if, as some contend, special gifts were the object of laying on of hands, no church was ever more unfortunate than when she corrupted or disused the practice.

3. Again, it is said that extraordinary effects followed this administration in the days of the apostles; that these effects do not now follow it; therefore it should not now be used. Now, if this argument amounts to any thing in this case, it amounts to too much. There is but one instance recorded where such effects followed the laying on of hands. Still more astonishing effects attended preaching on the day of pentecost; but such effects do not now accompany preaching. Must preaching therefore cease? Again, when the disciples were together praying, the place they were in was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost; but these things do not now accompany prayer. Shall prayer therefore cease? An earthquake attended the praying and singing of Paul and Silas, and the foundations of their prison were shaken, and all the doors were immediately opened; but such exercises do not now accompany prayer and singing praises to God. Shall these exercises, therefore, now no longer be performed? If the objection amounts to any thing, it would set aside all her duties. But these duties are indispensable; and the objection is of no weight.

4. I have met with an objection similar to this. "We have as much of the Spirit, and enjoy as much of the presence of God, who do not use this rite, as they do who are in the use of it." This may be so.—We are sensual of our poverty in spiritual things, and dare not boast of our endowments. We have need to use all the means God directs us to, in order to possess and enjoy more of Christ, and of his Spirit. And we can only say, that if they have so much of these that they need not pray and use the means the scriptures present to obtain more, it must be a rare state to which they have attained. Admitting that they have even more of the Spirit than such as have had hands laid upon them, how can this militate against the use of it? If ministers understand it only as an unmeaning human ceremony—a mere embellishment to the church ritual; or, as some hold it, a mere superstition, and teach their spiritual pupils so to view it: what could be expected from a submission to it on this ground? This, with every other religious observance may be useless, and even sinful, if performed without faith; for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Rom. xiv. 23. If performed without recognizing in it a promise, nothing is expected, and, consequently, nothing is received. I apprehend it would be otherwise, if attended to after the primitive manner.

5. Some are ready to admit that the laying on of hands is a gospel ordinance, but deny that it is to be admitted to baptized believers as such. They believe it is only to be used in ordinations of officers in the church. But where, I would ask, is there a precept to be found that can give Heb. vi. 1, 2, this direction? There is, indeed, one instance where hands were imposed in the appointment of deacons, Acts vi. 6, and one example of appointing ministers to a special work in this way, Acts xiii. 3. But it should be recollected that this was not an ordination to the work of the ministry, in the usual sense of the phrase; for both Paul and Barnabas had long been accredited ministers of the Gospel, and this was setting them apart to a special missionary work. We believe, however, that these examples are sufficient to authorize the laying on of hands in ordinations; but not sufficient to limit it to this use, unless we consider that every christian is ordained, or appointed to a sacred office. This is indeed true; for God has ordained every believer to a life of holiness and good works, Eph. ii. 10. And he has in effect said to the church concerning every believer, according to our view of the subject, Ordain this convert to my service by the laying on of hands. The term ordain, simply signifies to appoint.—And in Titus i. 5, which is the principal authority for the ordination of Elders, the original word is καταστησης conjugated from καθιστημι, and must be understood to signify, to constitute, or appoint; but in what manner this was to be done, we are not informed. The scriptures afford us no other direction on this point than what can be gathered from example. These, together with the understanding and practice of the church, have always been considered a sufficient directory on this point. Upon the same principle, the example of the apostles, together with the understanding and practice of the primitive church before she was corrupted by the polluting anti-christian power, should be considered as entitled to equal respect & confidence in regard to the laying on of hands on baptized believers. And especially, since Heb. vi. 1, 2, cannot be fairly referred to any other practice.

There may be other objections to the use of this rite; but they are unknown to me, and it is presumed that if there are such, they are of minor importance. If those already considered were obviated, we believe that those of less consequence would not be allowed to prevent a uniformity in the scriptural use of this rite.

When we consider the importance of union in the church, and the tenacity with which the main body of the church is likely to adhere to a long standing and well established usage, especially one that originated in what is believed to be an apostolic example; it is not to be supposed that she would tacitly submit to an innovation of this nature. The history of the church abounds with instances of this kind, where the inconsiderate rashness of some who are fond of change and novelty, have started new theories, and persisted in them until the tide of party feelings have swelled to a flood, which has inundated the whole church with division and strife, destroying in its course all brotherly confidence and kind feelings, to the disgrace of the church, the dishonor of religion, and the destruction of souls. What is matter of history on this subject should be known and read by all men, and should be a sufficient caution to us, not hastily, nor without due consideration to venture upon the removal of the ancient land-marks of the church. Such as do so, draw upon themselves a fearful responsibility, and make themselves responsible for all the consequences of such innovations. Let us rather study those things that make for peace, whereby one may edify another.

These remarks are not intended to discourage the reformation of the church in any particular in which she may be found in error; but from the nature of the case, we should be impressed with the importance of pursuing an open and charitable course. If we have doubts concerning the correctness of an avowed doctrine, or practice of the church, should we not frankly and kindly communicate them to the whole church for their deliberate consideration and decision? We might hope to find some who have reflected sufficiently upon the subject of our doubts, to be able satisfactorily to resolve them. If the church be in error, we should be anxious for her reformation, and this would be the most likely method of effecting it. If we are so ourselves, we should thereby avail ourselves of their united counsel and instruction.

Remarks upon this subject have already extended beyond my anticipation. Still, I hope my friends will bear with me in one more article, on the practical use of the rite of laying on of hands.

W. B. MAXSON.

Brookfield, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1841.

Religious Department.

GOING TO HEAVEN.

To go to heaven when we die, seems to be the grand wish that we form to ourselves whenever we happen to fall into a serious mode of thinking, or begin to grow melancholy at the prospect of death. To go to heaven—and then it would appear that nothing, nothing more was wanting to complete our happiness.

And yet there is one very simple question, that it is quite surprising we never think of asking; and that is—"What kind of a place we should find it if we went there?" That heaven is a scene of unbounded happiness and everlasting delight, there is no doubt whatever, but should we find it so is quite another question. We know that a deaf man might be surrounded with the sweetest music and the most enchanting harmony, and to him it would be all dead silence; and a beautiful portrait of a lovely landscape would be nothing but darkness to a blind man's eye.

Now, is it not probable that to some men heaven would be a state either of languor or of misery. Heaven is not a theatre that shifts the scene to suit itself to every foolish fancy, and every silly humor of the spectators. It has, indeed, its fulness of joy and its pleasures for ever more; but the question is, have we the power and the relish to enjoy them? We will suppose, for a moment, that our hope of going to heaven is, some way or other, fulfilled, and that (God knows how,) we have passed the fearful account that we shall have to render—of sins committed, of duties neglected, of blessings abused, of time squandered away; we will suppose that we have found our way into that heaven that is the object of our hopes—what have we to promise ourselves? We know at least what we shall not find there; we know that "naked as we came into this world, naked shall we go out of it;" that [illegible] and the earth together [illegible] the dust from which it was taken, and the bond that united us to this lower world is snapped and the channels through which we communicated with it [illegible]; and this busy stage upon which our affections have been running to and fro, seeking rest and finding [illegible] concealed from our view, [illegible] to us a dead blank. Alas! alas! what objects shall we fasten upon to fill up the dreary vacancy which was once occupied by our busy pursuits and our dear pleasures upon earth? For the gold and the silver are gone, and the pipe, and the viol and the tabret, have died away in silence. What can we seize upon to employ our minds, or to excite our desire, or to fill up our conversation? Alas! where is the buying and selling, the bustle of business, or the enthusiasm of enterprise, that suited us at once with our cares and our hopes? Where is the flowing goblet, and the loud and wanton merriment that used to set the table in a roar? Alas! alas! what shall we do for the delightful trifles by which we contrived, while we were upon the earth, to get rid of time, and forget that it was rolling over our heads? What shall we do for those wild pursuits by which we made ourselves mad for a time, and hunted eternity out of our minds? what shall we do for conversation? upon what subjects shall we converse? And then—to go on in this way forever. We can not sit thus dreaming through eternity. If this be heaven, would to God he had still left us upon our beloved earth. Wherefore have ye brought us out of Egypt where we ate and drank, and were merry, and have left us here to perish in the wilderness? Better would it have been for us to have still our interchange of hope and fear, of pleasure and pain, of repose and fatigue, of joy and sorrow, than to endure this dismal serenity, than to say in the morning, "would to God it were evening, and in the evening, would to God it were morning."—Rev. C. Wolfe.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

LIVE WHILE YOU LIVE!

Mr. Carter has just published a small volume entitled "Live while you Live!" by Thomas Griffith, in which he describes "Life as a Pilgrimage—a Race—a Conflict—a Blessing—and a Seed-time for Eternity." I was very much gratified with the christian contemplations which those topics afforded in the Author's work; and send you four short quotations, the perusal of which may edify your readers.

SCRIBE.

LIFE A PILGRIMAGE.—Look to the glory which awaits you at the end. Our journey is a journey of faith; and by faith only, constantly bringing near to us its glorious termination, can it be persevered in. The traveler may meet with friends to guide him in a foreign land, he may be indifferent to the allurements of the way; he may bear its evils patiently, and press undaunted through them all; but yet how often does a pang shoot through his heart, when he remembers his home!—how often does the prospect of that home supply his only joy. Thus it must be with the Christian pilgrim. It was so even with Jesus himself, and much more must it be so with his followers. Remember his touching exclamation when he found his friends and followers so weak in faith—"O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, how long shall I suffer you?"—Who feels not this exclamation bursting from his bosom when he looks around upon the vice, the misery, the folly, and the little faith of men? On no one here can we repose our souls. To all we feel comparatively strangers. Alone we began our mental course; alone we travel through it; and alone we die. Persons, things, and circumstances affect us as we pass along; but they are not ourselves, our home, our God. From the bosom of the Infinite did we spring, and in that bosom we hasten again to hide ourselves. It is this which sets our affection on things above, and not on things on the earth. It is this which soothes and sanctifies our cares, for there remaineth a rest for the people of God.—It is this which quickens us to diligence, and animates to hope, for "he who overcometh shall sit down with Christ upon his throne."

LIFE A RACE.—Look upward and look

onward!—Fix your regards habitually, not on what you are, but what you should be; not on the space you have already passed, but what remains to be run over; not on what man may think your excellencies, but what you know to be your defects; not on the nearer guide-posts only, which may seem to need but little effort to reach, but on the far-off splendors of the goal. That splendor is the blaze of full orbed holiness. The prize you seek is but the consummation of the process you are carrying on in its pursuit. The happiness of heaven is just the holiness which in the very course towards heaven we have been forming in us. Gaze thou on that holiness in its breadth and length, and godlike height.—Meditate long and often on the rich variety of the qualities which make up the conception for which it stands. But where shall we behold this holiness so full, so vivid, as it is revealed to us in the face of Jesus Christ? Even inspired words can not convey to us its perfect image. It is only the living practical manifestation of his living character. He is the great Exemplar of what human nature quickened by the Divine can grow to; the only true and perfect flower which ever has unfolded itself out of the root and stalk of humanity! The man Christ Jesus is the model of the species. To study Him is to study Truth and Life in one! To look at Him is to behold identified the Ideal and the Actual—to see man verily existing, breathing, speaking, and acting in that image of God in which he was at first created—to see the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, restoring to us the bright model of all human excellence, which the first Adam broke into a thousand fragments. In Him concentre all the various rays of holiness,—whatever things are true, and dignified, and pure, and lovely, and of good report—to form one pure white light of 'mildest though intensest splendor.' Therefore it is by looking unto Jesus, as our Righteousness, our Peace, our Strength, our Model, and our Crown, that we must with patience run the Race that is set before us."

LIFE A BLESSING.—Life can never be a blessing, unless we have sought and found, and are maintaining in our daily life, a sense of reconciliation with God as our Father and our Friend. Whence can you gain this sense of reconciliation but by looking to his Son as our Savior and Atonement? How can you seek it without a penitent surrender of yourself into his hands to be his children? How can you maintain it from day to day but by the exercise of faith and prayer? No other subject can be profitable to us, but as this, Reconciliation with God by Christ is mixed up with all.—Are you looking out of yourself to things around you for enjoyment, because you cannot find it within yourself, and are not disposed to seek it within yourself?—If ever you would truly enjoy the gifts of God, you must begin with God. Begin with penitential sorrow if you would have real peace. Incline your hearts to God's testimonies, and not to covetousness. Turn away your eyes from beholding vanity, and make much of God's law. Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and you shall find a blessing in all. Christ came to die for your salvation. Christ calls for your grateful faith and love. Christ demands that your heart and life shall be devoted to his service. Christ can shed abroad in your soul the peace of God which passeth understanding. Then and not till then, may you truly, safely, and richly rejoice in all that you shall put your hands to, for "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart."

LIFE A SEED-TIME FOR ETERNITY.—The diligent believer gains bright anticipations from the tendency of progressive holiness to increase to him the blessedness of that holiness. All true blessedness can be no other than the maturity of holiness: for our joy in God must grow in proportion as our love and our ability for the service of God.—Amid the trials of earth, God's service is the only unmixed joy of those who love Him.—Try to recollect any one enjoyment which has been pure and satisfactory; and you will find that nothing deserves this character, but the lingering sweetness of some work of holiness, or some energizing in God's cause. All other delights are as a dream. The joys of holiness only are deep and permanent.—The blessedness of self-improvement only grows with us as a part of ourselves. The well of water which Christ opens in the soul, only sheds abroad in us those refreshing streams which spring up to everlasting life!—O, then, the unspeakable mercy of God to give his Son to open in us that perennial fount!—Let none of the clouds of earth throw gloom upon your course. Outward things may come and go with creature fickleness; but you have in yourself a joy with which no man intermeddleth; the pledge of constantly increasing blessedness through all eternity. Christ in you now is the assurance of glory hereafter.—"Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father—for the path of the Just is as the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

LIVE WHILE YOU LIVE! —the Epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day.
LIVE WHILE YOU LIVE!—the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies.
Lord, in my views let both united be,
I LIVE IN PLEASURE, WHEN I LIVE TO THEE!

From the Morning Star.

Let every man obtain all the information he possibly can, and make the best possible use of all he gets.

Good preaching, without the exercise of other gifts, can no more keep a church alive, than one great log can kindle a fire.

A. K. M.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, January 19, 1842.

Benevolence of the Gospel.

"Pure religon and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

This season of the year is peculiarly adapted to the exercise of the benevolence of the gospel. The poor now need supplies. Jesus sought out the poor and preached the gospel to them, and loaded them with blessings. They who possess his spirit will imitate his example. Let every christian set himself to this work, and an almost inconceivable amount of wretchedness will be removed. The widow's heart will be made glad—the destitute orphan will be supplied—the sick will be ministered to—and many will learn to praise God and the Lamb for the benevolence of the gospel.

The church is required to exercise this benevolence to its members. There is a community of interest and feeling inseparable from the gospel, to all who are under its reign. And the genius of christianity forbids its professors from withholding supplies from those who are in want. It is even possible that some are in circumstances of poverty or distress that require help from God's heritage. The church cannot be free from censure while it will suffer its members to "pine in want," without offering the needed help.

The benevolence of the gospel extends to all men. Christ died that all might live.—He who possesses his spirit exercises an expansive benevolence, that will not be satisfied, so long as any remain destitute of the blessings of the gospel. He who loves God, loves man who was made in his image. If he see his fellow falling by intemperance—unmanned or chattelized by Slavery, or benighted by Heathenism, he embraces him in his benevolent prayers and efforts. If a man close his eyes to the suffering of his fellows—if he shut his ears against the cry for help that is wafted on every breeze from the land of chains and oppression, and from the dark places of the earth, or from those near at hand, it is because he has not the spirit of the Master he professes to love.

The Sabbath.

The views of the Editor of the Evangelist seem to have excited considerable surprise, not so much because they are novel, as because they do not agree with themselves. After establishing the Sabbath of the commandment so firmly, and declaring that that law remained unrepealed, we can not see why inferential proof should be allowed to do it away, and change that which is unchangeable. If inferential reasoning will do away the Sabbath of the commandment, then we apprehend every precept of the Decalogue may be done away by the same rule. If inferential proof without a "thus saith the Lord," will sustain a new Sabbath, then it will sustain a purgatory. If men allow themselves in one point to depart from the word of God, and set up a new standard, they may do it in others, and thus open the flood-gates of error. To the law and the testimony; if a man speak not according to these, it is because there is no light in him."

Mr. JOHNSON will deliver a Lecture on Sunday evening, (23d inst.,) at his church, on the "Character and Influence of the Devil."

ERRATA.—"Mary the Muser," reminds us of sundry typographical errors which have occurred in the "Musings" already published. While we make the suggested corrections, we can confidently assure her, upon the "proof-reader's" authority, that in future no pains shall be spared in revising "proof-sheets."

In the first No., for curtained steps, read certain steps. In the extract from Dale, for Indian's temples, read India's temples. In the next sentence, for thousands added to the last, read, list. In the 2d No., for here I would love to hear, read, how I would love to hear. Near the top of the second column, for, do you have those stirring scenes, read, do you love. Near the middle of the same column, instead of mingled piety and contempt, read, mingled pity and contempt. In next the last sentence, instead of pactical, read, poetical.

For the Register.

A SERIES OF EVENING MEETINGS will commence (if the Lord permit,) in this village, on Friday evening at 7 o'clock, the 21st inst., at the house of worship belonging to the "De Ruyter Religious Society." It is expected that Eld. J. B. PIXLEY, Pastor of the Baptist Church, will preach the first sermon.

"Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee"? This should be our united continued prayer.

J. R. JOHNSON,
Pastor of the 'DeRuyter Religious Society.'
De Ruyter, Jan. 18, 1841.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Brief Remarks on the "History of the Sabbath."

MR. EDITOR,—In the article entitled "the History of the Sabbath," copied from the New York Evangelist, I noticed in No. 45, Vol. II. of the Register, with no little emotion, the following statement, viz:—"Some, as the Jews, have even among Christians kept the seventh day instead of the first. This denies the argument from the practice of the apostles, and separates the Sabbath from all the peculiar glory of the Christian system." And although I was much pleased with your strictures, I beg leave to make a few additional remarks. The author alleges that the practice of keeping the seventh day instead of the first, "denies the argument from the practice of the apostles"—meaning, I suppose, the argument for keeping a first day Sabbath. This we admit: for it is manifestly void of solidity, and ought to be clearly and promptly rejected.

In the first place, when the most is made of it from the common version, it lacks a Divine warrant from the change in question. Yea; it does not so much as evince that the practice of holding religious assemblies on the first day of the week was then common and general in the church.

Secondly; all the seeming force which the argument possesses rests upon a mistranslation of the Greek phrase, ευ μια των Σαββατων, (eu mia toon Sabbatoon,) which must be sufficiently evident to every one who will candidly and thoroughly examine Acts xx. 6, and 1 Cor. xvi. 2, in the light of the original scriptures.

Thirdly; the actual practice of the apostles and primitive christians, as fairly and conclusively gathered from the New Testament records, is in favor of the seventh day. This was the Sabbath so often mentioned, and so conscientiously observed.—Although, therefore, we deny the argument from apostolic practice in favor of a first day Sabbath, we do not deny it in favor of the Sabbath of the Decalogue. Hence, we give it all its legitimate weight. The practice of the apostles was in perfect accordance with the will of God as expressed in the law which was written with his own finger, and which Jesus Christ "came not to destroy, but to fulfil."

Our author, moreover, affirms that the practice to which he alludes, "separates the Sabbath from all the peculiar glory of the Christian system." But how can it do this, when it is evidently one of the peculiar excellencies of the gospel to make men holy—and when to be holy is to be conformed to that very law which contains the seventh day Sabbath? Is not Jesus Christ the mediator of the New covenant? and does not this covenant provide for the writing of this law, originally engraved on stones, upon the fleshly tables of the heart? And is it any where intimated that one of these commandments is not so written as well as another? Most surely, this law remains unaltered in "one jot, or tittle;" and hence the Sabbath which it enjoins is obligatory without amendment. And if there be any glory in obedience to the commandments of God, we do not "separate from the Sabbath all the peculiar glory of the Christian system," by keeping the seventh day. Our brother is entirely mistaken. The separation of the glory complained of, is on the other side. It is the fault of those who substitute, without Divine authority, the first day for the seventh, or keep a Sabbath of man's devising for one which God has himself appointed.—And as we do not separate from the Sabbath the glory of obedience to the manifested will of God, so we do not separate from it the glory of the Christian system, contained in its provision for the forgiveness of sins, through the obedience and death of Christ, and in the doctrine of the resurrection, and of life everlasting. The seventh day Sabbath is admirably adapted as a special season to contemplate and improve all those items of redemption, as well as God's original work of creation. The transition from what the world and man, at first, were, to what they are, and must become, under the new economy, is easy and natural. And the more deeply we are affected with what existed, when God pronounced the stupendous system which he had found very good, and rested on the seventh day from all his work; and, also, with what was forfeited by the fall, the more deeply we shall be affected with the work of redemption, and the ultimate rest provided for the people of God. Hence, the original Sabbath is perfectly adapted to contemplate and improve all the Divine operations from the commencement to the conclusion. In this light, God himself viewed the matter, else he would have appointed another Sabbath. Whatever glory belongs to any part of the Christian system;—yea, whatever is contained in the concentrated excellency of all its parts, attaches to the seventh day Sabbath, as a Divinely authorized season of holy rest, worship and instruction. If the gospel be a doctrine according to godliness," it certainly cannot tarnish its glory, to keep the commandments of God—one and all of them. Let our author first prove that God has changed his own institution, and now requires us to keep the first instead of the seventh day of the week, and that for a new reason, not to be found in the original command, and we will admit the justness of his conclusion. But this we deliberately and boldly aver he has not done, and cannot do. And hence, what he charges upon those who keep the seventh day Sabbath must revert upon himself, and those of the same practice. Why will not men open their eyes to that which is so perfectly manifest? This author reasoned admirably so long as he kept within the limit of Divine instruction: yea, he advanced principles which are at perfect war with the notion of a change of the Sabbath. But, alas! he finds himself included among the great mass of first day Christians, and under the powerful influence of custom; and thus attempts to shield himself under a supposed apostolic practice. He abandons his mode of arguing from fixed and authorized principles, and wanders away into the wild field of conjecture! O, that he would keep on the ground he first took, and be consistent throughout! In that case, the above complaint would no longer be reiterated.

Yours, truly,
JABEZ CHADWICK.
Weedsport, Jan., 1842.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

The Missionary.

BY REV. B. FOLTS.

The yet recent death of the Rev. Coleby C. Mitchell and his young and devoted wife, has occasioned the deepest sorrow to multitudes of Christians. Many have wept that they left us so suddenly, and under circumstances so peculiarly trying. FAITH alone discerns Jehovah's hand in this afflictive scene. And it is faith that lifts as to a voice from the Eternal battlements proclaiming still—THAT ALL IS WELL.

Thus shall it be confessed by the advancing host of God, who witness the unfolding designs of future Providence. Like the early death of Harriet Newell and the lamented fall of Munson and Lyman, so shall this event be sweetly sanctified and blest to the enlargement of the borders of Zion among the dark and bewildered nations.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell were both natives of Conn. And it was only in the fall of 1840, that he was ordained as a missionary to the Nestorians. Soon after his marriage, which succeeded his ordination, he embarked with his wife for their distant but interesting field of labor. They arrived at Smyrna sometime in the Spring. From thence they proceeded to Beyroot in Syria. From Beyroot they departed for their destination in the interior, during August of the current year—anxious to enter at once upon their field of promised usefulness. After enduring the fatigues of nearly a month's travel through the desert region that intervened—the privations and hardships of the journey fatally impaired Mr. Mitchell's health—who died after a short sickness. His attendant Koords buried him in the sands, without shroud or coffin.

Happy spirit! Nothing was too good for thee to give. Nothing too hard for thee to suffer—to win jewels for thy Master's crown. Thy desert burial matters but little—for thine are the kingly robes, and the bright inheritance, and the immortal—fadeless crown—surely "all is well."

But we must return to the partner of his trials. You see her in her loneliness and widowhood, but her Spirit cannot linger!—They were lovely in their lives, and in their death were not divided.

The young missionary's wife survived her husband but a few days. She was very young—and hers was seemingly every thing that is lovely in woman. She was devotedly pious, and devotedly attached to her husband, and the precious cause to which they were consecrated.

Long will her friends and the church remember her worth. Long shall her influence live, and heathen converts weepingly recount her self-denial, and perils, and early death.

"Sister, thou wast mild, and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze,
Pleasant as the air of evening,
When it floats among the trees.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in thy grave so low,
Thou no more wilt join our number—
Thou no more our tears shalt know.

Dearest Sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yet again we hope to meet thee
When the day of life is fled;
There in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed"

O the raptures of the immortal state!—Where not a tear-drop shall ever mar the bliss of happy spirits. The peaceful consciousness! that there—

"Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown."

Let perils gather thick around us—let tribulation dash on its angry waves and threaten to overwhelm us—still, who would not struggle, in reliance on an arm unseen, for a destination so glorious? Would we be sharers in the Savior's glory, then must we be partners in his sorrows. Thus was it with the missionaries who are now at rest. It is earthliness and unbelief that would enshroud their desert graves with all that is melancholy and repulsive;—whilst faith catches a brighter vision, and beholds them in fellowship with the THRONE, and in companionship with its adoring myriads.—Yes, they are gone—but they have left us to enter an enlarged and higher sphere of usefulness—and it is our province to say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

They tarried long enough to test their devotion to the missionary cause. The test was accepted. Speedily were their perils and labors closed. But they have left an influence that shall survive the wreck of thrones and empires, and run down parallel with the annals of time. That influence shall call up many to stand in their stead, and gather in the harvests over which they wept. As they did—so shall many respond to the spirit of the beautiful missionary hymn—

"My soul is not at rest. There comes a strange
And secret whisper to my spirit like
A dream of night, that tells me I am on Enchanted ground. Why live I here? The vows
Of God are on me, and I may not stop
To play with earthly shadows, or pluck earthly flowers,
'Till I my work have done, and rendered up Account. The voice of my departed Lord
"Go teach all nations" from the eastern world
Comes on the night-air, and awakes my ear,
And I will go.

I may not longer doubt
To give up friends, and home, and idol hopes,
And every tender tie that binds my heart
To thee, my Country.—Why should I regard
Earth's little store of borrowed sweet? I sure
Have had enough of bitter in my cup
To shew me that never was it His design
Who placed me here, that I should live at ease
Or drink at pleasure's fountain. Henceforth, then,
It matters not if storm or sunshine be
My earthly lot—bitter or sweet my cup,
I only pray, God fit me for the work.
God make me holy, and my spirit nerve
For the stern hour of strife. Let me but know
There is an arm unseen that holds me up—
An eye that kindly watches all my path,
Till I my weary pilgrimage have done;
Let me but know I have a friend that waits
To welcome me to glory. And I joy to tread
The dark and death-fraught wilderness.
And when I come to stretch me for the last
In unattended agony beneath
The Cocoa's shade; or lift my dying eyes
From Afric's burning sands, it will be sweet
That I have toiled for other worlds than this.
I know I shall feel happier than to die
On softer bed. And if I should reach heaven—
If one that hath so deeply, darkly sinned!—
If one whom ruin and revolt have held
With such a fearful grasp—If one for whom Satan hath struggled as he hath for me,
Should ever reach the blessed shore, O how
This heart will flame with gratitude and love,
And thro' the ages of Eternal years,
Thus saved my spirit never shall repent
That toil and suffering once were mine below."

Here are breathed out the consecrated fires of a missionary heart—a heart educated at the altars of God, and trained for peril and hardship.

Ready—cheerfully ready to make any sacrifice the cause of Christ and the salvation of the perishing heathen may require. This was eminently the spirit of the missionary Mitchell and his faithful companion. It was thus that they could die in triumph amid the drifting sands of Asia. Peacefully shall their dust repose. Yes! peaceful and secure beneath the vigils of a sleepless eye. Whilst to their unfettered, happy spirits how welcome the commissioned convoy that bore them to a brighter destiny! The very incident of their translation from desert wastes, has gathered an increased sweetness around the charms of heaven. It was as well for them as "to die on softer bed." Could we but realize their joyous greetings from Prophets, and Martyrs, and Missionaries, who have gone before—the divine approval of the Savior they loved on earth—and their fulness of bliss in the fruition of his smiles in heaven—and could we realize with what joy they now—

"Recount the labors of their feet,"

Certainly we should not weep for them, but for ourselves, and a world in its perishing. Let incessant prayer ascend to the God of Missions, that multitudes may be disciplined and sent forth into the vast fields that are ready to the harvest; that when one falls a score may arise, whose hearts beat in unison with the heart of the Great Missionary from heaven for the salvation of the wide family of man.

Roll on, ye immortal chariots—roll, and speed the gospel as brightness, and salvation as a lamp that burneth, to every kindred, and tribe, and people; until the banner of the cross shall be unfurled on every hill top, and in every valley and glen, and the spirit of pious devotion be kindled in every heart, that shall burn pure and constant as the altar fires of heaven.

Then shall Messiah's kingdom triumph over the malice of devils, and the usurped authority and wickedness of man. Then shall all love and revere Him, "from the least even unto the greatest," AND THE MISSIONARY'S WORK BE ACCOMPLISHED.

Scott, Cortland co., Dec. 31, 1841.

Congressional News.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Jan. 8.—The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives were instructed by a vote of 112 to 88, to report a bill on the 12th inst., for the repeal of the Bankrupt Law.

The Tariff question has been referred to the Committee on Manufactures, instead of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is likely, therefore, that a report will be made favorable to protection or discriminating duties.

New-York Legislature.

Tuesday, Jan. 4, 1842.—At 12 o'clock, Lieut. Gov. Bradish took the chair and called the Senate to order. The oath of office was then administered by the President to the new members present, and committees were appointed to inform the Governor and the Assembly that the Senate was organized.

The Message of the Governor was delivered by his private Secretary, Henry Underwood, Esq., at half past 12 o'clock, read, and then the Senate adjourned.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock, by P. B. Prindle, clerk of the late Assembly, and the members elect were sworn in by the acting Secretary of State.

The House then proceeded to ballot for a Speaker, and the result was as follows:

For Levi S. Chatfield,	93
George S. Simmons,	31
Blank,	1

And thereupon Levi S. Chatfield was declared to be duly elected Speaker.

The following persons were then elected officers of the House:

John O. Cole, Clerk; Abner N. Beardsley, Sergeant-at-Arms; John W. Turner, Door-Keeper; and George Van Deusen and Pliny M. Bromley, Assistants.

Committees were then appointed to apprise the Governor and the Senate that the Assembly was organized; the Message of the Governor was received, read, and referred to a committee of the whole House.

Jan. 12.—Mr. Grout from a majority of the select committee consisting of the New York Delegation, made a report upon the subject of the New York Registry Law.—[The report is couched in very strong terms against the law in question, and the legislation which produced it. It recommends the repeal of the Registry sections and the continuance of the district system, and is accompanied by a bill for this purpose.]

Mr. E. G. Baldwin expressed his dissent from this report.

Mr. McMurray moved the printing of the bill and the report. He stated that it had been the hope of the majority of the delegation, that all their colleagues would have joined with them, and the report would thus have been unanimous. But since such could not be the case, he felt grateful to the people of the State—he felt grateful to a kind Providence who had so changed the occupants of the seats on this floor that the petitions of the people of the city of New York would no longer be totally disregarded. To this Legislature the glory would belong of repealing this odious—this tyrannical—this iniquitous law.

Mr. E. G. Baldwin stated that he never had the least intention of favoring this report or the accompanying bill. He believed that the Registry Act was one which threw around the exercise of the elective franchise a safeguard, vitally necessary to protect it from fraud and corruption.

Mr. O'Sullivan thought that the gentleman who last spoke, was the only one of all the delegation from the city, who would object to the repeal of the Registry. Mr. O'S. then commented on what he termed the outrageous election frauds of 1838—to conceal which he believed all the clamor for this law had been got up.

But, said he, we come here like Mark Antony, not to speak of the bill, but to bury it. He felt inclined to imitate the example of one of those, who, in the famed convention that doomed to death Louis XIV., when all were giving their reasons for their suffrage, simply said "Mort sans phrase."—Death, without a speech. He believed it not necessary to say more. The repeal of this act was, he hoped to be carried through the House by the voice of both parties.

Mr. Davezac spoke very animatedly in favor of the proposed repeal.

The printing of the report was ordered.

Mr. McMurray moved the printing of five times the usual number. The motion was, under the rule, referred to the committee on printing.

Bank Receiver Act.—The question coming on the final passage of the bill to repeal the act relative to the appointment of Receivers of Monied Institutions, passed 1841.

Mr. Loomis being entitled to the floor, went into a review of the Legislative history of the act sought to be repealed.

Mr. Smith stated that he felt a strong desire to address the House on this subject, believing it one of the greatest importance, but the state of his health to-day forbade him from speaking. He threw himself on the courtesy of the House, and as the minority had not as yet troubled them with much debate, he hoped the question would be permitted to lie over, and moved accordingly.

Mr. Swackhamer believed that his friends would "see through the game," and hoped no postponement would take place.

Mr. Tamblin expressed a similar hope.

The House refused to postpone.

Mr. O'Sullivan renewed a motion to postpone the final question till to-morrow. It was due to the gentleman from Genesee, that he should be heard.

The question was put upon Mr. O'S.'s motion.

The Speaker being about to declare the motion carried. Mr. Tamblin called a count, and the House divided—ayes 51, nays 37; so the motion was carried.

Mr. O'Sullivan on notice introduced a bill for the more effectual punishment of crimes, heretofore punishable by death.

Also, on notice, a concurrent resolution to restrict the pardoning power in capital cases.

Mr. Leland, on notice, introduced a bill to amend certain portions of the revised statutes in relation to executions on judgments, on appeals from justices' courts.

On Mr. Hitchcock's motion, the papers on file relative to draining the Great Swamp in the County of Madison, were taken therefrom and ordered referred.

Mr. Townsend on notice, introduced a bill requiring the State Printer to publish a weekly newspaper. (Referred to the committee on public printing.)

On Mr. Hoffman's motion, the committee on banks were directed to examine the accounts kept in the Comptroller's office relative to the redemption of the bills of the Safety Fund Banks in liquidation, and into the condition of said fund and the issue of circulating notes by said banks.

Mr. Loomis moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the resolution relative to the election of Secretary of State.

The House determined to consider—Ayes 49, nays 43.

The question then coming up on Mr. Leland's motion to postpone the election until the first Monday of February.

Mr. Hunter moved an adjournment, which prevailed—Ayes 65.

In Senate, Thursday, Jan. 13.—After the presentation of petitions, Mr. Root rose and remarked upon a report of a speech made by himself, in which he is made to say, "that the Government of Great Britian had been practically more democratic than the United States." This he distinctly denied.

Mr. Furman gave notice of a bill to carry on the public works of the State.

Mr. Dickinson introduced a bill to extend the benefits of Common School education to the city of New York. After some discussion as to its reference, it was decided by a party vote to refer it to the Literature Committee.

A lengthy discussion was then had on Mr. Root's proposition to amend the Constitution of the U. S., in which Messrs. Root, Dickinson, Denniston, Ruger, and Paige participated.

The Public Faith.—Mr. Franklin called for the consideration of the resolutions relative to the public faith.

Mr. Hunter said the Senator from the Seventh (Mr. Sherwood,) who had introduced the substitute for the first resolution, had been detained from the Senate yesterday and the day before by indisposition.—He had it is true struggled up here this morning, but his health was such as to render it impossible for him to join in the discussion to-day. He therefore appealed to the Senator from the First, (Mr. Franklin,) to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Franklin said he trusted he was always ready to extend courtesy to its fullest extent to all Senators. If, therefore, the Senator from the Seventh, (Mr. Sherwood,) would in his place say that his health forbade his engaging in the discussion of these important resolutions to-day, he would most cheerfully withdraw his motion.

Mr. Sherwood did not wish to prevent the discussion on the resolutions at this time, if the Senator from the First, (Mr. Franklin,) or any other Senator desired to speak on the subject, he should be pleased to hear them. But as for himself he was utterly unable, from the state of his health, to join in the discussion to-day.

Mr. Franklin thereupon withdrew his motion.

News of the Day.

Mr. Powers, the American sculptor, now in Florence, has written to a friend in Baltimore for some American clay, which he says is superior for his purposes to any in Italy.

It is stated that Gen. Gaines will be offered a permanent leave of absence, and the next in rank be detailed to the command of his Military Department. This is the least ungracious way to set aside a soldier, once useful, but completely in his dotage.

The Land Commissioner has made his report. He states that it is expected that 16,704,800 acres of public lands will be prepared for sale during 1842. He recommends, among other things, that a National Geologist be employed to make examination of the public domain.

John Randolph's Will.—The Washington correspondent of the Tocsin, says, that the Randolph Will case has been decided in favor of the freedom of the slaves. The particulars not yet learned.

Capt. Ensor, of the brig Creole, who was dangerously wounded by the insurgent slave passengers in his vessel, has recovered, and left Nassau previous to the 15th ult., for New Orleans, to join his vessel.

The Legislature of Alabama has determined to repeal, unconditionally, the law of that State which provides for the general election of Representatives to Congress on the general ticket system.

The Sandy Hill Herald says:—"We know a man who has worked on an average 16 hours each day for the last twenty years, to pay notes which he had endorsed, and for which he never received the value of one farthing. He is now 70 years of age. We challenge the world to produce a similar instance of integrity.

A memorial to the Legislature has been put in circulation, praying that the Utica and Schenectada Railroad shall not charge over two cents per mile—as it is asserted that the nett profits of the road for the last five years have been $238,887 per annum, or 13 1-4 per cent. on the capital.

Candles made at New Bedford, Mass., on Monday morning of last week, were burning in Albany on the evening of the same day: and flour threshed and ground in Rochester on Monday evening, was made into bread and eaten at Boston on Thursday. A barrel of salt was received at the same time, made from the water which was bubbling in the spring on Monday.

Harden's express line, it seems, is connected with the Government, and has paid in two years and a half, $20,000 to the Post Office Department for postage. The postage on every letter is paid by him into the post office at the place whence the letter is sent from. He receives postage on letters to every part of Europe.

Yale College.—Mr. Bancroft says that Yale College owes its birth to ten worthy farmers, who in 1770 assembled at Brandford, and each one, laying a few volumes on a table, said, "I give these books for the founding of a college in this colony." Such was the small beginning of Yale College, in New Haven, Conn., which perhaps is excelled by no college in the United States, in the ability of its faculty and professors, the present number of its students, and the number, talent and influence of its alumni.

Singular Investment.—We were told a few days since, that there is a wealthy individual in this community who is owner by purchase of sixty-nine pews! Of these, 17 are in Baptist societies; 7 in Unitarian; 12 in Trinitarian; 2 in Roman Catholic; 9 in Universalist; 6 in Episcopalian; and 16 in Methodist. The average cost of these pews was about $60 each, and he has derived an average interest on the cost of 11 per cent. This is not only a singular investment, but if we have been correctly informed, a more profitable one than any one would have been led to suppose.—Concord Freeman.

Prize Essay on a Congress of Nations.—The Committee of the London Peace Society say of this American work, that "a more important book of human production was never given to the public. It will form an era in the history of our world, and at the close of centuries to come, it will be read with interest, and referred to with honor, by statesmen, and by historians."—The same Committee have presented a copy of the "last Essay in this magnificent volume—from the pen of Wm. Ladd" —to Louis Phillippe, and to each of his new ministers; also to each member of the British Parliament, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons, and likewise to each of the learned Judges.—Boston Record.

Well done Boston!—The following fact will show how much New York is behind Boston in its sense of what is due to public virtue. The Boston Mercantile Journal states that the applications made by Dr. Lardner, for the Odeon, in which to deliver public lectures, was promptly rejected. —N. Y. Watchman.

"The Greatness of England."—The population of Great Britain is twenty-eight millions, and of them twenty millions may be said, in homely phrase to live from hand to mouth by precarious labor, and with scanty supplies of the necessaries of life. —N. Y. Watchman.

Not Bad.—At Columbia, Pa., is a Temperance paper, called the "Water Spout."

A Hard War in Virginia.—The county of Abington in Virginia, prsents by the last census a population of 13,000, with 103 distilleries, which pour forth anually 40,150 gallons of distilled spirit; being one still-house to every 1,300 inhabitants, and 3 gallons to each individual, men, women, and children. But the axe is laid at the root of the tree. A Washington Total Abstinance Society is commenced there. It met on the 8th of December, consisted of 17 members, and soon ran up to ninety, and already the Upas begins to totter. These gentlemen intend to perform their duty cheerfully, and we have no doubt of a complete victory. —Temp. Union.

Old Newspapers—The oldest living paper in America is the New-Hampshire Gazette. It was the first paper printed in New-Hampshire, and was established by Daniel Fowle, at Portsmouth, in August, 1756. It was originally printed on half a sheet of foolscap, quarto, as were all the papers of that day; but were soon enlarged to half a sheet crown folio, and sometimes appeared on a whole sheet of crown. It is now in its 88th year, and is a well conducted paper of goodly dimensions.

The oldest living newspaper in England is the Lincoln Mercury, first published in 1695. The oldest in London is the St. James Chronicle, of 1761. The oldest paper in Scotland, is the Edinburgh Evening Courant, of 1705. The oldest in Ireland, the Belfast News Letter, of 1736.—N. Y. S. Mechanic.

Discovery of Jewels.—The Jewels of the Temples of the sun, which at the time of the conquest of Peru, the natives had concealed from the Spaniards, have been lately recovered. The value of them has been calculated at $180,000,000.

The Purpose of Pennsylvania.—The following resolution on the subject of repudiation was introduced into the Senate of Pennsylvania on the 6th, and read, considered and adopted without a dissenting voice;—

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the faith and credit of Pennsylvania, pledged for the security of her loans, shall be kept sacred and inviolate; individuals may be found who shrink from their accustomed integrity of character when embarrassment overtakes them: but the free sons of Pennsylvania authorize us, their representatives, to declare to her creditors and to the World, that her faith and credit shall be preserved inviolate in every emergency; and that the doctrine of repudiation of a debt contracted under law, whether judiciously or injudiciously expended, shall never, until the last moral and political tie of her goverment is sundered, be visited upon her honest and confiding creditors, of this and other countries.

Seven Slavers shot at Havana.—The New-York Express contains a letter from Havana, giving an account of the whipping of several slaves, and their determination to kill their keeper. He was informed of the design by one of the slaves, and had a file of soldiers in waiting before their quarters. Out they rushed, and not seeing the object of their vengeance, fell upon the soldiery, who immediately fired upon them, killed seven outright, and wounded several others. The negroes then took the scaffolding, and began to throw down stones upon the soldiers, only one of whom was hurt. They were shortly afterwards secured and conducted to jail.

Mexico—Santa Fe Expedition.—There is no longer any doubt of the capture of this expedition; but it is now stated that they did not surrender without a desperate struggle. When within two days' journey from Santa Fe, they were encountered by 1200 Mexican volunteers, 300 regulars and 300 rancheros, or herdsmen. This body of 1800, the "Expedition" fought for more than twelve hours—killing over 320 Mexicans, and losing only two of their number.—They fired away every ounce of their ammunition, and surrendered from that cause only. Among them were two Americans, Mr. Kendall one of the editors of the New-Orleans Picayune, and a son of General Combs, of Kentucky. It is supposed they will be shot, or confined in the Mexican mines. The New-Orleans papers think our government ought to fit out an expedition for their relief.

Rail Road from Goshen to Albany.—The preliminary survey of a Rail Road from Albany to intersect the New-York and Erie Rail Road at Goshen, is progressing. The expense of the survey has been defrayed, so far, by voluntary subscriptions of the inhabitants along the route. There is, we believe, something more wanted to complete the survey to Albany. We have a direct interest in this improvement, and our citizens will not hesitate to meet any reasonable demand upon them, for the completion of the Survey.—Evening Journal.

Notices.

PROSPECTUS
OF
VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-Day Baptist Register will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance, or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for a fair discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

SABBATH SCHOOL COUNTY CONVENTION.

The undersigned, feeling the want of interest, and consequently the want of vigorous action in promoting Sabbath Schools, recommend holding a Convention in the Methodist Chapel in Morrisville, on Wednesday the 26th of January next, at 10 o'clock, A. M., for the purpose of consultation upon measures best adapted to promote Sabbath Schools. In order to throw a pervading influence through the country, and awaken in the hearts of Christians and Parents a stronger, and still stronger desire for the intellectual, moral, and religious culture of children and youth generally, it has been deemed important and highly desirable that all who feel interested in this cause, should concentrate their powers and influence by forming a County Sabbath School Association.

Allow us to urge one and all to attend.—Christians of all Evangelical Churches, the call is to you. The common feelings of humanity, the perpetuity and stability of our Republican Institutions, the deep feelings of our hearts for the triumphs of truth as disciples of Christ, call loudly and beseechingly upon you to attend, and there commence vigorous and unflinching efforts in this department of God's vineyard. Sabbath Schools are essentially, nay, vitally connected with the success, and ultimate triumph of the Cross.

The above call is signed by a great number, from most of the towns in the County, the names of whom, for want of room, we omit.—[Ed.

MARRIED,

In Scott, on the 2d inst., by Rev. Cornelius Wagoner, Mr. MARSHALL SPRAGUE, of Mass. and Miss ELIZABETH WAGONER, of Scott.

In Scott, on the 3d inst., by Rev. John Crawford, Mr. CLARK BARBER, and Miss LUCINDA M. BARBER.

In Scott, on the 5th inst., Mr. ELIAS GREEN, of Alfred, and Miss BETSEY BARBER, of Scott.

In Summerhill, on the 5th inst., by Rev. Mr Dodge, Mr. HENRY BARBER, of Scott, and Miss MARY ANN SNYDER, of Summerhill.

In Scott, on the 16th inst., by Rev. Russel G. Burdick, Mr. E H. P. POTTER, and Miss ROXANA E. BURDICK.

LIST OF LETTERS.

R. J. S. Rogers, Rev. Job Tyler, G. W. Jones, (you may keep them,) E. C, Pool, (we will see,) Jepthah F. Randolph, (you have our thanks for your services,) Jesse Brown, "Mary," Rev. Z. Campbell, (we are much obliged,) R. T. Green, (we will attend to your request,) W. P. Langworthy, (the alteration is made.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

E. Goodrich, $2, of Rev. Job Tyler, $5, cr. W. Klady, vol. 1 and 2, and ,50 vol 3, of Jepthah F. Randolph, $4, cr. W. F. Randolph, and self, $2 each vol. 2, of Jesse Brown, $2, cr. S. Kinyon, vol. 2, of Z. Campbell, $10, cr. A. A. F. Randolph, O. Holcomb, H. Stannard, $2, each, H. Wells, $4,50, vol. 1 and 2, of Hiram Babcock, $28, cr. self, A. M. Babcock, E. Babcock, J. A. Kinyon, B. L. Babcock, Wm. Frink, A. A. Maxson, W. B. Wells, L. Woolworth, E. Maxson, D. E. Lewis, P. Clarke, H. Truman, and L. Bush, $2 each vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

VALUABLE FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale a valuable farm, situated in the town of Truxton, Cortland Co., N. Y., and on the turnpike road one mile west of the flourishing village of De Ruyter.

Said farm contains about 180 acres of land, well watered, and well adapted to the culture of grain and grass, with comfortable buildings.

There are also on the premises, about one hundred thrifty bearing appletrees, and about 50 or 60 acres of valuable standing timber, containing abundance of first rate rail timber. There is also a valuable stone quarry on the premises.

Said farm will be offered unusually low, considering the peculiar advantages to be derived from so pleasant a location.

Terms of payment almost to suit the purchaser. For further particulars enquire of the subscriber on the premises. J. R. BUTTS.

Truxton, Jan. 12, 1842.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers this day expires by limitation. The Books and accounts of the firm will be settled by either of the subscribers, on whom those indebted will please call and arrange their accounts soon.

JAMES CRANDALL,
THOMAS RUSSELL.

De Ruyter, Jan. 15, 1842. 47w3

FOR SALE.

A FIRST rate Cutter. Terms of payment to suit the purchaser. Enquire at this office.

Jan. 18, 1842. 47tas

NOTICE. The notes and accounts of the late firm of ELMORE ANNAS & AYER, are placed in the hands of George Sears for settlement, and collection where they may be found previous to the first day of March. All demands remaining unsettled at that date, will be left with the proper officer for collection.

J. N. ELMORE,
A. N. ANNAS,
Jan. 10, 1842. WILLIAM J. AYER.

DISSOLUTION. Notice is hereby given that the co-partnership heretofore existing under the firm of E. ELLIS & Co., is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business hereafter will be carried on by E. ELLIS. All notes and accounts of the said firm are assigned to E. ELLIS, and must be collected by him. ELNATHAN ELLIS, ELIJAH ATKINS Jr.

Georgetown, Jan. 1, 1842. 46w3

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on book account of three months standing, are respectfully solicited to call and settle the same by the 15th day of January next, or he will be obliged to put them in other hands for collection, as he is in debt and his creditors WILL have their PAY.

HALSEY STILLMAN.

De Ruyter, Dec. 24th, 1841.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the
NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots. Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the October 4. STONE STORE.

L. W BLISS' Window Sash.
Bliss' & Co. " Blinds.
Holme's Sampson & Sailsbury Edged Tools consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes an, Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE,
October 4. Manufacturers' Agent.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

NO IMPOSITION.
NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the
MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

DRUGS & MEDICINES.
De Ruyter, January 17, 1842.

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT by the STONE STORE merchant in New York at
S. D. DELLAY'S.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and requests from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

HAIR! HAIR!

BALDNESS.—Important Discovery—the Great Mystery found out at last.

DR. STERRY'S HAIR REGENERATOR.—Dr. Sterry, after much attention to the important subject of preserving the hair, has after many experiments chemical and physical, been able to discover an article which is now offered with the greatest confidence for the toilet, as the best thing ever discovered, its softening and penetrating quality, to produce a good head of hair—to prevent it from falling off when baldness is apprehended—to restore it when baldness has taken place, and to prevent it from turning gray. It is more nourishing than pomatum, antique oil, or Cologne water. It is a beautiful article for ladies' curls—it makes the hair soft and lively, and produces uncommon brilliancy. Thousands have tested its superior virtues and excellence, and in every instance it stands unrivalled. It is an infallible cure in all affections of the skin on the head—as dandruff, &c. &c. Every family should be supplied with a bottle of this oil, that by its application to the head and hair of children, the beautiful and ornamental appendage of a fine head of hair, which nature has supplied us may be preserved.

MAGNETIC ODONTICA.
THE TEETH! THE TEETH!
The Incomparable Tooth Preparation.

THE fact is proved, and the most incredulous and doubting are fully convinced of its great utility, as we have the evidence from the sale of 25,000 boxes of the Odontica, within the past year. It is ascertained from experience, that when used, the teeth will never decay, but remain till the latest age of man, with their natural wear; and more —in thousands of cases, nervous toothache, (that climax of pain) has at once been effectually cured by this most popular dentrifice in America. And in conclusion, where, or who is the young lady or gentleman, aye, the individual that values a beautiful set of teeth, sound gums, and a sweet breath more than fifty cents, that will be longer destitute of a box of Dr. M. Hitchcock's Magnetic Odontica.

LOOK AT THIS.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?

70 000 DIE OF CONSUMPTION every year in the United States, and millions suffer from troublesome coughs and colds, that can be cured by Dr. Hitchcock's Vegetable Cream Cough Drops, a safe medical prescription, containing no poisonous drugs, and used in an extensive practice for several years will most positively afford relief, and save you from that awful disease, pulmonary consumption, which sweeps into the grave hundreds of the young, the old, the lovely and the gay.

Have you a cough!—Be persuaded to purchase a bottle of the Cough Drops to-day! To-morrow may be too late. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

WORMS! WORMS!

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S unrivalled and unequalled Worm Tea, a sovereign remedy for Worms. This invaluable medicine has been tested by the experience of more than ten years use, and administered to more than 18 000 persons of various ages, and not one solitary complaint, for in no one of the thousands of instances, where it has been used agreeable to the printed direction, has it ever failed.

N. B. Ask for Dr. M Hitchcock's Worm Tea, as there are many nostrums abroad for the destruction of worms.

LOTION, LOTION.
DR. EVANS' BEAUTIFYING LOTION.

HIGHLY esteemed for curing all Eruptions, Coarseness, Redness, and Pimples on the Face, Neck or Hands, and effectually cleaning the complexion and removing all diseases of the skin.

Nothing contributes so much to our general success in life, as an engaging first appearance. This Lotion is admired as a most fragrant, mild, safe wash, and greatly esteemed for its virtues in cleansing, softening, and purifying the skin of all eruptions, so injurious to female beauty, and restoring it to a high degree of purity.

SNUFF.
Only Twenty-Five Cents.

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S newly invented SNUFF, the best article ever discovered by scientific men, in Europe or America, for the cure and absolute relief of Catarrh, Dizziness of the Head, Weak Eyes, Nervous Headaches, Fallen Sickness, Fits, and Infants troubled with Snuffles, partial shocks of Palsy, etc.

The above medicines are for sale, wholesale and retail, by Johnson & Dickinson, Utica, N. Y., Allen & Miller, and A. L. Angle, Truxton, N. Y., and by most Druggists in the country, also, by the subscriber. S. D. DELLAY.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Cooper's Pills,	Godfrey's Cordial,
Morrison's Hygean "	Foster's Anodyne Cordial,
Samuel Lee's "	Steer's Liquid Opodeldoc,
Doctor Bishop's "	Dr. McMunn's Elixir Opium,
Cheeseman's Arab'n "	Hive Syrup,
Dr. Phelp's Tomato "	Laudanum,
M. Griffin's Lion of the Day "	Paregoric,
Dr Phinney's "	Oil Organium,
Moffat's Veget. Life "	" Spike,
Gregory's Billious "	" Lemon,
Harlæm Oil,	" Anise.
British "
Pectoral Bal'm Honey

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, aad several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☞ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure beyond a doubt.

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cra[illegible] occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

TO FARMER'S FAMILIES,
AND TO ALL AFFECTED WITH DISEASE.
January 12, 1842.

I have this day been appointed sole agent in this place for the sale of Doct D. JAYNE'S Celebrated medicines consisting of JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, TONIC VERMIFUGE and SANATIVE PILLS.

All articles sold by me are direct from Doct. Jayne, and warranted pure. Printed circulars will accompany articles of his, attesting their worth and virtues, and will be given to any one who may wish to become acquainted with them.

I have the pleasure to inform those afflicted with diseases of the lungs, Consumption, Spitting of Blood, Coughs or Influenza, that I have also been appointed agent for the sale of Joshua Fish's celebrated and unrivalled LILLY SYRUP, which for the last year has affected more cures for the amount used than any other medicine ever offered to the public. Those upon the brink of the grave have been called to health by its powerful effects, the weak have become strong, and the consumptive man has been cured of his pale cheek and haggard look and racking cough. Should the incredulous doubt, let them try it and if it fails to cure, you shall have it free of expense. I have in my possession recommendations from some of the most distinguished men of the age which I shall be glad to show at any time.

PARKER'S PULMONARY BALM.

One of the best medicines for common colds Influenzas &c. &c. &c., to be found in the whole catalogue of patent medicines. Give it a try, it is first rate, call and read [illegible]

S. D. DELLAY

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.
TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all kinds, and Valices, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, Cotton and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck yokes, Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this kind, which I can sell as low as any shop west of Albany or Utica, and even De Ruyter not excepted, according to quality and for durability.

Wanted in exchange for any of the above articles, Wood, and some money, and the remainder in Notes; also, wanted all kinds of Grain, Butter, Cheese and every thing that is raised by the Farmer in this vicinity. Hog Skins, Hay, Fat Cattle, Pine Lumber, &c. &c. &c.

Pine Lumber for sale, also, any quantity of Lime. 10,000 feet first rate Ash Flooring.

J. R. RIDER

De Ruyter, Oct. 5, 1841 32tf

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
S. M. HOUSE,

RETURNS thanks to the public for the liberal patronage received. He would say that he has taken a partner, and the business will be conducted under the firm of HOUSE & BENJAMIN, where they will be ready at all times to do work according to order.

Cutting done at the shortest notice, and warranted to fit if properly made up.

N. B. Fall and Winter Fashions for 1841-2 just received.

One door east of S. D. Dellay's Store.
De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841 30m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality is now offered in lots to suit purchasers, at prices 15 per cent less than is offered by any Dellay in this place by J. N. ELMORE

Nov. 24

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at
Nov. 24 ELMORE'S

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of
Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs,

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the verriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

POETRY.

Forget Me Not.

BY W. H. HARRISON.

The following little poem was written by the late President, in his earlier days; it has a singular force at the present juncture, especially the simile introduced in the two last lines.

The star that shines so pure and bright,
Like a far-off place of bliss,
That tell the broken hearted,
There's a brighter world than this.
The moon that courses through the sky,
Like man's uncertain doom,
Now shining bright with borrowed light—
Now wrapped in deepest gloom—
Or when eclipsed, a dreary blank,
A fearful emblem given
Of a heart shut out by a sinful world,
From the blessed light of heaven.
The flower that freely casts its wealth
Of perfume on the gale;
The breeze that mourns the summer's close,
With melancholy wail;
The stream that cleaves the mountain's side,
Or gurgles from the grot—
All speak in their Creator's name,
And say, "forget me not."
"Forget me not!" the thunder roars,
As it bursts its sulphury cloud;
'Tis murmured by the distant hills,
It echoes long and loud—
'Tis written by the Almighty's hand
In characters of flame,
When the lightnings gleam with vivid flash,
And his power and wrath proclaim;
'Tis murmured when the white waves fall
Upon the wreck-strewn shore,
As a hoary warrior bows his crest,
When his day of rest is o'er.

Miscellaneous Department.

LADY LUCY'S PETITION.

A TALE FOUNDED ON FACTS.

'And is my dear papa shut up in this dismal place, to which you are taking me, nurse?' asked the Lady Lucy Preston, raising her eyes fearfully to the tower of London, as the coach in which she was seated with Amy Gradwell, her nurse, drove under the gateway. She trembled and hid her face in Amy's cloak, when they alighted, and she saw the soldiers on guard, and the sentinels, with their crossed partizans, before the portals of that part of the fortress where the prisoners of State were confined, and where her own father, Lord Preston, of whom she was come to take her last farewell, was then confined under sentence of death.

'Yes, my dear child,' returned Amy sorrowfully; 'my Lord your father, is indeed within these sad walls. You are now going to visit him. Shall you be afraid of entering this place, my dear?'

'No,' replied Lady Lucy, resolutely; 'I am not afraid of going to any place where my dear papa is.

Yet she clung closer to the arms of her attendant, as they were admitted into the gloomy precincts of the buildings, and her little heart fluttered fearfully as she glanced around her, and she whispered to her nurse: 'Was it not here that the two young princes, Edward the Fifth and his brother Richard, Duke of York, were murdered by his cruel uncle Richard, Duke of Gloucester?'

'Yes, my love, it was; but do not be alarmed on that account, for no one will harm you, said old Amy, in an encouraging tone.

'And was not good King Henry the Sixth murdered here also, by that same wicked Richard?' continued the little girl, whose imagination was full of the records of the deeds of blood that had been perpetrated in this fatally celebrated place, many of which had been related to her by Bridget Holdworth, the housekeeper, since her father had been imprisoned in the tower, on charge of high treason.

'But do you think they will murder papa, nurse?' pursued the child, as they began to ascend the stairs leading to the apartment in which the unfortunate nobleman was confined.

'Hush! hush! dear child, you must not talk of these things here,' said Amy, 'or they will shut us both up in a room with bolts and bars, instead of admitting us to see my Lord your father.'

Lady Lucy pressed closer to her nurse's side, and was silent till they were ushered into the room where her father was confined, when forgetting every thing else in her joy at seeing him again, she sprang into his arms, and almost stifled him with her kisses. Lord Preston was greatly affected at the sight of his little daughter, and, overcome by her passionate demonstrations of fondness, his own anguish at the thought of his approaching separation from her, and the idea of leaving her an orphan at her tender age, (for she had only just completed her ninth year, and had lost her mother,) he clasped her to his bosom, and bedewed her innocent face with his tears.

'Why do you cry, dear papa?' asked the innocent child, who was herself weeping at the sight of his distress.

'And why will you not leave this gloomy place, and come home to your own hall again?'

'Attend to me, Lucy, and I will tell you the cause of my grief,' said her father, seating the little girl on his knee; 'I shall never come home again, for I have been condemned to die for high treason, which means an offense against the king, and I shall not leave this place till they bring me forth on Towerhill, where they will cut off my head with a sharp axe, and set it up afterwards over Temple bar or London bridge.'

At this terrible intelligence, Lady Lucy screamed aloud, and hid her face in her father's bosom, which she wetted with her tears.

'Be composed, my dear child,' said Lord Preston, 'for I have much to say to you, and we may never meet again on this side of the grave.'

'No, no! dear papa,' cried she, 'they shall not kill you, for I will cling so fast about your neck, that they shall not be able to cut your head off; and I will tell them all how good you are, and then they will not want to kill you.'

'My dearest love, this is all simple talking,' said Lord Preston. 'I have offended against the law as it is at present established, by trying to have my old master, King James, restored to the throne, and therefore I must die. Do you remember, Lucy, I took you once to Whitehall to see King James, and how kindly he spoke to you.'

'Oh, yes, papa! and I recollect he laid his hand upon my head and said I was like what his daughter, the Princess of Orange, was at my age,' replied Lady Lucy, with great animation.

'Well, my child, very shortly after you saw King James at Whitehall, the Prince of Orange, who married his daughter, came over to England, and drove King James out of his palace and kingdom, and the people made him and the Princess of Orange, king and queen, in his stead.'

'But was it not very wicked in the Princess of Orange to join with her husband to take her father's kingdom from him! I am very sorry King James thought me like her said Lady Lucy, earnestly.

'Hush, hush! my love, you must not talk so of the Princess of Orange, for perhaps she considered she was doing right in depriving her father of his kingdom, because he had embraced the Catholic religion, and it is against the law for a king of England to be a Catholic. Yet I confess I did not believe she would have consented to sign the death-warrants of so many of her father's old servants, only on account of their faithful attachment to him,' said Lord Preston, with a sigh.

'I have heard that the Princess of Orange is of a merciful disposition,' said old Amy Gradwell, advancing towards her master, 'and perhaps she might be induced to spare your life, my Lord, if your pardon were very earnestly entreated of her by some of your friends.'

'Alas! my good Amy, I have no one who will undertake the perilous office of soliciting the royal favor for an attained traitor, lest they should be suspected of favoring the cause of King James.'

'Dear papa, let me go to the Queen, and beg for your pardon, cried Lady Lucy, with a crimsoned cheek and sparkling eye. 'I will so beg and pray her to spare your life, dear papa, that she will not have the heart to deny me.'

'Simple child,' exclaimed her father, 'what should you be able to say to the Queen that would be of any avail?'

'God would teach me what to say, and he has power also to touch her heart with pity for a child's distress, and to open her ear to my earnest petition.'

Her father clasped her to his bosom, and said, 'Thou wouldst be afraid of speaking to the Queen, even if thou shouldst be admitted to her presence, my child.'

'Why should I be afraid of speaking to the Queen, papa? for even if she would be angry with me, and answer harshly, I should be thinking too much of you, father to mind it, or if she were to send me to the tower and cut off my head she could only kill my body, but would have no power at all to hurt my soul, which is under the protection of One who is greater than any king or queen upon earth.'

'You are right, my child to fear God, and to have no other fear,' said her father. 'It is He who hath, perhaps, put it into your heart to plead with the Queen for my life, which, if it be his pleasure to grant, I shall feel it indeed happiness for my child to be made the instrument of my deliverance from the perils of death, which now encompass me; but if it should be otherwise, his will be done. He hath promised to be a father to the fatherless, and he will not forsake my good and dutiful child when I am low in the dust.'

'But how will Lady Lucy gain admittance to the Queen's presence, my Lord?' asked old Amy, who had been a weeping spectator of the scene between the father and child—'I will write a letter to her godmother, the Lady Clarendon, requesting her to accomplish the matter.'

He then wrote a few hasty lines to that lady, which he gave to his daughter, telling her she was to go the next day to Hampton Court, properly attended, and to obtain a sight of Lady Clarendon, who was there in waiting upon the Queen, and deliver that letter to her with her own hand. He then kissed his child tenderly, and bade her farewell. Though the little child wept at parting with her father, yet she left the tower with a far more composed mind than she entered it; for she had formed her resolution, and her young heart was full of hope. She had silently committed her cause to God, and she trusted that he would dispose the event prosperously for her.

The next morning, before the lark had sung her matins, Lady Lucy was up and dressed in a suit of deep mourning, which Amy had provided as the most suitable garb for a daughter whose only surviving parent was under sentence of death. The servants, who had been informed of their young lady's intention to solicit the Queen for her father's freedom, were all assembled in the entrance hall to see her depart; and as she passed through them, leaning on her nurse's arm, and attended by her fathers confidential secretary, and the old butler, they shed tears, and bade God bless her, and prosper her in her design.

Lady Lucy, arrived at Hampton Court, was introduced into the Countess of Clarendon's apartments before her ladyship was out of bed, and having told her artless tale with great earnestness, delivered her father's letter. Lady Clarendon, who was wife to the Queen's uncle, was very kind to her young goddaughter, but plainly told her she must not reckon on her influence with the Queen, because the Earl of Clarendon was in disgrace on account of being suspected of carrying on a correspondence with King James, his brother-in-law; therefore she dare not solicit the Queen in behalf of her friend, Lord Preston, against whom her majesty was so deeply exasperated that she had declared she would not show him any mercy.

'Oh!' said the little girl, 'if I could only see the Queen myself, I would not wish any one to speak for me, for I should plead so earnestly to her for my dear papa's life that she could not refuse me, I'm sure.'

'Poor child, what could you say to the Queen?' asked the countess compassionately.

'Only let me see her, and you shall hear,' rejoined Lady Lucy.

'Well, my love, it were a pity but what you then should have an opportunity,' said Lady Clarendon; 'but much I fear thy little heart will fail thee, and when thou seest the Queen face to face, thou wilt not be able to utter a single syllable.'

'God will direct the words of my lips,' said the little girl, with tears in her eyes.

The Countess was impressed with the piety and fillial tenderness of her little goddaughter; and she hastened to rise and dress, that she might conduct the child into the palace gallery, where the Queen usually passed an hour in walking, after her return from chapel which she attended every morning. Her majesty had not left the chapel when Lady Clarendon and Lady Lucy entered the gallery; and her ladyship endeavored to direct the anxious impatience of her little friend, by pointing out to her the portraits with which it was adorned.

'I know that gentleman well,' said the child, pointing to a noble whole length portrait of James the Second. 'That is the portrait of the deposed King James, Queen Mary's father,' observed the Countess, sighing; 'and a very striking likeness it is of that unfortunate monarch—but hark, here comes the Queen, with her chamberlain and ladies, from chapel; now, Lucy, is the time. I will step into the recess yonder, but you must remain alone, standing where you are, and when her majesty approaches near enough, kneel down on one knee before her, and present your father's petition. She who walks a little in advance of the other ladies is the Queen. Be of good courage, and address yourself to her.

Lady Clarendon then made a hasty retreat. Lucy's heart fluttered violently when she found herself alone, but her resolution did not fail her; and while her lips moved violently in fervent prayer to the Almighty for his assistance in this trying moment, she stood with folded hands, pale, composed, and motionless as a statue, awaiting the Queen's approach; and when her majesty drew near the spot, she advanced a step forward, kneeled and presented the petition. The extreme beauty of the child, her deep mourning, the touching sadness of her look and manners, and, above all, the streaming tears which bedewed her face excited the Queen's attention and interest; she paused, spoke kindly to her, and took the offered paper; but when she saw the name of Lord Preston her color rose. She frowned, cast the petition from her, and would have passed on, but Lucy, who had watched her countenance with a degree of anxious interest amounting to agony, losing all awe of royalty in her fears for her father, put forth her hand, and grasping the Queen's robe, cried in an imploring tone, 'Spare my father—my dear, dear father, royal lady!' Lucy had meant to say many persuasive things, but forgot them all in her sore distress, and could only repeat the words 'mercy, mercy for my father, gracious Queen!' till her vehement emotion choked her voice; and throwing her arms around the Queen's neck, she leaned her head against her majesty's person for support, and sobbed aloud.

The intense sorrow of a child is always peculiarly touching; but the circumstances under which Lucy appeared were more than commonly affecting. It was a daughter, not beyond the season of infancy, overmastering the timidity of that tender age, to become the suppliant to an offended sovereign for the life of a father. Queen Mary pitied the distress of her young petitioner, but she considered the death of Lord Preston as a matter of political necessity; she therefore told Lucy mildly, but firmly, that she could not grant her request.

'But he is good and kind to every one, said Lucy, raising her blue eyes, which were swimming with tears, to the face of the Queen.

'He may be so to you, child, returned her majesty,' but he has broken the law of his country, and therefore must die.'

'But you can pardon him if you choose, to do so, madam,' replied Lucy; 'and I have read that God is well pleased with those who forgive; for he has said, "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy."

'It does not become a little girl like you to attempt to instruct me,' replied the Queen, gravely; 'I am acquainted with my duty; and as it is my place to administer justice impartially, it is not possible for me to pardon your father, however painful it may be for me to deny the request of so dutiful a child.'

Lucy did not reply; she only raised her eyes with an appealing look to the Queen, and then turned them expressively on the portrait of King James, apposite to which her majesty was then standing. There was something in that look that bore no common meaning; and the Queen, whose curiosity was excited by the peculiarly emphatic manner of the child, could not refrain from asking wherefore she gazed so earnestly upon that picture.

'I was thinking,' replied Lady Lucy, 'how strange it was that you should wish to kill my father, only because he loved yours so faithfully.'

This wise but artless reproof from the lips of infant innocence, went to the heart of the Queen; she raised her eyes to the once dear and honored countenance of a parent, who, whatever were his political errors as a king, or his offenses against others, had ever been the tenderest of parents to her, and the remembrance that he was an exile in a foreign land, relying on the bounty of strangers for his daily bread, while she and her husband were invested with the regal inheritance of which he had been deprived, pressed upon her the thought of the contrast of her conduct as a daughter, when compared with the filial piety of the child before her, whom a sentence of hers was about to render an orphan.

'Rise, dear child,' she said, 'thou hast prevailed—thy father shall not die. I grant his pardon at thy entreaty—thy filial love has saved him.'

Children's Department.

From the Sabbath School Monitor.

AN ANGEL VISIT.

On the evening of the 31st of December, I had been cherishing the humiliating and solemn reflections which are peculiarly suitable to the close of the year, and endeavoring to bring to my mind that view of the past, best calculated to influence the future. I had attempted to recall the prominent incidents of the twelve months which had elapsed; and in this endeavor, I was led frequently to regret how little my memory could retain even of that which was most important to be remembered. I could not avoid, at such a period, looking forwards as well as backwards, and anticipating that fearful tribunal at which no occurrence shall be forgotten; whilst my imagination penetrated into the distant destinies which shall be dependant on its decisions. At my usual hour I retired to rest, but the train of meditation I had pursued was so important and appropriate, that imagination continued it after sense had slumbered. "In thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon man," I was mentally concerned in the following scene of interest:

I imagined myself still adding link, after link to the chain of reflection, the progress of which the time for repose had interrupted; and whilst thus engaged, I was aware that there remained but a few moments to complete the day. I heard the clock as it tolled the knell of another year, and as it rung slowly the appointed number, each note was followed by a sting of conscience, bitterly reproaching me for my neglect of precious time. The last stroke was ringing in my ears—painful as the groan announcing the departure of a valuable friend, when notwithstanding the meditative posture in which I was sitting, I perceived that the dimness of the apartment suddenly became brighter; and on lifting my eyes to discover the cause, I was terrified at discovering that another being was with me in my seclusion. I saw one before me whose form indeed was human; but the bright and burning glance of his eye, and the dazzling splendour that beamed forth from every part of his beautifully proportioned form, convinced me at a glance that it was no mortal being that I saw. The elevation of his brow gave dignity of the highest order to his countenance; but the most acute observation was indicated by his piercing eye, and inexorable justice was imprinted on his majestic features. A glittering phylactery encircled his head, upon which was written, "The Faithful one." Under one arm he bore two volumes; in his hand he held a pen. I instantly knew the recording angel—the secretary of the terrible tribunal of heaven. With a trembling which convulsed my frame, I heard his unearthly accents. "Mortal," he said, "thou wast longing to recall the events of the past year—thou art permitted to gaze upon the record of the book of God. Peruse and be wise." As he spoke thus, he opened before me one of the volumes which he had brought.

In fearful apprehensions, I read it in my own name, and recognized the history of my own life during the past year, with all its minutest particulars. Burning words were those which that volume contained; all the actions and circumstances of my life were registered in that dreadful book, each under its respective head. I was first struck with the title of "MERCIES RECEIVED." Some were there, the remembrance of which I had retained—more which were recalled, after having been forgotten—but the far greater number had never been noticed at all. Oh! what a detail of preservations, and warnings, and privileges, and bestowments! I remember that "Sabbaths" stood out in very prominent characters, as if they had been among the greatest benefits. In observing the recapitulation, I could not but be struck with one circumstance—it was that many dispensations, which I had considered as calamities, were enumerated here as blessings. Many a woe which had riven the heart—many a cup, whose bitterness seemed to designate it as poison, was there, verifying the language of the poet:

"E'en crosses from his sovereign hand, are blessings in disguise."

Another catalogue was there—it was the enumeration of "TRANSGRESSIONS." My hand trembles as I remember them! What an immense variety of classes; Indifference—thoughtlessness—formality—ingratitude—unbelief—sins against the world—against the church—against the Father—against the Savior—against the Sanctifier—stood at the head of their crowded battallions, as if for the purpose of driving me to despair. Not one sin was forgotten there—neglected Sabbaths—abused ordinances—misimproved time—encouraged temptations—There they stood, with no excuse, no extenuation. There was one very long class I remember well: "Idle words;" and the passage flashed like lightning across my mind—"For every idle word men speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment." My supernatural visitant here addressed me—"Dost thou observe how small a proportion thy sins of commission bear to those of omissions?" As he spoke, he pointed me to instances in the page like the following: "I was hungry, and thou gavest me no meat"—"I was thirsty, and thou gavest me no drink"—"I was sick and thou didst not visit me." I was conscience stricken. In another part of the record, I read the title "DUTIES PERFORMED." Alas! how small was their number! Humble as I had been accustomed to think the estimate of my good works, I was greatly disappointed to perceive that many performances on which I had looked with pride, were omitted, "because," my visiter informed me, "the motive was impure."

It was, however, with feelings of the most affecting gratification I read beneath this record, small as it was, the following passage: "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, he shall in no wise lose his reward." —Whilst I gazed on many other similar records, such was the intense feeling which seemed to be awakened within me, that my brain grew dizzy, and my eye became dim. I was awakened from this state by the touch of my supernatural instructor, who pointed me to the volume in which I had read my own terrible history, now closed, and bearing a seal, on which, with a sickening heart, I read the inscription "Reserved until the day of judgment." "And now," said the angel, "my commission is completed. Thou hast been permitted what never was granted to man before. What thinkest thou of the record? Dost thou not justly tremble?—How many a line is here, which, dying, thou couldst wish to blot! I see thee already shuddering at thought of the disclosure of this volume at the day of judgment, when an assembled world shall listen to its contents. But if such be the guilt of one year, what must be the guilt of thy whole life? Seek, then, an interest in the blood of Christ, justified by which thou shalt indeed hear, but not to condemnation. Pray, that when the other books are opened, thy name may be found on the Book of Life. And see the volume prepared for the history of another year, yet its page is unsullied— Time is before thee—seek to improve it; privileges are before thee—may they prove the gate of heaven! Judgment is before thee—prepare to meet thy God." He turned to depart, and as I seemed to hear the rustling which announced his flight, I awoke. Was it all a dream?

"Whatever passes as a cloud between
The mental eye of faith and things unseen,
Causing that brighter world to disappear,
Or seem less lovely, or its hope less dear,
This is our world, our idol, though it bear
Affection's impress or devotion's air."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

AUSTIN & AMES.

LATE of the firm of Bowers Ames & Avery, [illegible] Stone Store of J. N. Elmore La Fayette Block, [illegible] STOVES [illegible] offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers Wholesale & Retail on as favorable terms as [illegible] in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Cast-Iron, and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in the line of business.

The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper,

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. Also,

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Climax Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK

☞Done well on short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please Call at the Centre Store, La Fayette Block No 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARD-WARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

☞BOOTS & SHOES,☜

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than any ever sold before in this town (for the especial reason that I have "Peculiar advantages in purchasing") that is to say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34yl

NEW GOODS,

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

WANTED,

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, July 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books, and Stationery at very low prices. The following among others may now be found on his list:—

Walker's Dictionary, large
" " small
Davies' Bourdon,
" Legendre,
" First Lessons
" Arithmetic,
Comstock's Chemistry,
Phelps' Philosophy
Brown's Grammar,
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy.
Town's Analysis,
Olney's Geography,
Parley's "
Cicero's Orations,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar.

[illegible] Greek Testament,
[illegible] Reader,
[illegible] Reader,
Bristol Drawing Paper
Drawing Paper,
Royal, [illegible], Foolscap
Letter Paper,

JAMES BAILEY Register Office.

De Ruyter, July 16th, 1841.

BOOK BINDING

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is prepared to execute all kinds of Binding [illegible] as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY

De Ruyter, June 8th, 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return his thanks [illegible] Hence [illegible] WARRANT [illegible]

N. B. [illegible] Fashions [illegible] Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced [illegible] man who will pay particular attention to making COATS [illegible] style. De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Albion—H. H. [illegible], E. S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Green, [illegible] Russell, P. M., [illegible]
Berlin—S. S. [illegible], P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, [illegible]
B[illegible]—[illegible], Dr. Wm. M. [illegible]
C[illegible]—[illegible]
Durhamville—[illegible]
East H[illegible]—[illegible], P. M.
E[illegible]—[illegible]
Friendship—Zer[illegible], P. M.
[illegible]—[illegible] H. Wilson, P. M.
H[illegible]—[illegible]
Independence—[illegible], P. M.
L[illegible]—[illegible] H. S. C[illegible]
New York City—[illegible] Stillman
N[illegible]—[illegible]
New L[illegible]—[illegible]
Petersburgh—[illegible]
Preston—[illegible] Rogers
Pers[illegible]—[illegible] W[illegible]
P[illegible] St. Lawrence Co.—[illegible] P. Babcock
S[illegible]—[illegible] Potter, James H[illegible], Hiram B[illegible]
Schenectady—Abel Weed
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp
S[illegible]—[illegible] Babcock
U[illegible] Falls—W[illegible] Stillman.
V[illegible]—Oscar W[illegible]
Watson—Wells K[illegible]

RHODE-ISLAND.

Westerly—[illegible] Maxson, Rev. A[illegible] Campbell

CONNECTICUT.

W[illegible]—Lester T. Rogers, Wm. Maxson
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Salem—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

H[illegible]—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
S[illegible]—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis [illegible]

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 48] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—A. H. BURDICK, PRINTER. [WHOLE NO. 100.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, JANUARY 26, 1842. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

In the Register of Dec. 15th last, a number of questions to its readers appears over the signature "Inquirer," which demand attention from every one. From these queries, it seems an indifference prevails to a certain extent concerning matters of importance; and whilst several responses have been given to the fifth, much more may be offered with reason and propriety.

From what opportunity I possess of observing the conduct of the community at large, it seems manifest that a want of well-directed action exists; and which might be remedied if each one would exert the talents committed to their charge, and no longer stand saying, who will advance first? For it should be the fear and exclamation of every one, shall I be the last?

I have often noticed, that the paper you conduct is for the most part filled with extracts instead of original matter; which course is by no means chargeable on an Editor, unless he has some score thousand of subscribers, who pay him for his publication before they adventure to read it. For then might he devote his whole time to wield the pen, which has oftentimes gained more advantageous conquests than the sword.—But did all do their duty, and could every church of fifty or sixty members furnish ten or twelve correspondents, who would from their number send him every month, (free of expense) a well written communication, a new order of things would take place—For by making trial of their abilities, they would at once feel the necessity of a good education, and be more or less apprized of the need, both of moral and religious knowledge. I mention the above, though somewhat foreign to the literal expressions of the "Inquirer," with a view to draw attention both to that and the whole subject embodied in his publication. For I am aware that many will be the objections proposed when it first appears; and that the most prominent one will be, inability of the mind to compose and digest any subject in a proper manner to be read by the world. But this very defect should lead to the most earnest endeavors to counteract its existence and consequences; and if the first beginning should prove an indifferent one it should not discourage, but rather stimulate to still greater perseverance. Most every person will speak. Why not write? Is their conversation of a character requiring to be concealed and forgotten? If this be the case, an immediate reform should be commenced.

The greatest in any station once had to begin, and in some instances to encounter the most formidable obstacles. But if there be no entry upon an undertaking there will be no progress and consequently no consummation or reward. And if we strive with a becoming zeal to be second to none in all things laudable; though our efforts are not crowned to the extent of our wishes, the satisfaction will remain on our minds that we were not absent, but ready to discharge every incumbent duty.

Then let every one attend, not to the first or last question of Inquirer only, but to them all. If one cannot do every thing, every one can do something; and although all cannot be ministers, or scholars in a Seminary, yet there is scarcely an individual but what may exert a salutary influence, and contribute something, either from the purse or intellect, for the benefit of society. Exertion does much; inactivity nothing. And there is no other admissible course. Reason and common sense demand it. Religion enforces it. And literature and science can never be attained without it. If any one should undertake to build a house, and neglect every proper step to accomplish it, his structure would be apt to decay before its completion could be effected; and so it is in all other affairs. If action be not put in requisition, it will be a long while before any undertaking can succeed. If then it is asked, why this or that exists which ought not; it may be answered with propriety, because a proper energy is not exercised to remove it.

I will not call on any individual, or class, in particular, but leave it to the volition of every mind, whether it does exactly what it ought; for there may be some more implicated than others; and who can judge if they will the secrets of their hearts, and the movings of conscience? But I do say to all, try! If you possess no pecuniary means, use some other. Be not inactive.—All have minds that are not fools. Improve those and you will do something. Use them with virtue and you will do much.—Leave no opportunites unimproved. Register thoughts frequently, that they may be examined afterwards. Persons who never write what passes in their minds, but little know the incongruous mass of ideas which constantly arise unobserved. By essays with the pen, and comparing them with some standard author, individuals will learn the want of knowledge. And when a necessity is present and personally felt, it will generally receive more attention than when it is supposed to exist only elsewhere.

PHILANTHROPOS.

Pike, Jan. 4, 1842.

Religious Discussion.

The use of Laying on of Hands.

NUMBER IV.

Having in the preceding articles on this subject shown that the laying on of hands upon baptized believers, was an apostolic practice, that it was used by the primitive church after the apostolic age, and that it was generally considered a useful and necessary rite in the christian church; I propose in this article to remark upon its use and importance to believers.

I have somewhere in the preceding numbers, called baptism a kindred rite to the laying on of hands. I so consider it; because they are both spoken of in the scriptures as means of spiritual blessings, as well as indicating the condition of the heart, and intentions as to a holy life; and because the apostle has wedded them together in Heb. vi. 1, 2. While the church retained its integrity to her Lord, their ordinances appear to have been used according to their design; and they were honored means of communicating spiritual consolation to believers. But the history of the church shows that it was not long before baptism was used not so much as a sign of regeneration, but as regeneration itself; and was applied to such as gave no evidence of regeneration.

And as baptism is termed a being born of water, a washing away of sins, and the washing of regeneration, these metaphors became literalized, and the ordinance, consequently, carnalized. And when it was no longer designed to indicate inward grace—repentance from sin, and faith in Jesus Christ; it was no longer the means of producing its former effect upon the baptized, viz: the witness of God in their hearts, that their sins were blotted out. So also it was with the laying on of hands.—It was originally performed on baptized believers, upon their profession of the christian faith. They were in this manner presented to God as a living sacrifice, not especially to have conferred upon them miraculous gifts; but to receive the Holy Spirit, according to the promise made to believers. So that as they had received the working of regeneration, they also might have the renewing of the Holy Ghost. And this they needed then, that they might be qualified from on high to fulfil the various duties of their new profession, and be led by the Spirit into all truth. In their conformity to this divinely recognized rite, they received the Holy Ghost, every one of them that sought it thus by faith. Some of those converts had given them the word of wisdom, to others the word of knowledge, to others faith, [special and extraordinary faith,] to others gifts of healing, to some speaking with tongues. To others gifts of discipline, preaching, exhortation, and to others to be helpers in the church. Thus the church was furnished with every member necessary for symmetry or utility, and with every gift that the Head of the church saw she needed to make her complete, and to qualify them individually for their defensive, and offensive warfare against sin; and the trial of their faith in their persecutions and death. But to what miserable shreds were these lively and lovely ordinances reduced by the church in her strife for worldly glory and influence! She held to a kind of form of godliness in these things; but denied them the power they really possessed, and ascribed to them other and fictitious effects which they were never designed to produce. But that gospel which Paul declares to be "the power of God unto salvation," is unalterably the same, and is capable of producing the same glorious results that it did in the days of its infancy. Its ordinances and institutions would afford the same consolations now to the faithful in Christ Jesus, that they then did, if used as those early converts used them. If the circumstances of the church and the world, render some of God's earlier gifts, unnecessary for the work allotted her to do; they are wisely withheld; but all that are needful for the comfort and edification of the saints, and for carrying out fully the grand design of Jesus Christ in the conversion of the world, are, unquestionably, freely and abundantly given to such as humbly seek them by faith in God's appointed way.

In regard to these two outward performances Baptism and the laying on of hands, it may be that we have lost sight of a part, to say the least, of their official work. Originally, the awakened sinner, who desired to know what he should do to be saved, was directed to arise, and be baptized, and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. And in his submission to this duty, he found a satisfactory evidence of his acceptance with God, and the forgiveness of sins. Thus baptism served not only as a sign of his death to sin, and his faith in Jesus and his doctrine; but was also the means of confirming him in the promise of his forgiveness. Hence, those who rightly submitted to baptism, are spoken of as being immediately filled with joy and peace in believing. This submitting to the yoke of Christ, is, indeed, a stronger evidence of a yielding heart, than any mere verbal profession can be. And why should not the anxious enquirer who has been sufficiently instructed in the doctrine of the Lord, and who has, perhaps, been for months seeking from God the evidence of his acceptance, be directed at once to baptism as the means of consolation? Many have gone to the baptismal water full of doubts and fears, and have left it rejoicing in God; and none who would sincerely follow Christ under such circumstances; but would find in baptism a sealed evidence of pardon. So, in like manner, should the baptized believer be instructed to expect the promised Spirit of God in the laying on of hands; as they were in the early age of the church, I can entertain no doubts but that God would bestow the Holy Spirit as readily as he did in that age. The apostle tells us that when Jesus ascended on high, he gave gifts unto men. To some apostles and prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, Eph. iv. 11. These were given for the perfection of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edification of the church. And these gifts are to be continued to the church until the objects for which they were given shall be accomplished; and this will not be "until we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man—unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." These important objects are not yet accomplished, nor can they be, but through the influence of those gifts to the church; and these are all comprehensively embraced in the promise of the Holy Ghost, and this was obtained by the laying on of hands. If, then, this rite be not attended substantially with the same influence as formerly, the failure is not in the inefficiency of the rite; but in the manner of using it. Perhaps more ought not to be expected from it unless it were performed with more faith.

It is worthy of remark, that as the mind of the church has been led off from a scriptural understanding and practice of this rite, divisions have increased, and professors have been as "children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine," just as men of cunning craftiness have lain in wait to deceive them.—And no small share of our own internal divisions and disaffections, I conceive, may be ascribed to the same cause. There is the same necessity for christians to walk by faith now, as there was in the age of the apostles. It should not seem incredible to us that God should fulfil his promises, even to the letter, when they are plead with faithful and fervent prayer. Now there was, unquestionably, a good reason for hands to be laid upon those for whom special blessings were sought by prayer; for it is inconceivable that both Jesus and his apostles should perform this ceremony, and direct others to do so, if it could have no efficacy in procuring the blessings sought. We may be as incapable of discovering why the laying on of hands can have any influence in procuring the Holy Ghost, as we are why the waters of Jordan could heal Naaman the leper, more than the rivers of Damascus, or why it was necessary for fasting in order to cast out a certain kind of evil spirit; or why hands should be laid upon the sick in order to heal them. But this should not effect our duty. It is not necessary for us to know its mode of operation. It is sufficient for us that we have a divine example to imitate, and that Jesus had good and sufficient reasons to direct him in this practice, and for thus instructing his disciples. We lay on hands in ordinations, accompanied with prayer, and suppose it necessary to a proper performance of the work; but we cannot see how this physical act can have a moral, or spiritual influence; still, we do not deem it proper to omit any of the outward ceremonies which we are instructed to use; for in so doing we should have reason to fear that our suit would be rejected. If, then, we should use the laying on of hands as it is evident the early disciples did; expecting that the Holy Ghost will be given, as promised, in answer to prayer; and the candidate be also instructed in the nature and design of the ordinance, I have no doubt but that the same happy effects would attend it which generally resulted from its use in the primitive age of the church.

The results which might be reasonably anticipated from the adoption of the preceding scriptural view of baptism, and the laying on of hands are

1. Awakened sinners would be better instructed in their duty in seeking a satisfactory hope in Christ. What they are taught as duty, they would look upon as a present duty, and not one that is to be performed in the indefinite future, as they now look upon baptism.

2. Genuine awakenings would be productive of more baptized converts, and the church's enlargement; and a less number of hopeful enquirers left to wander alone as sheep without a shepherd, unprotected, and exposed to every devouring beast.

3. The baptized believer, by a scriptural use of laying on of hands would be immediately, and sufficiently furnished with the Divine influence to enable him to perform those christian duties immediately claiming his attention, and thus be rescued from that spiritual relapse which generally succeeds a profession of religion. And

4. The church would be endowed, and ornamented with youthful, active, and useful members, each having his allotted gift to improve for the edification of the church.

The evangelical epistles recognize such a state of the church as this, and to such a state as this only can much contained in them be applied. It was when the church was thus favored that St. John said, "I have written to you young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." To what church could an apostle now write in this manner? How is it with our young men, and our converts generally three months after they have solemnly connected themselves with the church? Do they appear to be strong, the word of God abiding in them? Have they overcome the wicked one? In short, what dwarfs in christian stature are the greater number of religious professors of every age? And our fathers, where, and what are they? (I speak with deference to their years.) So unused to the active duties of their profession were they in early life, that they find it difficult, if not impossible, in advanced age, to do much, if any thing, in the church's warfare against her foes? Why should they not rather be like Caleb, who, when four score and five years old, was as strong for counsel or for war as in earlier life?

Finally, the weakness and disaffections of the church may be ascribed to some common cause which cannot be found in the institutions of christianity; but in our misuse or neglect of them.

The reader of the foregoing articles upon the laying on of hands will recollect my apology for intruding this subject upon him. I wish again to refer to his consideration what I have there said.

And now let me commend it to the churches, ministers, and members of the Seventh Day Baptist connection. The subject is referred to you by a resolution of the General Conference for your consideration and decision. And it is very much desired that you devote to it all that reading, reflection, and prayer that its importance demands; and that you, individually, and in your collective and corporate capacity, will be prepared to respond to the request of your brethren, made at their last anniversary, as God and the scriptures direct.

The remarks contained in the preceding articles on the laying on of hands, are made in christian kindness upon the full conviction of their correctness: and I sincerely hope that those who may dissent from them, will as frankly publish their light upon the subject, that we may obtain the proper ends of religious discussion, Truth and Union, which is the sincere prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

W. B. MAXSON.

It is a curiosity to meet with a man who thinks less of himself than other people think of him.

Moral Reform Department.

From the Advocate of Moral Reform.

ONE OF A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

By Rev. Emerson Davis, Collegiate Pastor with Rev. Isaac Knapp, of the Congregational Church in Western, Mass.

"Thou shalt not commit Adultery."—Ex. xx. 14.

[Concluded.]

Remarks—(1.) From what has now been said, we may see that the readiness with which divorces are granted in some places is a source of much evil. In some of the U. States, divorces in full are granted, not only for the crime of adultery, but for desertion for a specified time—for habitual intemperance—for cruelty and abuse, and for lunacy. The Bible does not allow of divorce except for adultery. The consequences of multiplying the reasons for giving divorces, is, that many enter upon married life with little consideration, presuming that if they are dissatisfied or unhappy, and wish to be released, they can be.

If divorces were never granted except for one crime, it would prevent much haste and want of consideration; if the parties feel that the contract they are making, is one that is binding until one of them dies, they would be cautious about forming the contract, and when formed, they would acquire the habit of overlooking the failings of each other, and of yielding their private preferences to promote the happiness of the family.

The principal reason for granting divorces, beside the scriptural one, grows out of the intemperance of one of the parties.—There seems to be an inconsistency in the conduct of a Legislature that, after having passed laws which in effect authorize the making of drunkards, they should pass others for the annulling of the marriage contract with one who may become a drunkard. Instead of granting divorces for unscriptural reasons—instead of breaking up and destroying a family of children, would it not be better for the Legislature to cease to give their sanction in any form to a business that is making war upon society, at every vulnerable point.

2. The sins forbidden in this commandment are multiplied and aggravated more rapidly than most other sins, by letting them alone. It is the policy of Satan to keep the community asleep among whom he is desirous of sowing tares. He has been very successful in keeping the people of this land quiet and silent in relation to the violations of the seventh commandment. The time was when these sins were rebuked from the pulpit, and by the virtuous and good, as decidedly and frequently as other sins.

But within half a century the opinion has prevailed that it is very improper to speak of these sins before a promiscuous assembly, and that speaking will do more hurt than good. But while those, who should have raised their voices against it, have slumbered and slept, the evil has been spreading in every part of the land. Thousands have been ruined—estates have been squandered—families broken up or otherwise made wretched—minds debased, and reason dethroned, by the prevalence of this vice.

In looking over the report of the Mass. Lunatic Hospital, for 1840, I see that the insanity of 39 of the patients is attributed to sins belonging to this class. How terribly does God visit upon the children of men their iniquities. "Happy would it be for a community to be so free from temptation and transgression against both the letter and the spirit of this commandment, that it might be passed by even in a series of discourses on the commandments." But as it is, this precept cannot be passed by. It is time for those who watch over the public morals to sound the alarm, and to call the attention of all to the fearful consequence of this sin. It is time to attempt to fortify the minds of the innocent against the snares that are spread in secret places for their ruin. It is time to remind the guilty that their sins will surely find them out, and if not repented of, will destroy both soul and body in hell. It is time for all who love moral purity, to let those who persist in this wickedness know that their manner of life is not tolerated either by the laws of God or man.

Religious Department.

From the Watchman of the Valley.

I WILL HAVE MERCY AND NOT SACRIFICE.—Devotion is to give way to charity. Charity is the end to which devotion, as a means, is to be made subservient. The real object in prayer, and in reading and hearing the word of God is to dispose us to every good work. If we do not pervert these exercises, we attend to them that we may learn our relations and duties to others, and that we may have a heart disposed to perform those duties. When we pray that God would convert our fellow-men, we ask that he would help us to do our part for their conversion. When we pray that he would supply the poor with bread, we ask to be enabled to divide our store with them. If our devotions mean any thing, this must be implied in their meaning. For although God can as easily convert men without our instrumentality as he can supply their temporal wants by raining bread from heaven, we would not dare to ask him to do either; especially when we see that the same ends might be secured in the ordinary way by a little effort on our part.—It is therefore the height of mockery to neglect the end of religion under pretence of using the means,—to excuse ourselves from doing any good because we are always preparing to do it. Why spend farther time in learning the will of God, when we do not intend to perform it? Why pray that our love to the brethren may be increased, when we refused to allow that love to accomplish the end for which it was implanted within us? Is not this to reverse the whole order of things established by God? If we intend to do no more active service for him, let us also cease to enquire what he would have us do. Incessant prayer without corresponding action, has the appearance, at least, of an attempt to drown the voice of God, lest we should hear him command us to do something else than pray. In this attempt we may for a while succeed, but we do not accumulate guilt? Let us either cease to pray, or begin to act.

M. A. S.

TWELVE EXCELLENT RULES

FOR PROMOTING HARMONY AMONG CHURCH MEMBERS.

1. To remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities, of one kind or another.

2. To bear with, and not magnify each other's infirmities.—Gal. vi. 1.

3. To pray one for another in our social meetings, and particularly in private.—James v. 16.

4. To avoid going from house to house, for the purpose of hearing news, and interfering with other people's business.

5. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to lay no charge brought against any person, until well founded.

6. If a member be in fault, to tell him of it in private, before it is mentioned to others.

7. To watch against shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.

8. To observe the just rule of Solomon, that is, to leave off contention before it be meddled with.—Prov. xvii, 14.

9. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious, how God-like it is to forgive, and how unlike a christian it is to revenge.—Ephesians iv. 2.

10. To remember, that it is always a grand artifice of the devil, to promote distance and animosity among members of Churches, and we should therefore watch against every thing that furthers his end.

11. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the Church in particular, when we are all united in love, than we could do when acting alone, and indulging a contrary spirit.

12. Lastly, to consider the express injunction of scripture, and the beautiful example of Christ, as to these important things.—Eph. iv. 32; 1 Peter ii. 21; John xiii. 5, 32.

Ministers' Department.

HOW TO MAKE A MINISTER A GOOD ONE.

1st. Pray for him; that his heart and mind may be enriched by God; an important rule.

2. Pay him well; so that his mind may be only on his appropriate work.

3. Fill up his library with useful books, so that he may have an inexhaustible fountain, from which to draw supplies for your edification.

4. Be sure to give him all his mornings, until 12 o'clock, for study. You should not steal the provender from the manger of your horse, and then fret because of his leanness.

5. Never speak of his faults to any man. One word gone out of your mouth is as bad as twenty kept in. Do you not know that when you have spoken a word against him, you feel compelled, right or wrong, to substantiate it. His faults, like snow balls, increase by being rolled about.

6. Always speak well of him; for there is no one but of whom you can say some good. The good you say of him, will lead others to think and speak well of him.—And their opinion will lead men who fling away the pearl, because he did not know its worth.

7. Always say some kind and encouraging word to him, when you meet him.—Do you not suppose your minister is a man, has a heart, and can be incited to exertion for you by the kind words you address him?

8. Visit him frequently with some little present in your hand. This will make him love you. And his affection for you, it is important you should cultivate. Make your minister love you.

9. Never meddle with his labors, but leave him to preach what he pleases, and pursue such measures and plans as he thinks wise. Quarrels here spoil many ministers.

10. Go to him for advice in relation to your measures and plans for doing good.—and then see to it that you follow his advice. It is more of the mule than the man, not to be advised.

11. Be in your place every Sabbath, and at every religious meeting. Then, and only then, can you appreciate what he does.

12. Fasten up a copy of these Rules where you can read them easily; then read them at least once a week, and if especially a sinner against them, read them every day, as you go to your closet. Perhaps you had better put up a copy on the meeting-house door; perhaps on your pew door. It might be advantageous to give away a copy now and then.

Observe these RULES, gentle reader, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, [illegible] will have a good minister. Obser[illegible] and though by nature he is far [illegible] you want him to be, it will make him a good one. Violate them, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred you will have a poor minister indeed. Violate them, and though in fact you have a first rate man, it will, to a certainty, make him to you a poor minister.—Boston Recorder.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, January 26, 1842.

"Petitions for the Sabbath."

The last "New-York Evangelist" contains a short editorial, suggesting that a larger number of signatures could now be obtained to well drawn petitions, than ever could have been before, and that the time is unusually favorable for effort in behalf of the day of rest.

From the article we cannot learn what is to be the prayer of the petitioners, or to whom addressed. We are not willing to suppose that the editor of the Evangelist wishes a Sabbath established by Congress, because it would savor too much of Papal authority. If he wish a law passed for the better observance of the Sabbath, he need not call upon human law-makers, when God himself has both established a day of rest, and given the fullest rules for its observation. If laws founded in the fitness of things, emanating from the Great Jehovah, will not restrain men, we cannot expect much from human legislation.

We are led to suppose, from an article in a late number of the Evangelist, that the object is to secure the passage of a law that shall exempt Postmasters from delivering letters on the first day. If petitions of this kind are presented to Congress, our denomination will doubtless claim exemption for those Postmasters who observe the Sabbath of the commandment. We shall not complain if Postmasters are exempted according to the prayer of the 'Petition,' but we think that Seventh-day Baptist Postmasters should likewise be exempted.

PROPOSALS

For publishing a History of the Seventh-Day Baptist Denomination.

It is intended to publish a full and complete History of the Seventh-day Baptists, from their origin to the present time, giving an account of their progress and operations, including short Biographical sketches of some of their most distinguished members, together with a history of their benevolent operations, and a brief manual of the doctrines of the gospel as held by them.

As full an account as practicable will be given of their origin and numbers in England.

The size of the work, price, time and manner of publication, will be determined when the facts are collected. It will be published on individual responsibility.

Such persons as have facts in their possession on this subject are requested to transmit them as soon as convenient; and we respectfully request the Clerk, or some other person, in every Church, or settlement, to give us as full an account as is possible of the origin of their church, number of members, names of Ministers that have been members, their age, time of death, (if dead,) number and time of Revivals, with the number of additions, and whatever else of interest that has been or may be connected with their history.

☞ All communications on the subject may be addressed to the "Editor of the S. D. B. Register, De Ruyter, N. Y."

"Laying on of Hands."

We publish to-day the last of the series of articles sent us on the "Laying on of Hands." We suppose that it was anticipated that other, and perhaps different views, would be presented. If any should see fit to further examine the subject, we feel assured that it will be done with that candor that has characterized the articles already published. Religious discussion is never profitable, except when conducted with christian courtesy, and with the single desire to elicit the truth.

Wine for the Communion.

A friend inquires of us what course we intend to take in the Register relative to the question, what kind of wine is proper to be used at the Lord's Supper. We had not anticipated publishing any thing on that subject. It is a question on which there is a variety of opinions. With us the question seems to resolve itself into a matter of expediency. We know not why both fermented and unfermented wine may not be used. As a matter affecting the Temperance reformation, we judge it expedient that unfermented wine should be used. Any light that can be given on this subject we should be glad to have.

To Correspondents.

We have received a number of valuable papers from "Mary," which will doubtless beguile many a weary hour and prove a rich repast to our readers.

The "poetical" lines from our friend "Lerona Lina," although well designed, [illegible] deficient in some material points. [illegible] "Poetry" truly "POET-ical."

THE BAPTIST MEMORIAL AND MONTHLY CHRONICLE, is published monthly in New-York, each No. containing 32 large octavo pages. It is devoted to the History and Biography—the Statistics and Literature of the denomination, with a compendious Chronicle of passing events of striking or permanent religious interest.

The first No. contains a History of R. I. Baptists, Del. Baptists, Biographies of Jeremiah Chaplin, and Hon. Nicholas Brown, Baptist Statistics, Review of Baptist Periodicals, Benevolent Societies, Revivals, &c.—It is edited by Rev. Rufus Babcock, jr., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., assisted by M. J. Rhees, Philadelphia, J. M. Peck, Rock Spring, Ill., J. S. Baker, Columbus, Ga.—J. R. Bigelow, Publishing Agent. Address, Post Office, Box 811, New-York.—Terms, $1 per annum, or 6 copies for $5, payable in advance.

In answer to three inquiries of editors in the "Memorial," we say, that the Seventh-day Baptist Register was established in the Spring of 1841. Average circulation during the first year about 1,200. During the present year, 1,200. Circulation in N. Y., 920; N. J., 75; R. I., 75; Ct., 25; Ohio, 25; Va., 20; Pa., 20; Mich. 15; Wiskonsan, 15; Ill., 3; Ia., 1; Ky., 1; Tenn. 1; Ga., 1; Vt., 1; Maine, 1; Mass. 3.

Postmaster's Franks.

It is not unfrequently the case that we are taxed with postage on letters from Postmasters, who, through carelessness or ignorance, neglect to comply with the requisitions of the law relative to "franks." We are this week taxed with postage on a letter from Pa., from a Postmaster who neglected a material part of his duty, that is to say, his name, while he forwarded us the name of a subscriber. Such officers ought either to inform themselves on this point, and comply with the law, or resign their office into other hands.

A funeral discourse of Eld. Benedict Wescote was preached in Preston, on the 24th inst., by Eld. W. B. Maxson, from Prov. x. 7: "The memory of the just is blessed." A full audience was present, giving full evidence of their love to the deceased by the deep feeling manifested.

☞The Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute will meet at Room No. 1, in the Institute, on Thursday evening, 27th inst., at 6 o'clock, per adjournment.

The Evening Meetings.

The series of evening meetings in this village will be resumed on FRIDAY evening. Rev. Mr. PLATT, of Homer, is expected to preach on Seventh-day evening.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

VERY LATE FROM CHINA.

Admiral Parker sailed with most of the land and sea forces to make a demonstration upon Pekin. The Chinese had offered Sir Henry Pottinger, (the new British Superintendent,) ten millions of dollars, if he would cause the expedition to be relinquished. This he declined; and on the other hand declared that in case any hostile demonstration was made by the Canton forces, he would again take the city, and treat the Chinese with the utmost rigor.

A letter from Macao of Sept. 15th, states that intelligence has just been received of Capt. Nias, (the commanding officer,) having issued a proclamation in Chinese, and commenced hostilities by attacking the villages on the banks of the river near where the obstructions were sunk, and by blowing up and utterly destroying Wong Tung, and the fortresses at Cow Loon. There is a rumor of his intention to surround Canton. When the smoke of the burning villages was seen, the cannons heard, the people of Canton fled in all directions.

ITEMS OF NEWS BY THE MEDIATOR.

England.

The Queen and her children are well.

The rains have been incessant through the fall, and most of the low country is flooded with water. Whole districts of wheat and pasture land are submerged, and appear like lakes.

The Queen Dowager of England, (Adelaide, widow of William IV.,) is given over by her physicians. Her death is daily anticipated.

The government has refused to indemnify the owners of opium destroyed by the Chinese at Canton, as stipulated by Commissioner Elliot.

From the East.

The warfare of the Druses upon the Christians in Syria has been farther prosecuted with Oriental ferocity. Whole villages have been destroyed. The Turkish troops have interfered successfully to stop these horrors. Beyroot is full of refugees from the scene of devastation.

Africa.

The British expedition up the Niger had been heard from up to the 1st of October, when it had reached the confluence of Tchadda, 270 miles up, making less than 3 miles an hour when in motion. The sickness and mortality among the crew was dreadful.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Journal of Commerce has received dates to July 31. The crew of the Peacock, which has since been lost, surveyed most of the islands north of the Sandwich Islands, and at one of the Samoa Archipelago, they fired grape shot upon the natives, and burned three of their villages, in consequence of their refusal to deliver up a chief who had killed an American.—That part of the ocean has been accurately surveyed, and the results will be specially interesting to whalers.

The annual meeting of the king and chiefs commenced on the 1st of April. The government of the island is assuming something like a civilized form. After a session of about a month, it adjourned, having passed several important laws.—They have also agreed to establish penitentiaries for the reformation of criminals, where the inmates shall receive instruction in profitable labor, and in morals, and religion. This is certainly an important step. Among the acts passed were those to prevent horse racing in the public streets. An act respecting lost property. An act respecting property in trust. An act respecting the rights of parents. An act regulating the manner of collecting debts. A law respecting partnerships. General harbor laws. An act to prevent noise in the street by night. An act respecting gambling. An act relative to counterfeit coins. An act respecting perjury. An act relating to forgery. An act respecting quarrels and assaults. An act respecting lewdness. School laws entirely remodeled.

Congressional News.

IN SENATE.

The Finance Bill.

Jan. 13.—Mr. Benton delivered a speech in opposition to the entire scheme of finance proposed by the President, and all other schemes of paper money. Mr. Benton occupied the entire day. After he concluded, the question was taken on the resolution referring the Bill and Report of the Secretary of the Treasury to a Select Committee, to be appointed by the Chair, and it was agreed to, nem con.

Jan. 18.—The following Select Committee on the Plan of Finance was announced:

Messrs. Tallmadge, Preston, Bates, Walker, Evans, Merrick, Young, White, and Rives—all as favorable as any who could be found to the plan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Treasury Note Bill.

Jan. 13.—After a protracted debate this bill was reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole.

Jan. 14.—Mr. Gilmer's amendment which provided that the Treasury Notes issued, shall be incorporated in and become part of the permanent loan authorized to be created by act of July, 1841; was adopted, yeas 105, nays 102.

The main question, which was the passage of the bill, was taken by yeas and nays, and decided as follows: yeas 129 nays 86. So the bill was passed.

Captured Americans.

Mr. Thompson presented the preamble and resolutions of the Legislature of Ky., in behalf of captured American citizens in Mexico.

Mr. Marshall moved to refer the preamble and resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with instructions to inquire into all the facts, and report the facts to this House.

Mr. Wood hoped the American citizens in Van Dieman's Land might be added.

Mr. Marshall agreed to the modification, and so modified it farther, as to make it a resolution of inquiry, calling on the Executive for all information in its possession on those subjects.

The resolution, as modified, was then adopted.

Repeal of the Bankrupt Bill.

After a confused discussion, the bill having been read a second and third time the question on the final passage was then taken by yeas and nays, and decided as follows; yeas 126, nays 94.

So the Bankrupt Law was repealed in the House.

New-York Legislature.

In Senate, Jan. 14.—The Senate was occupied during the day in discussing Mr. Bartlit's resolution, authorizing the Committee of the Senate to visit the State Prisons during the winter, and Mr. Franklin's resolutions relative to the public faith.

In Assembly.—Petitions on various subjects were received; one of 80 for a law to punish licentiousness.

In Senate, Jan 15.—Mr. Furman offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to a select committee of three, to examine into the state and condition of the Statutes of this Commonwealth, from the first Legislature to the year 1813, and into the propriety of printing and publishing those Statutes, and the expense attending the same; and that they report to the Senate with all convenient speed.

Mr. Furman briefly explained the objects of the resolution when it was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Varian moved the printing of the bill extending the benefits of common school education in the city of New York, which was carried.

Mr. Dickinson gave notice of a bill to authorize the issue of State scrip of the denomination of $5, and bearing an interest of 7 per cent.

The Bankrupt Law.—Mr. Furman called for the consideration of the following resolutions:

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That in the judgment of this Legislature, the Congress of the United States were called upon by the great embarrassments, which had prostrated the business of the nation, to exercise the power conferred upon them by the Constitution, for establishing uniform laws, on the subject of bankruptcies, and that the laws which they have enacted on that subject was imperiously required by the exigencies of the country.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur.) That this Legislature do solemnly and earnestly remonstrate against the repeal of that law by Congress; and request their senators and representatives to use all the means in their power to prevent the passage of any bill for that purpose.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing resolutions to the respective senators and members of Congress from this State.

After some discussion they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

In Senate, Jan. 17.—The Public Faith.—Mr. Rhoades addressed the Senate at some length in an able, lucid, and conclusive speech on the present financial condition of the state, and in opposition to the substitute of Mr. Sherwood. (Mr. R.'s remarks will be given hereafter.)

Mr. Hunter followed in defence of Col. Young, and the doctrines advanced by him in the Senate, contending that they were in accordance with the Democratic principles of Tho's. Jefferson. He supported the substitute offered by Mr. Sherwood.

When he had concluded, Mr. Root took the floor and moved to postpone the further consideration of the resolutions until to-morrow, which motion was carried.

Mr. Root moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. Lost—ayes 10; nays 13.

In Assembly.—The hour of 12 having arrived, the House proceeded to the consideration of the preamble and resolutions heretofore introduced by Mr. Davezac.

Mr. Davezac took the floor, and gave a detailed and animated history of the Battle of New Orleans, and of the incident just prior and subsequent to the action, and the particulars of the judicial proceedings concerning the fine imposed on General Jackson.

Mr. D. concluded his remarks at 20 minutes after two, without taking any question on the resolution.

In Senate, Jan. 18.—The Senate was occupied with a debate on Mr. Franklin's resolution relative to the public faith.

On motion of Mr. Paige the farther consideration of the resolutions was postponed until to-morrow.

In Assembly.—Petitions were received from 800 citizens of Albany, and 550 of Columbia Co., for the abolition of capital punishment. Several petitions for aid to the New York and Erie Rail Road.

Mr. O'Sullivan, from the committee on the Judiciary, reported with amendments, the bill heretofore introduced by him, for the abolition of the punishment of death.

Mr. Hitchcock gave notice of a bill for the more equal distribution of the literature fund.

In Assembly, Jan. 19.—Mr. O'Sullivan, on notice, introduced a bill to authorize the formation of voluntary and charitable associations.

Also, a bill to extend the benefits of common school education in the city of New York.

In Assembly, Jan. 20.—Petitions presented and referred.—By Mr. Dana, of 201 females of Allegany for a law to punish licentiousness; by Mr. Baker, of 202 citizens of Whitestown, for a law to punish licentiousness; by Mr. Humphrey, of 409 citizens of Tompkins county for relief to Thompsonian Physicians; by Mr. McKie, of numerous citizens of White Creek, Washington County, for relief to Thomsonian Physicans.

On motion of Mr. Kelly so much of the Governor's message as refers to the reorganization of the Congressional Districts, was referred to a committee of one from each Senate District.

News of the Day.

The North East Boundary.—The Land Agent of the State of Maine, in his recent Report to the Legislature of that State, states that from the personal knowledge he has of this territory, he believes that a new line may be agreed upon, that will be advantageous to both Governments, and by which Maine, in the end would not be the loser.

The line proposed is almost exactly the same which was proposed by the London Times two or three years ago, but which found no favor in Maine, and but little in England. Perhaps now the parties are in a better mood to make what they may respectively deem "concessions," for the sake of bringing to a close this long-protracted and dangerous controversy.—Com. Adv.

The Expenses of Congress.—The official estimates of the expenses of Congress, including members, officers, and clerks—estimating the Sessions for which each member is elected, at 218 days—are

Senators,	$90,886
Speaker of the House, at $16 per day,	3,448
241 members, at $8 per day,	420,304
Delegates from the Territories,	5,232
Traveling expenses of the members,	154,000

The Secretary of the Senate receives $3,000, and the clerks in his office $9,300; Chaplain of the Senate, $500; ditto of the House, $500; Postmaster of the House, $1,500; Stationery, &c., for the Senate, $60,000; incidental expenses of the House, $150,000; the Library of Congress, including the salaries of its officers and contingent expenses, $12,300; gross expense, $1,079,570. This includes salaries for door-keepers, assistant do., clerks of the House, sergeant-at-arms, and all other sub-officers connected with the two Houses.

Another Terrible Riot in Cincinnati.—On Monday evening, (10th inst.) the Miami Exporting Company assigned its effects, and on Tuesday morning the Bank of Cincinnati closed its doors. About 11 o'clock they were attacked by a mob and destroyed, and also Bates' Exchange Bank, and Lougee's Exchange Office!

The mob assembled before the latter bank about 9 o'clock. When the doors were opened, a rush was made for the inside, and its contents, consisting of desks, counters, and the vault, were broken and thrown into the street. Money to the amount of $224,000 was taken from the vault.

The mob then went to Miami Bank, which they broke open and destroyed its contents. The Exchange Bank, adjoining the Miami, was next assailed. A run was made upon it, and it continued to redeem all the issues, until the mob broke in and destroyed every thing. Thence they crossed over to Lougee's office. This was likewise destroyed; and the crowd gathered at the corner of Third and Main streets. A strong disposition on the part of the mob was manifested to destroy the Trader's & Mechanic's Bank; but they continued to redeem their notes, which were nothing more than certificates of deposite with promise to pay in current bank notes, and thus escaped.

But little effort was made by the city authorities to check the popular violence.—Troops marched through the crowd with fixed bayonets, but they were soon attacked and compelled to retreat. As they retired they were ordered to fire upon the mob, which they did. Their guns were loaded with blank catridges, however, and only two or three were slightly injured.—Cincinnati is disgraced forever in the eyes of those who love order and respect the laws.

Violation of the Sabbath.—An action was recently brought in this city, by the keeper of a livery stable, for the value of a horse, which had been killed by misuse. The defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that the letting was illegal, because it was to travel on Sunday, which is prohibited by statute. Judge Talmadge decided, most righteously, to grant the nonsuit; that a contract in relation to the hiring and treatment of a horse, let for the purpose of violating a statute, is void.

John S. Barry, (Opp.) was declared to be elected Governor of Michigan, on the 3rd inst. The vote was for Barry 20,795; Philo C. Fuller, (Whig,) 15,125; J. S. Fitch, (Abolition,) 1,204.

While the train from Utica was passing near the Palatine bridge on the 14th inst., the axle of the truck which supports the locomotive broke, and the whole train, except the two last cars, were thrown off the track. The locomotive, tender, and two wood cars were upset. Fortunately no one was injured.

The debt of Illinois amounts to $[illegible]155,551, an average of more than $[illegible] to every man, woman and child in that State. The six per cent. stock of the State is selling, at present, at 31 to 32 per cent. and at this rate the whole debt might be bought for about $[illegible].

A young man named Thomas Moore, an officer in the Mechanics' Savings Institution at Louisville, Ky., died of hydrophobia on the 8th inst. He had been [illegible] about five weeks, and was taken the night after his marriage.

New excavations, on an extensive scale, are about to be undertaken at Herculaneum and its environs. The Minister of the Interior, in conjunction with the Royal Academy of Sciences, is to appoint a commission of archæologists and architects to preside over the works.

The ship Frankfort, from New-Orleans to this port, went ashore at Little Egg Harbor on the 14th inst. She had a full cargo, which will probably be saved. The ship and cargo were together valued at $150,000; the ship was insured for $60,000, and the freight $50,000.

Out of a population of 17,000,000 people in the United States, about 2,500,000 only are professing Christians.

The amount paid for State printing, in this State, in the year 1841, was $53,351. In 1834, it amounted to $9,672.

The amount of duties collected at the port of Kingston, U. C., on property imported from the United States, during the year 1841, is over $32,000, which is more than double the amount collected at the same port in 1840, showing a very rapid increase of trade between the United States and Canada.

At the Paper Maker's Convention recently held in New York, it was stated that the town of Lee, in Berkshire co., Mass., contains about 2,000 inhabitants, nearly all of whom directly or indirectly derive a support from the paper mills in that town, which are sixteen in number.

At a late Education Convention in Virginia, resolutions recommending Sabbath schools and the use of the Bible in common schools, were passed without a dissenting voice.

Origin of the late Fire in Detroit.—The Detroit Advertiser says that the chimney which ran up from the dining room of the Ohio House, took fire, and, as it was full of cracks, the flames burst through into the adjoining apartment, occupied by Mr. Coyle, which were in an instant enveloped in flames.

A landlord in Baltimore, wishing to get rid of a tenant who did not pay his rent, undertook to smoke him out. He closed the top of the chimney, and the smoke of course soon filled the apartments. The family had to escape as speedily as possible to avoid suffocation. The tenant prosecuted the landlord for trespass, and recovered $15 and costs.

Five distilleries have lately stopped in Northumberland co., Pa., in consequence of the decreasing demand for whiskey.

The Portsmouth (Ohio) Journal, says that a little girl, eleven years of age, from a neighboring town, after hearing a lecture from one of the reformed drunkards, went home, and in a week obtained [illegible] names to the temperance pledge.

The St. Louis Republican of the 6th says: "On Friday night last, a little before 12 o'clock, the shock of an earthquake was sensibly felt. Its duration was very brief, but the agitation was so great as to cause many persons to attempt to escape from their houses. This is the second within the past week."

Nicholas Hill, Jr., of Albany has been appointed State reporter in the place of Mr. Wendell. His duties are to report the decisions of the Supreme Court, and also the decisions of the Court for the Correction of Errors.

Gov. Chambers, of Iowa, states that the debt of that Territory is only about $[illegible]000, which he thinks can be easily paid.—He warmly urges an early application for admission into the Union.

Gov. Doty estimates that Wiskonsan has, this year, produced over twenty millions of pounds of lead, and that the receipts from the sale of lands within the territory during the same period—were equal to $[illegible]. This is the average for the past three years.

Schools in Massachusetts.—The returns from all the towns in the State but three, show the number of public schools to be 3,103—pupils in winter 155,041. The number of private schools 1,388—pupils 21,701.

The number of Academies is [illegible]—pupils [illegible]. The amount of money raised for the support of these schools, is $[illegible]. Boston pays for wages, board, and fuel, $[illegible].

A resolution has been adopted in the Senate of Indiana, appointing a committee to take into consideration the propriety of raising a fund to buy up the bonds of the State at their present reduced prices, to pay the interest.

The Old American Theatre in the rear of Gadsby's (Washington city) has been converted into a ball room, for a series of assemblies under the direction of the Mayor and Secretary of State. The first was given on Thursday night. The new (National) theatre is closed, and will probably be opened soon as an Episcopal Church. Mr. H[illegible], one of the ministers of St. Paul's, in N. Y., is spoken of for the preacher.

On Thursday evening, Peter Wendell, M. D., of Albany, was chosen by the Regents, Chancellor of the University, in the place of the late lamented James King; and Lieut. Governor Bradish, Vice Chancellor. Both, we understand, were the unanimous choice of the Board.

The will case of John Randolph has been decided, and the slaves are free. It is reported that they are to go either to Canada or Liberia.

The Constitution of Rhode Island.—The Suffrage Convention of Rhode Island on Wednesday last met at Providence and counted the votes given for the Constitution which was framed for the state by that convention, as a substitute for the Royal Charter under which the government has existed. The votes amounted to nearly 14,000, a large majority of those over 21 years of age. The Convention accordingly adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, it satisfactorily appears that the citizens of this state, in their original and sovereign capacity, have ratified and adopted said constitution, by a large majority; and the will of the people, thus decisively made known, ought to be implicitly obeyed, and faithfully executed; and we do therefore Resolve and Declare, That said Constitution rightfully ought to be and is the paramount law, and Constitution of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

And we do further Resolve and Declare, for ourselves, and in behalf of the People whom we represent, that we will establish such Constitution, and sustain and defend the same by all necessary means."

The Convention directed the proclamation to be published, and that delegates be chosen to assemble on the 16th of February next, for the purpose of nominating a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and other State officers, to be supported upon a Constitutional and State Rights ticket, and at the first general election, on Monday, the 18th day of April next. A salute was fired at the conclusion of their labors, in honor of the event.

A Trifling Quarrel and Tragic end.—A man named Durham has been committed to jail in Mercer co. N. J. for killing his wife in a quarrel as to the mode in which the tea should be made, "he insisting upon its being made as his mother made it, and she refused to mingle it in any other way than the way her mother taught her. Becoming excited, he struck her with his fist, and knocked her down. Her head struck against something hard, and her scull was fractured. She lingered in distress about ten days.

Colt's Trial.—The trial of this cause commenced on Wednesday morning. At the opening of the Court, the prisoner's counsel objected to the manner in which the panel of jurors had been summoned, and contended that the Court had no authority to order so large a panel, (300,) to be summoned at one time. A considerable portion of the forenoon was occupied with the arguments of counsel on this question, and when it was decided by the Court, the panel of jurors commenced being called over in order in order to select a jury—193 jurors answered to their names, of whom counsel for the prisoner challenged sixteen peremptorily; two were objected to and set aside for favor; eight were exempted as firemen or militia men; two were excused on the ground of ill health, and 154 were set aside as having formed or expressed opinions on the subject matter of the trial; thus leaving only eleven to whom there was no objection, and who were sworn on the Jury. About half past 10 o'clock the panel was exhausted, and the Court ordered the Sheriff to summon another panel for this morning: in order to select the twelfth Juror. The Court then adjourned.

Apportionment under the New Census.—The Select Committee of the House of Representatives on the apportionment of representation under the new census, have agreed upon the ratio, and will be ready to report on Friday. The number settled on by the committee is 68,000. Under the census of 1830, the number was 47,500, and the aggregate of the committee shall become a law, the House will consist of 223 members, being a reduction of 19.

Loss and Gain under the New Proposition.

No. of representatives at the rate of one to every 68,000 souls, as proposed by the committee, with Old No.	New.

Maine,	8	7
New Hampshire,	5	4
Massachusetts,	12	10
Rhode Island,	1	1
Connecticut,	6	4
Vermont,	5	4
New York,	40	35
New Jersey,	6	5
Pennsylvania,	28	25
Delaware,	1	1
Maryland,	8	6
Virginia,	21	15
North Carolina,	13	9
South Carolina,	9	6
Georgia,	9	3
Alabama,	5	7
Mississippi,	2	4
Louisiana,	3	4
Tennessee,	13	11
Kentucky,	13	10
Ohio,	19	22
Indiana,	7	10
Illinois,	3	7
Missouri,	2	5
Arkansas,	1	1
Michigan,	1	3
	242	223

Mr. Catherwood at Uxmal.—We have just seen a letter, dated Nov. 27, written by our friend Mr. Catherwood, at the ruins in Uxmal, of the northern part of Yucatan. This place, it will be remembered by all who have read the late work of Mr. Stephens, was the last place visited and described by these travelers. It was there that Mr. Catherwood was taken sick and obliged to hasten away, after being but a a few hours among one of the most interesting of the ruined cities of that country. He now writes that their party had already been several weeks busily occupied in their researches among the ruins of that place, and that so vast and so full of interest were these ancient remains, that a month longer will be necessary before they can complete their drawings and investigations; after which they will proceed to Chiten, Itzan, and other places in which some remarkable antiquities exist, and which have not yet described. "In fact," observes Mr. Catherwood, "the whole country is covered with ruins, and our greatest difficulty is, in choosing those of most importance, which will tend to some definite end and where we shall be most rewarded for our labors."

Several months he supposes will still be necessary to accomplish their purposes, as they do not intend to let any thing of importance escape their attention. The proprietor of Uxmal and of an extensive district of country around, Don Simon Peon, was with our travelers, and had extended to them every facility they could wish in accomplishing the objects of their visit.—Dr. Cabot, a young physician and naturalist from Boston, was also with them. This gentlemen was as actively employed in collecting specimens in natural history, as Mr. Catherwood was in the department of the arts. Dr. C. has already made a fine collection of the birds of the country, and will no doubt bring home the most valuable collection of ornithological specimens ever brought from tropical America.—Prov. Journal.

From the Jour. of Commerce.

From Hayti.—We have Port au Prince papers to the 19th ult. A good deal of excitement had been occasioned by an article which appeared in the newspaper called "Le Manifeste," reflecting upon the conduct of the French Consul General; in consequence of which article, the Consul had demanded his passports. The state of the case is thus presented in "Le Telegraphe" of Dec. 19th:

"The Manifeste having inserted on last Sunday, a libel on Mr. Levasseur, Consul General of France, the public Attorney was directed by the Chief Justice to commence a prosecution against the editor of that paper. But Mr. Levasseur, thinking it not proper to await the issue of a trial to obtain due reparation—notified the Government. As the proceedings here have been in conformity with the practice of other nations, the good understanding between the two States will not be interrupted.—And whatever may be the result, the Government of Hayti will exert herself to strengthen more and more the present relations, and to pursue strictly the principles of national law."

The following extract from a private letter received in this city, gives the following particulars relative to the excitement prevailing there:

Port au Prince, Dec. 22.

"For some time a report has been current here that arrivals of counterfeit money, to the amount of $600,000, were being expected either from France or the United States, which caused our government to keep a close eye upon vessels arriving from those quarters. Inquiries subsequently led to the detection of a Frenchman, the brother of the Secretary of the French Consul, being engaged in this new branch of financiering. He had been a resident of the city for many years, and but recently returned from a visit to France. Our authorities caused his dwelling to be searched, and succeeded in finding counterfeit money about the premises. The French Consul was immediately informed of this, and a request made that two French vessels of war, stationed on the roads, should search every vessel coming in, which measure resulted in the seizure of the ship St. Jaques, from Havre, on board of which was counterfeit money, to the amount of $300,000 in notes, was found ingeniously concealed in marble tomb-stones, whereof her cargo partly consisted, consigned to the Frenchman. He was immediately arrested, but denies having any knowledge of the matter, and President Boyer delivered him up to the Consul for transportation to France, on the ground that the counterfeit notes were engraved in France, and the discovery been made by one of the French frigates on board of which he was then conveyed. Meanwhile the notes were made a bonfire of. These transactions were considered by the Haitians as calling for an interference on the part of the press; in consequence of which the papers were filled with insults on the Consul and the French nation, which statements induced the Consul to demand of the President publicly to declare that the removal of the prisoner on board the frigate had taken place at the instance of his—President Boyer's—request, to have him transported to France for trial.

Boyer refused to comply, apprehending by such a declaration to excite public indignation. Hard words ensued, which can not have been of a very flattering nature to the French, since the Consul has been induced to withdraw from the Island on the 18th inst., on board her man of war. Great excitement prevails here, and no one can tell what end this will come to. Meanwhile, expresses have been sent to Jamaica, and one of the French vessels has left for Martinique."

Fanny Elssler has left the country; having sailed from Philadelphia on Saturday, for Havanna, we trust never to return.

We notice, in the Pittsburgh Gazette, that the Washingtonian Society have formed a stock company for the purpose of erecting a large Hall, to be devoted, exclusively, to the use of the Society, for Lecture Rooms, Reading Rooms, &c.

The Boston Atlas states that the amount of the leather manufacture in New England, at more than five millions of dollars, and the Hartford Times says that one man in Connecticut raised $10,000 worth of tobacco last year.

Louisiana has a law punishing with death the survivor in a duel; but it is found to be a dead letter, not a single conviction having taken place under it. The Governor in consequence recommends that imprisonment be substituted for capital punishment, and that the survivor and seconds be made liable for the debts of the person who falls. This strikes us as a likelier remedy than any other that can be applied. And that also perpetual exclusion from offices of trust or honor.

Temperance among the Cherokees.—A native Indian, Young Wolf, writes the editor of the South Western Christian Advocate the following good news:—"Our General Council has just closed its regular session, during which we have perfect harmony. Many important laws have been enacted, which, if carried into effect, will prove very advantageous to us as a nation. Our nation has suffered heretofore, much on account of the "soul-killing" effects of spiritous liquors, which have flooded our country almost to a perfect inundation; and we have thought it wise in us to arrest, if possible, its maddened course. And our Council has passed a law, which is to take effect on the 1st of January, 1842, That all persons bringing in or retailing spiritious liquors in the Cherokee Nation, subject themselves to a fine of $500 for every offense, and the liquor to be poured out upon the ground. And it is to be hoped that the State of Arkansas will pass some law to co-operate with repelling this 'foul monster of death' from our beloved country, that from these 'western wilds' the song of praise to God and the Lamb may be heard without distraction, to ring and reverberate from hill to dale. We have also a Bible Society formed in in the Cherokee Nation, in which enterprise we hope to do something, through the blessings of God."

What it costs to be a drunkard.—A member of the Washington Temperance Society in this city, told us a few days since, that his expenses for liquor, had not been less than seventy-five cents per day for the last ten years, including the money he had spent while he was on drunken frolics. This would amount to $2,737 50. For eight months past he has been a member of the Temperance Society, and has saved in this short period, besides supporting his family, about five hundred dollars.—Ch. Sec.

Advertising.—Half of our exchanges are preaching up the benefits of advertising. Nonsense! Wise men know it now; let fools find it out themselves.

Death of Jesse Hawley.—Jesse Hawley, Esq. an old and respectable citizen of Western New-York, died suddenly by the rupture of a blood vessel at Lockport, on the 10th inst. Mr. Hawley was among the original projectors of the Erie Canal. He wrote a series of articles in the Ontario Messenger, as early as 1805, urging a navigable communication between the Hudson River and Lake Erie. He was formerly a Member of Assembly, and for several years Collector of the Port of Genessee.—Albany. Eve. Jour.

The Baltimore Clipper states that the Rev. C. T. Torrey, of this State, was arrested at the Slaveholders' Convention, Annapolis, Md. where he was taking notes; as an abolitionist, and from papers in his possession, it was supposed he had violated a law of the State of Maryland, which prohibits the circulation of certain publications. He is in jail in the county of Anne Arundle. No farther facts are given. Mr. Torey we know to be an amiable, inoffensive man in society.—Christian Watchman.

The End of a Great Bank.—The remaining effects of the celebrated Brandon Bank were recently sold at a sheriff's sale (says the Mississippian,) for fifty dollars. There is afloat somewhere, some millions of its bills, which can be had at a great reduction from their face, if any one is disposed to start the concern again, and give it another trial.

Silk in the State Prison.—A report on the manufacture of Silk in the State Prison at Auburn was submitted by Gov. Seward at the opening of the Legislature. The whole number of skeins manufactured from May 1st to the last of November, during 1,022 days of convict labor, was 31,023; and its value, including the cost of cocoons, of convict labor and of coloring and dressing, is $775 56. The total amount of convict earnings was $310 23, or an average of 30.0363 cents per day. The Clerk of the Prison feels confident that a verry low grade of men may be made to earn from 35 to 50 cents a day at that business. The Agent will soon put the State Prison Silk in market.

Mr Dickens.—This distinguished author, accompanied by his lady, leaves England this day for the United States. We learn from a letter, received by the last steamer, from Mr. Dickens, by our old friend, Mr. Clark, of the Knickerbocker, that it is his intention to pass six months in the United States. After spending a few days in Boston, he will visit New York where he will tarry some days. "My design is," he writes, "to spend but little time in these two cities, but to proceed to the south, as far as Charleston. Our stay will be six months; during which time, I must see as much as can be seen in such a space, of the country and the people." Mr. Dickens speaks of his visit with the utmost enthusiasm. "You make me very proud and happy," he writes, "by anticipation, in thinking of the number of friends I shall find; but I can not describe to you the glow into which I rise, when I think of the wonders that await us, and all the interest I am sure I shall have in your mighty land."—Courier.

Brazillian Tea.—It seems that a gentleman of wealth, who has a plantation not far from Rio Janiero, obtained some tea plants, and set them out in his land. By care and attention they grew well, and he has now about 80,000 growing rapidly, and supplying leaves beyond his expectation. The tea hitherto made varies in some degree from that which is brought from China. We have a canister of this tea; it answers in looks and taste to the common Hyson of the shops, and is very paletable.

Denominations in Boston.—A writer on "City Missions" in the Boston Recorder, gives the following statistics of the members of the different churches in the city:

	Churches	Members.
Orthodox Congregationalist	13	3,750
Baptist,	9	3,000
Methodist,	10	1,800
Other Evangelical, (including Episcopal.)		1,000
All others, Unitarian, Universalists, Catholic, &c.		4,600
Total of all denominations, or 1 in 6 of the population.		41,150

Touching Incident.—During his speech in Faneuel Hall on Christmas evening, Mr. Hawkins related an instance of the terrible effect of intemperance, which had recently come under his observation in Worcester county. A victim of this appetite had driven his family from his miserable habitation, and had parted with every thing he could sell, until only a faithful dog was left, who kept his master from freezing by lying on his feet at night. The wretched man, to gratify the demon of thirst that raged within him, killed his dog, sold his skin to a tanner, and with the proceeds went to his hut, and held his last revel in drunkenness, and in the morning was found dead, from intemperance and cold. The faithful dog was no longer there to keep warmth and life in him, and when the coroner came to hold the inquest, the only food found in the place was half a pint of meal.

The mormon Elders have issued an Epistle from the city of Nauvoo, on the Mississippi, requiring the "Saints of the Last Days" to contribute one tenth of all their substance, and one tenth of their earnings, to help forward the Temple of the Lord. Their city now numbers 10,000 inhabitants.

Notices.

PROSPECTUS

OF

VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-Day Baptist Register will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance, or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for a fair discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

Female Benevolent Society.

The Ladies of the Female Benevolent Society of the Presbyterian Church in this village, will give an Oyster Supper at the Saloon of Mr. W. C. GAGE, on Thursday evening, the 27th inst., at 6 o'clock, P. M. The Gentlemen and Ladies of this village and vicinity are respectfully invited to attend. The Ladies will spare no pains on their part to render the repast and other entertainments in the evening both inviting and agreeable to all who will honor them with their company.

☞ Tickets to be had at the door. $1 per couple.

By order of the Committee.

MRS. C. BENTLEY,
MRS. E. COLEMAN,
MISS C. J. DELLAY.

De Ruyter, Jan. 21, 1842.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS it has come to the knowledge of the Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute that certain reports have been circulated, which are calculated to prejudice the minds of some of the Stockholders against the character of the school and also to weaken their confidence in the management of said Trustees; therefore,

Resolved, That the Trustees cordially invite the Stockholders to appoint, if they shall think proper, a competent unprejudiced committee, composed of members, located in different parts of the country, or in different communities of the Stockholders, to investigate the whole concerns and business transactions of the Board of Trustees of said Institution. And as the proper time for such meeting, we would suggest the Monday next preceding the annual meeting of the Stockholders in June next.

We would also suggest the propriety of appointing one or two in each society according to the amount of stock invested.

By order of the Board of Trustees.

JOHN R. BUTTS, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, Jan. 2, 1842.

MARRIED,

In DeRuyter, on the 13th inst., by the Rev. D. Putman, Mr. WILSON LAMB, of Cazenovia, and Miss LURINDA GARDNER, of De Ruyter.

In De Ruyter, on the 13th inst., by the Rev. D. Putman, Mr. SILAS LYON, and Miss SUSAN HOLMES.

In De Ruyter, on the 17th inst., by Rev J. R. Johnson, Mr. GILBERT ALLARD, and Miss LAURA RANDALL.

In De Ruyter, on the 20th inst., by the Rev J. B. Pixley, Mr. HARP BENJAMIN, and Miss HELEN SNOW.

In Cazenovia, on the 13th inst., by Rev. Mr. Norton, Mr. THEODORUS POWELL, and Miss BALSORA REEVES, all of the above place.

In Brookfield, on the 6th inst., by Rev. S. B. Crandall, Mr. AMOS WILCOX, and Miss SUSAN TAYLOR, all of the above place.

In Edmeston, on the 6th inst., by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. LEVI HOLT, and Miss BETSEY COON, both of Brookfield.

DIED,

Near Shiloh, on the 2d inst., of rupture of the heart, Mr. REUBEN F. RANDOLPH, aged sixty years.

Mr. R. had been for many years a professor of religion, and had uniformly maintained a consistent course of life. This sudden bereavement will be sensibly felt, not only by his surviving partner and children, but also by the Church and Society of which he was a valuable member.

In this town on the 23d inst., of Scarlet Fever, ADELAIDE, daughter of J. D. Tripp aged 5 years.

In Otselic, on the 14th inst., of Dropsy on the brain, JAMES, son of Walter R. and Elizabeth Leversee, aged 12 years.

In Truxton, on the 20th inst., of dropsy of the chest, following Scarlet Fever, ARZA G. Son of Varnum M., and Melissa Burdick, aged one year, six months, and eight days.

LIST OF LETTERS.

C. Rogers, (thank you.) D. Benedict, (we will aid you.) "Mary," Thomas E. Babcock, (money not received.) Caleb Clark, A. L. Hibbard, P. M., (we will send the Bill.) J. Whitford, (we have arranged it on our books.) Sabina Reckord, (we designed to send the paper "Gratis," as long as it pleased you.) E. W. Chamberlain, (we forward the paper as directed.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of C. Rogers, $2.50, cr. W. Vincent, $2, Rev E. Bush, .50, of L. D. Ayres $2.25, cr. N. Rogers, $2, of T. E. Babcock, $1.16, cr. L. Maxson, .66, I. De Graff, .50, of John Whitford, $3, cr. G. N. Greenman, $2.25 self, .75, before returned, S. C., $1, D. Gardner, $2, E. E. Benjamin $2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED,

A BOY, about 15 or 16 years of age, to learn the Tailors Trade. One who has been at the business would be preferred. Good recommendations would be required. Apply to JAMES M. LETTS, No. 1 Farmers Exchange.

De Ruyter, Jan. 21, 1842.

HEALTH, the object of our solicitude, can be preserved only by a careful attention in counteracting those causes which tend to decomposition putrefaction of the fluids of the body. Temperance and a judicious selection of articles of diet will do much to promote this result; but with all carefulness, the warm weather and the fruits and mixed diet of the season will tend powerfully to produce putrefaction and disease without some medication. Something is needed to counteract this tendency and keep the secretions in a healthy state. None are safe without it. For this purpose PHELPS' TOMATO PILLS are unrivalled. The experience of thousands testify to their Hygeine properties as a corrective of the fluids, to prevent bilious and congestive fevers, dysentery, &c. and antidotes and remedy in warm weather. A timely dose will save a long sickness and much suffering. These Pills are extensively celebrated as a Family Physic.—Tuscaloosa Gazette.

For sale by J. N. ELMORE.

De Ruyter, Jan. 26, 1842.

VALUABLE FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale a valuable farm, situated in the town of Truxton, Cortland Co., N. Y., and on the turnpike road one mile west of the flourishing village of De Ruyter.

Said farm contains about 180 acres of land, well watered, and well adapted to the culture of grain and grass, with comfortable buildings.

There are also on the premises, about one hundred thrifty bearing apple trees, and about 50 or 60 acres of valuable standing timber, containing an abundance of first rate rail timber. There is also a valuable stone quarry on the premises.

Said farm will be offered unusually low, considering the peculiar advantages to be derived from so pleasant a location.

Terms of payment almost to suit the purchaser. For farther particulars enquire of the subscriber on the premises.

J. R. BUTTS.

Truxton, Jan. 12, 1842.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers [illegible] The Books and accounts [illegible] by either of the subscribers [illegible] ed will please call and [illegible]

JAMES [illegible]
THOMAS [illegible]

De Ruyter, Jan. 15, 1842.

FOR SALE.

A FIRST rate Cutter. [illegible] suit the purchaser. [illegible]

Jan. 18, 1842.

NOTICE. The notes [illegible] firm of ELMORE [illegible] placed in the hands of [illegible] and collection where [illegible] the first day of March. [illegible] unsettled at that date, will [illegible] officer for collection.

Jan. 10, 1842. [illegible]

DISSOLUTION. Notice [illegible] the co-partnership [illegible] the firm of E. ELLIS & Co. [illegible] by mutual consent. The business [illegible] carried on by E. ELLIS [illegible] of the said firm are assigned [illegible] must be collected by him. [illegible]

Georgetown, Jan. 1, 1842. [illegible]

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, on book account of three months standing, are respectfully solicited to call and settle the same by the 15th day of January next, or he will be obliged to put them in other hands for collection, as he is in debt and his creditors WILL have their PAY.

HALSEY STILLMAN.

De Ruyter, Dec. 24th, 1841.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots Ladies and Children's Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere, at the
October 4. STONE STORE.

L. W. BLISS' Window Sash
Bliss' & Co. [illegible] Blinds.
Holmes's Sampson & Saisbury Edged Tools consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, Adzes and Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE, October 4. Manufacturers' Agent.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

NO IMPOSITION.

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

STOVES.

COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ABIJAH N. ANNAS,

LATE of the firm of "Elmore Annas & Ayer," has moved into the new building adjoining the Stone Store of John N. Elmore (La Fayette Block), where he is receiving the largest and best assortment of STOVES ever before offered in this market, comprising every desirable pattern of Cooking, Hall, Box, Plate, and

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

Which he offers, Wholesale & Retail, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. Most kinds of Produce, Old Castings and CASH, even, will not be refused in payment for any article in his line of business.

The subscriber manufactures all kinds of Stove Furniture, Pipe, Sheet Iron, Copper,

BRASS AND TIN WARE

Of every description, which he keeps constantly on hand, and offers at as

LOW PRICES

Either at wholesale or retail, as any other manufacturer in the State. All wares warranted, made of GOOD materials, and not LEAKY.

Eave Troughs

Made and put up to order. Also,

JUST RECEIVED

And for sale a full assortment of Westmoreland Canal Stoves and Cauldron Kettles.

JOB WORK

[illegible] done at short notice, and for reasonable prices. N. B. Purchasers wishing to buy will please call at the Green Store, La Fayette Block, No. 3 Cortland Street.

De Ruyter, Oct. 15, 1841. 34tf

NEW GOODS

AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING, in connection with his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARDWARE, &c., received the LARGEST stock of

☞ BOOTS & SHOES, ☜

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will be sold CHEAPER than any ever sold before in this town, (for the especial reason that I have "peculiar advantages in purchasing") that is to say I paid CASH and that is advantage enough.

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34yl

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

TAKE NOTICE.

THE subscriber has now on hand, a good assortment of Silver and Brass mounted Harnesses, Coach and Farm Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Martingales and even Halters, Whips, Trunks, of all sizes, and Valices, common and Brussels Carpet Bags, Silver and Brass Spring Stirrup Irons, Spurs, [illegible] and Worsted Web, Carriage Lace, Neck [illegible] Trace and Halter Chains, and all other articles that are ever made or kept in a shop of this [illegible] as low as any shop west of [illegible] even De Ruyter not excepted, [illegible] and for durability.

[illegible] any of the above articles [illegible] money, and the remainder [illegible] kinds of Grain, Butter, [illegible] that is raised by the Farmer [illegible] Hay, Fat Cattle, [illegible] any quantity of Lime [illegible]

J. R. RIDER.

[illegible] 1841. 32tf

[illegible] ESTABLISHMENT.

HOUSE,

[illegible] public for the liberal [illegible] say that he [illegible] will be continued [illegible] HOUSE & BENJAMIN, [illegible] to do work [illegible] and warranted [illegible] Fashions for 1841-2 [illegible] Dellay's Store. [illegible] 1841. 30m6

[illegible] AND MEDICINES.

[illegible] assortment of superior quality [illegible] lots to suit purchasers, at [illegible] less than is offered by any Dellay. [illegible] J. N. ELMORE.

[illegible] 21

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

WILL find the article at a low price at
Nov. 21 ELMORE'S

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

HAVING purchased the stock of Goods, and taken the stand formerly occupied by H. J. Williams, in connection with the BOOT AND SHOE ESTABLISHMENT of GEO. W. SUTTON'S, would respectfully announce to the inhabitants of this village and surrounding country, that they are now receiving from New-York a splendid stock of

Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs;

Which, together with the former stock completes the most extensive assortment ever before offered in this village, which they flatter themselves from their peculiar advantages in purchasing, they can sell at as

LOW PRICES,

as any establishment west of the city of New-York. Their system of business will invariably be,

One Price and Ready Pay.

Those wishing to purchase Goods cheap, are earnestly solicited to give them a call, and examine a stock of Goods offered at prices that cannot fail to please the verriest banterer.

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax-seed, by
Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.
Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.
34tf S. G. WALKER.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE POISON SELLER.

This is a soft term to apply to the venders of intoxicating drinks. The word intoxicating is more forcible than poisonous. A bow, in the Greek language, was called taxon, any thing pertaining to a bow, taxicon, and hence the poison in which the arrows were dipped came to be called taxicon. What this poison was, is more than we know, but it was deadly. It was the most virulent of all poisons. The word intoxicating points us to the cruel, fiendlike, deliberate malice of the ancient poisoned arrow. If it but punctured the skin, the victim was a corpse.

But to furnish a term which shall correctly describe and set forth the venom of alcohol—the poison of all poisons, is beyond the power of the Greek or any other language. It contains evils worse than death. It is full of all manner of crimes—abominable violations of all laws, human and divine. Wounds, bruises, brawls, rapes and murders, lurk in the liquid. Insanity is always there. Conflagrations, mobs and wars, there lie in embryo. It only needs the vender to bring them to birth. The violation and murder of Mary C. Rogers was undoubtedly contained in alcohol, and was sold for a very trifling sum. To make some liquor vender a few cents richer, that innocent girl must close her eyes to the sweet sunshine of life, and her dishonored corpse must float in the Hudson—her widowed mother must wring her hands in despair, and society must be thrilled with fear and horror. Take a moderate fortune accumulated by the liquor trade, it is the price of a whole Sodom of crime. It has actually cost the State far more than it comes to. The public purse would have been the gainer by advancing the whole sum, and preventing the crimes attendant on the traffic. This is to say nothing of what it has cost the individual buyers. A poison that produces such effects must be a very rank poison.

Trafficker in Alcohol, you ask for moral "suasion," let us ask you a few plain questions. Are you not pretty well convinced that for every thousand dollars you gain in your business, two or three families must be plunged in shame, misery and rags, one man must be shut up in the insane hospital, another in the penitentiary, and a third must die on the gallows, or there must be sin and suffering in some shape to that amount? Now, if by deceitful eloquence of the tongue, you could persuade so many persons into such crimes, would you do it for $1000. But is not the liquor you sell a deceit and a lie? Does it not persuade men into crime by promising happiness? Might not you just as virtuously lie with your tongue as with your silver labelled decanters? What would you say of a traffick in licentious and corrupting books? If such books were found to destroy families, violate the peace and fill the jails, would you sustain the venders on the plea of liberty—no awful sin to buy—every man a right to do what he will with his own? Would you not exclaim—No man has a right to poison the soul!

Once more, gentlemen of the liquor trade, from the princes of New England Rum, who recommend humility to John Pierpont, down to the gill-retailers, who justify yourselves, by pointing to the great distillers in the church, let us ask you one question. Is the Temperance reform under father Matthew, in Ireland, a good thing? You doubt, perhaps, whether it will last; but suppose it should, and suppose the millions who have taken the pledge should live and die sober, do you acknowledge it a blessing? You do. You must. You would have hearts harder than the devils have, not to do it. If it be so, is not your business a curse? Your business goes to annihilate such a reform. It takes the poor drunkards as they rise and hurls them back into the gutter. When the overjoyed wives are blessing God through their tears and the little children are leaping for joy at the restoration of lost husbands and fathers, your trade comes in, and for a half dozen discs of tarnished copper, turns the heaven back into hell! Every hogshead, or demijohn, or glass, of the poison which you sell, you lift your hand in the face of God and vote to put Ireland back where she was before. Is there a blessing in the reform of the Washington Total Abstinence Society? Who dares to say there is not? The man who does, ought to fear that the earth will open and swallow him up. Yet your business says so, and you say so by it. You would undo it all. For the price of a glass of brandy, you would send the hero John Hawkins, back to the horrors from which he has escaped; nay, you would blot out in everlasting night, all the glorious fires which he has kindled.

Is there no way which you can grow rich but by selling such a poison? Then you had better be poor. Is there no other way in which you and your children can live? Then you had better die. Death is nothing to the woes which your trade produces. If the Total Abstinence reform has created a heaven upon earth, pray what is it that your trade has created upon earth?—W. Star.

Insanity in a Family.—The Concord Courier states that a young woman in Rockland Co., shortly after giving birth to a female child, commited suicide by drowning. This child, when she attained the age of 17 or 18 years, also committed suicide in a similar manner. The father on hearing of it, drowned himself, which produced insanity in the grandfather, who also drowned himself. The brother afterwards going to Exeter to prove the will by which he became entitled to the estate, also became deranged and committed suicide by drowning himself in the river there.

THE MOTHER'S LOVE.

Last among the characteristics of women, is that sweet motherly love with which nature has gifted her; it is almost independent of cold reason, and wholly removed from all selfish hope of reward. Not because it is a living part of herself—the child of her heart, a fraction of her own nature. Therefore do her entrails yearn over his wailings; her heart beats quicker at his joy; her blood flows more softly through her veins, when the breast at which he drinks, knits him to her. In every uncorrupted nation of the earth, this feeling is the same. Climate, which changes every thing else, changes not that. It is only the most corrupting forms of society which have power gradually to make luxurious vice sweeter than the tender cares and toils of maternal love. In Greenland, where the climate affords no food for infants, the mother nourishes her child up to the third or fourth year of his life. She endures from him all the nescent indications of the rude domineering spirit of manhood, with indulgent, all-forgiving patience. The negress is armed with more than manly strength when her child is attacked by savage beasts. We read with astonished admiration the examples of her matchless courage and contempt of danger. But if death robs that tender mother, whom we are pleased to call a savage, of her best comfort—the charm and care of her existence—where is the heart of man that can conceive her sorrow? Read the lament of the Nadowessee woman, on the loss of her husband and her infant son. The feeling which it breathes is beyond all expression.—From the German of Herder.

WHAT SHOUID AN EDITOR DO!

Mr. Editor.—The question in my mind at the present moment is, What should an Editor do?—and you may wonder why I should send my thoughts on this topic to an editor, unless I propose to give him a smart lecture upon duty. But, then, I pause and ponder upon this question; and I ask again, What should an editor do?—please his readers?—do just what this patron would have him? Surely this is very desirable—and I have a mind, sir, that you should please me, and do what I would have you do; and to tell the truth, I cannot well get out of this mind, that you please me; that you think and feel as I do, and say my words, and speak from my passions; but yet, this aim I fear must be for you a most heartless work; and I even fear that should you take this as your course, you would become a heartless and unprincipled editor; this we do not want.

What, then, shall an editor do? what, but speak and act as a principled, thinking man, under his own proper responsibility?—what, but act and speak from his own convictions and from his own spirit? Surely we cannot dispense with this in an editor, even when we find fault with him for it: and when I have quarrelled in my study (and well if not in the streets) with the course of my editor, I am satisfied upon reflection, that I have quarrelled too often with that very manly integrity, and conscientious devotion to personal duty and convictions, without which he could do me and no one else any good; and without which he would deserve and gain only scorn and pity of the good. I have thought better of all this matter, whilst weighing this question, and hope to be satisfied if an editor's course is marked by purity and stability of purpose, be under the rule of a Christian spirit, and be guided by thoughtfulness, knowledge, and considerate wisdom,—I will only require that I may trust his spirit, that he be prepared to speak in wisdom, and as a wise man, even when I differ from him, and that I have evidence that he is not given to speaking without thinking.

"THE EARTH WAS REAPED."

The flowers of summer had found a grave in the earth. The reaper's sickle had robbed the fruitful fields of their waving harvests. The sun turned pale and shrouded its face in gloom, at the scene of desolation. The wind sent its cry of mourning through the leafless forests, to bewail the work of death. All nature told of the summer passed, the harvest ended, and pointed to the final close of all things, appropriately designated by the Savior, "the harvest of the world." Obedient to the prompting, my spirit turned to sober contemplation. In a moment, all around me was hushed.

The sea, which was dashing in wild tumult against the shore, stood still. The wind breathed not. The voice of man, in its loud laugh of mirth, and its deep wail of sorrow, died away. In vain my eye sought for the lowly cot of poverty, or the proud palace of wealth—the festive hall where men bowed to pleasure, or the holy temple where they worshiped God. The open graves were tenantless, and the sea had given up its dead. The sun was blotted out. Darkness rested upon the deep. No voice, no sound was heard, till the silence and darkness were broken by the shining wing of an angel flying through the midst of heaven, with a bright sickle in his hand, and crying with a loud voice, as he sped his way back to the Throne of God, The Earth is reaped.

Then were verified those words once spoken on earth, but long deemed an idle tale: "They shall gather the wheat into the garner, and bind the tares into bundles to be burned." The harvest of the earth, through its many centuries, stood full before me, each soul distinctly marked as sinful or holy. But, Oh! that into which the wicked were cast—who shall describe it?

Could ye catch one glimpse of it, ye probationers for eternity, could ye for one moment feel what is implied in everlasting banishment from God, you would turn from your chase of gilded pleasures, you would relax your grasp of perishable dust, and flee from the wrath to come. But there were many such triflers as ye in that assembly. There were many there, who had run as eagerly after earth, and as little heeded heaven as ye. They had sold their souls as cheap as ye. But they had no golden bribes, wherewith to blind the unerring angels, who separated them from among those who sought the pearl of great price. And will you, O votary of earth, take with you that gold for which you barter that immortal soul, and pay it as the price of admittance within the holy gates of heaven? If so you are wise. Go on; labour day and night. Rest not; heap up the glittering gold which shall bring you into heaven; for you will need it soon. Votary of pleasure, think you to wrap around you the tinseled garb of earthly pleasure? and thus pass in undetected with the righteous? Then haste to weave this golden web. It is worthy of labour, if it shall array you for heaven.

But it was not so on that fearful day. The angels severed the wicked from among the just, and none entered heaven, save they who had received the "white stone" and were clothed in the spotless robe of Christ's righteousness. These entered in. Not one was lost. The joy of each was unutterable. But while my soul was losing itself in the joyful and solemn feeling inspired by this scene, and I was longing to become a partaker in the joy of those gathered into the kingdom of their Lord—the earth was again inhabited, and my place assigned me there as a probationer for eternity. But the heavenly vision instructed me to view the world as one great field soon to be reaped. Moreover the Master of the field whispered in my ear, Go work in my vineyard. These souls are destined to heaven or hell. To christians is committed the keeping of this field. Wo unto that laborer who sleeps and permits the enemy to sow tares. Wo unto that husbandman who seeks gold on earth, when he should be cultivating the waste places of my vineyard. Wo unto that servant, who beholds the fields white to harvest and goes not forth to labor.

Christian friends ransomed by a Savior's blood does not this vision appeal unto us? But a little while, and the end shall come. The earth shall be reaped. We shall be gathered into the kingdom of heaven, or be bound with the wicked to be burned, as we shall have been good and faithful or slothful servants. The angel shall have thrust in his sickle, and among those reaped shall be beloved children, and friends, and the heathen world, that world now imploring for help.

Can we leave them to be cut down and cast into the fire? Can we withhold the money, the prayer, the Christian effort which might save them? Oh, will we now go forth, though it be weeping, bearing precious seed, if, when the "earth is reaped," we may come with rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us, to lay at our Redeemer's feet?—Portland Mirror.

Children's Department.

THE WIDOW AND HER SHIPWRECKED SON.

In the north of England, in a small inland village, a lieutenant of the British navy, after serving his country for many years, took up his abode. He had a pious wife, and six or seven children. She sent them to a village Sabbath school; but the eldest, a boy of fourteen years, seemed determined to profit neither by maternal loves nor pious instruction at school. He played and mingled with a class of wicked idlers that infested the village, and would have been as bad as the worst of them but for his father's rigid discipline. That alone restrained him from rushing into excess of wickedness and riot. But the father died, and left his widow to combat with the illness of her boy alone. No, not alone; for she sought the help of her heavenly husband.

The father being dead, the son grew worse. He was ungovernable; and the afflicted widow wept as with a broken heart, over her recreant child. Unable to restrain him, she adopted a very common mode in England of disposing of idle lads. She resolved to send him to sea. It was a painful alternative; but he could not grow worse there, she thought, and possibly the severe discipline of a ship might humble his proud spirit, and lead him to reflection.

A ship was obtained for him. The bustle of preparation began and was over.—Unknown to the youth, the mother placed a Bible in his chest, with a secret hope that its light might lead him to his heavenly Father, when he should be far off on the deep blue sea. Many were the prayers that mother offered for the son; many the counsel that she gave him from the fullness of her heart. The day of separation came. O, it was a day of trial to all but to him who was the occasion of the sadness of that family. Warm were the tears she shed, as, pressing him to her bosom, she bade him adieu, and commended his wayward heart to God.

Many years had passed, and the wanderer had not returned. The ship had perished at sea, and the widow mourned her son as dead; and what was worse, she trembled for the safety of his undying soul. Could she have been assured of his safety in a better world, her pained heart would have been at rest. But she wept over him a doubly lost.

It was a stormy night in mid-winter.—The wind howled, the rain poured down in torrents, and deep darkness obscured the sky. The widow, and her children, sat beside the cheerful fire, and a chastened cheerfulness overspread the circle, though now and then a cloud of melancholy gathered over the mother's brow, as the driving storm reminded her of her lost son, when a slight tap was heard at the door. It was opened, a sailor stood there, way-worn and weather-beaten. He begged a shelter from the storm. It was not in the mother's heart to refuse a sailor on such a night, and she offered him her fireside and her food.

When he had refreshed himself, she modestly questioned him of his condition. His tale was soon told. He had been shipwrecked, and was going home poor and pennyless to his mother. He had been shipwrecked before. The widow asked him to tell the story of his sufferings.

He said that in a violent gale the ship ran ashore and went to pieces. The crew were either drowned or dashed to death against the rocks. Himself and another were the only persons who reached the shore. They were thrown high upon the beach by a powerful wave. His companion was senseles at first, but at last revived—alas! but to die. "He was a sweet youth," the sailor observed; once he had been the terror of the ship for his excessive devotion to vice; but suddenly he had changed. He became a serious, praying man; as remarkable for his piety now, as for vice before. When he had revived a little on the beach," said the sailor, "he pulled a Bible from his bosom, and pressed it to his lips. It was this blessed book, he told me, that led him to change his way of life. Rummaging his chest one day, he found a Bible; his first impression was to throw it away; but chancing to see his mother's writing, he paused to examine it. It was his name. It made him think of his mother; of her instructions, and of his teacher; and then he saw his sins, and felt he was a sinner. Overwhelmed he sunk upon his knees beside his chest, and wept and prayed, and vowed to change his way of life. And he did change it; for he became a decided Christian. After telling me about this change," continued the sailor, "he gave me his Bible, and bade me keep it for his sake; and then falling back upon the sand, he expired with a half offered prayer upon his lips."

As the sailor concluded, the widow, who had listened with deep interest and feeling, inquired,

"Have you got that Bible, my friend?"

"Yes, madam," said he; and he took from his bosom what appeared to be a bunch of old canvas. Carefully removing several envelops, he at last produced a small pocket Bible, and gave it into the hands of the lady.

Tremblingly and hastily she seized it. She turned to the blank page, when lo! her child's name in her own writing. A death-like paleness overspread her usually pale cheek, as she made the discovery, and exclaimed, "Tis his! 'Tis his! My son! my son."

Nature could bear no more, and she fainted.

Such is the history of him, who like the prodigal son, had wandered far from God, and far from peace. You possess, like him the Bible, the chart the holy chart of your salvation. With it, a responsibility is yours which cannot be evaded. Shall it be to you the pearl before swine, trampled under foot? Or shall it be to you that pearl of great price, which you are ready to purchase at the sacrifice of all that is most dear to you in this life? May the God of all grace impart to you his Holy Spirit, to choose this blessed book for the "man of your counsel!" May it be a light to your feet and a lamp to your path—May it be your support in life, your consolation in death; and when the portals of the cold grave shall have closed on your mortal bodies, may each one of you find it has opened to you the glorious portals of a blissful immortality.—Clouds and Sunshine.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DRUGS & MEDICINES.

De Ruyter, January 17, 1842.

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT of the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S.

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and he [illegible] at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.

Terms of sale, 6 months.

HAIR! HAIR!

BALDNESS.—Important Discovery—the Great Mystery found out at last.

DR. STERRY'S HAIR REGENERATOR—Dr. Sterry, after much attention to the important subject of preserving the hair, has after many experiments chemical and physical, been able to discover an article which is now offered with the greatest confidence for the toilet, as the best thing ever discovered, its softening and penetrating quality, to produce a good head of hair—to prevent it from falling off when baldness is apprehended—to restore it when baldness has taken place, and to prevent it from turning gray. It is more nourishing than pomatum, antique oil, or Cologne water. It is a beautiful article for ladies' curls—it makes the hair soft and lively, and produces uncommon brilliancy. Thousands have tested its superior virtues and excellence, and in every instance it stands unrivalled. It is an infallible cure in all affections of the skin on the head—as dandruff, &c. &c. Every family should be supplied with a bottle of this oil, that by its application to the head and hair of children, the beautiful and ornamental appendage of a fine head of hair, which nature has supplied us may be preserved.

WORMS! WORMS!

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S unrivalled and unequalled Worm Tea, a sovereign remedy for Worms. This invaluable medicine has been tested by the experience of more than ten years use, and administered to more than 18 000 persons of various ages, and not one solitary complaint, for in no one of the thousands of instances, where it has been used agreeable to the printed direction, has it ever failed.

N. B. Ask for Dr. M. Hitchcock's Worm Tea, as there are many nostrums abroad for the destruction of worms.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞ A certain cure in all cases. ☞ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt.

MAGNETIC ODONTICA

THE TEETH! THE TEETH!

The Incomparable Tooth Prep[illegible]

THE [illegible] are fully convinced of its great [illegible], as we have the evidence from the sale of 25,000 boxes of the Odontica within the past year. It is asserted from experience, that when used, the teeth will never decay, but remain until the last age of man, with their natural wear; and more [illegible] thousands of cases, nervous toothache [illegible] of pain) has at once been effectually cured by this most popular dentrifice in America. [illegible] a full set of teeth, sound gums, [illegible] more than fifty cents, that will be [illegible] of a box of Dr. M. Hitchcock's Magnetic Odontica.

LOOK AT THIS.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?

70 000 DIE OF CONSUMPTION every year in the United States, and multitudes suffer from troublesome coughs, [illegible] be cured by Dr. Hitchcock's Vegetable Cream Cough Drops, a safe medical preparation, containing no poisonous drugs, and used in an extensive practice for several years will most positively afford relief, and save you from that awful disease, pulmonary consumption, which sweeps into the grave hundreds of the [illegible] every day.

Have you a cough? Be persuaded to purchase a bottle of the Cough Drops today! Tomorrow may be too late. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

LOTION, LOTION.

DR. EVANS' BEAUTIFYING LOTION.

HIGHLY esteemed for curing all Eruptions, Coarseness, Redness, and Pimples on the Face, Neck or Hands, and beautifully clearing the complexion and removing all diseases of the skin.

[illegible]

SNUFF.

Only Twenty-Five Cents.

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S [illegible] SNUFF, [illegible] Catarrh, [illegible] Head, Weak Eyes, Nervous Headache, [illegible]

[illegible]

S. D. DELLAY.

He also states, for the [illegible] that he has the following [illegible] MEDICINES [illegible]

[illegible]

WINSLOW'S BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible]

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of founder [illegible]

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.

S. D. DELLAY.

TO FARMER'S FAMILIES, AND TO ALL AFFECTED WITH DISEASE.

January 12, 1842.

I have this day been appointed [illegible] place for the sale of Doct. D. JAYNE'S celebrated medicines consisting of JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, TONIC VERMIFUGE and SANATIVE PILLS.

All articles sold by me are direct from Doct. Jayne, and warranted pure. Printed circulars will accompany articles of his, attesting their worth and virtues, and will be given to any one who may wish to become acquainted with them.

I have the pleasure to inform those afflicted with diseases of the lungs, Consumption, Spitting of Blood, Coughs or Influenza, that I have also been appointed agent for the sale of Joshua Fisk's celebrated and unrivalled LILLY SYRUP, which for the last year has affected more cures for the amount used than any other medicine ever offered to the public. Those upon the brink of the grave have been called to health by its powerful effects, the weak have become strong, and the consumptive man has been cured of his pale cheek and haggard look and racking cough. Should the incredulous doubt, let them try it and if it fails to cure, you shall have it free of expense. I have in my possession recommendations from some of the most distinguished men of the age which I shall be glad to show at any time.

PARKER'S PULMONARY BALM.

One of the best medicines for common colds Influenzas &c. &c. &c., to be found in the whole catalogue of patent medicines. Give it a try, it is first rate, call and read one of his circulars.

S. D. DELLAY.

NEW GOODS,

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the store of [illegible] De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements [illegible] Classical and Miscellaneous Books and Stationery, at very low prices. The following among others may now be found [illegible] list:—

Webster's Dictionary, large	Novum Græcum Testamentum
" " small	Colloquial Phrases,
Davies' Bourdon,	Greek Reader,
" Legendre,	Greek Lessons,
" First Lessons,	Jacob's Latin Reader,
" Arithmetic,	Polyglott Bibles,
Comstock's Chemistry,	[illegible]
[illegible] Philosophy,	Mathematical Drawing Paper,
Bullion's Grammar,	Demy " "
Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy,	Cap " "
Town's Analysis,	Drawing Pencils,
Olney's Geography,	[illegible] Post and Fancy Letter Paper,
Parley's "	[illegible]
Cicero's Orations,	[illegible] Books,
Goodrich's Greek Grammar,	[illegible] &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY, Register Office.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready [illegible]

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS.

W[illegible]

[illegible] De Ruyter, [illegible] 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible]

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

[illegible]

NEW-JERSEY.

[illegible]

PENNSYLVANIA.

[illegible]

VIRGINIA.

[illegible]

OHIO.

[illegible]

Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.

[illegible]

MICHIGAN.

[illegible]

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorized Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 49.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 101.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1842. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

MUSINGS.—NO. IV.

The Bible.—Reasons why it should be Read.

If the Book be an appropriate title; if the Omniscient God be its Author; if in the character and variety of its contents it is unrivalled in excellence; if its influence in the world of feeling be as salutary as the sun in the physical world, other and stronger reasons need not be urged for the perusal of the Bible. The motives that lead to the perusal of books are various. A numerous class read for information. They examine closely, and summon judgment and reason to their aid in forming conclusions. A larger class read for amusement or pastime.—High wrought scenes only can awaken their interest, and the tear that lingers in its cell at the sight of real suffering, freely flows at the imaginary grief depicted by the novelist's pen.

But there is one reason that seldom fails to secure a careful perusal from all classes. Is the work written by a friend? No other incentive is needed, for friendship is a passport to the heart. How does affection's eye love to follow the traces of his pen; and should it, with all its partiality, discover some fault, criticism is disarmed of its sting as they remember the author is a friend—that "to err is human." But is that author a father whom they revere and love?—Where is the child, in whose heart filial love claims its wonted place, that would not prize a volume written by such a hand? Let the reviewer and fault-finding critic condemn, the child will love it still, for his father wrote it. Reader, who is the author of that neglected gilt-bound book that ornaments the centre-table, or clad in more homely guise, is banished to some almost forgotten book-shelf? Did you ever think it was written for you—that its author was a friend who has watched over you and ministered to your wants, when others were unmindful—that it was your Heavenly Father? Remembering this, neglect it no longer.—What! shall the writings of an earthly parent, finite in every faculty, be carefully perused, and the volume given us by a Heavenly Father be neglected? Duty, love, and gratitude forbid. But let us look again at its title and see if there be aught in that, that seems to invite perusal.

It is familiarly known as the Old and New Testament. Yes, it is a testament, a Teacher's will to his children. An earthly parent dies bequeathing to the loved ones he leaves behind, a large fortune. The will is soon consulted. So carefully is it examined that not a word escapes observation. The law with its strong arm is there to see that justice is administered. This is as it should be. Our Heavenly Father, though still with us, has given us his will, bequeathing us imperishable riches—happiness here, and a home in heaven when that dreamless sleep that knows no waking shall hold the lovely a prisoner in its cold embrace. Lest our wayward feet should stray from the heavenly home, He has given us a lamp to guide us, and has pointed out the path so clearly that we need not wander. Conditions, it is true, are imposed, and he who disregards them cannot hope to inherit the proffered treasure. But these conditions, are they not characterized by infinite wisdom and benevolence? How just the requirement that we should yield the purest affection of the heart to our best Friend—that His holy precepts, tending directly to the promotion of universal happiness, should be obeyed—that the rights of all who claim Him for their Father, should be guarded as inviolably as our own. I love to think of the Bible as the will of God revealed to his children. How sweet the consciousness that our Father and our Friend is ever present—has not only willed us the pearl of great price, but will, if we love and obey him, enable us to overcome every obstacle that may seem to threaten its attainment. If, then, the will of an earthly parent, bequeathing us wealth that may vanish like the morning dew be carefully perused, and if clothed in ambiguous terms counsel sought to dissipate aught like doubt, how carefully should we read the will of a Heavenly Father, making us heirs of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away? Do you say it is mysterious, baffling the comprehension of the highest intellect? While the learned Doctors of Divinity are examining these points, the child may glean from its holy pages its duty to God and man—may learn the way to happiness and heaven, and what more is necessary for man to know? But does the Bible contain greater mysteries than "the volume of nature writ by God's own hand?" What greater mystery than man? Look for a moment with "the mind's eye," at the world within you. Explain the mysterious union of mind and matter, and tell us how it is that the spirit gem controls the frail casket that holds it a partial prisoner. Tell the physiologist why the nerves, owing their origin to the same source, and so similar that the most powerful glass can discover no difference, are endowed with powers so varied when diffused over the tympanum, the retina, the palate, or the surface of the body.

Mystery! the world is full of it, and methinks the Bible contains no greater, than that sinful man, a speck in creation, is furnished with the written will of his God.—While the practical part—all, in fine, connected with our duty and happiness, is so clearly revealed as to preclude doubt, how more than unwise, how ungrateful for man, a living mystery, to neglect its perusal simply because the finite cannot comprehend the Infinite.

Do you doubt its credibility or authenticity, and for this reason neglect its perusal? Examine these points, for the Bible requires not, asks not that credulity that yields belief without evidence. The God-like faculty of reason was given for this end; he is unwise who neglects to use it. Its possession imposes the obligation to investigate, and neglect is but another word for guilt. Read, if you desire, both sides, and while prejudice slumbers, let reason decide in view of the weight of evidence. Were a child of want unexpectedly made the inheritor of countless wealth, and he doubted the authenticity and credibility of the writing that made it his, how long with proof within his reach would he doubt? Yet the same individual has in his possession a volume bequeathing him a richer treasure than earthly monarch could bestow—a title-deed to heaven. He doubts its divine origin with proof profusely scattered around him—with so great an interest at stake as his eternal happiness, he doubts on. Another pen than mine may trace the sequel. Let the "still small voice" of conscience be heard—let wisdom's dictates be obeyed. Read the Bible—it was written for you by a Friend who loves you, and that Friend is the constant witness of your neglect. Read it—for 'tis your Heavenly Father's will, and neglect may deprive you of that mansion prepared for those that love Him. Listen! What voice is that? It comes from the Savior who died to redeem us, and it says, in deeply thrilling tones, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." MARY.

Religious Department.

THE DEITY OF CHRIST.

BY DR. MASON.

We cannot find in the lively oracles, a single distinctive mark of deity which is not applied without reserve or limitation to the only begotten Son. All things whatsoever the Father hath are his. Who is that mysterious word, that was in the beginning with God? Who is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending, the first and the last, the Almighty? Who is he that knows what is in man, because he searches the deep and dark recesses of the heart? Who is the Omnipresent, that has promised, "Wherever two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them?" the light of whose countenance is at the same moment the joy of heaven and the salvation of the earth?—who is encircled by the seraphim on high, and walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks? who is in this assembly? in all the assemblies of his people? in every worshiping family? in every closet of prayer? in every holy heart? Whose hands have stretched out the heavens and laid the foundations of the earth? Who hath replenished them with inhabitants and garnished them with beauty, hath created all things that are in both, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities, or powers? By whom do all things exist? Who is governor among the nations, having on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords? Whom is it the Father's will that all men should honor even as they honor himself? whom has he commanded his angels to worship? whom to obey? Before whom do the devils tremble? Who is qualified to redeem millions of sinners from the wrath to come, and preserve them by his grace, to his everlasting kingdom? Who raiseth the dead? having life in himself, to quicken whom he will, so that at his voice all who are in their graves shall come forth, and death and hell surrender their numerous and forgotten captives? Who shall weigh in the balance of judgment, the destinies of angels and men? dispose of the thrones of paradise? and bestow eternal life? Shall I submit to the decision of reason? Shall I ask a response from heaven? Shall I summon the devils from the chains of darkness? The response from heaven sounds in my ears; reason approves, and the devils confess. This, O Christian, is none other than the great God our Savior.

Indeed, the doctrine of our Lord's divinity is not, as a fact, more interesting to our faith, than as a principle, it is essential to our hope. If he were not the true God, he could not be eternal life. When pressed down by guilt and languishing for happiness, I look around for a deliverer such as my conscience, and my heart, and the word of God assure me I need. Insult not my agony by directing me to a creature, to a man, a mere man like myself! a creature! a man! My Redeemer owns my person. My immortal spirit is his property. When I come to die, I must commit it into his hands. My soul! infinitely precious, committed to a mere man! I would not thus intrust my body to the highest angel who burns in the temple above. It is only the Father of Spirits that can have property in spirits, and be their refuge in the hour of transition from the present to the approaching world. In short, my brethren, the divinity of Jesus is, in the system of grace, the sun to which all parts are subordinate, and all their stations refer, which binds them in sacred concord, and imparts to them their radiance, and life, and vigor. Take from it this central luminary, and the glory is departed, its holy harmonies are broken, the elements rush to chaos, the light of salvation is extinguished forever!

A SURE FOUNDATION.

Behold! says the everlasting King, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. This text contains a noble display of our Savior's consummate ability for this great work, is admirably calculated to preserve the mind from distressing fears, and to settle it in a steady tranquility.

How beautiful the gradation! How lively the account, and how very important the practical improvement! Come look at the inscription which is engraven on this wonderful stone—Behold! Intended to rouse and fix our most attentive regard. The God of heaven speaks. He speaks, and every syllable is balm; every sentence is rich with consolation. If ever, therefore, we have ears to hear, let us bend them to this speaker, and on this occasion.

A stone. Every thing else is sliding sand, is yielding air, is a breaking bubble. Wealth will prove a vain shadow; honor an empty breath; pleasure a delusive dream; our own righteousness a spider's web. If on these we rely, disappointment must ensue, and shame is inevitable. Nothing but Christ, nothing but Christ, can stably support our spiritual interests, and realize our expectation of true happiness. And blessed be the divine goodness! He is, for this purpose, not a stone only, but

A tried stone. Tried, in the days of his humanity, by all the vehemence of temptation, and all the weight of afflictions; yet, like gold from the furnace, rendered more shining and illustrious by the fiery scrutiny. Tried in the character of a Savior, by millions of depraved, wretched, ruined creatures, who have always found him perfectly able, and as perfectly willing, to expiate the most enormous guilt, to deliver from the most inveterate corruptions, and to save to the very utmost, all that come unto God through him.

A corner stone. Which not only sustains, but unites the edifice; incorporating both Jews and Gentiles, believers of various languages, and manifold denominations—here, in one harmonious bond of brotherly love—hereafter, in one common participation of eternal joy.

A precious stone. More precious than rubies; the pearl of great price, and the desire of all nations. Precious, in regard to the divine dignity of his person, and the unequalled excellency of his mediatorial offices.

A sure foundation. Such as no pressure can shake, equal, more than equal to every weight, even to sin, the heaviest load in the world. The rock of ages, such as never has failed, never will fail, those humble penitents who cast their burden upon the Lord their Redeemer; who roll all their guilt, and fix their whole hopes, on this immoveable basis.—Or as the words may be rendered, A foundation! a foundation!—There is a fine spirit of vehemency in the sentence, thus understood. It speaks the language of exultation, and expresses an important discovery. That which mankind infantly want; that which multitudes seek, and find not; it is here! it is here! This, this is the foundation for their pardon, their peace, their eternal felicity.—Hervey.

THE LAST CALL.

The last call must come to every one.—A last Sabbath—a last sermon—a last warning will come to every son and daughter of Adam. It came to those who lived in the days of Noah, when they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the Ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away. It came to the sensual inhabitants of Sodom, when the last sun arose upon them with no indications of danger, and the warning of Lot seemed to them as idle tales. It came to every sinner who has died impenitent. It will come to every sinner now living. It came in a striking manner to a young lady recently in my congregation. She attended church on a Sabbath evening in her usual health, and heard a sermon addressed especially to the youth, from the text "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." She was impressed under the sermon, with the importance of making her peace with God, now, in the morning of life. At the close, those who desired a special interest in the prayers of God's people, were requested to manifest it by rising. She hesitated, but finally kept her seat through fear of what others might say. In a few days she was dying and sent for her Pastor. She was not then ashamed to pray for herself, nor ask the prayers of others. She related the facts above mentioned. "Oh, (said she,) I was very wicked—I little thought it was the last sermon I was ever to hear—or that the salvation of my soul was so vastly important. I wish you to take the same text at my funeral, address the youth and warn them from me not to do as I have done."

Another young lady, remarkably healthy, was a few months ago seriously impressed, the spirit of God was evidently striving with her; and for a short time she seemed inclined to attend to her spiritual interests. But she was a lover of worldly pleasures, and postponed her soul's concern, choosing rather to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Sabbath before last she was at church in the bloom of health—heard a sermon from the text, "no man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." In the evening she was taken ill, and in thirty-six hours, twenty-four of which she was insensible, she passed into eternity.

With the dead we have nothing to do.—They are in the hands of the God of grace and truth. But to the living we say—To day if you hear his voice, harden not your heart—for he that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

From the Baptist Advocate.

REFLECTIONS SUGGESTED BY THE ANNUAL REVIEW.

The most obvious reflections suggested to a Christian mind, on glancing over the present condition of the world, arise from the small proportion of its population that have yet, even professedly, submitted to the sceptre of King Immanuel. At least two-thirds of the inhabitants of the earth are living in total ignorance of the great salvation. Two-thirds of the remaining third must be admitted by the most charitable, to be unacquainted by personal experience with the truth as it is "in Jesus."—The petty faction thus left, embraces all the communicants in evangelical Churches throughout the world.

Yet when we look at these, the communicants in evangelical Churches, what numbers are conformed in their general conduct to the world in which they live! How very few shine as lights in that world! What avarice, what selfishness, what moroseness, what jealousy, what bickering abounds in the Churches of the saints. Instead of the Church being "the salt of the earth," in some parts of the Church itself there are scarcely a sufficient number of grains of real salt to preserve those portions from corruption. What wonder, then, that the savor of the salt does not pervade the world!

Nearly eighteen centuries and a half have elapsed since "peace on earth and good will to man" were proclaimed on the plains of Bethlehem, and only a small fraction of the earth's inhabitants have embraced the glad tidings of salvation through a crucified Redeemer. We talk of the near approach of that blessed state of things when "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid," "when the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox." It may be proper and profitable at times to dwell in anticipation upon the coming glories of the Church militant. But it is foredating the times and the seasons to delude ourselves with the fond belief, that we are on the verge of that happy state of universal love and harmony, prefigured by the emblems collected in these quotations. Alas! no, the aspect of the Church itself must be different, far different from that which it now presents, before we can reasonably hope the near approach of Christ's millenial glory.

Imagine all the barriers of superstition and will-worship overthrown: Suppose heathenism banished from the earth,—Mohammedanism abandoned,—even antichrist himself prostrate before prevailing truth; conceive that all mankind have become members of evangelical Churches, and that all agree in the ordinances and doctrines of Christianity: and then, reader, imagine that the standard of piety has not been raised, but that every Church is composed of just such members as you are most intimate with, cold, half-hearted, irregular disciples, easily taking offense, disputing and caviling about small affairs, "the mint, and anise, and cummin, and forgetting the weightier matters of the law, judgment, and mercy, and faith:" picture the whole world before you in such a state, and ask yourself the question whether this would be a millenium, such as the Scriptures authorize us to expect.

But fear not. Such a condition of things can never take place. Heathenism may be banished from the earth: Mohammedanism may be abandoned: but anti-Christ will hardly be prostrated, and certainly error, and superstition, and will-worship, and open infidelity, never will cease their opposition to the truth, while half-heartedness, worldly-mindedness, and selfishness abound among God's professed people. Christians should not deceive themselves in such matters. It is well for them to give their alms, to offer their prayers, and to put forth their efforts for the heathen, but this is only a small part of what is required of them. The reformation which is to renovate the world must begin in the Church. Judgment must commence with the house of God.

Is it wonderful that there should be errors in the Churches of the saints when there is so little holiness among the members? One man is crying, "Lo, here!" and another, "Lo, there!" because so many forget that the kingdom of God is "within" them. So ready are almost all to comfort themselves with the doctrine, that poor, fallible, human nature must needs be sinful in this world, and therefore that it is vain to strive against it, that to counteract such lamentable consequences, some have recourse to the opposite extreme, and maintain that they can and do live in a state of sinless perfection.

For all such errors Christians are accountable. Were the standard of religious life exalted as it should be, did all strive incessantly after sinless perfection, humbly depending on Christ for constant grace to sustain them in the strife, there would be no danger of many pretending to have already attained. The nearer all approached the light, the more clearly would each see his own imperfections. At the same time, as children of the light, it would be manifest to the world that their deeds were wrought in God.

The man who wishes to shoot highest, will aim straight upward. He may not reach the star over his head, but he will surely shoot higher than though he aims at any object nearer the horizon. But the great difficulty among professing Christians, is that they are satisfied to shoot low. The kingdom of heaven, we are told, is taken by violence, and the violent take it by force; but the easy slip-shod gait of many a professor tells us, that, if he is taking the kingdom of heaven, his violence interferes very little with his personal comfort.

PERSEVERING PRAYER.

What a sublime and striking picture is here presented to us of the incarnate Son; Withdrawn from the noise and tumult of the cities and the haunts of men, mid the silence of the night, and the desolation of that mountain scene, holding converse with the ineffable Jehovah; all nature hushed in still repose, as if unwilling to interrupt the wonderful communion; while hour after hour of darkness passed away, and still the unwearied prayer winged its happy flight, the from perfect purity of God the Son below, to the not more perfect purity of God the Father upon his throne. What a mighty, what an almighty prayer must have then gone up before the Eternal One, embracing not merely the chosen few, who, on to-morrows dawn, were to become the near companions of their Lord, but their successors and followers throughout all time. "All night" did our Lord continue in that mysterious intercourse with the Eternal Father; an example of persevering prayer, which, although as regards the peculiar nature of the communication, it must ever remain far above the attainments of the Christian, still furnishes in its perseverance, a high and holy lesson for the imitation of the Church, as long as she continues militant here below. It is not by the short and transient application to a throne of grace, which we are too apt to dignify with the name of prayer, that we can hope to be qualified for seasons of peculiar trial, temptation, or labor. This can alone be done by dwelling near the mercy-seat, by sitting as it were, upon the foot-stool of the throne; by daily, hourly, constantly, sending forth those winged messengers of the heart, the secret, silent, swiftly-flying thoughts, which while they form, like the Patriarch's ladder an uninterrupted line of ascending entreaties to the Most High, form a channel for his descending mercies to our souls.—Rev. H. Blunt

Children's Department.

BRAVE GEORGE.

Mr. Hardy had a pile of fine new copy books lying on his desk. They had bright covers, and there were pictures on the covers. He told the boys that they must not touch them while he was gone out.—George was at school. George forgot what his teacher told him, so he left his seat and went to Mr. Hardy's desk, and there he stood looking at the books. George ought to have been studying his lesson.—Pretty soon bad Billy, as one of the big boys was called, saw him there and came up too. Now at the bottom of this pile there was a very bright orange book, and bad Billy reached out his hand to take it.—George tried to stop him, and in trying he upset a bottle of ink, which stood close by the books; and the ink ran all over them, and spoilt two or three.

'There,' said bad Billy, 'see what you have done!' so he ran back to his seat, and pretended to be studying very hard, as if he had not moved, when Mr. Hardy came in. This was acting a lie. No one believed bad Billy, and no one liked him because he told lies.

Poor little George! I am sorry for him. But you can't get the ink off those books. You ought not to have come out of your seat. If you had set still and minded your lesson, you would not have been in trouble. Now what will you do, George? there comes Mr. Hardy.

I will tell you what he did. Mr. Hardy looked very angry when he saw his new copy books all spoiled with ink. But it was wrong for him to be angry.

'Boys,' said he, 'whoever did this, I will punish so that he shall remember it one while. Who was it?' Bad Billy kept on studying very fast. 'Who did it, I say? George, was it you?' George turned pale. He looked at the rod and he trembled.—He had never been whipped at school.—But he thought of his mother—he thought of his Savior, and he said to himself, like a brave and good boy, 'I can not, I will not tell a lie.' So he looked up in Mr. Hardy's face and answered, 'Yes sir, it was I. I did tip it over. I am very sorry sir.' Mr. Hardy was angry, so he punished the brave little boy. George bore it like a man. The tears came into his eyes, but he tried not to weep.

'What did you tell the master for,' said bad Billy, after school, 'and get such a whipping? Why didn't you say no?' 'Because,' said George, 'I dare not tell a lie.'

Every body loved the good and brave boy, who would sooner be whipped than tell a lie.

THE PARTING KISS.

A FRAGMENT.

I was five years old when my mother died; but her image is as distinct to my recollection, now that twelve years have elapsed, as it was at the time of her death. I remember her as a pale, beautiful, gentle being, with a sweet smile, and a voice that, was soft and cheerful when she praised me; and when I erred, for I was a wild, thoughtless child, there was a trembling mildness about it, that always went to my little heart. And then she was so kind so patient; methinks I can now see her, her large blue eyes moist with sorrow, because of my childish waywardness, and hear her repeat, "My child, how can you grieve me so?" I recollect she had for a long time been pale and feeble, and that sometimes there would come a bright spot on her cheek, which made her look so lovely, that I thought she must be well.—But then she sometimes spoke of dying, and pressed me to her bosom, and told me "to be good when she was gone, and to love my father a great deal, and be kind to him, for he would have no else to love." I recollect she was very sick all day, and my little hobby horse and whip were laid aside, and I tried to be very quiet. I did not see her for the whole day, and it seemed very long. At night they told me my mother was too sick to kiss me, as she always used to do before I went to bed, and I must go without it. But I could not. I stole into the room, and laying my lips close to hers, whispered, "Mother, mother, won't you kiss me?" Her lips were very cold; and when she put her arms around me, I laid my head upon her bosom, and one hand upon my cheek, I felt a cold shudder creep all over me. My father carried me from the room, but he could not speak.—After they put me in bed, I lay a long while thinking. I feared my mother would indeed die, for her cheek felt as cold as my little sister's did when she died, and they laid her in the ground. But the impressions of mortality are always indistinct in childhood, and I soon fell asleep. In the morning I hastened to my mother's room. A white napkin covered her face. I removed it—it was just as I feared. Her eyes were closed; her cheek was cold and hard, and only the lovely expression that always rested upon her lips remained. In an instant all the little faults for which she had so often reproved me, rushed upon my mind. I longed to tell her how good I would always be if she would remain with me. She was buried; but my remembrance of the funeral always remained indistinct. I only retained the impressions which her precepts and example left upon my mind. I was a passionate, headstrong boy; but I never yielded to this turn of my disposition, without fancying I saw her mild, tearful eye fixed upon me, just as she used to do in life. And then, when I had succeeded in overcoming it, her sweet smile of approbation beamed upon me, and I was happy. My whole character underwent a change, even from the moment of her death. Her spirit was forever with me, strengthening my good resolutions, and weakening my propensity to do evil. I felt that it would grieve her gentle spirit, to see me err, and I could not, would not do it. I was the child of her affection; I knew she had prayed and wept over me, and that, even on the threshold of eternity, her affection for me had caused her gentle spirit to linger, that she might pray for me once more. I resolved to become all that she could desire. This resolution I have never forgotten. It helped me to subdue the waywardness of childhood, protected me through the temptations of youth, and will comfort and support me through the busier scenes of manhood. Whatever there is that is estimable in my character, I owe to the impressions of goodness, made upon my infant mind by the exemplary conduct and faithful instructions of my excellent mother.—Parent's Magazine.

FORGIVENESS.—Love your enemies. We forgive, and why? Christ hath forgiven us. We show mercy, and why? Christ Jesus hath showed mercy unto us. Shall we see what our neighbor hath done against us; and shall we not see what Christ hath done for us? God forbid.—Sutton.

He that hath a froward heart findeth no good.

He loveth transgression that loveth strife

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, February 2, 1842.

The Psalmist of Israel.

"Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I might meditate in thy word."

Who that has a soul that can be moved with things noble or sublime, that does not feel when reading the devout meditations of the Psalmist of Israel that he is conversing with beings of a higher origin? When he sings of God or his law, when he breaks forth, extolling the glory of his kingdom: or in milder but more exquisite strains admires the purity and excellence of his words, he touches a chord that must vibrate in the heart of every soul that thinks or reasons. The Psalmist held converse with God in all his works. He saw him in the gentle zephyr and the rushing tempest, in the morning's dawn and evening shade, in the verdant earth and starry heavens, in the battle's strife and in the temple of peace.—And in his ecstatic admiration he calls upon all things that have breath to give him praise. But if the soul of the Psalmist was kindled with a holy rapture when he saw God in his works, it was doubly so when he turned his thoughts to his holy law. If he broke forth in wondering strains at the works of God, those strains were prolonged when he meditated on the purity of his word. What but God's word could cause him to break forth in such lofty strains as abound in his songs. Let the grovelling sceptic blush when he hears the strains of him who held daily converse with his God, singing "how love I thy law; it is my meditation all the day." "Thy word is very pure, therefore thy servant loveth it."

A sublimer theme for meditation can not be found in the range of thought than the law of the Lord. The Psalmist declares, "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." The word of God gives life while it dispels the darkness of untaught nature, and raises the soul from its grovelling to a contemplation of the wonderful works of God and the glories of his kingdom. The heart of Job beat in unison with the Psalmist's, when he exclaimed, "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." In this the weary find rest, the bereaved a friend, the destitute supplies, the benighted salvation. It is the Christian's guide to heaven, and the transcript of the mind of God. Every man of reason must admire it. Every Christian loves it, and none but the depraved sceptic can say aught against it.

If then the word of God is such, how gross must be that depravity that will trifle with its sacred words, or cavil at its divine truths. The shameless sceptic who can despise and deny it, must be lost to all sense of propriety, of decency and accountability.—The professed religionist who can look upon any of its divine precepts as non-essential, neither knows himself or God. And not less reprehensible is that person who makes a free use of the inspired words of God in a thoughtless or perverted manner. If God is worthy of reverence; if the scriptures are His revealed will to man, then he who neglects or perverts them must incur the displeasure of the eternal God, and exposes himself to wrath that must be commensurate with the dignity of the Divine Being himself.

Capital Punishment.

Mr. O'Sullivan, of the Assembly, is warmly engaged to secure the enactment of a law to abolish Capital Punishment.—He is strongly sustained by numerous petitions from different parts of the State.

Our opinion of the question is, that it is a false sympathy that wishes Capital Punishment abolished. If men can make better laws than God has made, it is time for them to renounce the worship of the true God, and make themselves others, purer and holier. The law of Capital Punishment was incorporated in the civil code of National Israel, by God himself. And even God in sustaining the dignity of his throne, punishes not simply with temporal, but eternal death, those that refuse obedience.

Every man of manly feelings must shudder at the thought of taking the life of his fellow. There is a sympathy existing among men that even the stain of the worst crime does not entirely remove. This sympathy petitions for the abolition of Capital Punishment, but if it is allowed to dictate laws for our commonwealth it is feared that it will not only remove Capital, but all Punishment, and it is certain that it will come in opposition to the laws of God, and in opposition to God's plan of governing his universe.

Petitions for the Sabbath.

Who will send us the form of a petition to Congress which shall secure to S. D. Baptists Constitutional rights? It is now certain that petitions are in circulation, praying Congress to stop the Mails on Sunday, and exempt Post Masters from delivering letters and papers on that day. If any law is made on this subject, it is right that S. D. Baptists should enjoy the benefits of it as well as others. It is, therefore, a duty to present our petitions, and it should be done without delay. A form will be published in the Register when one that is deemed proper is obtained.

Tract Circular.

We send out with our this week's paper the "Circular" of the General Agent of the Tract Society to such as we suppose will be efficient in the enterprize.

For the Register.

The Tract Circular.—The Sabbath.

New-York, Jan. 20, 1842.

I am now very anxious to learn the fate of the enterprize itself—to know, in fact, whether our people possess any anxiety to present this most important and conservative truth to the world or not. It seems to me that the time to speak out fully upon this subject [the Sabbath] has come, and that the Lord will no longer hold us guiltless—if He has indeed hitherto—if we withhold what is needful to publish this truth to the world, which, be it understood, we never have yet done. Not a dozen Bookstores in the length and breadth of our country, I will venture to say, nor a hundred Libraries, possess a single volume upon the side of the Sabbath of the Lord our God, and in opposition to the world of fiction by which the Mother of abomination's substitute is supported. You may depend that the spirit of the Lord God has gone forth for the healing of the nations, and it shall not return unto him void, but it shall purge, purify and cleanse the corruptions of the church, and make her the praise of the whole earth.—Some important event, if I mistake not the signs of the times, or the plain predictions of prophesy, is soon to happen to the church, and we need not be surprized if God would bless the truth of the Sabbath in bringing it about. What greater blessing could accrue to the church than the immediate conversion of the Nation of Israel? What event could produce greater joy on earth or in heaven than its repentance, and re-possession of God's especial protection and blessing? And how plainly is the train laid for the accomplishment of this, and without a miracle too, through the preaching of this long-despised and down trodden subject of the Sabbath. You may think that I am visionary; perhaps it is so, but I can come to no other conclusion; it appears as plain as if I already saw the beginning and the end of it. But however sanguine I am in the event, I am nevertheless far from possessing the same feelings as to the means or the agents. I am very far from believing that God will bless us in its accomplishment; though he will select the "weak things of this world to confound the things that are mighty," a Gideon's host, a shepherd boy, a few fisherman, or a weak and despised sect, we may depend they will be holy, devoted men or women; such as I fear we have but little claim to the character of. I wish not to judge my brethren in this particular; but Christ says "by their fruit ye shall know them," and it is from such knowledge that my discouragements arise; not that we are not more numerous, but that we are not more consistent and holy. That from our disregard to the spirit, and often too of even the letter of the Sabbath, we have made the subject disgusting among all that know us; but you have probably heard my complaints upon this subject before. I have not ceased to speak plainly upon this subject, nor will I while the cause remains uncorrected. But the following extract from a letter in relation to the Tracts from a beloved brother, speaks more to the point, perhaps, than all that I could say:

"But much as I approve your undertaking, and anxious as I am, that "God would shake not the Earth only, but also the Heavens" on this subject, in order to a removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made [by man] that those things that cannot be shaken may remain. I am nevertheless troubled with certain despairing thoughts, when I consider the miserable low state of piety in our denomination. What can we plead with regard to the sanctifying power of the Sabbath, when so little of such power is exerted over its professed advocates? How can we recommend this holy institution to others, and say "it will benefit your souls," when our own people are almost as so many living examples to give the lie to such instruction?—My charge may seem severe, but when I mingle with my brethren abroad, I cannot discern, by any difference that obtains in their conversation, the line of demarkation between the working days and the Sabbath. I hear of Sabbath Cheese-making, and Sabbath working, and farmers of the country pushing the loads of hay into the village half an hour before sunset on the Sabbath, (how much of the day was employed in loading I don't know,) and even those ycleped ministers of the gospel desecrating this holy time, my soul sickens within me. If under such circumstances we are the objects of contempt with the whole christian world, we may blame ourselves for it—and if the great mass turn away with disdain from the investigation of sentiments put forth by such a people, we need not be surprised. If we would be exalted to honor among our christian brethren, we must first become humbled before God for these our sins.

I write not this for the purpose of throwing the least discouragement in the way of your undertaking; on the contrary, I bid you "God speed." And if God should not immediately open the hearts of the people to attend to what we set before them, the Tracts will be ready against such time as they may be more favorably disposed for investigation; which time, sooner or later, must surely come, whatever terrible things in righteousness may first intervene. Perhaps before we can go up and take possession of the land, the Lord will cut off all but Caleb and Joshua."

Our brother will doubtless pardon me for transcribing so much of his letter for the press, which I would not have done but for its timely applicability to a large mass of our denomination. The truth is, we as a denomination have got to learn to Sabbatize in spirit—what it is to "turn away their feet from polluting it, and from doing their own pleasure on it, and shall call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shall honor thee, not doing their own ways, nor finding their own pleasure, nor speaking their own words." This is the "accursed wedge of Achan," that is buried in our tents, and paralizes all our energies. I am not, however, disposed to give up the ship yet. I feel confident that there are enough who do prize the Sabbath to make a handsome response to the "Circular," and that from that few shall issue a stream whose waters shall surround the city of our God.

In the Bonds of the Gospel,
I am yours, &c.,
PAUL STILLMAN.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Atlas.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITANNIA.

28 DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The British Royal Steamer Britannia, Capt. Hewitt, arrived at her berth in this port, Saturday last, at 5 o'clock, P. M., from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the fourth inst., and Halifax, which latter place she left on the 20th, at 4 o'clock, P. M.—She has been eighteen days on her passage from Liverpool—has experienced very squally and boisterous weather—and was detained ten hours in Halifax, by fog. She brings us our full files of London papers to the evening of the 3d, and Liverpool papers to the 4th inst.

The only political news of much importance received by this arrival is the appointment of a to this Country, for the purpose of finally adjusting the open points of controversy between our Government and that of England. The London Times of the 31st of December, has the following official announcement:

SPECIAL EMBASSY

It gives us much pleasure to announce, that the Right Hon. Lord Ashburton, at the request of Her Majesty's Government, is about to proceed to the United States on a special mission, with the object of settling all existing differences between that country and our own. His Lordship, who will sail in a few weeks, had been asked to undertake this service, and had consented to do so, before the President's Message had been received, so that the mission in question, whatever be its character or results, has been had recourse to, wholly irrespective of any thing contained or omitted in that document.

The step itself, we think, is a wise one. Without at all presuming to imagine that it has originated in any humble suggestion of ours, we may nevertheless remind our readers, that only a few weeks ago, we strenuously urged the peculiar propriety of making a special effort, at the present time, to remove every remaining ground of dispute, inasmuch as the introduction of new elements of irritation contingent upon further delay, might eventually render an amicable adjustment unattainable, and involve both countries in the horrors of war. We do not know that any great expense will be incurred by this mission; but even if there should, the vast importance of its object, which cannot possibly be overrated, is more than sufficient, terminate how it may, to warrant the expenditure of a much larger sum than is likely to be required.—Nor is it a trifling merit on the part of Her Majesty's present Ministers that they have thus undertaken an enterprise which, be it successful or not, is manifestly adopted on the most rational data, and with the best possible intentions. Two things, at all events, are clearly demonstrated by the appointment of this special mission—in the first place, that the Conservative Government, instead of imitating the Whigs in prosecuting a series of speculative political experiments, are steadily addressing themselves to the repair of such practical evils as, by engendering a want of mercantile confidence, operate injuriously upon British commerce; and secondly, that Sir Robert Peel's Ministry are intent, by all practical means, upon maintaining the blessings of peace.

Neither must it be supposed that Lord Ashburton's mission necessarily implies any deficiency in the instructions or powers of the American Minister at Her Majesty's Court. Those instructions and powers, we have no reason to doubt, are of a plenary order; while, from the known discretion and ability of Mr. Everett, as well as from the very short period during which his Excellency has been in this country, the presumption is, that, for various satisfactory reasons, it has appeared to him that the disputed points between America and ourselves, had better be entirely committed to Lord Ashburton and the Washington Cabinet. The appointment of a special Ambassador from this country, is, of itself a piece of marked respect to the United States Government, which can hardly fail of being duly appreciated and of paving the way for an amicable negociation. A friendly intercourse too, between our special envoy and the leading statesmen of America, dictated by a cordial anxiety to complete an infringible band of amity, cannot but be attended with beneficial results. All that both parties contend for, may not be immediately secured; but, by the reasonable concessions likely to be yielded without dishonor on either side, the main points in dispute may be so reduced in importance as to render future surrenders more advantageous to each than a dogged adherence to mere unsubstantial punctilios. The selection of Lord Ashburton for this delicate question appears to us, upon the whole to be deserving of commendation. His Lordship is, by universal acknowledgment, the prince of British merchants. With immense mercantile interests extending over the whole world—interests which, while peculiarly identified with America, cannot suffer interruption in any quarter without incurring a serious injury in their entire range, his Lordship has the advantage of proceeding to the United States, not only with the highest claims upon the consideration of that trading community, but with a direct personal concern in the maintenance of general peace. Thus, while the independence and integrity of Lord Ashburton place him above the suspicion of unduly yielding to extravagant demands which he can well afford to resist, his Lordship's large and intimate connection with American commerce, may naturally be supposed to deter him from all such petty sticklings as may obviously tend to interrupt it. The noble Lord besides, is thoroughly acquainted with the whole question touching the right of search, as affecting, among all nations, the perfectly comportible interests of humanity and trade. That Lord Ashburton's appointment will be acceptable to the United States Government, may be fairly inferred from Mr. Everett's concurrence; and we certainly augur from it the most auspicious results. Heaven grant that we be not disappointed!

It is understood that this highly important appointment took place upon consultation with, and with the approbation of, our minister, Mr. Everett—and the selection of Lord Ashburton for the mission, appears to have given the highest satisfaction to all parties. It will be recollected that Lord Ashburton was the former head of the great Banking-house of Baring & Brothers, and his name, before he was raised to the Peerage, was Alexander Baring. He has a large property in this country, and all his pecuniary interests will, unquestionably, lead him to desire a speedy reconciliation of all difficulties existing between the two nations. He is spoken of as a sound and sensible statesman—and as being fully versed in the political affairs of this country.

This step, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, we regard as highly complimentary to this Country, and evincive of a strong disposition to avoid all acts of hostility. This new appointment is not to interfere with the existing embassy of Mr. Fox—but is entirely special, and for the purpose of adjusting the three following open points:—the affair of the Caroline—the Eastern Boundary question—and the right of search of vessels supposed to be Slavers, as claimed by Great Britain.—We have the highest hopes that this movement of England towards a pacific adjustment of difficulties, will result favorably, and that our amicable relations will be preserved.

The King of Prussia is to be one of the god-fathers of the young Prince of Wales, and will attend the christening in person.

The reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg, Gotha, the King of Belgium, the consort of the Queen of Portugal, and some members of the Royal Family of France, are also to be present at the christening of the Prince of Wales.

SPAIN.

Policy of the British Government, as between Spain and France, or Spain and the Powers of Europe.

The following declaration of three distinct articles has been formally presented by the British minister to Senor Gonzales, for the satisfaction of the Regent of Spain:—

1. That Great Britain not only would not suffer an armed intervention in Spain, but that she would not even permit any considerable military force to be concentrated along the Pyrenean frontier.

2. That she would not oppose any arrangement for the marriage of Queen Isabella II., provided her intended husband should not be a French prince.

3. That Great Britain was determined to take no part in any European Congress convoked for the adjustment of the Spanish question, and that if such an assembly should be held without her co-operation, she would oppose the enforcement of all coercive measures, and of all other resolutions of such Congress, which should tend directly or indirectly to interfere with the rights and dignity of Spain as a free and independent nation.

TURKEY AND SYRIA.

A complete change has taken place in the Turkish ministry. This news has been brought by despatches from Constantinople of the 7th. Mehemet Izzet Pacha, friend of Reschid Pacha, is now Grand Vizier. Izzed Pacha was in the Syrian campaign, and was removed for incapacity.

The Levant mail brings dates from Constantinople to the 27th, Alexandria the 26th, Smyrna, the 29th, Athens, the 5th ult. The advices from Constantinople announces the death of Charles Scott, the son of Sir Walter Scott, who was attached to the embassy of Sir J. McNeil. The fatigue attendant upon a long journey is said to have been the cause.

The armament continue at the porte without any rational cause being assigned for such demonstrations. Jealousy of Greek intrigue, and a vague apprehension of the future, appear to be the only motives for the sultan indulging in any such unnecessary expense. Khosrew Pacha is living in a retired manner, and apparently is not desirous of again entering into the councils of the porte.

A letter from Constantinople of the 24th ult., states that the naval preparations of Turkey have excited much speculation and conjecture.

The news of the appointment of a protestant English bishop to reside at Jerusalem, has greatly surprised the Turkish ministers, who are not disposed to encourage an English protestant establishment there, as by creating more jealousies, it may lead to serious consequences. The Turks would not care if there was a hundred English bishops at Jerusalem, but the Maronites, Greeks, Armenians, and others would take the alarm and get up disturbances.

The Augsburgh Gazette gives a letter from Beyrout of the 7th, which states that the Druses have recommenced hostilities. Three convents and the villages around them have been burnt. The Emir Bescher, who had shut himself up in Deiret Kamar, was forced to capitulate. He was allowed to retire, after having been despoiled of every thing, and he arrived almost naked at Beyrout. The Druses lost 400 men, the Maronites 1200. At the time of writing eleven villages were in flames.

RUSSIA AND CIRCASSIA.

Accounts from Constantinople to the 1st ult., contains the following:—"Intelligence has been received, by way of Trebizond, of a victory gained by the Circassians over the Russians,—the most signal and decisive, it is said that has occurred since the beginning of the war. A Russian expedition, consisting of thirty thousand men, had been disembarked on the coast, with a view of destroying the grain which had been collected by the Circassians after the harvest, when a storm having suddenly arisen drove the ships from their [illegible]. The Circassians, availing themselves of the opportunity, assailing them fiercely on every side, and the Russians separated from their stores, which had been carried out to sea, were compelled to commence a disastrous retreat through a country consisting entirely of mountain forest and defile. With the exception of two thousand, who escaped to Anapa, the whole of the thirty thousand were killed or made prisoners: such are the accounts from Trebizond. Further details of this tremendous disaster of the Russians are eagerly expected here."

Congressional News.

[illegible]

IN SENATE.

Treasury Note Bill.

Jan 19.—The Treasury Note bill was taken up, and the amendment for the issue of new notes was agreed to.

The amendment striking out the proviso that the amount of Treasury Notes which may be issued under authority of this act shall be deemed and taken in lieu of so much of the loan authorized by the act of 21st of July, 1841, was considered.

Mr. Evans made a speech upon the condition of the Treasury, showing, in the first place, the absolute necessity of striking out the proviso. The government would not only want the five millions of Treasury Notes, but at least five millions of the loan which had not yet been taken.

Jan. 20.—The debate was continued for some time, when, the question being taken, the proviso was stricken out: yeas 24, nays 21.

Jan. 22.—The bill was passed, yeas 21, nays 20.

The Veto Power.

Jan. 24.—Mr. Clay made his long expected speech. He spoke about two hours, in a very able manner as some think; and as others say, not in a manner equal to himself.

Mr. Preston followed, in an animated reply to Mr. Clay, opposing entirely his doctrine as to the Veto Power.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Jan. 22.—Mr. Everett, from the Select Committee, with general consent, reported a bill fixing the apportionment of Representatives for the sixth census, which was read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Petition from Georgia.

Mr. Adams presented a petition from Habersham county, Georgia, asking for the removal of John Quincy Adams as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on account of a monomania on the subject of slavery. The petition was ordered to be laid on the table.

Question of Privilege.

Mr. Adams stated that he had the privilege of defending himself from the charges contained in the petition, and said that he had intended to move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to choose another Chairman if they thought proper.

Mr. Johnson asked the Chair if the motion to lay the petition on the table, which was carried in the affirmative, did not carry all questions connected with it.

The Speaker decided that all questions connected with the petition was laid on the table, but the gentleman had the right to raise the question of privilege.

After some discussion, in which Messrs. Holmes, Adams, and W. C. Johnson participated.

Mr Johnson was proceeding to state the case as he understood it, when

Mr Adams said, The gentleman from Maryland speaks false: I did not withdraw my question of privilege.

Mr. Johnson said, that no passion or ill feeling should ever induce him to demean himself contrary to the character of a gentleman.

Mr Adams. The gentleman has an example for that.

Mr Warren said, having voted with the majority, he would now move to reconsider the vote which laid the petition on the table.

The motion to reconsider the vote to lay on the table prevailed.

A scene of great distraction ensued, in which many questions of order were started, and none decided.

Mr Everett moved the previous question, which was seconded.

The question was then taken, Shall the main question be now put? and decided by yeas and nays as follows: yeas 111, nays 8[illegible].

The main question was a motion of Mr. Marshall to allow Mr. Adams to speak in his own defense, to the charges contained in the petition, which was then agreed to.

Mr J. Campbell then stated a question of privilege, and that was, that the charge against the gentleman was presented by himself, and could be withdrawn by him at any time he chose, it not being before the House; and if the charge was true, that the gentleman was laboring under monomania, it did not affect the privileges of the gentleman on this floor. Mr. Adams replied to the gentleman, and asked if he was to be deprived of the right of defence, merely because he had brought to the notice of the House the fact that such charges existed against him. He then read the letter enclosing the petition, which commenced with "Dear Sir," and signed "James Playfair, Sec'y."

Mr. Habersham said there was no such man in Habersham co. Georgia.

Mr. Adams said if it was a hoax it was a greater breach of privilege than if it was a reality—an insult to the dignity of this House. If the petition was a hoax, the charge was not a hoax; and he put his right to defence on that ground. He was charged with laboring under monomania, when the subject of individuals as dark in color as a Mexican was named by him, and he supposed when the subject of going to war with England to compel her to aid in the slave trade, or when the subject came up to pay infamous slave dealers for their losses—

Here various voices called the gentleman to order, and the Speaker ordered the gentleman to take his seat.

Mr. Stanly moved to lay the question of reconsideration on the table. Carried.

[The remainder of the debate, for want of space, we omit until next week.—Ed.

New-York Legislature.

In Senate, Jan. 22.—The Senate took up the bill to extend the time for the completion of the New York and Erie Rail Road.

This bill proposes the extension of the charter of the company 5 years from 1844.

Mr. Bockee moved sundry amendments as follows:—

First. That unless $500,000 should be expended on the southern half of the road within two years from the passage of this act, the extension provided for in this bill should not be granted.

Second. That until $500,000 had been expended in the construction of that part of the road lying south of Columbia co., no work should be done on that part between Greenbush and Troy.

Third. That no person should be allowed to vote for election of Directors of such company, unless 10 per cent. of the amount subscribed by him should have been paid in money, into the hands of the Treasurer of the company.

Some debate ensued on the second proposition, between Messrs. Bockee and Strong.

On motion of Mr. Strong the committee rose and reported.

Bank Receivers.—The Governor returned the bill relative to the appointment of Bank Receivers, with his approval, giving his reasons therefor.

The Public Faith.—Mr. Root resumed and continued his remarks begun yesterday, until 2 o'clock, when, without concluding, he yielded the floor for the purpose of the passage of the several bills.

In Assembly.—Mr. Lawson offered the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, the credit of the State is below par, it becomes the duty of the Representatives of the People to curtail the expenses of the government in every possible way.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That the committee on the expenditures of the Assembly be requested to inquire into the propriety of reducing the per diem allowance of the pay of members of this House.

The question was taken, and the resolution was rejected.

Mr. Swackhamer gave notice of a bill or concurrent resolution for prohibiting the Federal Government from establishing in this State any branch or office of any Fiscal Agent or Exchequer Bank, or any other fiscality whatever.

In Senate, Jan. 24.—Expunging the Journal.—The Journal having been read, Mr.

affirmative, did not carry ected with it.
cided that all questions petition was laid on the ntleman had the right to of privilege.
ussion, in which Messrs.
nd W. C. Johnson pars proceeding to state the ood it, when l, The gentleman from alse; I did not withdraw vilege.

d, that no passion or ill
r induce him to demean
o the character of a gene gentleman has an ex-

d,' having voted with the now move to reconsider
l the petition on the ta-reconsider the vote to lay led.

at distraction ensued, in ons of order were startled.
red the previous question,
ed.
as then taken, Shall the now put? and decided as follows: yeas 111,

ion was a motion of Mr.
Mr. Adams to speak in o the charges contained
ich was then agreed to.
l then stated a question at was, that the charge eman was presented by t be withdrawn by him ose, it not being before
if the charge was true, an was laboring under l; not affect the privi-
man on this floor. Mr.
he gentleman, and asked deprived of the right of because he had brought he House the fact that isted against him. He er enclosing the petition, ed with "Dear Sir," and ayfair, Sec'y."
n said there was no such m co. Georgia.
l if it was a hoax it was of privilege than if it insult to the dignity of he petition was a hoax, not a hoax; and he put ence on that ground. He th laboring under mono-subject of individuals as s a Mexican was named supposed when the sub-war with England to com-he slave trade, or when up to pay infamous slave osses—voices called the gentled the Speaker ordered the e his seat.
oved to lay the question of n the table. Carried.
er of the debate, for want it until next week.—Ed.

ork Legislature.

n. 22.—The Senate took end the time for the com-
New York and Erie Rail poses the extension of the mpany 3 years from 1841.

moved sundry amendments less $500,000 should be southern half of the road s from the passage of this n provided for in this bill anted.

until $500,000 had been construction of that part of outh of Columbia co., no done on that part between Troy.
no person should be allowection of Directors of such s 10 per cent. of the amount him should have been paid
he hands of the Treasurer ensued on the second prop-n Messrs. Bockee and

Mr. Strong the committee
ed.
rs.—The Governor returned to the appointment of Bank h his approval, giving his nith.—Mr. Root resumed

s remarks begun yesterday, when, without concluding, loor for the purpose of the several bills.
—Mr. Lawson, offered the ble and resolution:
he credit of the State is be-mes the duty of the Repre-
e People to curtail the exovernment in every possi-

be it Resolved, That the e expenditures of the Asested to inquire into the ucing the per diem allow-of members of this House was taken, and the reso-
ted.
mer gave notice of a bill or olution for prohibiting the ment from establishing in ranch or office of any Exchequer Bank, or any othever.
n. 24.—Expunging the Journal having been read, Mr.

Foster moved to strike therefrom the message of the Governor relative to the Bank Receiver Law, and spoke at great length in favor of his motion. A debate followed which lasted till the hour of adjournment, in which Messrs. Foster, Furman, Dickinson, Root, Paige, Nicholas, Rhoades, Strong and Ruger participated.

In Assembly.—Petitions Presented and Referred.—By Mr. Colegrove, of 121 citizens of Erie for a law to punish licentiousness: by Mr. McClay, of Thomas O'Connor, John G. Gottsberger, John Anthon, William Inglis, William Kemp, Aaron Vanderpool and 12,470 others, citizens of the city and county of New York, for the alteration of the existing system of common school education: by Mr. O'Sullivan, of several hundred citizens, (judges, lawyers, &c.,) of Cayuga for the abolition of the punishment of death.

Mr. Davezac offered a resolution referring to such of the Governor's message as relates to the controversy with the Executives of Georgia and Virginia, to a select committee. [Laid over under the table.]

Mr. Hitchcock, on notice, introduced a bill to provide for a more equal distribution of the literature fund.

In Senate, Jan. 25.—Mr. Dickinson then addressed the Senate in opposition to the proposed amendment of the minutes. He was followed by Messrs. Root, Foster, Furman, Hunter and Scott.

When the Clerk began to call the roll of members, Mr. Bartlit rose and asked to be excused from voting, as he had been absent from the city during the discussion.

The Senate excused him.

Mr. Foster's motion to strike out the message of Gov. Seward from the minutes, was then carried by the following vote:—

Ayes—Messrs. Bockee, Clark, Corning, Denniston, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Hunter, Johnson, Paige, Ruger, Scott, Strong, Varian—14.

Noes—Messrs. Dickinson, Dixon, Franklin, Furman, Hard, Hawkins, Hunt, Nicholas, Peck, Platt, Rhoades, Root, Works—13.

The Governor transmitted resolutions of the Legislature of Alabama, protesting against the late Distribution Act of Congress.

Also, resolutions of the same Legislature in favor of admitting the Republic of Texas into the Union.

In Assembly.—Petitions Presented and Referred.—By Mr. McClay, of the American and Foreign Bible Society, and the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, severally, for acts of incorporation: by Mr. Tupper, of 180 citizens of Auburn, and 74 citizens of Monroe, that the Utica and Schenectady rail road company may be compelled to carry small packages of merchandize over their road, they receiving compensation therefor; by Mr. Seymour, of 114 citizens of Oneida for the same; by Mr. Dox, (3) of 160 citizens of Ontario for the same; [on motion of Mr. Townsend, one of the petitions was read.]

In Senate, Jan. 26.—The Journal being read, Mr. Root asked whether the Journal showed what had been stricken out by the adoption of the motion of Mr. Foster—in other words, did the Governor's message appear in extenso upon the Journal?

The President replied in the negative, as the Senate by its vote of yesterday, had expressly directed its exclusion.

Mr. Root. It should be on the Journal, and it shall, and it shall go there in defiance of all their efforts. I move to amend the Journal as follows—after stating the motion of Mr Foster, insert "which message was in words and figures following, to wit:" and then append the message in hæc verba.

Mr. R. briefly spoke in explanation of his motion.

Mr. Strong replied.

Mr. Foster raised the point of order whether such a motion could be entertained.

The President said he did not feel authorized to exclude the motion of the Senator. He therefore decided it to be in order.

Mr. Foster appealed from the decision of the Chair, and asked for the ayes and noes.

Mr. Root. I am perfectly content that that course should be taken. My object will be attained. The appeal is from a decision of the Chair that my motion is in order. The Journal must therefore show what the Chair decided.

The appeal was sustained by a party vote.

Mr. Dickinson offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, by a recent decision of the Senate, it appears that the Governor is not permitted to enjoy the constitutional right of having such messages as he may deem proper to send to the Senate, entered upon the journals of that body, although no objection be taken to such messages on account of disrespect in their language or tenor;

And whereas the public interest requires that the official acts and opinions of every officer of government, but especially those of the Executive, should be recorded for the information of the people and of posterity;

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to inform the Senate whether any journal or record of proceedings, acts or opinions, of the person administering the government of the State, upon matters connected with his official duties, was handed over to him by his predecessor in office.

Mr. Foster moved to lay the resolution on the table—Carried.

The Governor sent in a message protesting against the action of the Senate in excluding his former message, relative to the bank receiver law, from the journal.

Mr. Strong moved that this message be returned to the Governor.

After much discussion by Messrs. Foster, Dickinson, Root, Furman, Strong, Hard, and Scott, the motion of Mr. Strong was carried by a party vote, as follows:—

Ayes—Messrs. Bartlit, Bockee, Clark, Corning, Denniston, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Hunter, Johnson, Paige, Ruger, Scott, Strong, Varian—15.

Noes—Messrs. Dickinson, Franklin, Furman, Hard, Hawkins, Nicholas, Peck, Platt, Rhoades, Root, Works—11.

News of the Day.

Ship Frankfort Ashore.—A paragraph has appeared in several papers stating that the ship Morrison, from Canton, is ashore at Little Egg Harbor; but we learn that this is a mistake. The vessel ashore is not the Morrison, but is the ship Frankfort, Russel, from New Orleans, owned by Johnson & Lowden, of this city. She is on shore on Old Inlet Bar, and has bilged, with about 8 feet of water in her hold at the latest accounts received from her. No lives lost. A large quantity of wheat, and about 15 tons of pig lead, constituting part of her cargo, have been thrown over to get her off; and it is probable all her cargo will be damaged, though a part may be saved should the weather prove favorable. —Sun.

An affray took place over a whiskey bottle, at Washington, Tenn., on the 26th ult., in which one Peterson was killed by a stone thrown by a man named Kelin, who acted in self-defense.

Hops.—The quantity of hops inspected in Massachusetts during the last 35 years is valued at $2,380,660.

Impeachment of President Lamar.—Our Texas correspondent informs us that a committee of the Texas House of Representatives has reported in favor of impeaching Ex-President Lamar for fitting out the Santa Fe Expedition.

Serious Accident.—Remarkable Preservation of Life.—On the 26th of Nov. last, Mr. Benj. Grant, a young man about 20 years of age, engaged in tending Fairbank's (formerly Nurse's,) mills in the northern part of Shrewsbury, was caught by the sleeve of his frock upon a strong iron spike, which had been temporarily driven into a key hole, in the spindle that passes through and carries the upper stone; around which his arm was tightly wound, bringing his body in close contact with the spindle. In this position, it is supposed by those best acquainted with the circumstances he must have revolved at least three hundred times, before his cries brought Mr. F. to stop the mill and extricate him from his awfully perilous situation, passing at each revolution through a space of 21 inches square.

The most important injuries sustained were fracture of both thigh bones, of the small bone of the right leg, and of the right arm in three different places, at one of which the bones protruded through the skin, constituting what surgeons call a compound fracture. Surgical assistance was obtained in about an hour from the occurrence of the accident, and his fractured and otherwise wounded limbs were properly dressed forthwith.

From that time to the present, he has suffered but little severe pain, and has progressed towards recovery, steadily and more rapidly than was anticipated at that time, and is now able to sit up in his chair very comfortably.

Although a stranger in the town, having resided there but a few weeks, a commendable sympathy was awakened in his behalf.—Worcester Spy.

Louisville, Ky. Jan. 13.—Yesterday morning, in the consequence of the news from Cincinnatti, the people began, at an early hour, to collect around the office of Lougee and Moore, where notes known as the notes of the Savings Bank of Louisville, had been redeemed. Moore had received intelligence of the rough way in which his partner was treated in Cincinnatti, and did not appear. After much hesitation, the office was entered. They scattered some letters about, and did some other damage; but they went out very quietly at the command of the marshal. The affair could hardly be called a mob, and very few were concerned in it. Moore, early in the morning, returned a considerable sum which had been deposited with him by different persons.—Journal.

Illuminated Tunnel.—The Pottsville Journal, in describing the opening of the Reading railroad, says that the tunnel below Port Clinton was splendidly illuminated with upward of 2000 lights, which made a grand and imposing display. The length of this tunnel, we believe, exceeds 1000 feet through the bowels of a limestone mountain.

ANOTHER ABOLITIONIST IN JAIL.

Rev. Charles T. Torrey of Boston, formerly editor of the Free American, is now imprisoned in Annapolis, Maryland. We take the account as taken in the Boston papers. Our readers have had notice of the pro-slavery Convention which was called at Annapolis

A letter which we received from Br. Torrey, a month or two since, that it was his intention to be present there, to hear and report all that was done by the "eternal slavery" party.

The account as given in the Atlas is no more than this. He attended a public meeting, and busied himself taking notes of the proceedings, speeches etc. For this crime he scarcely escapes being lynched; and that through the interference of a law that incarcerates him with thieves and murderers! Is this the protection afforded by our "glorious Union" to the Northern citizen? It is high time that we understood the mysteries of Northern and Southern citizenship. At a city in Maryland where they are themselves asssembled in convention for the discussion of slavery, an anti-slavery reporter, a free citizen of Massachusetts, is deprived of his personal liberty, is threatened with lynching!!

The trial of Br. Torrey has taken place before this, and we have no doubt he is now enjoying the free air of the North.—It appears to us more like an attempt to frighten him away than any thing else.—We can hardly believe that Maryland would have the impudence to imprison Mr. Torrey for no other crime than that of being an abolitionist and of attempting to report the proceedings of their pro-slavery Convention. And yet we remember that Thompson, Work and Burr are now serving out their 12 years in the Missouri penitentiary without having committed any crime or violated even the form of any statute law. Maryland may strive to prove her love of slavery by an act as illegal and infamous as this. We look with great anxiety for further accounts from friend Torrey.—Friend of Man.

AN ADDRESS TO THE SLAVES

The Sate Convention at Peterboro put forth two addresses; one of the ordinary character usually issued by such bodies, another quite extraordinary—an address to the Southern slaves. The first of these was reported by a committee, read, accepted, and referred to a second committee from whom we hope to obtain the copy in time for our next paper.

The latter, the slave address, written by Gerrit Smith, was reported through the same committee, read, accepted, and retained for the purpose of discussion in the hands of the Convention. This address was regarded by all as very bold and startling in its character. It was looked upon as quite a new movement to address slaves at all, without having any reference to the sentiments conveyed.

The Convention however, seemed readily to enter into the spirit of the address. On the final motion for its adoption, an overwhelming majority was found to be in favor of it, in every part. Exception had been taken to that portion which advises the fugitive to take horses, etc., both in the free and slave States. A motion was made to strike out this portion of the address as liable to misinterpretation. So much interest was felt in the vote, that the Yeas and Noes were called for. The motion for erasure was lost, so the address appears unmutilated from the pen of Gerrit Smith.—Friend of Man.

The Governor General of Canada, Sir Charles Baggot, arrived at Kinston on the 10th inst., and was received with appropriate honors.

Death of a Missionary.—Intelligence has just been received of the death of the Rev. Geo. Champion, a missionary of the American Board in South Africa. He died at Santa Cruz on the 17th of December, where he went last autumn with his family for his health.

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.

The Bankrupt Act is quite out of danger in the Senate, if it has been in danger there. Should the vote be taken to-morrow in the absence of Mr. Simmons of R. I. and Mr. Cuthbert of Georgia, it would stand 24 to 24, on the question of the Repeal of the Act. In case of a tie, the repeal Act cannot pass.

When the vote is taken, it is possible that Mr. Simons and Mr. Cuthbert will both be here, in which case it will also be a tie 25 to 25.

In no way can the repeal Bill pass, unless by the absence of some Senator opposed to it, while all its friends are present. But suppose the repeal bill should pass,—it would not get much further in my opinion.

New York and Erie Railroad.—The total length of the road is 446 miles, of which 267 are either now in use or will be graded by the 1st of February: this leaves 179 miles yet to be graded. Prior to the 1st January, 1841, the Company had expended $459,492 28, and since that time $801,483 42, making a total of $1,260,975 70 expended from subscriptions to the capital stock. Of the three millions stock loan $2,400,000 have been received and expended, $800,000 prior to January 1, 1840, and the remainder since. The total expenditure in the construction of the road is thus shown to be $3,660,976 70. There are at present engaged in the construction of the road, between four and five thousand men—all of whom are dependant on the continuance of this work for subsistance during the winter. The citizens on the line of the road have subscribed liberally, and the contractors have consented to receive a large share of their pay in stock of the Company.—Tribune.

An ourang outang has recently been imported into Boston from Borneo. She is about three feet high, and for exhibition, an interesting specimen of this curious tribe, so rarely seen in this country.

Very Nigh getting a Bump.—Married at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 6th ult., Mr. David Bump, of Jackson, Michigan, to Miss Vera Nye, of the former place.

It is stated that the colored people of Philadelphia have 16 churches, 21 schools, 80 beneficent societies, six literary and debating societies, three moral reform societies, two lyceums, and two weekly newspapers.

Notices.

NOTICE.

A meeting will be held at the District School House, on Monday, the 7th inst, at 6 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of organizing a "Debating Society" in this village. A Constitution and Bye Laws for the regulation and government of the Society will be presented by a Committee already appointed for that purpose, consisting of Wm. D. Cochran, Delford Carpenter, and A. V. Bentley, Esqrs.

The following question will also be discussed: "Ought Capital Punishment to be abolished?"

We give our hearty approval of this proposed measure, and hope that all who feel an interest in Education, in Literary, Moral and Social Improvement, will cheerfully unite in the laudable undertaking. Something of the kind has long been needed in our village.

The question will be an important one and which is at present awakening much attention and interest in the public mind, and in the Legislatures of the different States.

We hope to see a full meeting, and the attendance of the Ladies is respectfully requested.

De Ruyter, Feb. 2, 1842.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS it has come to the knowledge of the Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute that certain reports have been circulated, which are calculated to prejudice the minds of some of the Stockholders against the character of the school and also to weaken their confidence in the management of said Trustees; therefore,

Resolved, That the Trustees cordially invite the Stockholders to appoint, if they shall think proper, a competent unprejudiced committee, composed of members, located in different parts of the country, or in different communities of the Stockholders, to investigate the whole concerns and business transactions of the Board of Trustees of said Institution. And as the proper time for such meeting, we would suggest the Monday next preceding the annual meeting of the Stockholders in June next.

We would also suggest the propriety of appointing one or two in each society according to the amount of stock invested

By order of the Board of Trustees.
JOHN R. BUTTS, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, Jan. 2, 1842.

PROPOSALS

For publishing a History of the Seventh-Day Baptist Denomination.

It is intended to publish a full and complete History of the Seventh-day Baptists, from their origin to the present time, giving an account of their progress and operations, including short Biographical sketches of some of their most distinguished members, together with a history of their benevolent operations, and a brief manual of the doctrines of the gospel as held by them.

As full an account as practicable will be given of their origin and numbers in England.

The size of the work, price, time and manner of publication, will be determined when the facts are collected. It will be published on individual responsibility.

Such persons as have facts in their possession on this subject are requested to transmit them as soon as convenient; and we respectfully request the Clerk, or some other person, in every Church, or settlement, to give us as full an account as is possible of the origin of their church, number of members, names of Ministers that have been members, their age, time of death, (if dead) number and time of Revivals, with the number of additions, and whatever else of interest that has been or may be connected with their history.

☞ All communications on the subject may be addressed to the "Editor of the S. D. B. Register, De Ruyter, N. Y."

PROSPECTUS
OF
VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-Day Baptist Register will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance, or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for a fair discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

DIED,

Jan 31, 1842 at the residence of H. A. Dellay, De Ruyter N. Y., JULIA F., [illegible] James B[illegible] Esq. [illegible]

In this town, on the 29th ult. [illegible] Scarlet Fever, JOSEPH, only son of [illegible] Browers, aged 1 year and 6 months.

In this town, on the 1st inst. of Scarlet Fever, STEPHEN M., [illegible] Tripp, aged 19 years.

In [illegible] Forks on the 19th inst., Mr. JAMES BABCOCK, aged 51 years.

LIST OF LETTERS

W. P. Langworthy, [illegible] P. M., [illegible] Brown, E. C. P[illegible] Green, [illegible] F. W. S[illegible]

LIST OF RECEIPTS

[illegible] W. P. Langworthy, $4, [illegible] M. Green, $2, [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

AUCTION SALE.

WILL be sold at public auction, at the [illegible] Wm. C. Gage, on the 15th of March next, the dwelling house owned by A. D. Bly[illegible] village of De Ruyter, together with [illegible] land. Said house is [illegible] new, and in good repair. For further particulars enquire of L. Wood.

A. D. BLYE.

De Ruyter, Jan. 24, 1842. 49w6

WANTED,

A BOY, about 15 or 16 years of age, to learn the Tailors Trade. One who has been at the business would be preferred. Good recommendations would be required. Apply to JAMES M. LETTS, No. 1 Farmers Exchange.

De Ruyter, Jan. 24, 1842.

HEALTH, the object of our solicitude, can be preserved only by a careful attention [illegible] teracting those causes which tend to [illegible] putrefaction of the fluids of the body. [illegible] and a judicious selection of articles of [illegible] much to promote this result; but with all [illegible] ness, the warm weather and the [illegible] of the season will tend powerfully to [illegible] putrefaction and disease [illegible] Something is needed to counteract [illegible] and keep the secretions [illegible] are safe [illegible] PHELPS' TOMATO PILLS are [illegible] a correct[illegible] gest[illegible] Pills are [illegible] —Tomato [illegible]

[illegible] J. N. ELMORE.

De Ruyter, Jan. 26, 1842.

VALUABLE FARM FOR SALE

THE [illegible]

[illegible]

Truxton, Jan. 12, 1842.

DISSOLUTION.

THE copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers [illegible] The Books and Accounts [illegible] by either of the subscribers [illegible] will please call and [illegible]

JAMES C[illegible]
THOMAS RUSSELL.

De Ruyter, Jan. 15, 1842. 47w3

FOR SALE.

A FIRST rate Cutter [illegible] Enquire at this office.

Jan. 18, 1842. 47w3

NOTICE. The notes and accounts of the late firm of ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER [illegible] placed in the hands of [illegible] and collection [illegible] the first of March [illegible] unsettled at that date, will be left [illegible] officer for collection.

J. N. ELMORE.
A. N. ANNAS.
WILLIAM AYER.

Jan. 10, 1842.

MENS Coarse Fine Boots, Ladies Gaiter Boots, Ladies and Childrens Shoes a little better and cheaper than elsewhere at the

October 4. STONE STORE.

L. W. BLISS' Willow [illegible] Best & C[illegible] Holmes' Sampson & S[illegible] consisting of Broad Axes, Hand Axes, [illegible] Chisels, at Factory prices by J. N. ELMORE.

October 4. Manufacturer's Agent.

LOOK HERE!

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note or book account are requested to call and settle the same before the first of January next.

G. W. SUTTON.

NO IMPOSITION.

NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will find just the place by calling at the sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find it 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

JUST received one Case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the

Nov. 16, 1841. FARMER'S EXCHANGE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

FOR SALE,

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm MAXSON.

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

STOVES.
COLD WINTER IS COMING.

ELMORE & ANNAS.

LATE [illegible] Elmore Annas & Ayer [illegible] LaFayette B[illegible] the largest and best [illegible] STOVES ever before offered in this [illegible]

Fancy Parlor Stoves,

[illegible] TOWN, COUNTY or STATE. [illegible] CASH [illegible]

[illegible] of Stove [illegible]

BRASS AND TIN WARE

[illegible] constantly [illegible]

LOW PRICES

[illegible]

Eave Troughs

[illegible]

JUST RECEIVED

[illegible]

JOB WORK

[illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. 34tf

NEW GOODS
AT THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE!

S. G. WALKER,

HAVING [illegible] his large stock of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, CROCKERY, HARDWARE, &c. [illegible] the LARGEST stock [illegible]

BOOTS & SHOES,

Ever offered in De Ruyter or vicinity, which will sell CHEAPER [illegible] ever sold before in [illegible] CASH [illegible]

De Ruyter, Oct. 18, 1841. 34tf

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS
TAKE NOTICE.

THE [illegible]

[illegible]

TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

S. M. HOUSE,

R[illegible]

[illegible]

De Ruyter, Sept. 21, 1841. 30m6

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

A [illegible] J. N. ELMORE. No. 3[illegible]

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

W[illegible] ELMORE'S

NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

De Ruyter, October 1st, 1841.

SUTTON & QUINBY,

H[illegible] Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Hardware, Paints, Oils, and Dye Stuffs; [illegible]

LOW PRICES.

[illegible] west of the city of New-York. [illegible]

One Price and Ready Pay.

[illegible] Goods cheap are [illegible] stock of Goods [illegible] please the veriest [illegible]

GEO. W. SUTTON,
WM. H. QUINBY.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

CASH

PAID for Timothy-seed or Flax seed, by

Oct. 4. J. N. ELMORE.

TEAS, SUGARS.

CALL and see how cheap they are selling them at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

Oct. 11.

THE FARMER'S EXCHANGE is the place to buy Goods CHEAP. Oct 20, 1841.

34tf S. G. WALKER.

NO MONOPOLY!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS & SHOES will find them CHEAPER at the "Farmer's Exchange" than any other establishment in town.

De Ruyter, Oct. 20, 1841.

34tf S. G. WALKER.

POETRY.

Supplication.

When on the sad and yearning heart,
The clouds of early sorrow fall,
Oh! what shall bid their gloom depart,
And lift the spirit from their thrall!
When 'neath the foldings of their fall,
The lost and beautiful are laid—
Oh! who shall answer to the call
By watchful Love in anguish made!

When from our daily paths, like flowers,
Our kindred wither, one by one,
And what shall gild the weary hours,
Or bring again the unshadowed sun
To smile all darkening scenes upon!—
To chase the clouds that round them rise—
Recall again each vision gone,
And bathe in light the uplifted skies!

When, with a shadow o'er them flung,
Appear the sear autumnal leaves;
And every blast their boughs among Awakens mournful images;
What on the lapse of hours like these,
Can Earth, with all her phantoms fling,
When hope hath ceased her melodies,
And folded up her rainbow wing!

Is it not sweet, when song and dream
Have passed, like sunset's sky of fire;
When Love's false pinions sheds no gleam
O'er Pleasure's crushed and tuneless lyre—
To raise with purified desire
The prayer, in earnest supplication given,
Which lifts the immortal spirit higher,
And antedates the joys of heaven!

Miscellaneous Department

From the Northern Light.

WINTER IN THE COUNTRY.

BY WILLIAM BACON.

Poets have recorded, in swelling numbers, the beauties of spring, when nature awakes from her dormancy and spreads her treasures of flowers over the lap of bridal earth—the muses have done tribute to summer with her sultry sun and genial, showers her leafy forests and wavy fields, her evenings of tranquil serenity and her morning dews,—the lyre has been waked in behalf of inspiring autumn, with her golden fruit dropping, like man in the midst of his glory, upon the turfy element whence it originated,—to its russet fields, its variegated forests, its swelling streams, its clear and salubrious atmosphere, its stars, appearing in night's blue firmament with newly burnished brilliancy, as if to look more effectually on the decay of waning nature; but who of all the disciples of the nine, have ever dwelt in melting rhapsodies on the loveliness of winter, the cold child of the north, and the mother of tempests? When has even prosing stupidity given one smiling expression of rapture to its delights? Its horrors have been depicted "in story and in song," in strains that might bring tears from the eyes of the fur clad inhabitant of polar regions, whose very existence is quietly domiciled in icebergs, and with an emphasis that would seem to give assurance, that the gloomy picture possessed no cheering shades—that her skies were overspread with huge masses of impenetrable clouds, through which no ray of sunshine could ever penetrate to cheer the dull cold minds of the earth,—that nature had shrouded herself so deep in the habiliments of woe, that like the matron of old, she refused to be comforted, because her beautiful things had passed away.

Why this season should be anticipated with gloomy forebodings which so often, indeed almost invariably occur, is, to us a paradox. Though its touchings of fancy are sometimes gloomily arrayed, in the main, it is worthy of a noble place in the catalogue of seasons. So says the school boy, who watches with rapture the first approach of boreal winds, the heralds of frozen lakes and fettered rivers, on which he may pass the long, moonlit evenings, in performing the skater's "fantastic tricks." So says the amorous swain and blooming belle, with rosy cheek, rendered fairer by the salutations of northern breezes, as they contemplate those ice breaking, love creating appendages of a New England winter, "the singing school," renowned from ancient times as Cupid's favorite haunts, from whence, though his arrows may fly at random, they are sure to hit the mark. Thus responds the laborer, for it brings relief from toil, and blunts the distraction of care, with which "seed time and harvest" are sure to disturb his breast, and lower his physical nature. And thus proclaims the man of silvery hairs and wrinkled brow, for it gives him unimpeachable license to lay aside perplexity and betake himself in quiet to his great arm chair, and home fireside, to regale on the fruits of honest industry and virtuous thrift. To nature's amateurs, those who love her in whatever attire she may array herself, it is an era in her history of peculiar interest. The broad contrast between the rippling currents of June and the ice bridges of December, and indeed in every thing over which changes of seasons can operate, is interesting in the extreme. How sublimely the dark heavy clouds roll over the atmosphere!—With what impetuosity the moaning winds, sweep over the earth, now sighing through leafless branches, anon breathing mournful but sweet music in the bristling tops of the mountain pine, or the unyielding hemlock! How gracefully they twist the falling snows in circling eddies, and pile it along the fences and by the forest in the mountains with their depressions, their caverns, and exhausted waters, or leave it in waves over the fields with a precision which might induce a conjecture that Neptune had usurped the empire of land, as well as water!—Then, again, notice the still calm day, (for winter has such days,) the sun looks with the warmth of genuine sympathy for his southern throne, and seems almost to regret his departure to southern skies. Beneath his influence, the frost relaxes its vigor, roofs weep in showers of sunny gladness, the snow shrinks in its dimensions and sends a faint tribute to the little rill so thoroughly benumbed with frost, that its reanimation seems a matter of forlorn hope; the soft breezes of the south come up with a mellowness which almost intimates that the springing of flowers is at hand; the poultry again try the wing, and bathe the downy breasts in seas of air; the lowing herds send up a note of gladness, and bleating flocks respond to the sweet anthem; man walks forth again with dignified aspect; but alas! this bright day of calm and sunshine, is but the night, the resting time, the hour of repose of the elements. As the sun sinks to his couch behind the hills, light clouds in golden azure drest, extend themselves behind his wake, and as young night draws on, they take possession of the sky. How evenly they spread over its surface! How dimly the stars are seen behind this canopy of almost fleecy whiteness! It gathers thicker and the gems of night are obscured,—even the "silvery moon," the queen of the heavens, with reluctance exposes her half concealed features, as she appears to wade through seas of snow. Man, exhausted by the labors of the sunny day, an oasis in the season, goes to his repose, and the elements awake, the sleet rattling upon his windows, or the hail drops falling upon his roof and chasing each other with clamorous notes in their descent to earth, or the whisking music of falling snow escorted by the winds, awakes him to the assurance that "change that comes to all," has come again; and with the coming dawn, he arouses to behold the wrathful fury of the winter storm pouring along the mountain and dancing over the vallies. What changes in a night! A new heavens have spread over us, and a new atmosphere sustains them and urges on their object. New drifts are piled about in every dodging place of winds, and old mountains of sleet and snow receive liberal accessions.

It is not for man alone, to feel the sadness of the change. The feathery inhabitants of his realm, partake with chilly indifference the bounties of his hand, or refuse in cold despair. The ox that has long known his owner, utters a sorrowing moan at his approach, and shrinks from his accustomed kindness. The kine guard themselves alike from his invasion and the storm's commotion, and rouse to their morning's repast with indifference bordering on death. How desolating are the ravages of the boreal storm, and yet how frequent its occurrence. Well was it said in olden time, "pray that your flight be not in winter," for a four fold cheerlessness rests upon the traveler, who far from the home which his loving wife makes dear, and from which the remembrance of his lisping babes, brings up many a holy reminiscence, but he must sit in cheerless apathy by the hearth of strangers, or pursue his lonely way, through "shapeless drifts" the sport of elements which ere night-fall may waft his dirge.

But the storm subsides, the fury of the elements is assuaged, the clouds roll in the disordered confusion of a retreating army, over the sky; the sun peeps his golden face from between broken ranks, and hope again lights up the aspect of despair that sat brooding on the countenance of man. He goes forth with team and shovel to his labor. The incumbent masses that extend before him and hide the fences from his view, yield at his effort, and a canal through snows or a pathway over drifts, crown his labors. Again the merry sound of jingling bells, and hearty laughs are heard. The festive young enjoy their winter luxury, the sleigh ride, and busines flows in its accustomed channel; all is life and animation. The sun smiles upon the scene, and clouds of silky softness spread their light shadows over it. The upper regions of air assume a mildness that portends a thaw, and man, now accustomed to the sterner dealings of nature, dreads its approach. The heavens darken, and the sound of abundance of rain proclaims its coming, almost with certainty; still the lower regions of air are held in icy coldness; but the frequent sound of "it moderates," is heard by the listening group as they separate for the night, to while in fancy dreams their sleeping hours away; and again a storm ensues, but it is attended with rustling winds, neither is the air whitened with spangled snow flakes; but the rain descends, and on reaching the colder regions of the lower atmosphere, it congeals to ice. What a beautiful process! How brilliant the appearance when the breaking clouds disclose the morning sun! Every tree, and branch, and shrub, is rooted in a mail of ice, and droops under its burden, and the rays of the king of day, as they fall upon them, disclose a thousand images of diamonds, "gold, silver, and all precious substance." They look as though the treasures of earth had been collected, and hung in bold relief to display their beauties; and as the gentle breeze gives them motion, by every transition they are reflected in new light, and rendered more beauteous still. Has winter in the country no charms? Can a heart which never beat warm in admiration of nature,—one as cold as the ice that surrounds a heart encased in adamant,—look on such a scene without offering rapturous notes of admiration? Can the bright flowers of spring, or the maturing fruit of summer, or the ripeness of autumn, adorn the vegetable world with more beauty than it now possesses?

But the fluctuating scenery of winter, is soon changed. What a fitful emblem of life? The ice falls from the forest, the orchard and garden, and cold, the legitimate son of the north, exerts its influence under a serene, cloudless sky. He brings the hoar frost, and caps the mountain tops with a bright similitude of frosty ages, or dispensing his booty with liberal hand, strews it every where leaving innumerable spangles in the air, to reflect brilliancy from the orb of day. But like the gourd of the ancient prophet, these rare gems of the air are of short duration. They come in a night, and unless in some elevated region, they perish when the sun comes up Yet they are pleasing, lovely to look upon; we behold them, and they are gone.

Such are some of the beauties of winter. It also has its uses. The hard frost which penetrates deep into the earth, performs a labor for man, which he might labor in vain to accomplish. How it breaks the obstinate particles, to a depth which the plough cannot penetrate, and on which the spade could have no effect, and reduces them to forms subservient to the growth of herbs and trees, for the use of man and his beast, and at the same time changes their position, so that they may apply new surfaces to new services. Without this action comparative sterility would ensue.

Winter is valuable to man, as a season which invites his herds and flocks to the fold, and renders them more particularly the subjects of his care and attention. It is then that his kindness subdues the roughness of their nature, and they learn from him the proud lessons of docility and gratitude.

It should be appreciated as a season for social privileges. He who said "it is not good for man to be alone," has placed him in communities where mutual benefit may result from mutual efforts. Here, he may exercise the qualities of mind, in a manner salutary to him and beneficial to others, learning, and at the same time, teaching all that come within his influence. The long evenings of winter furnish rich facilities for the promotion of his object; and the many associations widely disseminating over our country and spreading with its growth, with a ratio that says clearly, that they are a part of it, offer ample cause why he should bestir himself, literally and scientifically, as well as exercise physical action.

To the young, it is a golden season for thought. With many of the beauties of the natural world shut out from vision, with a freedom from care and perplexity, which will be consequential to later years, they have nothing to hinder, and every thing to induce them to apply it to the best advantage—to plow deep the fields of thought, and spread wide the seeds of observation. And for every effort in this mental culture, in due time they will bring home the harvest, if they faint not.

Mount Osceola Nov. 30, 1841.

THE GRAY SQUIRREL.

A recent exploit of one of these sprightly and sharp witted little creatures, belonging to a neighbor of mine, has so interested and surprised me as exhibiting passion, sagacity, and an obvious process of reasoning, so like the human race under similar circumstances, that I think it cannot fail to prove of some interest to others, and I therefore am induced to offer a brief relation of the fact for the numerous readers of the Signal.

The squirrel in question, having been taken when very young, had become tame and familiar as a kitten, and, up to the act by which he thought fit to sacrifice his home for the gratification of his resentment, he had shown himself quite amiable and harmless. On the day of the accident about to be related, the owner having some company at the house whom he was treating with cracked walnuts, gave one to his pet. This being greedily devoured, the gentleman, by way of amusing himself and company, then selected a promising looking shell, carefully removed the meat, and putting the shell together again, placed it before his nut-loving favourite. The squirrel, never having been before deceived by a trick of the kind, confidently took up the shell in his paws, when perceiving it empty, he let it fall with an evident disappointment. The experiment was then repeated. This was too much for the patience and equanimity of his squirrelship. On discovering that his second nut, thus insultingly offered him, was like the former, destitute of the expected treat, he turned an angry glance upon the author of the trick, and springing up, seized him by the thumb, which he bit to the bone, and then, though no word or blow was offered or given, running out of the house, immediately retreated to the woods, from which he has never returned. N. Y. Signal.

YANKEE STORY.

A Yankee pedlar, on his way to the west with a two-horse load of notions, put up at the house of an honest Dutchman, between Harrisburgh and Wheeling, and as it happened was detained there three or four days by a heavy rain, which made the roads and streams impassable. At last the sky brightened up and he hitched to, but when the reckoning came to be paid, which was ten dollars, Jonathan requested the host to score it until he returned from his voyage, promising very honestly to discharge it then. This did not suit the Dutchman, however, who insisted on the cash, which was at last reluctantly paid him. It was then a custom, as it is now, to treat a traveler upon the payment of his bill, and the tavern keeper was never backward in following the custom. But on handing out a mug of clear cider, Jonathan remarked shrewdly that it would make fine wine, and said he had a secret by which, through a short process, he could convert cider into the best of wine. This put mynheer on the nettles; posess it he must, so finally he took up the Yankee upon his offer of putting the cider into process of wine-making for ten dollars down, and fifty dollars more when he returned, if it succeeded to the landlord's mind. Jonathan was accordingly conducted to the cellar, and having procured a half-inch auger, bored a hole in one end of the hogshead of cider, and directed mynheer to apply his thumb to it while he bored a like hole in the other end, and then ordered him to stretch his other arm so as to cover that also. Having thus got the unsuspecting Dutchman into business, he directed him to remain so until he cut two spigots for the holes, and walking out to his wagon jumped in and was walking off, leaving his credulous friend to make wine of his cider the best way he could, and to get back the ten dollars when he caught him.

ANECDOTE OF FRANKLIN.—The following anecdote was published a number of years ago, in the United States Gazette. It is a good one, and may be new to many of our readers.

"When Messrs. Franklin, Lee, and Dean were in Paris, as commissioners for the American Congress, the good people of that great city used to bestow their favors so exclusively upon the Doctor, that the other gentlemen, his colleagues, appeared to be quite forgotten, and occasionally evinced a little good natured jealousy. It even required no small address on the part of the Doctor, to preserve harmony. One morning just as breakfast was preparing, some kind of Francaise sent a generous cake to the lodgings of the commissioners, marked 'Le Digne Franklin,' that is, being interpreted, 'The worthy Franklin. Messrs. Lee and Dean remarked, that they were, as usual, indebted to their colleague for the best part of their accomodations—' Not at all,' said the Doctor. 'This was evidently intended for us all, but as the French people do not understand English, they have made a trifling error in the orthography; they have undoubtedly meant Lee, Dean, Franklin.'"

BRIEF NOTES OF OLD HUMPHREY.

Our frail bodies are tottering habitations; every beat of the heart is a rap at the door to tell us of our danger.

Do you want to know the man against whom you have most reason to guard yourself? your looking glass will give you a very fair likeness of his face.

Whether we go backwards or forwards, to the right hand, or to the left, every step we take is a step towards the grave.

When I put my finger on my pulse, it tells me at the same moment, that I am a living and a dying man.

True wisdom is to know what is best worth knowing, and to do what is best worth doing.

When the infidel would persuade you to abandon your Bible, tell him you will do so when he brings you a better book.

A man should always look upward for comfort, for when the heaven above our heads is dark, the earth under our feet is sure to be darker.

When we start back with unusual surprise at the wickedness of others, may it not be a proof that we are not sufficiently acquainted with our own hearts?

If death be solemn with the hope of eternal joy, how terrible must it be with the fear of eternal woe!

The friend that lightly flatters thee is an enemy; the enemy that justly reproves thee is a friend.

If you want to get a spiritual appetite, walk often in the green pastures, and by the still waters of God's promises to his people.

If the world knew what passes in my heart, what would it think of me? I do know it, what then do I think of myself?

The most unreasonable, the most ungrateful, and the most deceitful of all things, is the human heart.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DRUGS & MEDICINES.

De Ruyter, January 17. 1842.

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, are now offered to Physicians and families 10 per cent lower than" BOUGHT at the STONE STORE merchant in New York at

S. D. DELLAY'S

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and requests from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse

Terms of sale, 6 months

HAIR! HAIR!

BALDNESS.—Important Discovery—the Great Mystery found out at last.

DR STERRY'S HAIR REGENERATOR.—Dr. Sterry, after much attention to the important subject of preserving the hair, has after many experiments chemical and physical, been able to discover an article which is now offered with the greatest confidence for the toilet, as the best thing ever discovered, its softening and penetrating quality, to produce a good head of hair—to prevent it from falling off when baldness is apprehended—to restore it when baldness has taken place, and to prevent it from turning gray. It is more nourishing than pomatum, antique oil, or Cologne water. It is a beautiful article for ladies' curls—it makes the hair soft and lively, and produces uncommon brilliancy. Thousands have tested its superior virtues and excellence, and in every instance it stands unrivalled. It is an infallible cure in all affections of the skin on the head—as dandruff, &c &c. Every family should be supplied with a bottle of this oil, that by its application to the head and hair of children, the beautiful and ornamental appendage of a fine head of hair, which nature has supplied us may be preserved.

WORMS! WORMS!

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S unrivalled and unequalled Worm Tea, a sovereign remedy for Worms. This invaluable medicine has been tested by the experience of more than ten years use, and administered to more than 18 000 persons of various ages, and not one solitary complaint, for in no one of the thousands of instances, where it has been used agreeable to the printed direction, has it ever failed.

N. B. Ask for Dr. M. Hitchcock's Worm Tea, as there are many nostrums abroad for the destruction of worms.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt.

MAGNETIC ODONTICA

THE TEETH! THE TEETH!

The Incomparable Tooth Preparation.

THE test is proved, and the most [illegible] and doubting are fully convinced of its great utility, as we have the evidence from the sale of 25,000 boxes of the Odontica, within the last year. It is ascertained from experience, that when used, the teeth will never decay, but remain till the latest age of man, with their natural wear; and that—in thousands of cases, nervous toothache, (that climax of pain) has at once been effectually cured by this most popular dentrifice in America. And in conclusion, where, or who is the young lady or gentleman, aye, the individual that values a beautiful set of teeth, sound gums, and a sweet breath more than fifty cents, that will be longer destitute of a box of Dr. M. Hitchcock's Magnetic Odontica.

LOOK AT THIS.

HAVE YOU A COUGH.

70 000 DIE OF CONSUMPTION every year in the United States, [illegible] persons suffer from troubles [illegible] coughs and colds, that can be cured by Dr. Hitchcock's Vegetable Cream Cough Drops, a safe medical prescription, containing no poisonous drugs, and used in an extensive practice for several years with [illegible] relief, and save you from [illegible] pulmonary consumption, which sweeps into the grave hundreds of the young, the old, the [illegible]. Have you a cough? Be persuaded [illegible] a bottle of the Cough Drops [illegible] may be too late. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

LOTION, LOTION.

DR. EVANS' BEAUTIFYING LOTION.

HIGHLY esteemed for curing all Roughness, Coarseness, Redness, and Pimples on the Face, Neck or Hands, and effectually clearing the complexion and removing all diseases of the skin.

Nothing contributes so much to our general success in life, as an engaging first appearance. This Lotion is admired as a most fragrant, mild, safe wash, and greatly esteemed for its virtues in cleansing, softening, and purifying the skin of all eruptions, so injurious to female beauty, and restoring it to a high degree of purity.

SNUFF.

Only Twenty-Five Cents.

DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S newly invented SNUFF, the best article ever discovered by scientific men, in Europe or America, for the cure and absolute relief of Catarrh, Dizziness of the Head, Weak Eyes, Nervous Headaches, Fallen Sickness, Fits, and Infants troubled with Snuffles, partial shocks of Palsy, etc.

The above medicines are for sale, wholesale and retail, by Johnson & Dickinson, Utica, N. Y., Allen & Miller, and A. L. Angle, Truxton, N. Y., and by most Druggists in the country, also, by the subscriber.

S. D. DELLAY.

He also states, for the benefit of the afflicted, that he has the following valuable MEDICINES, among his large stock.

Doctor Clark's [illegible]
Morrison's [illegible]
Samuel [illegible]
Doctor [illegible]
[illegible]
Dr P[illegible]
M[illegible]
of the [illegible]
Dr P[illegible]
M[illegible]
[illegible]
B[illegible]
B[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible]

To FARMERS [illegible]

[illegible]

S. D. DELLAY.

TO FARMER'S FAMILIES,

AND TO ALL AFFECTED WITH DISEASE.

January 12, 1842.

I have this day been appointed [illegible] place for the sale of DR. D. JAYNE'S [illegible] medicines consisting of JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, TONIC VERMIFUGE and SANATIVE PILLS.

All articles sold by me [illegible] fresh [illegible] accompany articles of this [illegible] worth and virtues, and will be given to any one who may wish [illegible]

I have [illegible] diseases of the Lungs, Consumption, Spitting of Blood, Coughs or Influenza, that I have [illegible] appointed agent for the sale of [illegible] celebrated and invaluable LILLY SYRUP, [illegible] the last year has affected more cures [illegible] used than any other medicine ever offered to the public. Those upon the brink of the grave have been called to health by its powerful effects, the weak have become strong, and the consumptive man has been cured of his pale cheek and haggard look and racking cough. Should the incredulous doubt, let them try it and if it fails to cure, you shall have it free of expense. I have in my possession recommendations from some of the most distinguished men of the age which I shall be glad to show at any time.

PARKER'S PULMONARY BALM.

One of the best medicines for common colds Influenzas &c. &c. &c., to be found in the whole catalogue of patent medicines. Give it a try, it is first rate, call and read one of his circulars.

S. D. DELLAY.

NEW GOODS,

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. N. ELMORE

IS now receiving his second supply of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, consisting of 50 Boxes, Bales, and Packages of Shelf Goods with the usual variety of heavy Goods, comprising the most extensive and desirable assortment ever offered in this village. The above stock will be sold at lower prices than are offered by any DELLAY between the Hudson and Mississippi.

Nov. 24.

WANTED.

500 Cords good Hemlock Tan Bark, in exchange for Leather, Boots, or Shoes, at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 14th, 1841.

BOOKS & STATIONERY.

THE subscriber has made arrangements by which he will be able to furnish Classical and Miscellaneous Books and Stationery, at very low prices. The following among others may now be found on his list:—

W[illegible]'s Dictionary, large,
[illegible]
Davies' B[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Lessons,
[illegible]
C[illegible]'s Chemistry,
P[illegible] Philosophy,
Brown's Grammar,
A[illegible]
[illegible]
F[illegible]
C[illegible]'s Geography,
P[illegible]
C[illegible]
G[illegible]

Novum Græcum Testamentum,
C[illegible] and Phrases,
[illegible] Reader,
Greek Lessons,
[illegible]'s Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto [illegible]
Medium Drawing Paper,
[illegible]
[illegible]
Drawing Pencils,
[illegible] Plain and Fancy Letter Paper,
[illegible] and Ruled Foolscap, &c. &c. &c.

JAMES BAILEY [illegible] Office.

De Ruyter, [illegible] 1841.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with [illegible] establishment, is now ready [illegible] Binding in a neat and durable [illegible] terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June [illegible], 1841.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store, together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS of every variety, in a neat and superior style. [illegible] June 23, 1841.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible] H. S. Bailey
[illegible] Maxson Greene, Samuel [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] S. Stevens, P. M.
[illegible] Bowens, Stan Bailey, Adin [illegible]
[illegible] Dr. Wm. M. Tra[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Potter
[illegible] P. M.
[illegible] Maxson
[illegible] Samuel E. Lan[illegible]
[illegible] H. Wilson, P. M.
[illegible]
[illegible] P. M., Still[illegible]
[illegible] H. S. Crandall.
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Charles Lewis
[illegible] Crandall
[illegible]
[illegible] Weeden
[illegible] P. Burdick.
[illegible] Potter, James Hubbard,
[illegible]
[illegible] West
[illegible] W. M. Beauchamp.
[illegible]
[illegible] Stillman.
[illegible]
[illegible] K. Greene

RHODE-ISLAND.

[illegible] Maxson Rev. Alexander [illegible]

CONNECTICUT.

[illegible] Wm Maxson.
[illegible]

NEW-JERSEY.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

PENNSYLVANIA.

[illegible] Brown, Lewis Putnam.
[illegible]
[illegible] W. H. [illegible], P. M.

VIRGINIA.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] F. Randolph.
[illegible] P. M.
[illegible]

OHIO.

[illegible] Crandall.
[illegible] Clarke
[illegible] Babcock.
[illegible] A. Davis
[illegible]

MICHIGAN.

[illegible]
[illegible] P. M.

WISKONSAN.

[illegible] Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing ot continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

L. T. Rogers

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 50.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. [WHOLE NO. 102.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1842. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Gleanings from Letters from Palmyra.

NUMBER I.

BY MARY.

Selections from a letter written by Piso, a Roman Nobleman, relating his first interview with the christian Probus, on board a vessel bound for Palmyra.

Toward me there moved one whom I hardly know how to describe, and yet feel that I must. You will here doubtless exclaim, 'Why obliged to describe? Why say so much of accidental companions?'—But you will answer yourself, I feel persuaded, my Curtius, by supposing that I should not particularly notice a mere companion of the voyage, unless he had connected himself in some manner with my fortunes. As I was saying, then, when that group dispersed, one of its number moved towards me, and seated himself at my side. He was evidently a Roman and a citizen. His features were of no other nation. But with all the dignity that characterized him as a Roman, there were mixed a sweetness and a mildness, such as I do not remember to have seen in another. And in the eye there was a melancholy and a deepness, if I may so say, more remarkable still. It was the eye of one all sorrow, all love, and all purity; in whom the soul had undisputed sway over the passions and senses. My first impulse was to address him, but his pallid and thoughtful countenance, together with that eye, restrained me, and I know not how I should have overcome this strange diffidence, had not the difficulty been removed by the intervention of a third party.

Speaking of the christians, Piso remarks, that the hatred and persecutions to which they had been exposed, had made him more than indifferent to their merits. Probus replies, I trust the time will come when our cause will be examined on the ground of its merits. Why may we not believe that it has now come? The Roman world is at peace. A strong and generous prince (Aurelian) is upon the throne. Mild and just laws restrain the furious bigotry of an ignorant and sanguinary priesthood. Men of intelligence and virtue adorn our profession from whom those who are anxious to know the truth can have it; and copies of our sacred books, both in Greek and Latin, abound, whence may be easily learned the principles of our faith, and the light of whose holy pages would instantly dispel the darkness by which the minds of many, even of the virtuous and well disposed, are oppressed. We have nothing to dread but the deadness and indifference of the public mind. It is not credible that polytheism should stand a day upon any fair comparison of it with the religion of Christ. You, yourself, are not a believer (pardon my boldness) in the ineffable stupidities of the common religion. To suppose you were—I see by the expression of your countenance—would be the unpardonable offense. I sincerely believe nothing more is wanting to change you, and every intelligent Roman, from professed supporters of the common religion, (but real infidels,) into warm believers and advocates of the doctrine of Christ—but simply this—to read his sayings, and the delineation of his character, as they have been written down by some of his followers. You are, I see, incredulous, but not more so than I was myself a year ago; yet you behold me a christian. I had to contend against, perhaps, far more adverse influences than would oppose you. You start with surprise that I should give evidence that I know you; but I have many a time seen you at the shop of Publius, and have heard you in your addresses to the people.

I am the son of a priest of the Temple of Jupiter—of a man, who, to a mildness and gentleness of soul that would do honor to the christian, added a faith in the religion of his fathers, deep-struck and firm-rooted as the rocks of ocean. I was his assistant in the duties of his office. My childish faith was all he could wish it; I reverenced a religion which had nurtured virtues like his. In process of time, I became myself a father. Four children more beautiful than ever visited the dreams of Phidias, made my dwelling a portion of Elysium, as I then thought. Their mother,——but why should I speak of her? It is enough to say, she was a Roman mother. At home, it was my supreme happiness to sport with my little ones, or initiate them into the elements of useful knowledge. And often, when at the temple preparing for days of ceremony, my children were with me; and my labors were nothing, cheered by the music of their feet running upon the marble pavements, and of their merry voices echoing among the columns and arches of the vast interior. O days thrice happy! They were too happy to last. Within the space of one year—one cruel year—those four living idols were ravished from my arms by a prevailing disease. My wife, broken hearted, soon followed them, and I was left alone. I need not describe my grief: I will only say, that with bitter imprecations I cursed the gods. 'Who are ye,' I cried, 'who sit above in your secure seats,' and make your sport of human wo? Ye are less than men. Man though I am, I would not inflict upon the meanest slave the misery ye have poured on my defenceless head. Where are your mercies? I was frantic. How long this lasted I cannot tell, for I took no note of time. I was awakened, may I not say saved, by a kind neighbor I had long known to be a christian. He was a witness of my sufferings, and with deep compassion ministered to my necessities. 'Probus,' said he, 'I know your sorrows and I know your wants. I have perceived that neither your own thoughts, nor all the philosophy of your venerable father, have brought you peace. It is not surprising: ye are but men, and ye have but the power and the wisdom of men. It is aid from the Divinity that you want. I will not discourse with you; but I leave with you this book, which I simply ask you to read. I read it—and read it—again and again; and I am a christian. As the christian grew up within me, my pains were soothed, and days, once days of tears and unavailing complaints, are now days of calm and cheerful duty. I am a new man.'

I cannot describe to you, my Curtius, the effect of this little narrative upon myself, or upon those who, as he spoke, had gathered around, especially those hard-featured soldiers. Tears flowed down their weather-beaten faces, and one of them—Macer, as I afterwards heard—cried out: 'Where now are the gods of Rome?' Probus started from his seat, apparently for the first time conscious of any other listener besides myself, and joined the master of the vessel at the helm. I resigned myself to meditation and that night fell asleep, thinking of the christian and his book.

Religious Department.

From the Christian Watchman.

THE CHRISTIAN'S OBLIGATIONS.

This is a theme on which it is both profitable and delightful to dwell. The obligations of a Christian to love and to serve his divine Redeemer! How strong! How affecting! How melting and subduing!—Think of them, Christian, and let thy heart be drawn more closely to thy Savior!

It is better for the disciple to think of his obligations, than of his responsibilities.—Thoughts of the latter may discourage, may crush him. He may not be able to measure their extent. The word itself is liable to misapprehension. It presents the Savior as the task-master of his people, exacting of them a certain amount of love, and of service, or the bringing about of a certain result, on pain of severe punishment. This is not the attitude in which our condescending High Priest delights to present himself to us. He does not urge us to duty by appealing to our fears, but to love. The wicked are solemnly warned, that "every transgression and disobedience will receive a just recompense," when Jesus Christ "shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that knew not God, and obey not the Gospel, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power;" but his people are encouraged by the promises of grace, and are exhorted to "rejoice evermore," because "the joy of the Lord is their strength."

Who has not been filled with admiration at the beautiful and touching appeal of our Savior to Simon the Pharisee, when the weeping penitent washed his feet with her tears. "Simon, I have somewhat to say to thee: There was a certain creditor which had two debtors; the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore which of them will love him most? Simon answered and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged." Reader, dost thou love in proportion to the amount which has been forgiven thee? Canst thou measure the height, or sound the depth, or survey the extent of thy obligations to love and to serve thy Lord and Master?

The obligation is laid upon us to forgive because we have been forgiven, to give freely, because we have freely received.—The apostles, so deeply versed in the science of human nature, as well as in divine knowledge, holiness of heart, and tenderness of spirit, preferred to melt and to allure, by exhibiting the moving obligations of the redeemed of Christ. Do they exhort to patience under wrong; they present Christ, "who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." Do they exhort to liberality? It is by reminding us of "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Do they inculcate lowliness of mind? Oh what a subduing argument they use; "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

What Christian is not profited by thus surveying his obligations to his Savior?—"How much owest thou thy Lord?" Do you ask for the extent of your obligations? Measure the length of eternity, fathom the depth of redeeming love, compute the sorrows of a suffering Jesus, sum up the eternal agonies of a lost spirit, "weeping, and wailing, and gnashing" forever, "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Nevertheless, Christ did speak of one who "had done what she could."—Blessed woman! What a priceless inheritance is such an eulogium! She had but one box of ointment, very costly, and her quick heart resolved that it should be spent upon her Lord. That act has immortalized her earthly name, and it shall be more to her than crowns and diadems in the world of glory.

"She hath done what she could," the highest eulogium ever bestowed by the Savior on a mortal. She had wrought no miracle, she had not suffered martyrdom, she had not disputed, nor stirred up a tumult, she had not converted a single soul, yet "she hath done what she could." She had met her obligations, she had discharged her responsibilities, henceforth wherever Christ's name is known, "this deed that she hath done shall be told as a memorial of her."

Reader, what will there be told of thee? That thou hast given great sums of money, that thou hast exhorted, and prayed, and preached the gospel; that thou hast converted souls, that thou hast "in Christ's name cast out devils, and done many wonderful works," or that you have done "what you could?"

PRACTICAL EFFECTS OF PERFECTIONISM.

Having completed his argument against this Heresy, Dr. Snodgrass in his work on the subject remarks:

It is strongly objected, by the advocates of Perfection, to the view presented in this discussion, that its practical tendencies cannot be otherwise than injurious—that it must have the effect of lowering the standard of piety, of cutting the nerves of exertion, and of producing a dwarfish and doubtful state of religion in the church, instead of those high and bright illustrations of the power of godliness, which all should desire to see. And, if the ground taken in this objection were tenable—if it could be shewn either from facts in the case, or by other sufficient reasons, that the doctrine here maintained, is less favorable to holy living, than the principles of those who oppose it—we should feel bound to surrender our position, and acknowledge our mistake. This test, by which we desire every article of our faith to be tried, is that furnished by our Savior, when he says, "by their fruits shall ye know them." This is the language of reason, as well as of revelation; and, by its requirements, let every doctrine either stand or fall.

What, then, are the facts, as to the practical effect of the doctrine, maintained in the foregoing discussion?

I reply—to go no farther back—that, beyond dispute, nearly all the active piety that has glorified God and blessed the world, since the dawn of the Reformation, has been the piety of those by whom this doctrine has been held. It was held by Luther and Melancthon—the latter of whom, with the approbation of the former, drew up a formal protest against the views of those who maintain, "that a sinless perfection in this life, is attainable." It has been the doctrine, too, of such men as Owen, and Baxter, and Whitfield, and Brainerd, and Edwards, and Payson, and a thousand others among the living and the dead, whom the bare suggestion will recall to the recollection of every reader. And who were these, but men "of whom the world was not worthy"?—men, who, by their holy lives and abundant labors, have left an impress upon the church and the world, which will never be effaced?—men, whose names and virtues will go down to the latest posterity, as affording the brightest illustrations of the power of Divine grace, which have ever been furnished? It may serve a purpose, to say, of such men, that they were unacquainted with the true secret of attaining to eminent holiness—that because they despaired of perfection in this life, they were justly chargeable with making "void the law of God," by their "traditions"—that they were "slumbering in Antinomian death, or struggling in legal bondage"—but the intelligent Christian will not be likely to follow this new light, in preference to the light of their illustrious example. Their record is not only on high, but in the affections of the pious on the earth. And their memory, while time shall last, will be "a savor of life unto life."

But, while the holiest and most efficient men whom the world have ever seen, have been unbelievers in the doctrine of perfection, what has been the fact where this doctrine has prevailed? That many eminent christians have held the doctrine of a modified perfection, is indeed true; and I refer, in this remark, especially, to the "Christian Perfection" of Wesley, and others, who have entertained the same views. His perfection, as he himself defines it, "is consistent with infirmities,"—with "ignorance," and "mistakes,"—with "thinking wrong" and "doing wrong." In reality, therefore, it is not perfection, in the sense of entire conformity to the law of God; but something else, to which the word perfection is wrongly applied. Into its practical effects, therefore, we stop not to inquire—although it would be easy to show, that, modified and guarded as it is, it has not been unproductive of evil. But, in regard to perfection, or entire sanctification, as implying sinless obedience to the moral law in this life, we have no hesitation in affirming, that, wherever it has had "free course," its moral effects have been bad. It prevailed extensively, in connection with the rise and early progress of Pelagianism, in the fourth century:—It appeared among the first forms of fanaticism, which shewed themselves after the commencement of the Reformation:—It had no little currency in England, during the seventeenth century:—More recently, we have not been without examples of its existence and prevalence, in our own country, at different times, and in different places.—And, wherever it has gone, it has carried with it a blighting influence, upon every thing which is "lovely" and "of good report." It has led, as might naturally be expected, to the neglect of all prayer, whether private, social, or public; for what has the individual to pray for who is already perfect? It has led to an abandonment of the means of grace, in general—to a partial or total neglect of the Sabbath—and to great indifference towards benevolent enterprises of every kind:—it has engendered a censorious and denunciatory spirit, and been accompanied by contempt for the rules and discipline of the church. In short, it is the language of all history, and the testimony of all observation, that, where Perfectionism prevails, neither the substance nor the form of religion can long be expected to dwell.

In saying this, I am not ignorant of the attempt which is made, to distinguish, between the Perfectionism which has produced these effects, and the doctrine of entire sanctification, as advocated by some in our country, who are now living. It is strenuously maintained that the two things are not only different from each other, but in direct opposition—having nothing in common. But this is made out by using the word Perfectionism in a technical sense, and applying it gratuitously, to express all the abuses to which we have just referred. 'These errors and disorders,' they say, 'are Perfectionism; but our doctrine of entire sanctification is a different thing.' But how is it a different thing? In all that entitles it to be called Perfection, it is the same thing. It feeds the mind with the notion of entire freedom from sin, and this is at once the essence of the system, and the reason of its danger. Such an appeal to the self-esteem, and self-righteousness of our nature, never can be entertained without leading to disastrous results. Various circumstances may restrain or delay the development for a while; but, ere long, it will come with all the evils which follow in its train.

A FEEBLE DISCIPLE.

What made him so? It was not ill-health. That might make one feeble physically; but it could not make one feeble as a disciple. Some of the strongest disciples we have ever seen, were persons of poor health and frail bodies. We have seen those that excused their feeble piety by their feeble health, but we could not see anything but feebleness in such a presence. Chastisement of the body is wholesome discipline for the soul, and we have seen a soul get a new pair of wings with which to soar towards heaven, by that very chastisement which others made an excuse for having no wings at all.

Perhaps it was scoffs and reproaches that discouraged and enfeebled that disciple.—But this could not have been without his own concurrence. Scoffs are goads—sneers are spurs. They prick up the soul to lay hold on the everlasting resources of the divine friendship and love. There is nothing in them to enfeeble. They may break the skin a little, but they cannot reach the heart to draw the life-blood.—They are very excellent for keeping a disciple wide awake—showing him the nature and power of sin around him, by throwing him back on his Savior, to know what a blessed thing it is to be in the everlasting arms. If scoffs sink him, it can only be because he would rather sink than swim.

He has very much to do with the world; perhaps that makes him feeble. Not necessarily. David had a kingdom to care for. And Daniel was one of the chief rulers of an empire, and Joseph sat next to Pharaoh. But it did not make any of those men feeble disciples because they had so much to do with the world. Connection with the world, in the active lawful business of life, can make no one a feeble disciple without he gives way to its unholy influence. His coming much in contact with worldly men need not assimilate him to them. They cannot break his moral power unless he gives them a helping hand.

But perhaps he has taken the world into his heart, and that makes him a feeble disciple. Well this will do it. Certain things taken into the heart will do the same in relation to piety. Poisonous substances may be taken into the hands without injury. Keep them there and there is no harm.—Keep the world out of the heart, and it has no poisonous power. It can wither no disciple's strength. But if the heart is loaded with it, the feet will totter in Zion's ways. The disciple will be puny and feeble. He cannot run the Christian race. He cannot walk even. He may continue to drag himself along as a convict with his ball and chain. But there is great danger that his load will wholly crush him, and he be not saved even as by fire.

A feeble disciple! Would we could say of sinners that they were feeble. Not they. They are strong in wickedness—bold, vigorous, self-denying and energetic! See the power and zeal with which they run their race.

A feeble disciple! What! when he has such a mighty Savior to encourage and strengthen! [illegible] so mighty as these to send life and vigor through the soul—so much to allure or [illegible] him into zeal and earnestness!

Take care, disciple, that you do not find yourself so feeble as only to get in sight of the Heavenly City, your strength failing you before you can reach the gate, or by your having lingered so long you find it shut! Pastor.

Children's Department.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

DEATH OF THEODORE AUGUSTUS.

My Dear Children,—The year that has just been brought to a close, is one that has especially been distinguished for its mortality among the young. That dreadful scourge of God, the Scarlet Fever, has prostrated in the dust the hopes of many fond parents, and removed many who were just entering upon the threshold of life, to that world where there are none of those changing scenes that present themselves here below.

Some of these children—those who early gave their hearts to the Savior—have been taken to be forever with him. [illegible] their [illegible] the [illegible] his kingdom.

There was a little boy that fell a victim to this disease, of whom I wish to say a word or two. [illegible] Theodore Augustus. He was a [illegible] boy, at [illegible] that knew him. He was [illegible] when he was taken [illegible] connected [illegible] When he was [illegible] he was [illegible] repeating [illegible] verses of a hymn [illegible] time to [illegible] foolish stories that children [illegible].

[illegible] his [illegible] he was ill [illegible] death should [illegible] his little sister Anna. He [illegible] "he was not afraid to die." His mother asked him why he was not afraid to die. He replied that Jesus had said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," [illegible] good children, [illegible] with the Savior, go to heaven." His mother then asked him whether he would be willing to leave his dear father and mother, and brothers and sisters. He replied that he would, "and go to be with Jesus."

Now, children, what is it that made this little boy, who was naturally very timid and afraid to die, thus willing to die, and leave his dear parents, [illegible] he could not bear to have his mother out of his sight,) and brothers and sisters? This little boy knew but little of the [illegible] of life, and yet, when every earthly prospect appeared so fair to him, he was willing to leave all and to go to be with Christ. The reason is, because he had been taught by faith to see that Jesus is a far more valuable friend than any that is earthly, that father and mother, and brothers and sisters, may be cheerfully forsaken to be with Christ. And the judgment of this little boy was a judgment according to truth.—How little can your brothers and sisters—how little can your parents do for you, children, when death approaches! They can wipe away the cold sweat of death, but they cannot prevent the shiver of horror in that hour from passing over your frame.—They cannot quiet the internal pangs of conscience, as she thinks of appearing before God, to give in an account of things done in the body. But what cannot Jesus do in an hour like that? He can administer relief to the pains of the body.—He can soothe the anguish of the spirit, by quieting its every apprehension, and by causing the visions of glory to burst upon its view in that hour when all beneath the sun is fading from the eye! Jesus, too, can go down with you into the cold, dark grave. If you have not Jesus to go with you, you must go down into the grave alone. Some of you, children, may be afraid to go into the dark alone. Are you willing, then, to go into the cold dark grave alone? If then you would not die alone—if you would not die unblessed—if you would not [illegible] and be lost forever, then begin [illegible] by giving your hearts to the Savior. Oh! how gracious is that revelation of the Savior, in the Scriptures, as the good shepherd, who "bears the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom." The bosom—the place nearest to his heart—is that which is reserved for the [illegible] who love Him. And then, those almighty arms will bear you up, when you would otherwise sink into the jaws of the second death.

WASHINGTON AS A SON.—As a son, he was filial in his whole deportment, and obedient. This is apparent in one instance, which is too nearly connected with the welfare of the country, to be omitted as a subject of record in its history. When he was fourteen years of age, some of his friends procured him a midshipman's warrant in the British navy. The life opened to him in this appointment suited his bold and enterprising spirit. He viewed the [illegible] prospect with the fervid anticipations of youthful spirit and ardent temperament. The appointment was accepted, and his baggage actually placed on board a ship of war then lying in the Potomac. Yet his mother interposed her dissent, and he submitted. Thus was he saved by maternal influence, as he was prepared by a widowed mother's judicious directions in early life, for a nobler service, which he rendered to two continents, and to the world.—Fam. Lit. Mag.

Ministers' Department.

THE UNFAITHFUL MINISTER.

Some rebels have been convicted of high treason. The [illegible] of their guilt admits of no doubt; that they deserve death [illegible]. The king, whose authority they had attempted to subvert, had been their [illegible] friend, and had loaded them with favors. Their treachery, therefore, had all the aggravation of the basest ingratitude. Their condemnation excites no surprise; it was expected by every body. The fatal morning arrives, and a crowd is assembled to witness their execution. [illegible] sentiment as to the [illegible], and no one [illegible] will be spared. The [illegible] to exercise his [illegible]. As an act of pure [illegible], he determines not only to [illegible], to offer [illegible]. A great while before [illegible] arranged to carry [illegible] purpose. The [illegible] prepared, [illegible] of the [illegible] instructed to proceed on [illegible] time, for [illegible] execution [illegible] the way. We would imagine [illegible]. At length he arrives, but is just too late: the [illegible] last struggle is over, [illegible] entered eternity! Let [illegible] cruel indolence, [illegible] would they say? The very men [illegible] righteous one, would [illegible] murderer. Suppose [illegible] his commission, and say, "I [illegible] a pardon; it is only the offer of one, and it was such an offer as would not have been accepted. It contains some very [illegible] rebels, in [illegible] were to make a full confession of their guilt; they were to go through the streets of the city, and to the gates of the palace, with ropes round their necks, acknowledging the justice of their original sentence, and asking the preservation of their lives to the royal clemency of him whose government they had attempted to subvert. I knew the men; I was perfectly assured that they would never submit to such terms as these, and therefore I thought it of little consequence whether I brought the document or not.—On the whole, I regret that I came too late; [illegible] earlier, the result would have been the same." Can we imagine that the crowd would have patience to listen to such a defense? or, having heard it, would think it satisfactory? A thousand voices would exclaim, "Wretch! murderer! tell us not what those men would not have been willing to do; you were sent to give them an opportunity of being willing to do it: and as they lost that opportunity through your negligence, they owe their death to you. Should he escape being torn in pieces on the spot, what account would he give to the king who sent him? Would he dare to insinuate that if the offer of mercy had been made in sincerity, it would have been expressed in different terms, and committed to a more trustworthy messenger?

"If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold we knew it; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man according to his works?" (Prov. xxiv. 11, 12.)—From "Decapolis."

The best friends are those that stimulate each other to do good.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, February 9, 1842.

"Evangelist" and the Sabbath.

The Editor of the Evangelist regrets that his argument for a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week is not satisfactory to us. We have long regretted that there existed a diversity of views on this subject among professed Christians, and that all would not allow the word of God to decide the question. Would the Evangelist have us forsake the plain language of scripture, and take in its stead a train of reasoning founded on a false hypothesis? This we must surely do if we yielded to his argument, because he has not adduced a single passage of scripture that intimates a change of the Sabbath; whereas, we offered several that prove conclusively that the Apostles and primitive christians observed the seventh day.

The Evangelist thinks that the remarks that we have made with "very good temper," has not diminished the force of his reasoning. We never had hope that our reasoning would convince him; but we did suppose the plain language of scripture might. And could the dark mists of traditional error, that had its origin in the dark ages of the church, be removed, the Sabbath of the commandment would again have its place with all the glory that it received from the fiat of Jehovah, and from the sanction of Jesus Christ. How insignificant all the glory that rests upon the first day, compared with the glory of the Sabbath of the commandment! The first blessing pronounced by God on any thing created, rested on the seventh day. O glorious thought! O blessed day! On thee thy Creator looked with delight, and gave thee his first and most enduring blessings. Midst all the glory of Sinai, God engraved his word on stone, that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. All time is present with God.—Eternity is as a day—the future and the past are present. God has never altered this decree, therefore the word of God, engraven with his own hand, speaks to all men to this time, the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.

The Evangelist thinks that our view of the Sabbath separates from it the peculiar glory of the christian dispensation, i. e. "that it severed from it those delightful associations which sprung from regarding it as the day of our Lord's resurrection." Are we to understand that the peculiar glory of the christian dispensation rests on the supposition that Christ rose on the first day? If so, its glory cannot exceed the faint glimmering of a taper. But if the glory of the first day rests on the rising of the Savior on that day, then we apprehend it has no glory at all. The strongest evidence we have that Christ arose on that day, is the assertion of men in modern days. We have looked in vain for such evidence in the New Testament. But if it is even so, we are at a loss to see how it can effect a change of the Sabbath. The Sabbatic law did not expire by limitation at that time, nor has it since.—Nor have we ever seen the abrogating act. If it has not expired by limitation, or been abrogated, it now remains, binding all men to keep the seventh day holy. It is a well-established fact that laws can become null in two ways only, viz., by limitation, or abrogation. Now, by which of these has the Sabbatic law become null? It was not limited to any time, therefore it has not expired by limitation. Has it been abrogated? If so, where is the act of abrogation recorded? If abrogated, the act must be as full, as extensive and broad as the act establishing it, and by the same authority. Again we ask, where is the abrogating act recorded? An echo answers, Where? Men, it is true, have substituted another day, but their substitution, we fear, will be like Saul's when he kept alive the king of the Amalekites, and the best of the sheep and oxen, which he was commanded to destroy.

Again, says the Evangelist, "We think that any one who will spend a Saturday in a seventh day community, will feel as if they had taken away our Lord, and will wonder where they have laid him." Does this mean that Seventh-day Baptists are anti-evangelical, and deny the atonement and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ? We have before been judged anti-evangelical, Judaizers, &c. It is a broad assertion. Christian charity would, we think, dictate better things. Such charges should never be made without the best of proof. That S. D. Baptists are Evangelical—that they do adopt and practice the doctrines of the gospel as taught by Jesus Christ, we are ever ready to show. If keeping the Sabbath of the commandment is anti-evangelical, then are we so. If we are anti-evangelical, then those who are evangelical surely ought to teach us the right way.

There are near 30,000 of us who conscientiously believe that we are doing the will of God in worshiping him on the seventh instead of the first day, and we assure our evangelical friends that if they will come to us with a "thus saith the Lord," we are ready to receive it at once. If they wish the conversion of souls, or the salvation of men from error, we say to them, "Come over and help us," if you think us wrong. The peculiarity of our views with respect to the Sabbath, subject us to many worldly disadvantages, and why, we ask, if we are in error, that is of both worldly and spiritual detriment to us, do not those who are evangelical come and set us right and relieve us from embarrassments? It is evangelical, it is brotherly, it is Christ-like to save a man from the error of his way.

If we might be allowed to make an application of the remark, that we have taken away the Lord, and laid him where the Evangelist knows not, we should judge that the Evangelist was in much the same dilemma as was Mary, when she went to the sepulchre and found not Jesus. She supposed that she should find the body of her Savior in the grave where men had laid him, but when she turned away from this she found him a glorious conqueror over death and the grave. The Evangelist thinks to find the Sabbath in the first day, but if he will turn his eyes where the light of truth may shine upon him, he will find that Jesus declares himself to be "Lord of the Sabbath day" that God himself appointed for all men.

Two Things That Need Proof.

1. That the dogmas of the Pope and the practice of the Romish Church, are more worthy of respect than the precepts and examples of Jesus Christ.

2. That the 'decalogue is abolished,' and that the last Sabbath of the commandment was kept by Jesus Christ in the grave.

Sabbath School Association.

On the 26th ultimo a County Sabbath School Association was formed at Morrisville. In this Association nearly all the denominations of christians are represented. The object of the Association is to promote the interests of Sabbath Schools in the County.

This department of christian enterprise is too lightly esteemed by many christians.—Christian parents are neglectful of their duty to the souls committed to their care if they neglect the means of bringing them under the influence of the gospel, by such direct and successful means as the Sabbath School presents. The fire-side instruction is preparatory to the instruction of the Sabbath School, where the truths of the gospel are brought to bear directly on the consciences by those who prepare themselves especially for the task. Here children are early taught to love the ways of piety and virtue. And before the world has gained their affections—before they have been decoyed into the deceitful snares of satan, and before they have become contaminated by unholy men, the principles of the gospel are implanted in their hearts, and they learn to love the holy, ennobling and divine truths that are found in the gospel alone. If the christian parent wishes to see his children walk in the truth, and if all christians wish to see the rising generation obedient to the faith of the gospel, they can in no way so easily and effectually bring it about as by placing them under the influence of Sabbath School instruction.

The County Association recommended the formation of Town Associations. What shall be done in this Town? And what will all our churches do in this matter?—A new impetus should be given to the cause. In this labor ALL can participate and be useful.

"Petition for the Sabbath."

We publish this week a petition which we think will answer the wishes of our brethren. If it should not meet the views of all, they can easily alter it in transcribing it for signatures. We hope there may be no delay in getting signatures, and in forwarding the petition to some of our representatives in Congress.

Temperance Lecture.

Gen. Riley, of Rochester, will lecture in this village on Thursday, the 10th inst., at half-past 1 o'clock, and half-past 6 P. M. Let all lay aside their ordinary business.

Colt Convicted.

Colt has been found guilty of the murder of Adams in New York. The Court was in session eight days. Counsel on both sides exerted themselves nobly, and the Jury on retiring stood 10 for a verdict of guilty, 2 opposed. After being out eight hours they returned with a verdict of guilty. Colt made a confession which was read by his counsel, in which he states the circumstances from first to last, and justifies himself as acting in self defense.—The confession was, doubtless, got up for the occasion.

The repeal of the Bankrupt Bill has been defeated in the Senate, by a vote of 23 to 22.

On account of the late freshet, our Eastern and Southern mails have failed to bring us the latest news.

Hon. Nathan Dixon, U. S. Senator from R. I., died at Washington, 29th ult., after an illness of six weeks.

For the Register.

Ordination.

By request of the S. D. B, Church of Christ in Piscataway, a council was called from the Shiloh Church, consisting of Elders Azor Estee & John Davis, Deacon Reuben Davis, Brethren Caleb Sheppard, Geo Tomlinson, & Isaac D. Titsworth, from the Salem Church, Elder David Clawson, Deacons John Robbins & Mark Moore, brethren Jeremy Davis & Alex C. Heritage, who sat in joint Council with the Brethren from the Piscataway Church, consisting of Elder W. B. Gillett, Deacons David W. F. Randolph & Randolph Dunn, —Brethren Asa Dunn & David Dunn, for the purpose of examining Br. Sherman S. Griswold, and setting him apart to the work of the Gospel Ministry by ordination. Council met at the S. D. B. Meeting house at Shiloh, January 23, 1842, at 10 o clock, A. M., whereupon Elder W. B. Gillett, was chosen Moderator, & Isaac D. Titsworth, sec. Prayer by the moderator, after which Br. Sherman S. Griswold, by request, proceeded to to give a relation of his Christian experience, his call to the Gospel Ministry, and his views respecting the doctrines of the Bible. The Council being satisfied respecting him, resolved to adjourn until 2 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of ordination. Met agreeable to adjournment, introductory prayer by Elder W. B. Gillett, ordination sermon by the same, from 1st Timothy iv 6 "If thou put the Brethren in remembrance of these things," &c. Consecrating prayer by Elder Estee. Charge by Elder David Clawson, the right hand of fellowship by Elder W. B Gillett—Benediction by the Candidate—there was a full house in attendance, and much interest felt on the occasion.

ISAAC D. TITSWORTH,
Sec. of Council.

Br. Griswold is a native of Connecticut, and is about 35 years of age. He was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church, but having embraced the Sabbath of the Bible while residing in Piscataway, he united with the S. D. B. Church of Christ in that place, some 18 months since. He was Licensed by the Piscataway Church soon after becoming a member. Last February he removed to Shiloh, and took charge of our Academy. Having received a call from the Executive board of the Missionary Society to act as their agent the ensuing season, he was set apart to the ministry as above stated. We consider Br. G. as possessing promising talents, and his labors in this section have given general satisfaction.

I. D. T.

For the Register.

Petition for the Sabbath.

MR. BAILEY—I send you a form of a Petition on "Sabbath Mails," in accordance with your suggestions last week. It is doubtless imperfect in many respects, having been drawn up by an unskilled hand. The main features of the language are sketched from a Petition in circulation by our first day friends. It is to be hoped that every friend of the Sabbath of the commandment will see that [illegible] are made to obtain signatures [illegible] Petitions, and have them forwarded [illegible] ber at Washington. Strenuous efforts are being made by our first day friends to secure a repeal of the law which requires postmasters to deliver letters, etc., on the first day of the week.

The Petition should be copied off in a fair hand, with the blanks filled out, and circulated in every church and society of our denomination. Who will attend to it?

SABBATOS.

For the Register.

SABBATH MAILS.

FORM OF A PETITION TO CONGRESS.

To the Hon. the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled

WHEREAS, it has come to the knowledge of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination that Petitions are in circulation praying your honorable body to repeal certain laws which will materially abridge the rights of some 25,000 or 30,000 citizens of these United States, and prove onerous to those holding offices under the laws of our Government; and whereas, the Constitution guaranties to us all those rights and privileges the abridgment of which is contemplated in the "Petitions" above referred to:

WE, therefore, the undersigned memorialists, citizens of the town of ————, county of ————, and state of ————, feeling a deep and growing interest in everything that is calculated to affect the prosperity of our beloved country, either in a pecuniary, political, or moral point of view; and believing that our responsibilities and duties did not cease when we elevated you to the responsible situations which you now occupy; we come to you, not only as fellow-citizens, equally interested and responsible with you, in the administration of government; but we come to you as constituents, to ask, not a favor, but for abstract and conditional justice; viz:

That, if the law is repealed requiring or sanctioning labor on the first day of the week, (or Sunday,) and particularly that part of Sec. 9, in an Act passed April, 1810, and re-enacted in March, 1825, making it the duty of postmasters at reasonable hours, on every day of the week, to keep open their offices, and deliver letters, etc. etc., your honorable body will also consider the great injustice inflicted upon a portion of citizens of these United States, among whom are your memorialists, by requiring those postmasters who Sabbatize in accordance with the commandment of the SEVENTH DAY of the week, to keep open their offices on God's HOLY DAY, while many of your memorialists, from their location, are abridged in their ordinary business transactions through the Post-Office Department on the first day of the week by the contemplated repeal of the law in question: and we devoutly pray your honorable body that all laws requiring or sanctioning postmasters in delivering letters, etc., on the HOLY SABBATH, [or SEVENTH DAY of the week,] may be repealed, that men may not be obliged by any National law to trample under foot with impunity the Divine law, and the express command of Almighty God to "REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY TO KEEP IT HOLY." We do not suppose that Congress can legislate the nation into an acceptable observance of the SABBATH, but Congress can, and WE believe should, forthwith repeal the law above referred to, and thereby remove the authority and sanction of our Government to this great National evil. The running of the mails, and the transacting of business in the post offices on the Sabbath, cannot be work either of "necessity" or "mercy." We do, therefore, ask with confidence, that all Governmental sanction to the sin of SABBATH-BREAKING may be speedily removed. The demoralizing tendency of the law complained of by your memorialists—its arbitrary character in opposition to the dictations of the Great Lawgiver and Governor of the Universe, are considerations which ought, and doubtless will, have due weight on your minds in any action which you may deem it advisable to take on this vitally important subject. As men, we ask for the speedy removal of the evil complained of. As patriots we ask it; as Christians, and as citizens, we ask it. It is due to the necessities of man—it is due to our country; and above all, it is due to the authority of that God who gave us being, and declares to us that "The SEVENTH DAY is the SABBATH of the Lord thy God."

We would further ask, that the subject may be referred to a special committee, that ample time may be had for full and deliberate investigation, and such report made thereon as we shall all be willing to abide by, as a nation and as individuals.

Dated, FEB. 1842.

Congressional News.

From the Journal of Commerce.
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Question of Privilege.
(Concluded from our last.)

Mr. Adams then proceeded in his defense, and quoted from a letter from a late Senator in Congress from Alabama, [Mr C. C. Clay,] which he contended contained the same charges in substance which was contained in the petition, and written in the same spirit. He was then proceeding to cite a letter written from Accomack, by Mr. Wise.

He was here called to order by Mr. W. C. Johnson. The Chair decided he could not say or quote any thing not relevant to the charge contained in the petition.

Mr. Adams asked if he could be allowed to quote a small extract from the Accomack letter.

The Speaker decided he could not.

From this decision Mr. Adams appealed.

The decision of the Chair was not sustained—ayes 76, noes 78.

Mr. Adams. I shall then have the pleasure of reading from the letter. The whole was full of very interesting matter, but he would not read the whole of it.

Mr. Rayner called the gentleman from Massachusetts to order, and demanded a decision of the Speaker, and his point was that the gentleman had no right to discuss the question of slavery or non-slavery; to disgrace himself, and in so doing, to disgrace the House.

The Speaker decided that although the gentleman was out of order, he thought from the decision of the House, he could not call him to his seat.

Mr. Rayner appealed from that decision.

Mr. Wise asked to be excused from voting. Granted.

The question on the appeal was progressing by yeas and nays, when the Speaker said he had not overruled the question of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The call was then continued, and the decision of the Chair was not sustained, yeas 87, nays 89.

The motion was then made that the House adjourn, which was carried, ayes 86, nays 57.

Jan. 25.—The Journal of Saturday having been read and corrected,

Mr. Adams said he presumed he might now proceed.

Mr. L. W. Andrews asked if the gentleman could be allowed to go on without the consent of the House, after the vote taken on Saturday.

The Speaker decided that the gentleman could not proceed without the consent of the House.

Mr. Fillmore asked for leave to present several bills from the Committee on Ways and Means, which he had desired for some time to lay before the House, that they might be printed.

Mr. Wise said he should object until the question before the House was fully settled.

Mr. Wise then moved that the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed to proceed in his defense.

Mr. L. W. Andrews and Mr. Hopkins both asked for the yeas, which were ordered, and was decided as follows: yeas 76, nays 91.

Mr. Adams. Am I now to understand that I am not allowed to proceed in my defense.

Mr. Speaker. Such is the decision of the House.

Mr. Adams. Then I presume that I can now move to refer the petition.

Mr Wise said he rose to a question of privilege, and demanded to be heard in his defense from the attacks made on him by the gentleman from Massachusetts, with the permission of the House.

Several gentlemen said there was no question of privilege.

Mr. Botts moved to lay Mr. Wise's question of privilege on the table.

Mr Proffit asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and decided as follows: yeas [illegible], nays 78.

Mr. Adams then moved the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with instructions to choose another chairman, if they think proper, and expressed his desire to debate the instructions.

The subject consequently lies over under the Rules.

Mr. Adams then proceeded to present numerous petitions [illegible] principally [illegible] the [illegible] Rule.

[illegible]

Mr. Brown, of Tenn., moved a call of the House, which was ordered, and [illegible] answered to their names.

Mr. Turney moved that the House adjourn—

Which was agreed to at half past 2 o'clock.

Dissolution of the Union—Proposition to Censure Mr. Adams—Meeting of the Southern Members.

Jan. 25.—This has been a day of unusual interest in the House. The venerable ex-President Adams has been arraigned before the House as a traitor, and he is put on his defense against the charge, and allowed to state his reasons why he should not be expelled or censured. The proceedings have all the formality and gravity of a trial. The affair is destined to make much noise throughout the land. If the whole procedure fails of any result, Mr. Adams may well sneer at the House, and the members from the slave-holding States. If the resolutions of censure pass, and it is declared that he is a traitor and ought to be expelled, but, through an act of grace, is let off with a severe censure, then he is a martyr to the anti-slavery cause—and he and his cause will have more than ever of public notoriety and sympathy. He appears to be pleased with his position; and faces his opponents without intimidation, and with an ingenuity and force of argument, which shows that his madness is methodical.

The Southern and a portion of the Western members held a meeting, and the result was their agreement to sustain the proposition which Mr. Marshall introduced to-day.

Mr. Marshall, of Ky., said he had resolutions, which, with a short preamble, he wished to offer as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, and begged leave to read them, that the gentleman might adopt them or the House consider them if they thought proper.

The preamble and resolutions were read as follows:—

Whereas, The Federal Constitution is a permanent form of Government, and of perpetual obligations, until altered or modified in the modes pointed out by that instrument, and the members of this House, deriving their political characters and powers from the same, are sworn to support it, and the dissolution of the Union necessarily implies the destruction of that instrument, the overthrow of the American Republic, and the extinction of our national existence. A proposition therefore, to the Representatives of the people to dissolve the organic law framed by their constituents, and to support which they are commanded by those constituents to be sworn, before they can enter upon the execution of the political powers created by it, and entrusted to them, is a high breach of privilege, a contempt offered to this House, a direct proposition to the Legislature and each member of it to commit perjury, and involves, necessarily, in its execution and its consequences, the destruction of our country and the crime of high treason.

Resolved, therefore, That the Hon John Q. Adams, a Member from Massachusetts, in presenting, for the consideration of the House of Representatives of the United States, a petition praying for the dissolution of the Union, has offered the deepest indignity to the House of which he is a member, an insult to the people of the United States, of which that House is the Legislative organ, and will, if this outrage be permitted to pass unrebuked and unpunished, disgrace his country, through their Representatives, in the eyes of the whole world.

Resolved, further, That the aforesaid [illegible] Adams, for [illegible] first of [illegible] the Government, [illegible] he has permitted [illegible] at [illegible] his country [illegible] well be [illegible] the National [illegible] it an act of grace and mercy, when they only inflict [illegible] for contempt [illegible]

[illegible] He was [illegible] in regard to [illegible]

[illegible] the name he [illegible]

Mr. Adams [illegible] and remarked that [illegible] defense against [illegible] of the resolution [illegible] House was [illegible] He commented [illegible] and vehemence [illegible] He was charged [illegible] the crime [illegible] in the Constitution [illegible] to define it.—Mr. A. went on [illegible] of indignant eloquence [illegible] for the course [illegible] He called upon the clerk [illegible] paragraph of the Declaration of Independence. The following [illegible]

"[illegible] these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

"[illegible] right of the people," continued Mr. Adams, "to alter or abolish their government, or institute a new government.—Upon that fundamental principle of our institutions do I base my proposition. Mr. A. went on to state what would be his course of defense should the House make it necessary for him to defend himself against these resolutions. He would prove, he said, that there was a conspiracy on the part of one section of the country to destroy all the guaranties of the Constitution—to abolish the right of petition; the right of trial by jury; and the right of habeas corpus. They did not confine their views to the enjoyment of their own peculiar institutions, at home, unmolested; but went into the free States with their principles. He would show that in the controversy between Georgia and Maine, and between Virginia and New York, there was a deliberate attempt to force on the free States the support, maintenance, and perpetuation of slavery and the slave trade.—He would prove, too, that a project was on foot to smuggle this country into a row with Great Britain for the support of the foreign slave trade.

He did not approve of the prayer of the petitioners. He had ascertained that they were respectable and responsible men; and he would inform the House that many others, as well as they, would prefer a dissolution of the Union to a union upon unequal terms. His object in moving the reference of the petition, was to bring forward some reasons in opposition to their prayer. He wished to show that the time had not yet come when a dissolution was necessary in order to remedy their grievances.—He wished to point out other resources and remedies against those grievances.—The country knew his position in regard to the right of petition. He would sustain that position, and he doubted not that this House would be compelled to receive petitions from the non-slave-holding, as well as the slave-holding States. Until that object was effected, there were thousands of freemen who would never rest. Mr. A. mentioned in the course of his remarks, that even the gentleman from Kentucky had admitted to him that these petitions ought to be received.

Mr. A. further remarked that he could not believe the House would sustain the resolutions or even entertain them. But, if so, he hoped to have an opportunity to speak at length. It could not be that it intended to spring a question upon them immediately.

After some further discussion, the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.

This city was a good deal excited this morning from an occurrence which took place on Pennsylvania Avenue, in front of Gadsby's, between 11 and 12 o'clock. W. B. Campbell, Member of Congress from Tenn., made an attack upon Mr. Boardman, also a member, for some remarks made in the Hall of the House yesterday. But few blows were interchanged, and the parties were separated.—Balt. Amer.

New-York Legislature.

In Senate, Feb. 1.—Mr. Rhoades said a message was sent to this Senate from the Governor on the 26th ult., which, by a vote of the Senate was ordered to be returned to him. He now rose to inquire what had been done in obedience to that order of the Senate?

The President, in reply, said that there was a report in the hand-writing of the late Clerk, in the possession of the Chair, which would now be read by the Clerk.

The report was as follows:

"IN SENATE—Jan. 27, 1842.

"To the Senate:

"The Clerk has the honor to inform the Senate, that in obedience to the resolution of the Senate, passed last Wednesday, he waited upon his Excellency the Governor, and showed him a copy thereof, and tendered to him the message therein referred to, whereupon the Governor was pleased to say it was a paper which seemed to him to belong to the Senate, and he was not aware that he had any right to the custody thereof, and that he therefore declined to receive it.

"SAML. G. ANDREWS,
"Clerk."

Mr. Rhoades then offered the following preamble and resolution:—

"Whereas, Messages from the Governor to either branch of the Legislature are to be regarded as public documents, and entitled to a place on the public records of the State, and whereas, his Excellency, the Governor, did on the 26th day of January, 1842, transmit to the Senate his message in writing, in the words and figures following, to wit:

(Here reciting the second message of the Governor.)

And said message having been by order of the Senate returned to the Governor, and he having declined to receive it—Therefore

"Resolved, That for the purpose of preservation, and for the convenience of reference, the same be printed and bound with the Senate documents of the present session."

REGENT OF THE UNIVERSITY.

The Senate then proceeded in pursuance of the joint resolution of the two Houses, to nominate a candidate for the office of Regent of the University, in place of James King, deceased.

Gideon Hawley, Esq., was nominated by the following Senators:—

Messrs. Bartlit, Bockee, Clark, Corning, Denniston, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Hunter, Johnson, Paige, Root, Ruger, Scott, Sherwood, Strong, Varian, Varney—18.

William Duer, Esq., was nominated by the following Senators:

Messrs. Dickinson, Dixon, Franklin, Furman, Hard, Hawkins, Hunt, Nicholas, Platt, Rhoades, Works—11.

Whereupon, Gideon Hawley was declared duly nominated on the part of the Senate.

The Senate then repaired in a body to the Assembly Chamber, and upon its return the President announced that upon comparing nominations, they were found to agree in the name of Gideon Hawley, who was thereupon declared duly elected Regent of the University.

In Assembly.——Special Order.——The hour of 12 having arrived, the House proceeded to execute the order of the concurrent resolution, providing for the election of a Regent of the University in the place of James King, deceased.

Gideon Hawley was nominated by 79 members, and William Duer by 25 members.

Gideon Hawley was declared duly nominated on the pert of the Assembly.

The Senate met in the Assembly Chamber. On comparing the nominations of the two Houses, they were found to agree in the name of Gideon Hawley, who was accordingly declared by the President of the Senate, duly nominated.

In Assembly, Feb. 2.—The Speaker announced the appointment of the following, as the select committee appointed on the petitions for the removal of the Capitol—Messrs. Lawrence, Grout, Eels, C. Burnham, Scovill, Harpur, Tupper, and Brownson.

News of the Day.

Great Casting.—One of the immense Hydrostatic Cylinders, used for raising vessels by the 'Screw Dock Company,' was cast yesterday at the Novelty Works of Messrs. Stillman, & Co. The Cylinder was twenty feet long, its bore 13 inches, thickness of shell 9 inches; iron required, 22 tons—being by far the largest casting ever made in this country. The iron was melted by three cupola furnaces; commenced blowing 10 o'clock, 6 minutes; iron began to run, 10. 50; opened runners at 3. 12; opened sluices for waste metal at 3. 16; time employed for preparing the mould about four weeks. The predecessor of this noble cylinder was cast in England and proved defective; and the Company determined to give their own country a chance. It is believed that a better casting than this has never been made. A large number of citizens were present to see it done.—N. Y. Tribune.

APPOINTMENTS UNDER THE GENERAL BANKRUPT LAW.

The following named persons are designated as Commissioners in cases of Bankruptcy, who will be appointed to act as such, in all cases arising in their respective Counties, unless special cause to the contrary be shown:—

Albany,	Robert J. Hilton.
Allegany,	Luther C. Peck.
Broome,	William Seymour.
Clinton,	J. D. Woodward.
Chenango,	Charles A. Thorp.
Cortland,	Moses B. Butterfield.
Cayuga,	Benjamin F. Hall.
Chemung,	Hiram Gray.
Cattaraugus,	Chauncey J. Fox.
Chautauque,	Francis H. Ruggles.
Delaware,	Levinus Munson.
Essex,	Henry H. Ross.
Erie,	Seth C. Hawley, and Samuel S. Kip.
Franklin,	Asa Haskell
Fulton,	John Frothingham.
Genesee,	George W. Lay.
Herkimer,	Augustus Beardsley.
Jefferson,	Joseph Mullin.
Lewis,	David N. Bennett.
Livingston,	Ogden M. Willey.
Monroe,	Wm. W. Mumford, and George E. King.
Montgomery,	Peter G. Webster.
Madison,	Duane Brown.
Niagara,	Isaac C. Colton.
Ontario,	Godfrey J. Grosvenor.
Oneida,	Edmund A. Wetmore.
Oswego,	Samuel B. Ludlow.
Otsego,	Wells S. Hammond.
Orleans,	Sidney Burrell.
Onondaga,	George Underwood.
Rensselaer,	George Gould
Schoharie,	Thomas Smith.
Schenectady,	Alexander C. Gibson.
Saratoga,	Judiah Elsworth.
St. Lawrence,	David M. Chapin.
Seneca,	Dexter C. Bloomer.
Steuben,	David Rumsey.
Tioga,	Ezra S. Sweet.
Tompkins,	Benjamin G. Ferris.
Washington,	Henry B. Northrup.
Warren,	Ira A. Paddock.
Wyoming,	James G. Hoyt.
Wayne,	John M. Holley.
Yates,	Henry Wells.

The following named persons are designated as Assignees in cases of Bankruptcy, who will be appointed to act as such in all cases arising in their respective Counties, unless special cause to the contrary be shown:—

Albany,	Amos Dean.
Allegany,	Laurens Hull.
Broome,	Franklin Whitney.
Clinton,	Amasa C. Moore.
Chenango,	Jonathan Wells.
Cortland,	Henry Stephens.
Cayuga,	Abijah Fitch.
Chemung,	Mordecai Ogden.
Cattaraugus,	Alonzo Hawley.
Chautauque,	William R. Morse.
Delaware,	Robert Parker.
Essex,	Richard Keese.
Erie,	Joseph Clary.
Franklin,	John S. Eldridge.
Fulton,	Donal McIntyre.
Genesee,	Wm. Mallery.
Herkimer,	Peter I. Overacker.
Jefferson,	Abner Baker, Jr.
Lewis,	Charles Dayan.
Livingston,	Calvin H. Bryan.
Monroe,	Elias Pond.
Montgomery,	Howland Fish.
Madison,	Joseph Bruce.
Niagara,	Washington Hunt.
Ontario,	Joseph Garlinghouse.
Oneida,	Henry White.
Oswego,	Thomas Beekman.
Otsego,	John Russell.
Orleans,	Lorenzo Burrows.
Onondaga,	Amos P. Granger.
Rensselear,	Francis N. Mann.
Schoharie,	Henry Hamilton.
Schenectady,	Samuel W. Jones.
Saratoga,	John Knickerbacker.
St. Lawrence,	Baron S. Doty.
Seneca,	Garret Sackett.
Steuben,	Henry Brother.
Tioga,	John M. Parker.
Tompkins,	Augustus Sherrill.
Washington,	David Russell.
Warren,	Wm. McDonald.
Wyoming,	Robert Earl.
Wayne,	Thomas Rogers, 2d.
Yates,	Geo. A. Shepperd.

The Assigneers are required to give bonds, with sureties, satisfactory to the Court, for the faithful execution of their duties, as follows: In the counties of Albany, Rensselaer, Monroe, and Erie, in the penalty of $8,000; and in the other counties in the penalty of $5,000.

The Girard Bank Broken!—The Girard Bank of Philadelphia, has suspended payment. This created a run and tumult. Its notes sold at 20 per cent. discount, and its stock at $5 a share. The public mind was much excited. A run was expected, upon the other Banks, and especially upon the Bank of Pennsylvania, which is the Fiscal Agent of the State.—Eve. Journal.

Incendiary Fires at Ithaca.—The Presbyterian Meeting House at Ithaca, was fired by an incendiary soon after midnight on Friday, but discovered in season to be saved. On the Tuesday following, a barn belonging to Mr J. B. Williams was consumed, with a loss of $1,400. This too was the work of an incendiary.—Alb. Eve. Jour.

Dr. Carey's Hand-Bill.—This distinguished ornament of the missionary cause, seemed fitted by nature to be the pioneer of the gospel in India. His burning love and zeal for the good of the perishing heathen, set on fire the pious minds it came in contact with, around him, and he was himself the man whom that love and zeal designated to go to India. Unconquerable perseverence was a distinguished feature of his character. And another was the power of turning every thing to good account in the prosecution of his work.

But to the hand-bill. He landed in India in 1793. Such was his poverty when he arrived, that he was obliged to gain a living by his personal labor; and for this purpose he offered his services by a hand-bill to the public, to make and repair shoes. Having been a journeyman shoemaker, he now availed himself of his trade to gain a support. From this humble condition, he rose to the distinguished honor of having occupied the chair of three professorships of Oriental languages, and of having translated and superintended the publication of the gospel in forty different tongues in the Eastern world.

It is an interesting fact, that when in the height of his honors as the most distinguished linguist and Oriental scholar in that part of the world, he took pleasure in nailing up the original hand-bill against the wall of his study, and expatiating on that grace of God that had raised him from so humble circumstances to the station he then occupied.—Boston Recorder.

A Chapter of Blood.—We learn from the Picayune of the 1st inst. the end of Willis Allston, who shot Gen. Reed of Florida. We have seldom read such a succession of events of blood as is connected with this history. Mr. Allaston of Tallahasse, challenged Gen. Reed. They fought, and the General shot him. Willis Allaston, brother of the deceased and the General had a rencontre subsequently, when the former shot tha latter. Allston then went to Texas. About the 10th of last month he met Dr. John McNeil Stewart in the woods near Brazoria. An altercation rose between them relative to a friend of Mr. Stewart; Allston drew his knife to stab him but Stewart perceiving his intention fired three shots at him with one of Colt's pistols. Allston though severely wounded, fired a rifle and a shot gun at his opponent, which instantly killed him. The citizens of Brazoria, arrested Allston, took him out and shot him. These incidents afford a terrible commentary on the life of a murderer, and the character of society in that quarter.

From the Detroit Daily Advertiser.

The Late Fire.—Loss of Missionary Clothing.—We were not, until recently, aware of the fact that a very large quantity of Missionary Clothing of every description, was destroyed by the recent fire. It appears that there were NINETY LARGE BOXES, filled with Clothing, dry goods and ordinary wearing apparrel, stored in one of the rooms of the Museum Building, on Griswold-street, their aggregate value could not have been less than $6000 or $7000. They belonged to the Presbyterian denomination, and were designed for the Missionary families in the Western States and Territories.

When the fire broke out, no apprehension was felt for their safety; and the gentleman who had charge of them, being busily engaged in aiding those who were in imminent danger, was not aware, until the fire had communicated to the building, that it would be necessary to remove them. It was then too late to save them all; but with a good deal of exertion, twenty-five boxes were extricated, and the residue entirely consumed.

The loss cannot be less than $4000 or $5000. We trust that the benevolent ladies by whose charity most of these useful articles had been produced, may be able to replace them before the close of the year.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

Court of Sessions.—Before the Recorder, Judges Lynch and Noah, and Alderman Timpson and Innes.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 28.

CASE OF CHARLES F. MITCHEL.—In consequence of a motion previously made by his counsel, pending the preparation of a bill of exceptions, Charles F. Mitchell was allowed to enter bail in $2,500, in good justifying security, for his appearance to answer, as from the complete prostration of his health by long confinement it was naturally apprehended he would die in prison, if much longer confined there. The necessary security had not been furnished at the adjournment of the Court for the term this day.

Important Decision of the Supreme Court.—The Washington Globe announces two decisions by the Supreme Court, uttered on Monday last, which may both be of considerable interest, as well to the people as to the legal profession. They are:

1. That the thirty-fourth section of the judiciary act of 1789, making "the laws of the several states" "the rules of decision in the courts of the U. States where they apply," only extends to the statutes and permanent local usages of a state, and not to the judicial decisions of the states upon questions of general commercial law.

2. That a pre-existing debt is such a consideration for the regular transfer of a negotiable instrument as enables a bona fide holder to enforce it, free from the exceptions to which it might be liable between the original parties to the instrument.

Fire at Chippewa, U. C.—Just as our paper was going to press, we received the subjoined particulars of a fire at Chippewa. It broke out about 12 o'clock last night in the Distillery of O. T. MACKLEM, Esq., and before it was arrested burned down the Distillery, together with the Steam Flouring and Saw Mills and Foundary, a Warehouse with 2 or 3 thousand bushels of grain principally wheat, a Barn filled with produce, four very valuable carriages and harnesses of different descriptions, and several lots of Flour, Whiskey and Potatoes, all belonging to Mr. MACKLEM. Total loss between 15 and $20,000.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

The Albany Evening Journal of Wednesday announces that three more declarations for libel have been served upon the proprietors of that paper by the council of J. Fenimore Cooper. This makes, if we mistake not, about ten suits which have been brought against the Evening Journal by Mr. Cooper. It is a poor business, in our judgment,—but let that pass. For every new suit that is brought, the Eve. Journal gives a fresh dose of what it calls "Cooperage," being a selection from the comments of different editors upon the course of Mr. Cooper. Several other papers besides the Evening Journal have received attention from his attorney.—Jour. Com.

Murder.—At Onondaga Hill, last Saturday evening, a stranger, by the name of Wheeler, stopped at a public house, where after drinking freely he became noisy, and was ordered away by the landlord. He refused to go, upon which a Mr. Simmons connected with the establishment, by direction of the landlord, seized him and led him out. When near the door Wheeler drew a knife, and stabbed Simmons to the heart, which caused his death almost immediately. Wheeler is arrested and in gaol.—N. Y. Bap. Reg.

Proceedings Against Gamblers.—The authorities at Richmond, Va., have commenced proceedings against the gambling establishments in that city which were induced by the discovery by a mercantile firm there, that a young man in their employ had made way with a considerable amount of money belonging to them. The firm, Messrs. Davenport & Allen, insisted upon knowing what he had done with it, when he told him he had lost it by gambling. To save a criminal prosecution against himself, he agreed to tell where the different gambling establishments were, and also to give a list of those who visited them, so that witnesses might be obtained. This was done, and we perceive by the Star, that the prosecutions are now in progress. And it is to be hoped that the keepers of the "hells" will be compelled to break up their establishment, where so many are led into ruin.—Phil. Ledger.

Notices.

DE RUYTER LYCEUM.

The next meeting of this Society will be next Monday evening, when the discussion of the question, "Ought Capital Punishment to be abolished?" will be resumed.

NOTICE

WHEREAS it has [illegible] the knowledge of the Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute that certain reports have been circulated, which are calculated to prejudice the minds of some of the [illegible] the character of the school, and [illegible] their confidence in the management of said Trustees, therefore,

Resolved, That the Trustees cordially invite the Stockholders to appoint, if they shall think proper, a competent unprejudiced committee, composed of members, located in different parts of the country, or in different communities of the Stockholders, to investigate the whole concerns and business transactions of the Board of Trustees of said Institution. And as the proper time for such meeting, we would suggest the Monday next preceding the annual meeting of the Stockholders in June next.

We would also suggest the propriety of appointing one or two in each society according to the amount of stock invested.

By order of the Board of Trustees
JOHN R. BUTTS, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, Jan. 2, 1842.

PROPOSALS

For publishing a History of the Seventh-Day Baptist Denomination.

It is intended to publish a full and complete History of the Seventh-day Baptists, from their origin to the present time, giving an account of their progress and operations, including short Biographical sketches of some of their most distinguished members, together with a history of their benevolent operations, and a brief manual of the doctrines of the gospel as held by them.

As full an account as practicable will be given of their origin and numbers in England.

The size of the work, price, time and manner of publication, will be determined when the facts are collected. It will be published on individual responsibility.

Such persons as [illegible] in their possession [illegible] respectfully requested [illegible] Clerk [illegible] names of Ministers [illegible] Revivals [illegible]

D. B. Register, De Ruyter, N. Y.

PROSPECTUS
OF
VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-day Baptist Register will be published weekly at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance, or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for a fair discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and lead men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

DIED.

[illegible]

LIST OF LETTERS.

[illegible]

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

[illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

UNITED STATES'
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.
CAPITAL,
ONE MILLION OF DOLLARS
Incorporated by the State of New York, March 21, 1837, [illegible]
CHARTER RENEWED AND [illegible] MAY [illegible] 1840.
FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE
SHARES $100 EACH.

10 per cent to be paid or secured on subscription.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully informed [illegible] charter of this company [illegible] books will be [illegible]

Subscriptions are authorized by the 10th Section of their charter, to be paid in or secured, to be paid either in stocks of the United States, or the public stocks created by the state of [illegible] in the stock of any incorporated [illegible] any other state, which shall be at par in the New York market at the time or in the stock of the corporation [illegible] of New York or in bond and mortgage or [illegible] of the value of fifty per cent. more than the amount loaned thereon, exclusive of buildings, unless the same shall be insured from loss by fire, or in specie, certified checks, or current bank bills.

Should the full amount of capital not be sub- [illegible] real estate [illegible] prices current [illegible] New York [illegible] permanently [illegible]

[illegible]
CORNELIUS MASTEN,
[illegible]
ELIAS GOODSPEED,
CALVIN K. AVERILL,
BENJAMIN BALCH.

[illegible] appointed in [illegible] BENJAMIN BALCH will receive prompt attention. 50tf.

AUCTION SALE.

WILL be sold at public auction at the house of [illegible] an acre of [illegible]
A. [illegible]
De Ruyter, Jan. 24, 1842. 49tf

WANTED.

A [illegible] to learn [illegible] JAMES M. [illegible]

H [illegible]

VALUABLE FARM FOR SALE.

T [illegible]

N [illegible]

M [illegible]

L [illegible] ELMORE [illegible]

LOOK HERE.

A [illegible] the first of January next.
G. W. SUTTON.

NO IMPOSITION.
NO STATES PRISON WORK!
THOSE [illegible] BOOTS and SHOES [illegible] MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 11, 1841.

"Lovers of Good Tea"
WILL find 20 per cent cheaper at S. D. PELLAY'S [illegible] Store.

JUST [illegible] Shoes, for sale [illegible]
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMERS' EXCHANGE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

FOR SALE.
A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap [illegible] lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre [illegible] in front.—Apply to Lester H. B [illegible] 34tf
De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

FOR SALE.
A FIRST rate Cutter. Terms of payment to suit the purchaser. Enquire at this office.
Jan. 18, 1842. 47tes

POETRY.

Dying Stiller's Confession.

I have sold all my whiskey, I've made a great gain,
I hundreds, and thousands, and millions, have slain,
Done more for my master than robber or thief,
Fill'd hell with sad victims and earth with deep grief.

I have sold all my whiskey, made drunkards by scores,
Brought famine, and misery, and death to your doors,
Caught millions of souls in my well contriv'd snare,
And now I am going their ruin to share.

I have sold all my whiskey, broke many a heart,
Caus'd weeping and woe, and unspeakable smart,
Fill'd houses with mourning, robb'd children of bread,
And the way to perdition, their fathers have led.

I have sold all my whiskey, sunk ships in the waves,
Drove steamboats to atoms, and men to their graves,
Wreck'd cars upon rail roads, set cities on fire,
Brought sword, plague, and cholera, with terrors most dire.

I have sold all my whiskey, and life's fleeting fast,
My crimes and misdoing, have found me at last,
I'm going to meet with the millions, I've slain.
I'm going to share their unspeakable pain.

I have sold all my whiskey, ye innkeepers come,
Take warning by me, and escape my sad doom;
Now cease to entangle mankind in your snare,
Before you sink down in eternal despair.

I have sold all my whiskey, ye drunkards attend,
Come hasten I charge you your doings amend;
For I tremble to meet you on that dreary shore,
Where the offers of mercy will greet us no more.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the South Western Christian Advocate.

THE VICTIM.

"Set not your affections on things below."—Paul.

Such was the advice of the bold and intrepid apostle of the Gentiles, while on that mission, the design of which was, "not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him;" and our obedience to it, and to that which he immediately added, "but on things above," is one of the primary ingredients of human happiness; and when we in practice reverse this divine admonition, by cleaving, with an affection bordering on forbidden idolatry, to sublunary things, we are sure to receive the reward, disappointment, and its handmaid, hypocondria. Man, in some respects, is astonishingly ignorant. It is perfectly coincident with the constitution of his nature, to throw around the objects of time and sense the dearest and most fastening affecections of his soul. It is natural for him to bow at the shrine of beauty and love, and lavish, with an enthusiasm savoring of superlative impiety, those warm and deathless effusions of his heart's ardent affections which Deity alone should receive, upon a flower which, however fair, is destined to waste its fragrance upon the chilling air of death.

In instances of this kind of censurable idolatry, it not unfrequently happens that stern duty loudly calls for a renunciation of love's wild yet pleasant dream, and that, too, in the authoritative language of eternal truth; and when he who receives such mandates, clothed with the sanctions of Divinity, refuses to comply, it is a plain and thankworthy proof of the mercy of the Most High towards us, when he removes the fair object of idolatry, and proclaims, by such an act, that him only should we serve.

William R———, the subject of this sketch, was the wretched victim of this too common idolatry. We cannot now give, in regular detail, the history of his early life; neither is it essential in this place. It is enough to say, he was the son of once wealthy parents, whose patrimony, though considerable in early life, had been greatly diminished by misfortune. He was gifted with a mindabove the ordinary caste, which, from his intense application at an early age, was enriched with a store of knowledge too triflingly estimated by many of youthful years and genius strong.

The law was chosen by him as a profession. Stimulated by ancestral pride, and from a consciousness of his want of wealth as an assistant in his way to future glory, he, while others slept, was seen, with a haggard cheek and pale brow, from which the fires of genius flashed, pouring over his books, with an intensity that started drops of perspiration from his marble forehead. Thus he fanned the flame of intellect, but consumed the principles of vitality.

Think not, though, that this was the only subject on which his lofty soul dwelt. No; he loved—too fondly loved. There was another altar, besides that of fame, at which he bowed and made offerings. Ellen P——was his wooed, his betrothed, his idolized one. Upon her he had bestowed the purest affections of a youthful heart. Hers were feelings of reciprocity. They lived, loved, and their faith was plighted; and they only waited the completion of his professional studies to crown all by a union.

* * * * * * * *

It was a calm evening in June. The moon was sweeping, in unstained loveliness, surrounded by her dazzling escort, across heaven's azure vault; herself the worshipped queen of night. It was one of those tranquil evenings in summer, when fond memory insensibly wanders back to scenes and days "that were," and we imagine the familiar forms of loved but lost friends, are floating around us, and we silently communing with their sweet spirits. All was calm, and nature seemed as if she was reposing from her daily toils, inhaling the fragrance of her flowers that breathed in low murmurs, like the soft sound of distant music. Alone, and evidently much agitated, by some anticipated future event, in the entrance of a vine-covered summer house, sat Ellen P.——. A haughty glance shot forth its lustre from beneath her long silken lashes, as she turned her head toward the gate, and exclaimed in an under, hurried tone, "He shall yield! I know my power, and he shall feel it. He loves me, and will not cannot refuse me. I'll break this reverie of sanctity he has fallen into, and our names shall yet break the spell of other lands, by the trumpetings of their greatness." Oh the ambition of woman, when it is deeply imbedded in her constitution and mind!

Ellen P——was the only child of a parent whose capital was immense; and she was surpassingly beautiful. She had been indulged in early life, and brought up under the influence of strong aristocratic prejudices. She had loved Wm. R——— from a child; and when he, in the dawn of manhood, "like some bird of heavenly plumage fair," fixed his eagle eye on fame's dread mountain top, and had become the courted and admired, she plighted her hand to him.

He had drank deep at the fount of science; he had drawn largely from the mines of classic lore; had followed philosophy in her proudest soarings. He "like some comet of tremendous size, to which the lesser stars did reverence," had flashed along the sky of fame, and dazzled wherever he had shone; but, convinced of the vanity of fame with her siren chantings, evanescence of sublunary things, he had fled like a stricken one to the all powerful asylum religion affords to earth's weary wanderers. This was revolting to the feelings of Ellen P——, who had been nurtured in the school of infidelity. But when she learned that Wm. R———, from a high sense of duty, designed taking holy orders, she resolved on the destruction of this his solemnly formed purpose. This was the night she had appointed to meet him, with the determination of attacking his Christian sentiments, and exerting herself in striving to extort from him a recantation of his laudable resolution, in reference to the gown. The gate which lead to the spot where Ellen was thus ruminating, opened, and the tall figure of him who was about sacrificing high and extraordinary prospects for the desk, emerged through the clustering vines that formed a natural arch over its white pillars.

* * * * * * * *

She spoke, with an affected tremor of voice, of his recent determination. He told her it was true. Her eyes flashed with an indignation that told him her opposition to his course. She poured forth, with vehemence her own and her father's disapprobation. She called up the prohibition of a parent, and eloquently plead the obligation of a child to obey. In vain did he urge the suspension of his everlasting weal upon his acquiescence with his duty. In vain did he point to the unhappy consequences of being recreant to his God. She pointed to fame with her wreaths and garlands, to wealth with its facilities to high life and pleasure, to love, her own pure virgin love, in its vestal burnings on affection's altar, and concluded by saying, "The attainment of this hand, William, depends upon your renunciation of all notions of holy orders; a father's command has gone forth. I love you; but this must separate us forever; it opens an impassable gulf. Speak, William, Oh speak the words that will make us happy!" Uttering these words with peculiar pathos, she gave vent to a flood of tears, woman's mightiest weapon. This was a moment of awful suspense with Wm. R———. He gazed upon the idol of his soul, as she stood weeping before him; he dwelt one moment on the prospect of seeing her another's—the thought was madness;—one moment more—his purpose was fixed; it was, to renounce all for that haughty woman. "Ellen, behold your power; I yield—for you I sacrifice right, duty, conscience, perchance heaven—all for you Ellen; and if that Power whose ways are righteous, and whose dealings with his disobedient creatures are marked with consummate justice, should pour forth his withering curses of retribution, remember, Ellen, they will fall, perhaps, too late for repentance." He spoke as if his words were the utterings of inspiration. "Be it all upon my head," exclaimed the daring girl; "for, believe me, William, you will find it all chimerical."

* * * * * * * *

The time was appointed for the solemnization of their nuptials, which, from circumstances, was thought necessary to be deferred for two months. During this interval, the cholera, that fearful scourge in the hands of an incensed Jehovah, came rushing like an avalanch through the West, slaying its hundreds. The consternation that was visible in the countenances of the panic struck citizens of———, as they passed along the streets, told too well, that its usually healthy interior had realized the horrors of the awful visitation.

Among the first of its victims, was the beautiful, the wealthy, and the proud Ellen P——. When she first felt its deadly sensation, she sent for her betrothed. He flew to her chamber; but, oh! the scene that was presented to his too fond vision! There, in pain, and writhing in horrible agony, with glaring eyes, and disheveled tresses of raven hair scattered in confusoin over her shoulders, lay the idol of his heart; she for whose love he had proved recreant to his God. How clearly then did he see his sin; a sin which had aroused the wrath of heaven's Monarch, who, in his holy indignation, seemed to be taking vengeance by the removal of the object that had caused it.

"Oh!" cried the raving girl, "it has fallen upon me too soon; ah! yes, as your words, which now howl like the wailings of the damned through my reeling brain, too truly said that night, too late for repentance." He clasped the hand of the dying girl, and, kneeling beside her couch, breathed a fervent prayer for forgiveness and pardon for her whose affrighted spirit was almost departing. Ellen became more composed, and he spoke to her of the compassion of the Savior; of his willingness to save to the uttermost all who put their trust in him.

"The very portals of heaven, mercy, compassion, all are closed against me forever, William; I have not only formed the rock on which my own bark has foundered, but I have striven to reek your destruction on that accursed rock; and now, after all—yes, all—to dare to lift an imploring look to heaven, is to—hold!—hold!—fiends!—torture!—save, oh God!—mercy!——" She uttered a piercing scream, and her system, which had been collapsed, by repeated spasms, resumed its natural position—her eyes closed, and Ellen P—— was a corpse.

William followed her to her grave. He wept not, for the fountain of tears seemed dried up. He smiled no more. And in two weeks he was placed beside the unfortunate and short lived Ellen P——, leaving an example to the world, that however fair and beautiful earth's loveliest plants are, they will sicken and die; and that we should "set our affections on things above."

THE INDIANS AND THE STEAMBOAT.

"If any thing ever did astonish the Indians, it was the steamer:—

"The poor and ignorant people, for the distance of 2,000 miles (up the Missouri river,) had never seen or heard of a steamboat, and in some places they seemed at a loss what to do, or how to act; they had no name for it—so it was, like every thing else (with them,) which is mysterious and unaccountable, called medicine (mystery) We had on board one twelve pound cannon and three or four eight pound swivels, which we were taking up to arm the Fur Company's Fort at the mouth of the Yellow Stone; and at the approach of every village they were all discharged several times in rapid succession, which threw the inhabitants into utter confusion and amazement—some of them threw their faces to the ground and cried to the Great Spirit—some shot their horses and dogs, and sacrificed them to appease the Great Spirit, whom they conceived was offended—some deserted their village, and ran to the tops of the bluffs some miles distant; and others, in some places, as the boat landed in front of their villages, came with great caution, and peeped over the bank of the river to see the fate of their chiefs, whose duty it was (from the nature of their office,) to approach us, whether friends or foes, and to go on board. Sometimes, in this flight, they were instantly thrown neck and heels over each other's heads and shoulders—men, women, and children, and dogs—sage, sachem, old and young—all in a mass, at the frightful discharge of the steam from the escape-pipe, which the captain of the boat let loose upon them for his own fun and amusement. There were many curious conjectures among their wise men, with regard to the nature and powers of the steamboat. Among the Mandans, some called it the 'big thunder canoe;' for, when in the distance below the village, they saw the lightning flash from its sides, and heard the thunder come from it; others called it the big medicine canoe with eyes; it was medicine (mystery,) because they could not understand it; and it must have eyes, for, said they, 'it sees its own way, and takes the deep water in the middle of the channel.' They had no idea of the boat being steered by the man at the wheel, and well might they have been astonished at its taking the deepest water.—G. Catlin.

THE TELESCOPE AND THE MICROSCOPE.—The following comparison of these two instruments is from the pen of Dr. Chalmers: "While the telescope enables us to see a system in every star, the microscope unfolds to us a world in every atom. The one instructs us that this mighty globe, with the whole burthen of its people and its countries, is but a grain of sand in the vast field of immensity—the other, that every atom may harbor the tribes and families of a busy population. The one shows us the insignificance of the world we inhabit—the other redeems it from all its insignificance, for it tells that in the leaves of every forest, in the flowers of every garden, in the waters of every rivulet, there are worlds teeming with life, and numberless as are the stars of the firmament. The one suggests to us, that above and beyond all that is visible to man, there may be regions of creation which sweep unmeasurably along, and carry the impress of the Almighty's hand to the remotest scenes of the universe—the other, that within and beneath all the minuteness which the aided eye of man has been able to explore, there may be a world of invisible beings; and that, could we draw aside the mysterious curtain which shrouds it from our senses, we might behold a theatre of as many wonders as astronomy can unfold, a universe within the compass of a point, so small as to elude the powers of the microscope, but where the Almighty Ruler of all things finds room for the exercise of his attributes, where he can raise another mechanism of worlds, and fill and animate them all, with the evidences of his glory."

BEDOUIN WOMEN.—It is a very remarkable fact that most savage nations have degraded woman from all equality in society. We recollect but one instance to the contrary and that occurred among the Teutonic ancestry of some of the nations of continental Europe. These are honoring their females, and Sir Walter Scott suggests, with some probability, that the institution of chivalry was founded on the remains of this respect for the weaker sex. Notwithstanding our acquaintance with the Mahomedan creed, which, it is allowed, denies that women have souls, we were not prepared for the statements of Mr. Stephens respecting the abject condition of the Arabian women. Indeed, the idle and voluptuous character of their religion would seem to say that females were not likely to have much drudgery imposed upon them, nor to feel the restraints of strict authority. But it seems their condition resembles that of the sex among the aborigines of our own American forrests, or if possible, it is still worse. H.

"In the tent of the Arabian patriarch, woman is the mere household drudge. In vain may one listen for her light footstep or expect to find her by the side of her natural lord, giving a richer charm to the hospitality he is extending to a stranger. When the stranger approaches, the woman retires, and so completely is she accostomed to this seclusion, that, however closely he may watch, he can never catch her even peeping at him from behind a screen or partition of the tent. Curiosity, which, in civilized life, is so universally imputed to the daughters of Eve, seems entirely unknown to the sex in this wild region. Nor is this the worst of her lot. Even when alone, the wife of the Bedouin is not regarded as his equal; the holy companionship of wedded life has between them no existance. Even when no guest is present, she never eats with him."—Incidents of Travel, &c., vol. II. p. 11.)

THE LEARNED BLACKSMITH.—In addition to other extensive arrangements for the coming year, the valuable assistance of Mr. BURRITT has been engaged as a constant contributor. We are promised some rare and interesting gleanings from the fertile and unreaped fields of German literature. The following is his curious and characteristic anouncement of his designs:—

"I now hasten to say that I shall hereafter be on the qui vive for all the interesting scraps in literature and religion, which I may weld together, and forge an article worthy of being filed for reception into the columns of the Evangelist. I flatter myself that there are neglected mines, from which I may smelt out a chain of interesting facts, if not "a string of orient pearls." And, although my engagement for a month to come may be something of a bar to my present efforts on your behalf, yet I shall in the mean time strike my gauging-rod here and there, and lay a train for such future contributions, as may square with your views. When I have blown out a few more lectures, I shall draw liberally upon my leisure, in order to compass the point of your proposition. I shall then hope to enter upon the work with a sharpened zeal, which shall give a new edge to the interest which I always feel in such pursuits. The scope which you have allowed me for my contributions will authorize me to subject the cinders of the dead to the heat of my animation, and to bestow a puff upon the dust of ages in order to kindle some latent scintillation which may sparkle in some corner of your paper.—N. Y. Evangelist.

THE LEARNED BLACKSMITH.—The following is said to be an extract from the common-place-book of the celebrated Elihu Burritt, the Worcester blacksmith:

Elihu Burritt in account current with Time.

WORCESTER, June 5th, 1838.

June 5—50 lines of Hebrew, 37 lines of Celtic, 6 hours of forging.
June 6—27 lines of Hebrew, 14 lines of Celtic, 6 hours of forging.
June 7—60 lines of Hebrew, 60 lines of Celtic, 54 pages of French, 20 names of stars, 5 hours of forging.
June 8—51 lines of Hebrew, 75 lines of Celtic, 40 pages of French, 15 names of stars, 8 hours of forging.
June 9—68 lines of Hebrew, 50 lines of Celtic, 40 pages of French, 3 hours studying Syriac, 9 hours of forging.
June 10—100 lines of Hebrew, 85 pages of French, 4 services at Church, Bible Class at noon.

He proceeds to state that he wrote and delivered a lecture on astronomy. Many days he was unwell, and yet worked hard, sometimes twelve hours a day at his forge.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DRUGS & MEDICINES.
De Ruyter, January 17, 1842.

"A COMPLETE assortment of superior quality, [illegible] to Physicians and families [illegible] lately BOUGHT by the STONE STORE [illegible] in New York at
S. D DELLAY'S

To Physicians he has the Pleasure of saying that his stock is now complete, and requests from them at least a call, assuring them that any and every article in their line shall be put up to them at least 20 per cent less than they can find the same articles at Norwich, Cazenovia, Hamilton or Syracuse.
Terms of sale, 6 months.

HAIR! HAIR!
BALDNESS.—Important Discovery—the Great Mystery found out at last.

DR. STERRY'S HAIR REGENERATOR.—Dr. Sterry, after much attention to the important subject of preserving the hair, has after many experiments chemical and physical, been able to discover an article which is now offered with the greatest confidence for the toilet, as the best thing ever discovered, its softening and penetrating quality, to produce a good head of hair—to prevent it from falling off when baldness is apprehended—to restore it when baldness has taken place, and to prevent it from turning gray. It is more nourishing than pomatum, antique oil, or Cologne water. It is a beautiful article for ladies' curls—it makes the hair soft and lively, and produces uncommon brilliancy. Thousands have tested its superior virtues and excellence, and in every instance it stands unrivalled. It is an infallible cure in all affections of the skin on the head—as dandruff, &c. &c. Every family should be supplied with a bottle of this oil, that by its application to the head and hair of children, the beautiful and ornamental appendage of a fine head of hair, which nature has supplied us may be preserved.

WORMS! WORMS!
DR. M. HITCHCOCK'S unrivalled and unequalled Worm Tea, a sovereign remedy for Worms. This invaluable medicine has been tested by the experience of [illegible] administered to more than 15,000 [illegible] ous ages, and not one solitary [illegible] one of the thousands of instances, where it has been used agreeable to the printed directions has [illegible] failed.
N. B. Ask for Dr. M. Hitchcock's Worm Tea, as there are many nostrums abroad for the destruction of worms.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC.
FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. [illegible]

MAGNETIC ODONTICA
THE TEETH! THE TEETH!
[illegible]

LOOK AT THIS.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?
70 000 DIE OF CONSUMPTION [illegible]
[illegible] Cough Drops [illegible]
Have you a cough? [illegible] bottle of the Cough Drops [illegible] may be too late. Price, 75 cents [illegible]

LOTION, LOTION.
DR. EVANS' BEAUTIFYING LOTION.
HIGHLY esteemed for [illegible] Coarseness, Redness, and Pimples [illegible] Face, Neck or Hands, [illegible]

SNUFF.
Only Twenty-five Cents.
[illegible]

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.
[illegible]

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.
[illegible] agent for this place.
S. D. DELLAY

TO FARMER'S FAMILIES,
AND TO ALL AFFECTED WITH DISEASE.
January 12, 1842.

I have this day been appointed sole agent in this place for the sale of Doct D. JAYNE'S Celebrated medicines consisting of JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, TONIC VERMIFUGE and SANATIVE PILLS.
All articles sold by me are direct from Doct Jayne, and warranted pure. Printed circulars will accompany articles of his, attesting their worth and virtues, and will be given to any one who may wish to become acquainted with them.
I have the pleasure to inform those afflicted with diseases of the lungs, Consumption, Spitting of Blood, Coughs or Influenza, that I have also been appointed agent for the sale of Joshua Fish's celebrated and unrivalled LILLY SYRUP, which for the last year has affected more cures for the amount used than any other medicine ever offered to the public. Those upon the brink of the grave have been called to health by its powerful effects, the weak have become strong, and the consumptive man has been cured of his pale cheek and haggard look and racking cough. Should the incredulous doubt, let them try it and if it fails to cure, you shall have it free of expense. I have in my possession recommendations from some of the most distinguished men of the age which I shall be glad to show at any time.

PARKER'S PULMONARY BALM.
One of the best medicines for common colds Influenzas &c. &c. &c., to be found in the whole catalogue of patent medicines. Give it a try, it is first rate, call and read one of his circulars.
S. D. DELLAY.

WANTED
500 [illegible]

BOOKS & STATIONERY.
[illegible]

BOOK-BINDING.
[illegible] JAMES BAILEY.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
J. M. LETTS.
[illegible]

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.
[illegible]
RHODE-ISLAND.
[illegible]
CONNECTICUT.
[illegible]
NEW-JERSEY.
[illegible]
PENNSYLVANIA.
[illegible]
VIRGINIA.
[illegible]
OHIO.
[illegible] Babcock.
[illegible] Lewis A. Davis
[illegible]
MICHIGAN.
[illegible] Church, P. M.
WISKONSAN.
[illegible] P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 51.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.—A. H. BURDICK, [illegible]

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1842.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Gleanings from Letters from Palmyra.

NUMBER II.

BY MARY.

The reasoning of Longinus upon the immortality of the soul.

We were speaking, said Julia, of life and of man—how unsatisfactory life is, and how imperfect and unfinished, as it were, man; and we agreed, I believe, in the opinion that there can be no true happiness without a certain assurance of immortality, and this we are without. I agree with you, said Longinus, in all you can have expressed concerning the unsatisfactoriness of life, regarded as a finite existence, and concerning the want of harmony there is between man and the other works of God if he is mortal; and in this also, that without the assurance of immortality there can, to the thinking mind, be no true felicity, I only wonder that on the last point there should exist in the mind of any one of you doubts so serious as to give you much disturbance. I cannot, indeed, feel so secure of a future and then unending existence, as I am sure that I live now. What I am now I know; concerning the future I can only believe, and belief can never possess the certainty of knowledge. Still, of a future life I entertain no doubts that distress me. My belief in it is as clear and strong as I can well conceive belief in things invisible and unexperienced to be. It is such as makes me happy in any thought or prospect of death. Without it, and life would appear to me like nothing more to be esteemed than a short and often troubled dream.

'So I confess it seems to me,' said Fausta. 'How should I bless the gods if upon my mind there could rest a conviction of immortality strong like yours! The very certainty with which you speak, seems through the power of sympathy, to have scattered some of my doubts. But, alas! they will soon return.' 'In what you have now said,' replied Longinus, 'and in the feelings you have expressed on this point do I find one of the strongest arguments for the immortality of the soul. You all earnestly desire an immortal life—you perpetually dwell upon the thought and long for it. Is it not so with all who reflect at all upon themselves? Are there any such, have there ever been any who have not been possessed by the same thoughts and desires, and who, having been greatly comforted and supported by them through life, have not at death relied upon them, and looked with some degree of confidence toward a coming forth again from death? Now I think it is far more reasonable to believe in another life, than in the delusiveness of these expectations. For I cannot suppose that this universal expectation will be disappointed, without believing in the wickedness, nay, the infinite malignity of the Supreme Ruler, which my whole nature utterly refuses to do. For what more cruel than to create this earnest and universal longing, and not gratify it? Does it not seem so?'

We all admitted it. 'This instinctive desire,' continued Longinus, 'I cannot but regard as being implanted by the Being who created us. It is an instinct, that is, a suggestion or inspiration of God. If it could be shown to be a consequence of education, we might refer it for its origin to ingenious philosophers. But it exists where the light of philosophy has never shone. It is then the very inspiration of Divinity and will not be disappointed. I trust much to these tendencies of our nature. This is our best ground of belief of a God. The arguments of the schools have never succeeded in establishing the truth, even to the conviction of a philosophic mind, much less a common one. Yet the truth is universally admitted. God, I think, has provided for so important an article of faith in the structure of our minds. He has not left it to chance or special Revelation. So, too, the determinations of the mind concerning virtue and vice, right and wrong being for the most part so accordant throughout the whole race—these, too, are instinctive.

'Let me ask,' continued Longinus, 'if you have never been perplexed by the evils of life, such as either you have yourselves experienced, or such as you have witnessed?' 'I have indeed,' said Fausta, 'and have deeply deplored them. But how are they connected with a future existence?' 'Thus,' replied the philosopher. As in the last case, the benevolence of the Supreme God cannot be sustained without the admission of the reality of a future life. Not only that, but it seems to me direct proof may be adduced from the existence and universality of these evils to establish the blackest malignity. So that to me, belief in a future existence is in proportion to the difficulty of admitting the idea of divine malignity, and it cannot therefore be much stronger than it is. How can you make that clear to us, said Fausta? I should truly rejoice if out of the evils which so darken the earth any thing good or beautiful could be drawn? As this dark mould, rejoined the philosopher, sends upwards, and out of its very heart this rare Persian rose, so does hope grow out of evil, and the darker the evil, the brighter the hope, as from a richer and fouler soil comes the more vigorous plant, and larger flower. You remember the sad tale concerning the christian Probus? Now do you wonder that Probus, when one after another four children were ravished from his arms by death, and then as if to crown his lot with evil his wife followed them, and he was left alone in the world, bereaved of every object to which his heart was most fondly attached, do you wonder, I say, that he turned to the heavens and cursed the gods? And can you justify the gods so that they shall not be chargeable with the blackest malignity if there be no future and immortal state? What is it to bind so the heart of a parent to a child, to give that affection a force and a tenderness which belong to no other tie, so that anxieties for its life and welfare, and cares and sacrifices for its good constitute the very existence of the parent what is it to foster by so many contrivances this love and then forever to disappoint and blast it but malignity? Yet this work is done every hour, and in almost every heart: if for children we lament not, yet we do for others as dear. Are we not then presented with this alternative, either the Supreme God is a malignant being whose pleasure is to torment, or, there is an immortal state where we shall meet again with those, who, for inscrutable purposes, have been torn from our arms here below? And who can hesitate in which to rest? The belief, therefore, in a future life ought to be in proportion to the difficulty of admitting the idea of divine malignity. And this is so impossible—so impossible to be entertained for one moment, that the other conclusion rests upon a firm foundation. I will add, said Longinus, only one thing more, which I have said, and that is concerning the incompleteness of man as a work of the world, and which has been mentioned by Fausta. Is not this an argument for a future life? Other things and beings are finished and complete—man only is left, as it were, half made up. A tree grows and bears fruit, and the end of its creation is answered. It is the same with the animals. No one expects more of a lion or a horse than is found in both.—But with man it is not so. In no period of history, and among no people, has it been satisfactorily determined what man is, or what are the limits of his capacity and being. He is full of contradictions, and of incomprehensible organization if he is considered only in relation to this world. For while every other affection finds and rests in its appropriate object, which fully satisfies and fills it, the desire of unlimited improvement, and of endless life—the strongest and best defined of any of the desires—this alone is answered by no corresponding object: which is not different from what it would be, if the gods should create a race like ours, having the same craving and necessity for food and drink, yet never provide for them neither the one nor the other, but leave them all to die of hunger. Unless there is a future life, we all die of a worse hunger. Unless there is a future life, man is a monster in creation—compared with other things, an abortion—and in himself, and compared with himself, an enigma—a riddle which no human wit has ever solved, nor can ever hope to solve. 'I cannot,' said Julia, 'deny strength and plausibility to your arguments, but I cannot admit that they satisfy me. No power or wit of man has ever wholly scattered the mists which rest upon life and death. I confess, with Socrates, that I want a promise or a revelation to enable me to take the voyage in a spirit of cheerfulness, and without the fear of fatal shipwreck. If your reasonings, Longinus, were only accompanied by authority more than that of man, if I could believe the Divinity inspired you, I could then rest contented and happy. One word authoritatively declaring man's immortality, a word which by infallible token I could know to be a word from the Supreme, would to me be worth infinitely more than all the conjectures, hopes, and reasonings of all the philosophers. It is, I conceive, on this account, that the religion of the christians has spread so rapidly. It meets our natures. It supplies authority. It professes to bring annunciations from Heaven of man's immortality.

For the Register.

Public Worship, No. I.

[illegible] —Bible.

That it is the imperious duty of all created intelligences to worship God, who created them and who sustains them, is no longer a doubtful question. Yet that there are many who totally neglect to comply with the requisitions, just, reasonable, and [illegible] which God has given in his [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] to [illegible] intelligent portion of his creation [illegible] less true. God requires of all men the undivided homage of their hearts in his [illegible] and he has held out inducements [illegible] ample and conclusive to those who worship him in spirit and in truth. He requires no hard thing at the hands of his [illegible]. He delights in the [illegible] praise from contrite hearts. He [illegible] ed the [illegible] blessings [illegible] its ordinances, as inducements to [illegible] ship, while he has the power to bestow the blessings upon his creatures which he has so abundantly promised in the gospel.—His ample mind is not confined to the narrow limits of created intelligences, [illegible] should not prove competent to redeem his honor when he pledges his [illegible] who worship in his courts, where he [illegible] well pleased to meet his saints.

Now what is our duty in regard to the public worship of God in the sanctuary?—If this is a means of grace, evidently it must be the duty of all intelligent beings to place themselves within the influence of sanctuary opportunities and [illegible].—It is a fact which may doubtless have been remarked for a number of years past, that our houses of public worship have been almost entirely neglected by the great mass of christians, and particularly those who make no pretensions to religion. The remark will doubtless apply with no little [illegible] all classes of religionists; but more particularly to those who [illegible] according to the commandment [illegible] who, by being "peculiar" in their views on this Sabbath question [illegible] still more [illegible] public worship [illegible] We [illegible] [illegible] who, without a shadow of [illegible] yourselves from the sanctuary [illegible] to on this occasion.

Look around you and see if there [illegible] to interest you in coming up to the house of God—if there are no efforts [illegible] to check the rapid strides which [illegible] Infidelity is [illegible] [illegible] religious institutions of America! [illegible] Arouse! and turn the [illegible] towards the worship of Him who [illegible] upon the throne and beholds with an eye that slumbers not nor sleeps, the secret movings of his intelligent creatures upon the earth. Yes, Infidelity, with all her demoralizing influences, is making her thousand inroads upon the church of God! She is sapping the foundation of our religious institutions. She is strewing her frail flowrets with a lavish hand along the pathway of our innocent and unconscious youth. Her drapery—her pride of fashion, and all that can bewilder the youthful mind, is strewn at broad-cast over our undefended privileges. And is it not time to arouse? Witness the avidity with which an Infidel would be greeted were one to address the people in the sanctuary of God. The house would be filled to overflowing! For what reason? The novelty—the vitiated taste of community at once answers the question.—The public mind has become dormant—the affections are estranged from God, and all the finer feelings of the soul are blunted by the propagation of Infidel sentiments. Cast off this hindrance, and come up to the house of God, determined on a signal victory over all the unhallowed influences of irreligion. The church must awake soon, or her fairest hopes are doomed. Christians must rally around the ordinances and institutions of

[illegible]

On the Historical Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Religion.

[illegible]

Before [illegible] this highly important [illegible] [illegible] (though not to speak [illegible]) Clergy, that this [illegible] few years, been [illegible] am inclined to believe [illegible] nent cause of the increase [illegible] the present age, may be [illegible] rance of men in general [illegible] [illegible] in the ignorance of the great mass of professing christians. Let these be rightly instructed in the evidences of christianity, and the infidel can no longer remain ignorant of the great and important truths of religion. These remarks will serve as my apology for the following:

1. Christianity is a collection of doctrines, truths, and precepts communicated, or said to be communicated to man from the Deity by Christ and his apostles, about 1800 years ago; and as it is my object in the present lecture to show that Christianity is not a forgery, but that its doctrines were actually taught by Christ and his apostles, I will in the first place state a few principles, or first truths upon which the investigation is to be based.

Supposing a person should announce to us that some 1800 years ago, there was a book written by one Plutarch, entitled, [illegible] These are [illegible] rules by which we [illegible] document [illegible] however [illegible] pected that any [illegible] all of these conditions [illegible] If it shall [illegible] shall not be found to [illegible] any of these which it does not fulfil [illegible] said document will be admitted by all competent judges to be genuine. For instance, if it be not referred to by contemporary

[illegible] your fairies [illegible] the bright lake [illegible] in the depth of the valley, and which you call the mountain mirror.—Ellen: the large orchards, with their trees gracefully bending with their ruddy and golden fruit; the neat house opposite to us, with its pretty curtains of vines hanging

---

VOL. II.

TED,
mlock Tan Bark, in ex-
ther, Boots, or Shoes, at Boot
1841,

TATIONERY.

ade arrangements by which rnish Classical and Miscelnery, at very low prices.
others, may now be found

Novum Græcum Testa-matum,
Colloquial Phrases,
Greek Reader,
Greek Lessons,
Jacob's Latin Reader,
Polyglott Bibles,
Quarto "
Medium Drawing Paper,
Demi " "
Cap " "
Drawing Pencils,
Ruled, Plain and Fancy
Letter Paper,
Plain and Ruled Fools-
cap, &c. &c. &c.

ILEY, Register Office.
1841.

INDING. connected a BINDERY tablishment, is now ready nding in a neat and durable terms as at any other esof country.
JAMES BAILEY.
841.

ESTABLISHMENT.

ETTS,
ks for the patronage he has numerous friends and custo them that he has taken (recently occupied by Dr. ist Store,) together with where he will be happy to ll favor him with a call.—
ARRANT his work to be mer Fashions just received.

l an experienced Journey-lar attention to making up
, in a neat and superior
e 23, 1841

THE REGISTER.

-YORK.
r, Eli S. Bailey
ish, Maxson Greene, Sam-n Vincent
ter, P. M
Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin
Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Tru-
Hull,
es Saunders.
Joseph Potter.
arker, P. M.
phraim Maxson.
Campbell, Samuel E. Lanngworthy, H. Wilson, P. M. n Greene.
P. Livermore, P. M., Stills Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
ul Stillman. man.
es Lewis.
e Crandall.
k Rogers.
Whitford
ce Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Potter, James Hubbard,
Ward.
. Beauchamp.
ock.
elcome Stillman.
iams.
Greene.

E-ISLAND.
Maxson. Rev. Alexander

ECTICUT.
P. Rogers. Wm. Maxson.
S. Greenman.

-JERSEY.
randall.
Gillett.
itsworth
wson.

SYLVANIA.
Brown, Lewis Dunham.
Bond.
I. Hydron, P. M.

GINIA.
I. Bond.
B Bond.
h F. Randolph.
Jeffrey, P. M. er, Esq.

OHIO.
ndall.
Clarke. con Babcock.
wis A. Davis
ofbourrow.

HIGAN.
l Church, P. M.

KONSAN.
oseph Goodrich, P. M. y Baptist Register SHED WEEKLY,

MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY BAILEY.

e subscribers who have the rs, $2 25, in advance, or of the year.
bscribers, $2 if paid in ad-
ment is delayed six months, year. Subscriptions paid ny authorised Agents within receipt of the first number, vance.
, involving facts and intend-paper, must be accompanied received for a less term than ho do not give express notice considered as wishing to ion, and their paper will be
ly. No paper will be discon
s are paid except at the disserted on the most reasona-mmunications to ensure at-essed to the publisher free over the door, the rose bushes clustering about the windows.'

'What, mother!' exclaimed Charles, 'all these things painted on a little gem?'

'Yes, Charles, all. The high mountains, and the rose bushes, every leaf and bud of them; and then, if the gems are turned towards the inside of the house, the landscape disappears, and all the furniture is painted on them, and the perfect pictures as you see done by painters, looking grave and motionless, but smiling, speaking, and moving.'

'Oh, mother, mother!' exclaims Ellen, 'this is a fairy story after all.'

'Are there, in reality, any such gems?' asked Charles, who did not like that the story should turn out a fairy story.

'There are, my dear Charles; and the same Friend who gave the children these gems, has given to them an instrument by which they can hear the music of the birds, the voices of their friends, and all other sounds; and another by which they enjoy the delicious perfume of the flowers; the fragrance you so often spoke of, Ellen, when the fruit trees were in blossom; and the locust trees in flower, and the clover in bloom.'

'Oh, what a generous Friend that must be,' said Charles, 'to give such valuable presents, and so many of them! Are there any more, mother?'

'Yes, Charles, more than I could describe to you if I were to talk till to-morrow morning; there is a very curious instrument, by which they find out the taste of everything that is to be eaten; and another, that, by just stretching out their fingers, they can tell whether a thing is smooth or rough, hard or soft.'

'Why, I can tell that with my fingers!' exclaimed Charles.

'Yes, my dear,' said his mother; 'and cannot you taste by putting food in your mouth? and is there not an instrument set in your mouth? and is there not an instrument set in your head by which you can hear?'

'My ear, mother?' asked Charles.

'Yes, my child, your ear.'

'And do you mean the eyes by those wonderful gems?' asked Ellen.

'Yes.'

'But I am sure there is no painting in the eyes.'

'Yes, Ellen, every object you behold is painted upon the part of the eye called the retina; but that you cannot understand now; and you must let me go on with my anecdote of the two children. When they arose in the morning, they found that their Friend had taken such good care of them when they slept that they felt no pain; that their limbs were all active; and that they could every moment receive pleasure from the precious gems and instruments I have mentioned. They both looked out of the window, and exclaimed, 'What a beautiful morning!' The little girl turned her gems towards her multiflora, now full of roses and glistening with dew-drops, and she clapped her hands, and asked her brother if he ever saw any thing so beautiful; and he turned his gems to a pair of humming-birds that were fluttering over the honeysuckle, and thrusting their tiny pumps into the necks of the flowers; and, as their bright images shone on his gems, he shouted, 'Did you ever see any thing so handsome?'

'You mean, mother,' said Charles, 'that he looked at the humming-birds, when you say he turned his gems?'

'Yes, my dear! and when he heard the pleasant humming they make with their wings, it was by the instrument set in the head which you call the ear. There was not a moment of the day but the children enjoyed some good thing their Friend had given to them. They learned their lessons by using the memories he had given them; the books they read delighted them, because their Friend had given to them minds by which they understood them.—They loved their parents, and relations, and companions, because their Friend had given to them affections.'

'It seems to me,' interrupted Charles, 'that their Friend gave them every thing. It must be God you mean, mother, for I know he gives us every thing we have.'

'Yes, my dear Charley; and I am sorry to say, these two children neglected their Friend. They had often been told by their mother never to get into bed without first kneeling and thanking him for all his gifts; but they did not think of him. They used and enjoyed the gifts, but they sometimes forgot the Giver.'

Ellen laid her hand on her mother's bosom. 'Mother,' she said, 'you mean us.'

'My dear Ellen,' replied her mother, 'your conscience is like the ring in the fairy tale. Yes, I did mean you and Charles. I was sorry when I came into the room to-night, to see you getting into bed without saying your prayers. God has given you a voice to speak, my children. Your dog Stumah cannot speak to thank God for any thing he receives, but you can.'

'And I will,' said the good little boy, ashamed that he had been ungrateful and thoughtless. 'Come, Ellen, we'll jump up and say our prayers; and,' he added in a whisper, 'we'll speak for Stumah too.'

Innocence and ignorance are sisters. Vulgar innocence and ignorance are mortal, they have pretty faces, but wholly without expression, and of a transient beauty; the noble sisters are immortal, their lofty forms are unchangeable, and their countenances are still radiant with the light of paradise, they dwell in heaven, and visit only the noblest and most severely tried of mankind.—Novalis.

There are in certain heads a kind of established errors against which reason has no weapons. There are more of these mere assertions current than one could believe. Men are very fond of proving their steadfast adherence to nonsense.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, February 16, 1842.

Christian Honesty.

The Christian religion is a system of purity; hence every true Christian is emphatically honest, of whom it may be said as of Nathaniel, "behold an Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile!" A dishonest Christian can not be found, because his dishonesty at once makes him a sinner, and destroys his claim to the Christian character. That Christians err through the infirmity of the flesh, is true; but it can not be true that the deliberate violator of God's law is a Christian. Fortuitous circumstances, only, can be plead for error in religion. For, beside these, there is no necessity for a departure from the right way, and even these may frequently be construed into a criminal carelessness. It is criminal in every intelligent being not to investigate the Christian religion impartially. The simplicity of its principles, and the clearness of its doctrines and duties, render this comparatively an easy task. And when the bias of education, or some adventitious circumstance does not blind the judgment, or prepossess the heart, a perfect harmony in views is obtained by all. The diversity of opinion as to what the gospel teaches, is not attributable to any ambiguity in the scriptures, or defect in the Christian system, but to the obliquity of vision, or perverseness of heart of men. We must, therefore, conclude that they are dishonest, in a degree, at least, who do not establish themselves in the right way.

The Christian is honest with his God, with his Bible, his neighbor, and himself. If he is honest with God he believes what God says, and will not traverse sea and land for an apology for his sin. With the Christian, the word of God is the measure of his duty, and short of a full and hearty obedience to it, he will not stop. Neither will he seek how he may avoid the letter of God's law while he follows its spirit, for its letter and spirit agree, and can not be separated without sin. The word of God stands firmer than the pillars of heaven, for the heavens shall pass away, but the word of God liveth and abideth forever. How vain the effort to deceive God! The Christian knows it is vain, and did not the reverence he has for the divine being restrain him from the effort, his knowledge of God would. The fate of Annanias and Sapphira stands as a perpetual admonition to as many as have it in their heart to lie unto God.

The Christian is honest with his Bible. This is his only chart to guide him safely through the labyrinths of error, and save him from the snare of the fowler. 'Twas given by inspiration of God, and is sufficient to make the man of God perfect.—Any alteration of the word of God, in adding or diminishing, would render it imperfect, and any labored effort to make the scriptures appear discordant, or invalidate any of its truths, or make them appear as non-essential to the perfection of the Christian character, betrays a dishonesty of heart entirely unlike the christian. To search the scriptures to prove any preconceived opinion, or confirm any system of ethics, or religious creed, likewise reveals a heart which is not sufficiently honest to let the word of God establish it in the truth. The Psalmist enquires, "Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way;" and then responds, "by taking heed thereto according to thy word." The scriptures are, of themselves, sufficient to enlighten every soul and lead it into all truth, and as many as are lead by them, are perfect in obedience and honest before God. The word of God is not so ambiguous as to need an interpreter, save the holy spirit, or so hard to be understood as to leave any in ignorance, or so imperfect as to require any of the innovations of the "Man of Sin" to institute new doctrines for the church, or substitute others for those already taught. A man is honest with his Bible when this lays the foundation of his religious creed, and rears the superstructure and completes the whole. But he is not honest when he imbibes from other sources than the Bible any part of his religion, or neglects any of its divine precepts. The Bible contains the whole of the honest man's religion, and it requires the whole of it to complete his creed. A man is neither honest before God, not with himself, when he does not make a habit of studying the will of God. The heart sanctified in part only, is, of itself, leading into error and sin, and unless the mind becomes familiar with the truth, it is almost certain to be led into error. Hence, they who neglect the Bible, neglect their own interests, and expose themselves to dangers, or, in other words, are dishonest with themselves. Honesty before God, and with his word, will make a man honest with his neighbor, and himself; and while he fears to sin against God, or rebel against his word, he is studious to love his neighbor as himself, and love himself sufficiently as to avoid every thing which may detract aught from his obedience to God, or diminish his happiness.

A Suggestion.

Will not our Churches adopt for themselves some system of sustaining our benevolent operations? It is believed that a want of system is one great cause of inefficiency. Will our brethren take a suggestion from us on this subject? Let every member after duly considering his relation to our benevolent operations, and the income from his labors, determine how much he can give monthly for benevolent purposes, and then present this with his prayer at the Monthly Concert, and thus let his alms and prayers go together. How many can give $1, or 50 cents, or 25 cents monthly? We wish not that a man should regulate his gifts by his penurious disposition, but as an operative in the labor of love. Suppose we take six pence a month as the average of what the members of our denomination could give, we then have the sum of $4,125 per year. A sum sufficient to carry forward successfully, every benevolent operation of the denomination. Who is there that can not easily give their 6d. per month, it being only a penny for five days? Suppose this sum were diminished one half, we could sustain two Missionaries among the Jews; two in other fields, support five young men in obtaining an education preparatory to the ministry, and print 300,000 pages of Tracts. This is what an average of three pence per month, or a penny every ten days for each member in the denomination, would accomplish when brought into a common treasury. Now if these gifts be accompanied by the united prayers of all the members of the churches in the Monthly Concert, who can calculate the amount of good that would be effected? Shall it be done? Which church will commence, and who will commence in each church? Is the scheme visionary? then we have an example for it in the exhortation of an Apostle to his brethren, that they should lay by them every week as God had prospered them. Also in the tithing the children of Israel in the land of Canaan. We wish voluntary offerings. Let the one who can give his penny, do that, and let not those who can give 10, 25, 50 cents, or $1, or more, per month, withhold.

Treasurer's Appeal.

Will our brethren, as they value the success of the truths that characterize us, give a cheering response to the appeal from the Treasurer of our Missionary Society? We are able at once to pay those brethren who have labored years since under the direction of the Society. Our brethren who abide at home, know comparatively little of the labors and sufferings of those who labor as Missionaries. Some of our Missionaries, in addition to their poverty, have suffered very much from health impaired by their exposure and labors in the Missionary field. To this day we suffer from labors performed two years since. Others have doubtless suffered more. Money due Missionaries should be paid, and we want aid to send others out.

Temperance.

Gen Riley of Rochester, Lectured twice in this village, last week on temperance.—Last Seventh day evening a society was organized, at which time Ira Gage Barnes, an Inn keeper two miles north of this village, came forward and signed the pledge. Some who have been immoderate drinkers have signed the pledge. There are about 260 who have taken the pledge of the American Temperance Union.

Agents Wanted.

We make the following proposal to those who may wish to extend the patronage of the Register. Any person who will send us $5, current money, for new subscribers, shall be entitled to three copies of the Register for one year. For $10, thus sent, we will send six copies; for $20, we will send twelve copies; For any amount greater, we will allow 25 per cent.

For settling outstanding accounts and remitting money for present subscribers, we will make a fair compensation. Who will help us?

Congress.

The resolutions censuring Mr. Adams, have been laid on the table by a vote of 106 to 93. About 40 members were absent.—Thus the indomitable, fearless hero has triumphed over southern soul-stealers, and the right of petition is vindicated.

Explanation.

As we were one of the Council that declined ordaining the brother mentioned in Br. Hull's letter, we would say for ourself, that our decision was founded principally on the fact that the candidate absolutely refused to attend to the "imposition of hands" without at the same time recording his sentiments against it. We then did not believe the denomination would sanction the ordination under such circumstances; we therefore, as a matter of expediency, were in favor of referring the subject to the General Conference. We do not think it advisable, while others are discussing the question, to give our views.

For the Register.

Waterford, Jan. 30, 1842.

Br. Bailey.—It may not be uninteresting to your readers, to know that God has again revived his work in this place.—Suffice it to say, that the Church was in a low state of religious enjoyment, and while some anxiety had begun to be felt for a better state of things, Bro. A. Campbell came among us, and he held a series of meetings, for the most part in the evening for the space of about two weeks, and through his faithful labors have enjoyed a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. About twenty five have been hopefully converted to God in this section, sixteen have received baptism, and [illegible] of the number have united with the Church. The work still bears a favorable aspect.

A number of places in this region have been, and still are, receiving a precious revival of divine grace. At New London, more than one hundred have been hopefully converted to God. Lyme, and Montville, have shared bountifully in heaven's blessing. May the light of truth shine on all hands.

LESTER T. ROGERS.

P. S. At the time of Bro. Campbell's tarry with us, Bro. Oliver Maxson was ordained to office of Deacon in this Church.

L. T. R.

For the Register.

Br. Bailey—There has appeared a number of articles in the Register, written by our beloved brother W. B. Maxson, upon the "Laying on of Hands." The object of this letter is to correct an erroneous impression likely to grow out of the statements in the [illegible] of his last letter, which appeared Jan 5th, 1842. He says in his "APOLOGY," "It is, however, believed that there is not a uniformity of opinion and practice among our churches upon this point, which is the probable reason of its claiming the attention of the General Conference at its recent session. And the fact that that body was not prepared to express itself decidedly upon the subject and finally referring it to the churches, is presumptive evidence that the members were not all of the same mind respecting it." Now that there are differences of opinion among us as to this subject, I readily grant, for I freely acknowledge myself to hold sentiments differing somewhat from those expressed in the articles referred to. But I understand the subject [illegible] the true issue. I believe that there has never been an entire uniformity of opinion on the subject, at least so far as I know, nor was the subject brought before the General Conference at its last session because of the existence of this difference of opinion. But because of a refusal upon the part of [illegible] of our ministers to ordain [illegible] professedly otherwise acceptable [illegible] to sentiments differing from those of the denomination at large, but not essentially different from those entertained by a number of ministers, and also a [illegible] number of private brethren. Now by reference to the minutes of the Conference, any one can satisfy themselves as to the true state of the question, as to the form in which it came before that body.

You will see that this entirely changes the feature of the question, and this is a matter of importance to those falling under censure. For, inasmuch as an effort is made to make it appear that we are "innovators," and that direful consequences result to the denomination from our sins in this case, you will see at once that it is a matter of great interest to us to know whether we are so accounted by our brethren. Now I maintain that we are only enjoying at least an implied and generally understood right in this instance, and that therefore all charges of "innovation" and unfaithfulness are groundless and unjust.

When this part of this subject shall be disposed of and finally settled, I shall with pleasure comply with the wishes of brother Maxson, and "frankly" give my reasons for differing in my views from him upon this subject.

NATHAN V. HULL.

Clarence, Feb. 2, 1842.

Missionary Department.

For the Register.

To the Agents of the A. S. D. B. Missionary Society.

Dear Brethren;—The embarrassed condition of A. S. D. B. Missionary Society, imperiously imposes on me the necessity of calling on you to make renewed and vigorous exertions in the discharge of your duties as Agents of the Society.

There are debts against the Society for Missionary labor, of long standing, and we are every day liable to be charged with neglect, and that with some degree of justice by those to whom we are indebted, until some effective measures are [illegible] to meet these demands. It should be remembered, also, that for two or three years past there has been but little or no Missionary labor performed under the patronage of the Society, for the reason that we had not the necessary means for remunerating past services of Missionaries, nor [illegible] for defraying the expense of further labors.

Notwithstanding these embarrassments, the Society at its last session [illegible] employ one or more ministering brethren during the year," to labor for the objects for which the Society was constituted, and trust to the blessing of God [illegible] of the undertaking. [illegible] er has gone into the [illegible] he was obliged to borrow [illegible] the Society [illegible] for an outfit [illegible] purpose.

Brethren ought [illegible]

[illegible]

Yours [illegible]

C[illegible]

[illegible]

Mr Wise [illegible] floor.

Mr Wise [illegible] the correction [illegible] said he had [illegible] Address [illegible] the Address, and yet [illegible] was striving to destroy that instrument.

Mr Wise was very severe in his strictures upon Mr Adams' course. He spoke of him as hoary, but not venerable. He was a man of vast power—power of name and station—power of fame, power of learning, power of eloquence, power of the pen—but these powers he converted to the disgrace and the destruction of his country. People were mistaken if they thought him mad. He was not mad, though he could not say that he always spoke the words of truth and soberness. He was not mad—but—he said it in a political sense—wicked. He made himself, with all his great influence, an agent for the destruction of the Union and the Constitution.

Mr Adams said he rose to a point of order, which was as follows: he denied the right of this House to entertain the resolutions, as they charged him with the crimes of high treason, and subordination of perjury, over which the House has no jurisdiction, and, by entertaining them, he was deprived of his just rights.

The Speaker declined giving an opinion, and left it to the House to decide the question.

Mr. Adams said that he probably should have raised the question of order this morning, only that he wished to give the gentleman from Virginia a full opportunity to disgorge all the bile which had been accumulating for three or four years in his bosom; this having been done, to the full extent of that gentleman's power, he now raised it; and said, if the House acted at [illegible] on the resolution [illegible] to censure him for [illegible] attempts [illegible] came into the House stained with the blood of [illegible] he could to [illegible] proceeding against him here [illegible] belonged to an- [illegible]

Mr Wise [illegible] Mr Adams saying [illegible] He wished to be [illegible] was willing to [illegible] State of Ma- [illegible] before the [illegible] he was [illegible] single step taken in [illegible] he had to do with it, [illegible] was upon the ground, [illegible] to protect [illegible]

Mr Adams made some further remarks [illegible] and went on [illegible] every [illegible] enjoy the [illegible] He [illegible] something to [illegible] gentleman [illegible] the crimes [illegible] contempt of [illegible] as a vehicle [illegible] preamble. [illegible] to lay the whole sub- [illegible] Yeas [illegible] nays 100. [illegible] Mr Adams took occasion to [illegible] House deemed it prope- [illegible] three weeks. He [illegible] for this consump- [illegible]

[illegible] asked the Speaker to [illegible] whether the question was [illegible] consideration of the [illegible] House to [illegible] The Speaker replied that [illegible] The vote [illegible] nays 77. [illegible] determined to consider the [illegible]

[illegible] rose and said he took the [illegible] from the House [illegible] the Constitution, as fol- [illegible]

Mr [illegible] of Ky. [illegible] course pro- [illegible] they had the power, as ex- [illegible]

Mr [illegible] of New York [illegible] similar view, [illegible] heard Mr. [illegible] now Secretary of the Navy, express the opinion that the Union ought to [illegible]

Mr Wise denied the assertion. Mr [illegible] would prove [illegible]

Mr A[illegible] of Tennessee, followed and addressed the House at length, on the subject of its disorders and confusion, [illegible] which it had fallen with the people, &c. He insisted that the only way to correct the evil, would be, for each member [illegible] to take his seat the moment the Chair called him to order.

Mr A. passed to the resolutions under consideration, and condemned them as highly inexpedient. He regretted the course taken by Mr Adams, and also to witness the violent assaults made upon that venerable man, now faltering with age, by boys in this hall, who had hardly cast off their swaddling clothes compared with him. It was by this continued badgering, from members of this body, operating upon the peculiarly sensitive mind and indomitable spirit of Mr Adams, that elicited from him remarks, and provoked him to a course which, he was persuaded, his cooler judgment would not approve.

Jan. 25.—Mr. Adams entered upon his defense, and in the commencement took occasion to enter his protest against the jurisdiction of this House, and demanded to be tried by his peers, as he was charged, notwithstanding what the gentleman from Kentucky had disclaimed, with subordination of perjury and high treason. In conducting his defense he said he should hav to call on the department for information, and asked to offer certain resolutions—all of which he sent to the Chair which were read.

The first call for information was in relation to the laws and affairs of South Carolina. The second asks for information in relation to the affair of Capt. Bolton, in leaving the Mediterranean Squadron. The third asks for information of conversations held between Wm. Cost Johnson, and Henry A. Wise, in relation to the 21st rule.

He said he wanted that information in order to sustain himself on his trial before ly be on the resolution

rom Virginia, Mr. Gilsed to censure him for ouse.
always opposed attempts censure or punish mem-
rimes or misdemeanors.
an from Virginia came ined with the blood of id, all that he could to eding against him here he matter belonged to anupted Mr. Adams, saying third or fourth time that this charge against him.

often brought the House bject. He wished to be e,—or he was willing to unal in the State of Mae duel was fought, for d to declare before the once for all, that he was or a single step taken in hat he had to do with it, as upon the ground, to luctantly went, to protect nd.
de some further remarks he charge, and went on er the Constitution, every crime "shall enjoy the nd public trial by an im-the State and district ne was committed." He sider the resolutions, and House to reject them. He e were determined to try it, but he rejected their y," and called upon them xpulsion at once; and he it he would be back before ituents had something to r. denied that the gentleman etts was charged, either in resolutions, with the crimes high treason; but it was sure him for a contempt of ending himself as a vehicle per involving such conse-
o set forth in the preamble.
moved to lay the whole sub-
e. Yeas 90, nays 100.
r. Adams took occasion to the House deemed it prop-o trial of the charges against ake some three weeks. He esponsible for this consump-den asked the Speaker to y whether the question was of the consideration of the r the power of the House to n. The Speaker replied that tion of jurisdiction. The vote

3, nays 75.
se determined to consider the s rose and said, he took the ent to demand from the House formity with the 6th article of ents to the Constitution, as fol-minal prosecutions the accused he right to a speedy and public mpartial jury of the State and ein the crime shall have been which district shall have been scertained by law, and to be ine nature and cause of the ac-be confronted with the witnst him; to have compulsory btaining witnesses in his favor;

the assistance of counsel for
"
orwood, of Ky., doubted the l power to take the course pro-if they had the power, its ex-d, in his opinion, be highly ins, of Va., took a similar view, hat he had himself heard Mr.

v Secretary of the Navy, expinion that the Union ought to l. e denied the assertion. Mr.
ated it, and said he would prove Upshur denied it.
old, of Tennesse, followed and he House, at length, on the sub-disorders and confusion, the nder which it had fallen with &c. He insisted that the only rect the evil, would be, for each oluntarily to take his seat the e Chair called him to order.
passed to the resolutions under on, and condemned them as xpedient. He regretted the n by Mr. Adams, and also to violent assaults made upon that nan, now faltering with age, by s hall, who had hardly cast off dling clothes compared with him.
this continued badgering, from f this body, operating upon the sensitive mind and indomitable
r. Adams, that elicited from him nd provoked him to a course was persuaded, his cooler judgd not approve.
—Mr. Adams entered upon his nd in the commencement took enter his protest against the juof this House, and demanded to his peers, as he was charged, nding what the gentleman from had disclaimed, with subordinarjury and high treason. In cons defense he said he should hav the department for information, to offer certain resolutions—all he sent to the Chair which were st call for information was in re-he laws and affairs of South Care second asks for information in the affair of Capt. Bolton, in he Mediterranean Squadron. The s for information of conversations ween Wm. Cost Johnson and Hense, in relation to the 21st rule.

d he wanted that information in sustain himself on his trial before his peers; and then afterwards on his defense in this House. He sent to the Clerk's table some extracts to be read from the Report of the Committee on the duel between Cilley and Graves.

---

Mr. Wise then disclaimed having any thing to do with the preliminary business of the duel. So far from urging it on, he had done all he could to prevent it, and stated that the Kentucky Senators, Messrs. Clay and Crittenden, had fixed all the preliminaries. He only regretted that, not having approved the preliminaries, he was induced to go to the field. [Messrs. Clay and Crittenden were present in the Hall.]

Mr. Adams said that he was willing now to let the whole subject drop, in order that the House might progress with the business of the session, and forego his privileges, taking the subject before his constituents.

The Treasury Note Bill.

Jan. 29.—The amendment of the Senate to this bill was adopted, and the bill only waits the signature of the President to become a law.

Jan. 31.—A message was received from the Senate announcing the death of the Hon. Nathan F. Dixon, and that the funeral would take place to-morrow. the 1st of February.

Mr. Tillinghast, of R. I., pronounced an appropriate eulogy on the deceased, the customary resolutions were adopted and the House adjourned.

Feb. 1.—No business was done in either house. The funeral of Senator Dixon was attended.

New-York Legislature.

MONDAY, Feb. 7, 1842.

By concurrent nomination of the Senate and Assembly, Samuel Young was appointed Secretary of State, Azariah C. Flagg, Comptroller, Thomas Farrington, Treasurer, Geo. P. Barker, Attorney General, Nathaniel Jones, Surveyor General, Henry Storms, Commissary General.

TUESDAY, Feb. 8.

The following gentlemen were likewise appointed Canal Commissioners: Jonas Earll, jr., James Hooker, Geo. W. Little, David P. Bissell, Benjamin Enos, and Stephen Clarke.

News of the Day.

Post-office Laws outdone.—The following letter, written by a gentleman in this town, on the wrapper of a newspaper, passed through the Post-offices west, and was copied and published first in a Buffalo paper, and subsequently has been copied by many other papers. We publish it as a specimen of the thousand artifices that are resorted to for the purpose of evading the Post-office Laws. It stands the P. M. General in hand to adopt further and more restricted laws, if he designs to prevent the transmission of private intelligence by means of newspapers, or give up beat to "Yankee inventions."

"The wrapper forms no part of the package, neither is postage paid ~~thereon~~."—P. M. G.

EZRA D. BARNES ESQ.

One paper. BYRON, Michigan.

"Now I wish to have it understood by all the P. M.'s along the route between here and away out there in Michigan—and there too—that we are all well down here in De Ruyter, from grandmother to little bub; and also that there is no 'writing within the wrapper, or on the margin of this newspaper—no underscoring, dotting, or pricking letters or words,' or other memoranda—nevertheless, I enjoin it upon him of Byron to tear off the wrapper and examine it closely, and then, on demand, deliver it to my brother, a little south of Uncle 'Jake Canouse's—we had poor sleighing, but very fat turkeys, Thanksgiving day—a long night and a short sermon from priest Johnson before Christmas—a good deal of wind and some weather, New Year's day—bells jingling and belles dancing through the evening—money scarce, and Post-office circulars plenty ever since."

Steamboat Carriers.—In a case before the U. S. Circuit Court at Boston, to recover from a Steamboat Company the value of a package of bank bills that was entrusted to the Captain and by him lost—the court decided that the Company were not liable. The undertaking by them to be common carriers of merchandize would not be holding themselves out as carriers of bank bills, or make them liable as such. And the custom of Captains to perform their service, would not make the company liable unless he acted as their agent in the carriage of bills.

Longevity.—The Newport (R. I.) Herald gives the names of 34 persons who died in that town during the past year, at the age of 70 years and upwards; their aggregate ages being 2724 years. The oldest of the number was Francis Anderson, aged 96. The yearly number of deaths in Newport is on an average about 140. In what other town do one quarter of the inhabitants live to the age of 70? What other town can exhibit such a proportion for even a single year?

The population of England and Wales is about 16,000,000; and the whole number of parochial clergy engaged in actual duty, in England and Wales, attached to the Establisment, is 12,000.

Hector Craig, Esq. formerly member of Congress, and sometime time Surveyor of this port, died at his residence in Orange co. on the 31st ult.

The Journals of the Provincial Congress of the State of New York, for the sessions of 1775 and 1776, have been ordered to be printed by the Legislature. They will open valuable information of important times and excellent men.

The Scotch General Assembly maintain 130 schools, chiefly in the sequestered districts of the Highlands and Islands, in which above 12,000 children are instructed. Connected with them are Sabbath schools, attended by nearly 7000 pupils, both young and adult.

Florida War.—A writer in the National Intelligencer, who dates his letters at St. Augustine, and who is spoken of by the editors as an intelligent gentleman, gives it as his opinion that there are not more than one hundred and twenty warriors in the territory; and he urges that the troops, &c., be withdrawn, and that the reward system be adopted. By offering a reward, say of one thousand dollars for every warrior captured, he is confident that the whole of them may be secured at a cost of not more than one hundred and twenty thousand dollars; whereas millions may be expended in military expeditions, &c., before these one hundred and twenty can be killed or made prisoners.—Com. Adv.

Sudden Death at the Sacrament Table.—A death of a sudden and impressive character took place at St. Joseph's church, Philadelphia, on Sunday last. The deceased was Mr. John Costello, a gentleman about 60 years of age. He intended to receive the communion, and the clergyman at the time was administering the sacrament to those around the altar. Mr. C. was first discovered in his own pew in a dying state, the second pew from the altar, and in a few minutes the vital spark had fled from his frail frame, and he died without an apparent struggle. Apoplexy is supposed to have been the cause. The scene was solemn and awful. Mr. C. was a native of Dublin, but had resided in Philadelphia a number of years.

A Bootless Enterprise.—A weekly paper has been started at Cincinnati, called the "Anti-Abolitionist," designed to protect the system of slavery. The witless editor has begun his work too late. The spirit of the enterprise may be reached by this opening:

"For ourselves, we look upon the abolition of slavery in the South, as one of the greatest CURSES that could fall upon us as a nation, and to them in particular; and so far from its being an evil, we look upon it as having done more towards happifying a degraded race than all the missionaries that philanthropy and religion have ever sent forth."

Living and Ornamental Fences.—At a recent meeting of the Botanical Society of London, Mr. D. Cooper gave an account of a new living fence, formed by planting young trees in a slanting position, every tree leaning the opposite way, so that they will cross each other; and then at the parts which come in contact, take off from each a piece of bark, and tie close together, covering the part with clay. This grafts each tree into his neighbor, and forms in a few years a living fence, with diamond-shaped openings. The plan is an excellent one for ornamental fences.

Grog Money.—We understand that $2,500 has been paid to the seamen on board the receiving ship Columbus, in lieu of spirit rations, for the last three months, which they had voluntarily relinquished.

We also learn that the crew of the U. S. schooner Grampus, commanded by Lieut Van Brunt, which vessel is now ready to sail on a cruise, all, with the exception of 10 or 11, receive money instead of grog.

It is time that the custom of allowing spirit rations on board our ships was abolished.—Bost. Journal.

Judge Story, of the U. S. Supreme Court, recently charged a jury, in Boston, to the effect that it was quite doubtful whether if the crew of a vessel were disabled from exertion by intemperance during a storm, the underwriters were responsible for any disasters. The ship is not to be deemed sea-worthy.

The failure of the Girard Bank in Philadelphia has produced as much distress as that of the U. S. Bank. 9590 shares were held by females, 2663 by guardians, 4638 by trustees, and 335 by benevolent institutions, amounting to $1,700,000.

The Charleston Courier notices a rare literary curiosity. It is a Hebrew prayer book thirteen hundred and fifty seven years old! The Courier says it is an old volume, written in the Hebrew character, on parchment of the finest quality, altogether with the pen, and with an accuracy and beauty that make it a masterpiece of penmanship.

It is estimated there will be ten millions of bushels less grain malted, in the United States this year, than in some years that are past.

There are now in the United States 109 incorporated colleges, 64 of which have been established during the last twenty years. In these colleges there are 711 Presidents and Professors, and 6,728 students.

The Nashville Union says, "that the proposition to create a new State out of portions of Tennessee, and other States, to be called the 'State of Frankland,' has been put to rest, for the present at least, by a majority of twelve votes in the House."

By the United States statistics for 1840, there are 65,000,000 gallons of spirituous and fermented liquors produced each year in the United States, making 4 gallons for each man, woman and child.

A sister of the President died recently at the South. The news of her decease reached Washington on the 5th inst., putting an end to an entertainment for which preparations had been made, for the marriage of the President's daughter.

A bill, compelling the banks to resume specie payments immediately, was passed in the Pennsylvania Legislature, on the 3rd inst., by a vote of 71 to 14.

Mr. Burritt, the learned blacksmith, lectured at Richmond, Va., recently, and was introduced by the editor of the Enquirer, to the hero of one of his lectures, the boy who ascended the Natural Bridge, cutting into the limestone the footholds by which he mounted, and who is now a member of the Senate of Virginia.

The Lancaster Intelligencer notices the coincidence, that mild winters have happened at a regular periodical distance of 26 years, as follows: 1686, 1712, 1738, 1764, 1709, 1816, 1842.

We learn from the Nashville Banner of the 25th ult., that the Tennessee Legislature had agreed to end its session (without electing United States Senators,) on the 7th of February.

If we reckon with the ancients, that a generation lasts thirty years, then in that space eight hundred millions of human beings are born and die; consequently, seventy-four thousand and thirty-nine must be dropping off every day.

Products of the United States.—We have the pleasure of laying before our readers the following interesting facts, derived from official sources, according to the last census of the United States:

Wheat—No. of bushels raised,			84,823,272
Rye,	do.	do.	18,645,567
Oats,	do.	do.	123,071,341
Indian Corn,	do.	do.	377,531,875
Buckwheat,	do.	do.	7,291,743
Barley,	do.	do.	4,161,504
Potatoes,	do.	do.	108,298,060
Sugar, pounds,			155,100,809
Rice,	do.		80,841,422
Tobacco,	do.		219,163,319
Cotton,	do.		790,479,275
do. value of manufactured goods,			$46,300,452
do. capital invested,			$51,102,359
Cast Iron, tons produced,			286,903
do. Bar Iron	do.		197,233
Lead, pounds	do.		31,239,453
Coal, Anthracite, tons,			863,489
do. Bituminous, bushels,			27,603,191
Distilleries, number,			10,305
Gallons produced,			41,002,627
Lumber, value,			$12,943,507
Fisheries, capital invested,			$16,429,620

—Philadelphia Gazette.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

Office of the Cabinet,
SCHENECTADY, Feb. 5, 10 o'clock A. M.

Unprecedented Freshet.—The mild weather during the present week, and the deluge of rain on Thursday night, had caused a rapid and unprecedented rise of the waters of the Mohawk and its tributary streams. Our oldest inhabitants assert that the Mohawk has not been as high since 1786. It is now about 18 feet above the ordinary summer level. The buildings in the south-western part of the city are entirely inundated—the water being up to the sills of the first story windows. It is feared that great damage has been sustained along the valley of the Mohawk, as large quantities of timber, fragments of buildings and some household furniture have been seen floating down.

The dams on the creek which passes through the village of Amsterdam gave way at an early hour on Thursday evening, deluging the entire village, leaving scarcely a dry cellar. The bridge across the Mohawk at that place, was swept off yesterday. It floated down almost bodily to within about two miles of this city, where it is said to have lodged on an island amidst some trees. The train of cars which left here westward yesterday morning could proceed no farther than Fonda, from whence, after waiting several hours, the engine returned with the way passengers about 5, P. M. Up to the hour of writing this, nothing has been heard from beyond Fonda. It is feared that the rail-road bridges crossing the Canada creek have been carried away.

The Bridge crossing the Mohawk at this city has sustained but little damage in its light outwork timbers, though the water, when at its greatest height was within an inch or two of the floor timbers.

There is a report, but little credited however, that the new upper aqueduct about our miles below, has been somewhat damaged.

The water has fallen about a foot since last night, 11 o'clock. I am just informed that five piers of the old aqueduct and portions of the wood work of the new, are carried away. No cars yet from the west.

The Kennebec Journal contradicts the report of sickness among the lumbermen on the Allagash, on the authority of a man who has been at work there, and who left there last week. He says there has been no sickness nor death.

Thomas Beekman, Esq., of Oswego, has been appointed Receiver of the Commercial Bank of Oswego.

The Abolitonists have held a State Convention at Peterboro' and nominated Alvan Stewart, of Utica, for Governor, and Charles O. Shepard, for Leutenant Governor.

The Free Suffrage Convention of Rhode Island has isued a proclamation declaring the Constitution formed by it the supreme law of the State, and as such to be obeyed, respected, and "defended by all necessary means." The old government, composed of a Governor, Legislature," &c., chosen by the Freeholders, refuse to recognize it—a symptom of trouble.

A duel was fought at Johnsonburg, Ky., a few days since, between a Dr. Nottes and Mr. Bradwick, a lawyer. A woman was the cause. They fought at twelve paces with rifles, and both shots were fatal.

The light houses of the Union occasion an expenditure, by our government, of nearly half a million of dollars.

Notices.

DE RUYTER LYCEUM.

A meeting of the Lyceum will be held a the District School-house, on Thursday evening, 17th inst., commencing at 6 o'clock precisely.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS it has come to the knowledge of the Board of Trustees of De Ruyter Institute that certain reports have been circulated, which are calculated to prejudice the minds of some of the Stockholders against the character of the school and also to weaken their confidence in the management of said Trustees; therefore,

Resolved, That the Trustees cordially invite the Stockholders to appoint, if they shall think proper, a competent unprejudiced committee, composed of members, located in different parts of the country, or in different communities of the Stockholders, to investigate the whole concerns and business transactions of the Board of Trustees of said Institution. And as the proper time for such meeting, we would suggest the Monday next preceding the annual meeting of the Stockholders in June next.

We would also suggest the propriety of appointing one or two in each society according to the amount of stock invested.

By order of the Board of Trustees
JOHN R. BUTTS, Sec'y.
De Ruyter, Jan. 2, 1842.

PROPOSALS

For publishing a History of the Seventh-Day Baptist Denomination.

It is intended to publish a full and complete History of the Seventh-day Baptists, from their origin to the present time, giving an account of their progress and operations, including short Biographical sketches of some of their most distinguished members, together with a history of their benevolent operations, and a brief manual of the doctrines of the gospel as held by them.

As full an account as practicable will be given of their origin and numbers in England.

The size of the work, price, time and manner of publication, will be determined when the facts are collected. It will be published on individual responsibility.

Such persons as have facts in their possession on this subject are requested to transmit them as soon as convenient; and we respectfully request the Clerk, or some other person, in every Church or settlement, to give us as full an account as is possible of the origin of their church, number of members, names of Ministers that have been members, their age, time of death, (if dead,) number and time of Revivals, with the number of additions, and whatever else of interest that has been or may be connected with their history.

☞ All communications on the subject may be addressed to the "Editor of the S. D. B. Register, De Ruyter, N. Y."

PROSPECTUS
OF
VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-Day Baptist Register will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, payable in advance or in three months.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible as held by them. It will embrace in its object the whole range of Christian doctrines and duties, and the various benevolent enterprises of the day. It will be our object to make the "Register" interesting and profitable to all classes of its patrons. We assure those of all denominations who patronize us, that we intend to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which, while it is the organ of a particular branch of the church of God, will "contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Its columns will be open for a fair discussion of the doctrines advocated by it. In all our labors we hope to be guided by the spirit of the Gospel, and if we can be successful in promoting practical religion, and induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be gratified.

We are grateful for the approbation and support of our readers, and hope to receive their continued support. All who will aid us in procuring subscribers, and making remittances, shall be duly rewarded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence.

MARRIED,

In Charlestown, R. I., on the 6th ult., by Eld. D. Coon, Mr. JOHN T. THURSTON, of Westerly, and Miss MARTHA, daughter of Jared Babcock.

DIED,

At [illegible] Mr. [illegible] DOLPH, aged 54 years.

[illegible] STEPHEN CLARKE [illegible] Mr. Clarke [illegible] Madison County [illegible] Day Baptist [illegible]

[illegible] West [illegible] ALMIRA [illegible]

LIST OF LETTERS.

[illegible]

LIST OF [illegible]

[illegible] W. R. W[illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

IMPORTANT WORK

[illegible]

Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

[illegible]
By ANDREW [illegible]

Illustrated with 1241 Engravings

THIS [illegible] community. The following [illegible] jects which the [illegible]

1st. To [illegible] Manufacturers [illegible] and Tradesmen [illegible] processes [illegible]

2nd. To [illegible] Merchants, Brokers, Drysalters, Druggists, and Officers of the Revenue, characteristic descriptions of the commodities which pass through their hands.

3dly. By exhibiting some of the finest developements of Chemistry and Physics, to lay open an excellent practical school to Students of these kindred sciences.

4thly. To teach Capitalists, who may [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] New-York.

 To every editor who gives this advertisement entire 12 insertions, we will forward [illegible] copy of the whole work, [illegible] taining this notice be sent to the New-York Watchman, New-York.

UNITED STATES'
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL,
ONE MILLION OF DOLLARS!!!
Incorporated by the State of New York, May 31, 1837, For Twenty-one Years.
CHARTER RENEWED AND AMENDED MAY 5th, 1840,
COMBINING
FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE
SHARES $100 EACH.

10 per cent to be paid or secured on subscription.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully informed that the time allowed under the amendment of the charter of this company for completing the subscriptions to their stock, will expire by limitation on the 5th day of May next; in the meanwhile, their books will continue open until the full amount of capital shall have been duly subscribed.

Subscriptions are authorized by the 10th Section of their charter, to be "paid in, or secured to be paid either in stocks of the United States, or the public stocks created by this or any other state, or in the stock of any incorporated bank of this or any other state, which shall be at par in the New York market at the time or in the stock of the corporation of the city of New York, or on bond and mortgage or unincumbered real estate of this state, of the value of fifty per cent. more than the amount loaned thereon, exclusive of buildings, unless the same shall be insured from loss by fire, or in specie, certified checks, or current bank bills."

Should the full amount of capital not be subscribed in cash payments, or secured by bank city, or state stocks, as above described, on or before the 15th day of March, the balance will be filled by [illegible] mortgages on unincumbered real estate within the [illegible] New York [illegible] the company [illegible] capital [illegible] the full amount [illegible] city, or state [illegible] March, then [illegible] without receiving [illegible]

[illegible]

Commissioners,
[illegible],
A. [illegible] H. SMITH,
[illegible],
[illegible] MASTEN,
[illegible] ATKINS,
[illegible]
[illegible] RICK,
[illegible] GREENFIELD,
[illegible] R. AVERILL,
[illegible]

[illegible] 50tf.

AUCTION SALE.

W[illegible] at the house of [illegible] March next, [illegible] A. D. Blye, in the [illegible] with one acre of [illegible] good repair [illegible]

A. D. BLYE.
[illegible] 42w6.

WANTED.

A [illegible] to learn [illegible] JAMES M. [illegible]

H[illegible] PHELPS' [illegible] The experience [illegible] corrective [illegible] quiescent remedy [illegible] dose will save [illegible] long [illegible] suffering. The same Pills are extensively [illegible] as a Female Physic.—Tuscaloosa Gazette.

For sale by [illegible] ELMORE.
[illegible] Jan. 26, 1842.

VALUABLE FARM FOR SALE.

THE [illegible] farm [illegible] west of [illegible] De Ruyter [illegible] well [illegible] grain [illegible] one hundred [illegible] about 50 or 60 [illegible] containing about [illegible] There is also a [illegible] low, [illegible]

[illegible] BUTTS.

N[illegible] ANNAS & AYER, are [illegible] for settlement, [illegible] previous to [illegible] remaining [illegible] with the proper [illegible]
[illegible] ELMORE,
[illegible] ANNAS,
[illegible] WILLIAM J. AYER.

M[illegible] Ladies Gaiter Boots [illegible] Shoes a little better [illegible]
[illegible] STONE STORE.

L[illegible] Edged Tools [illegible] Hand Axes, Adzes, &c. [illegible]
[illegible] N. ELMORE,
Manufacturers' Agent.

LOOK HERE.

ALL persons indebted to the subscriber, by note [illegible] to call and settle [illegible] before the first of January next.
G. W. SUTTON.

NO IMPOSITION.
NO STATES PRISON WORK!

THOSE wishing to purchase BOOTS and SHOES of superior quality of custom work, will [illegible] by calling at the sign of the
MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, Oct. 21, 1841.

"Lovers of Good Tea"

WILL find 10 per cent cheaper at S. D. DELLAY'S than at the Stone Store.

JUST received one case Children's Shoes, for sale very cheap at the
Nov. 16, 1841. FARMERS EXCHANGE.

50 PIECES BROAD CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATINETTES, at reduced prices at the NEW YORK CASH STORE.

FOR SALE.

A VERY VALUABLE HOUSE LOT, cheap enough, situated first Lot south of the S. D. Baptist Meeting-house, containing nearly three-fourths of an acre, being about six rods in front.—Apply to Lauren H. Babcock. 34tf
De Ruyter, Oct. 17, 1841. Wm. MAXSON.

FOR SALE.

A FIRST rate Cutter. Terms of payment to suit the purchaser. Enquire at this office.
Jan 18, 1842. 47tas

CASH will be paid for Pork, Oats, Timothy Seed, and most kinds of produce at the
NEW-YORK CASH STORE.

POETRY.

The Goblet of Life.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Filled is life's goblet to the brim;
And though my eyes with tears are dim,
I see its sparkling bubbles swim,
And chant this melancholy hymn,
With solemn voice and slow.
No purple flowers, no garlands green
Conceal the goblet's shade or sheen,
Nor maddening draughts of Hippocrene,
Like gleams of sunshine flash between
The leaves of mistletoe.

This goblet, wrought with curious art,
Is filled with waters that upstart,
When the deep fountains of the heart,
By strong convulsions rent apart,
Are running all to waste;
And, as it mantling passes round,
With fennel is it wreathed and crowned,
Whose seed and foliage, sun-imbrowned,
Are in its waters steeped and drowned,
And give a bitter taste.

Above the humbler plants it towers,
The fennel with, its yellow flowers;
And in an earlier age than ours
Was gifted with the wondrous powers
Lost vision to restore;
It gave new strength and fearless mood,
And gladiators fierce and rude
Mingled in it their daily food;
And he who battled and subdued
A wreath of fennel wore.

Then in life's goblet freely press
The leaves that give it bitterness,
Nor prize the colored waters less,
For in thy darkness and distress
New light and strength they give.
For he who has not learned to know
How false its sparkling bubbles show,
How bitter are the drops of woe
With which its brim may overflow,
He has not learned to live!

The prayer of Ajax was for light!
Through all the dark and desperate fight,
The blackness of that noon-day night,
He asked but the return of sight
To know his foeman's face.
Let our unceasing, earnest prayer
Be, too for light, and strength to bear
Our portion of the weight of care
That crushes into dumb despair
One half the human race.

Oh, suffering, sad humanity!
Oh, ye afflicted ones who lie
Steeped to the lips in misery,
Longing, and yet afraid to die,
Ye have been severely tried!
I pledge you in your cup of grief,
Where floats the fennel's bitter leaf!
The battle of our life is brief—
The alarm—the struggle—the relief—
Then sleep we side by side.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Ithaca Journal.

TRIAL OF KING ALCOHOL.

The People, versus, Lucifer Alcohol. } Indictment for Larceny, Robbery, Arson, and Murder; found by the Grand Inquest of the People, endorsed "A True Bill, Silas Hutchinson, Foreman."

This trial had been set down for Saturday evening last, at 7 o'clock, at the Baptist Meeting House, in this village. So great was the interest excited, to hear the testimony in this cause, that long before the hour of trial arrived, the house was crowded to the extent of its capacity—a house capable of seating as large an audience as any in this village—and after the aisles and passages, as well as the seats, were filled, very many were obliged to retire because they could not obtain an entrance.

Judges Dana and Walbridge, and Mr. Justice Hall, presided.

Counsel for the People, B. G. Ferris, Esq. Dist. Atty. G. D. Beers, Esq. and F. W. Graves.

For the defense, Levi Hubbell, and Wm. Linn, Esqs.

At 7 o'clock, Judge Dana stated the cause to be tried. The District Attorney moved that a Jury be empanneled; which having been done, by devolving the solemn duty upon the Sovereign People in attendance, Judge Dana warned the Jurors against the indulgence of any prejudices, or any expressions of approbation or disapprobation, pending the trial.

The District Attorney proceeded to open the cause for the people, and to state the charges against the prisoner at the bar, and the proof by which he expected to sustain them. As setting forth the charges more fully and distinctly, he read the following indictment;

Tompkins county, to wit:—The Jurors for the People of the State of New York upon their oaths present, that Lucifer Alcohol, alias Whiskey, alias Rum, alias Wine, alias Beer, and alias a thousand names beside, not of any particular parish, town or county but wandering in the world at large, a manufacturer of cripples, delirum tremens, and diseases in general, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, on the first day of January instant, being the first day of the New Year, at the town of Ithaca, in the co. of Tompkins, in and upon one Simon Softone, then not being in the peace of God and the said people of the State of New York, feloniously, wilfully, and of malice aforethought did make an assault; and that the said Lucifer Alcohol, alias Whiskey, alias Rum, alias Wine, alias Beer, and alias a thousand names beside, with a certain pint-cup, of the value of six-pence, which he the said Lucifer Alcohol in his right hand then and there had and held, the said Simon Softone in and upon the throat and stomach of him the said Simon Softone then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did then and there the contents of the said pint-cup pour down, well knowing that the pint-cup aforesaid contained a deadly poison called Gin, or Blue Ruin, by means whereof he the said Simon Softone then and there became sick and greatly distempered in his body; and the said Simon Softone of the poison aforesaid so by him the said Lucifer Alcohol on the throat and stomach of him the said Simon Softone forced down as aforesaid, and of the sickness occasioned thereby, from the first day of January instant until the twenty eighth day of the same month, at the town aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, did languish, and of the said poison on that day did die, and so the Jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do say that the said Lucifer Alcohol, alias Whiskey, alias Rum, alias Wine, alias Beer, and alias a thousand names beside, the said Simon Softone in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the peace of the people of the State of New York and their dignity.

And the Jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present, that the said Lucifer Alcohol, heretofore, to wit, on the 29th day of January, [illegible] and upon divers other days and times, from thence to the day of finding of this bill of indictment, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but of his own [illegible] and depraved mind, and being thereunto moved and instigated by the seductions of the devil, has caused to be committed by various individuals, at sundry times and places, the crimes of murder, arson, burglary, robbery, theft, fraud, riot, assault and battery, and other felonies and misdemeanors, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of the people of the state of New York, and their dignity. B. G. FERRIS, Dist. Att'y.

Nathaniel Curtis, called—Used to stay in Ithaca—now lives here. Knows prisoner for Alcohol, and has known Simon Softone. Has been acquainted with Alcohol [illegible] years. Alcohol made him many fair promises, got him into many scrapes, but never got him out. He got him out of cash, out of credit, and out of character—always pretended to be his friend—frequently threw him down, and laughed at his efforts to get up again, all in professed friendship, but always mocking at his distress. Simon Softone is dead—his death was occasioned by drugs administered by the agents of Alcohol. The Agents induced him to try the drugs, telling him they were good for him. They had signs out, as for Brandreth's Pills, &c. They took no care of him in his sickness—said good enough for him, poor dog, let him die. Saw Simon lying down in the street myself—near Herrick's corner.

Cross examined—Has [illegible] quarrel and falling out [illegible] witness and Alcohol—has denounced him publicly. Alcohol solicited him to continue his friendship, and repeat his draughts. Simon died near Herrick's corner—two of Alcohol's agents were there. Thinks his mind is free from prejudice against Alcohol, but has great enmity towards him.—Alcohol, disturbed no one unless meddled with—people would embitter his feelings, and pour water on his head.

Direct resumed—Alcohol held out artful inducements—caught witness repeatedly in some trap—drew wool over his eyes, and that even before he drew mouth over him. His friends had given him a roving commission—they say Supervisors and Justices were paid for it. The money goes to support the poor whom Alcohol has lamed and impoverished. None of it was applied to pay for the coffin of Softone, or his funeral expenses. Alcohol dont persuade any one to take his drugs, after his money is gone.

Dr. J. E. Hawley called—Is a Physician—knows the prisoner—has been acquainted with the drugs spoken of—they produce very many diseases—take away the senses and the judgement—describes many of the diseases thus produced. Knew Simon—found him once when Alcohol had taken possession of his stomach—would have died then if he had not pumped him out.

Cross examined—Feels a natural enmity to Alcohol, on account of his bad deeds—the world would be benefitted to have him banished. Almost any medicines could be prepared without him. In some cases he has done good deeds, but other agents would have done as well had he been absent. Has various colors: red, white, yellow, and has sometimes seen him look pretty blue. The practice of Alcohol promotes his practice—gives him many patients. In a pecuniary point of view, Alcohol is his friend. Has found him in the best of society; but he always did more mischief than good. Has heard of people being killed by drinking cold water, but doubtful if the cold water killed them unless Alcohol, by his mixture, had prepared the way. Alcohol had malice—cold water not. Proportion of deaths by cold water to those of Alcohol, is small—say 1 to 1,000. About one half of the deaths are produced directly or indirectly by Alcohol.

Geo. G. Freer, Esq., called—Knows Alcohol—his general character is bad—his drugs produce deleterious effects—he seduces the unwary and ingratiates himself in their confidence. Alcohol has been the means of taking money from his pocket—has made his head ache—has known him to have been guilty of all the crimes charged to him in the indictment, and all in the calendar of crime.

Cross examined—Is a member of a society to put down Lucifer Alcohol, but sees no reason why he can not have a fair trial. Thinks Lucifer a very proper name for him. He is commissioned to kill and destroy—the laws of the state require taverns—[illegible]

[illegible]

Wm. Linn, Esq. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Jury [illegible] returned a verdict of GUILTY.

Judge Walbridge pronounced the sentence of the court. [illegible] Lucifer Alcohol [illegible] convenient dispatch [illegible] to the [illegible] Lake, and there, by the proper [illegible] in good cold water until he [illegible] dead, dead.

ANTIQUITIES OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

We listened last evening, [illegible] and pleasure to the [illegible] Mr. Stephens, on the [illegible] America, delivered [illegible] before a [illegible] We have read [illegible] of Captain [illegible] Charles [illegible] recent wo[illegible] Mexican [illegible] published a [illegible] various correspondence from [illegible] principally addressed to the late Dr. Mitchell, and have always felt the deepest interest in the subject; but here we had before us two living witnesses of the mighty ruins of an unknown people on our own continent—Messrs. Stephens and Catherwood, both distinguished travelers, who had in their time visited Thebes and Memphis, the pyramids and all the wonders of Egypt, and consequently, were in every respect well qualified not only to explore, but by comparison to throw great light on the architecture and character of those mighty ruins by which they are surrounded. These enterprising travelers encountered the greatest dificulties in penetrating what may be deemed a vast wilderness of forests, having ignorant Indians as guides, and no means of clearing the ruins of the immense trees and thick underwood which almost obscured them from the sight within the distance of a few hundred yards. The first ruins visited were those of Copan, then Pa-[illegible]

[illegible]

GEMS FROM [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] others cringe and crawl. Wrap yourself in your own virtue, and seek a friend and your daily bread. If you have, in such a course, grown gray with unbleached honor, bless God, and die.—Heinzelmann.

We celebrate nobler obsequies to those we love by drying the tears of others, than by shedding our own; and the fairest funeral wreath we can hang on their tomb, is not so fair as a fruit-offering of good deeds. —Jean Paul.

There are so many tender and holy emotions flying about in our inward world, which, like angels, can never assume the body of an outward act; so many rich and lovely flowers spring up which bear no seed, that it is happiness poetry was invented, which receives into its limbus all these incorporeal spirits, and the perfume of all these flowers.—Jean Paul.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DRUGS & MEDICINES.

[illegible] January 17, 1842.

[illegible]

Doctor Bishop's	[illegible] Liquid Opo-
Chessman's Arabian [illegible]	deldoc
Dr Phelps's [illegible]	Dr. McMunn's Elixir
Mr. Griffin's [illegible]	Opium
[illegible] the Day	" Hive Syrup,
Dr. [illegible]'s	" Laudanum,
Moffat's Veget. Life	Paregoric,
Gregory's Balsam	Oil Organum,
Harlem Oil	" Spike,
British [illegible]	" Lemon,
Pectoral Balm Honey	" Anise

The above are but a few of the articles to be found in his extensive stock of Medicines.

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heels occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible]

[illegible] P. M.

[illegible]

[illegible] P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

[illegible] WEEKLY

[illegible] CO., N. Y.,

JAMES BAILEY.

[illegible] subscribers who have the [illegible] $2 25, in advance, or $2 50 at the expiration of the year.

To other and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO 52.] JAMES BAILEY, Editor and Proprietor.—A. H. BURDICK, Printer. WHOLE NO. 1[illegible]4

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., FOURTH-DAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1842. $2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Gleanings from Letters from Palmyra.

NUMBER III.

BY MARY.

Visit of Piso, Julia, and Fausta to the cell of St. Thomas, the hermit.

We reached the front of the grotto without disturbing the meditations of the venerable man. A part of the rock which formed his dwelling served him for a seat, and another part projecting after the manner of a shelf, served him for a table, upon which lay unrolled a large volume. Bending over the book, his lean and shrivelled finger pointing to the words, and aiding his now dim and feeble eye, he seemed wholly wrapt in the truths he was contemplating, and heeded not our presence. At length raising his eyes from the page, they caught the form and face of the princess Julia who stood nearest him. A quick and benignant smile lighted up his features, and rising slowly to his full height, he bade her welcome with sweet and tremulous tones to his humble roof. 'We almost doubted,' said I, 'venerable Father, whether it would please you to find beneath your roof those who receive not your belief, and what is much more, belong to a faith which has poured upon you and yours so full a flood of suffering and reproach. But your countenance assures us that we have erred.'—'You have, indeed,' replied the sage: 'as a Christian I see in you not pagans and unbelievers, not followers of Plato and Epicurus, not dwellers in Rome or Alexandria, but members of the great family of man, and as such I greet you, and already love you. The design of Christianity is to unite and draw together, not divide and drive asunder. It teaches its disciples, indeed, to go out and convert the world, but if they cannot convert it, it still teaches them to love it. My days and my strength have been spent in preaching Christ to Jews and heathen, and many of those who have heard have believed. But more have not. These are not my brethren in Christ, but they are my brethren in God, and I love them as his.' 'But is it not,' said Fausta, 'a mark of imperfection in your religion that it cannot control and bind to a perfect life its disciples? Methinks a divine religion should manifest its divinity in the superior goodness which it forms?' 'A divine religion,' he replied, 'may indeed be expected to show its heaven-derived power in creating a higher virtue than human systems. And this I am sure Christianity does. I may safely challenge the world to show in human form the perfection which dwelt in Jesus, the founder of this religion. Yet his character was formed by the power of his own doctrines. Among his followers, if there have been none so perfect as he, there have been multitudes who have approached him, and have exhibited a virtue which was once thought to belong only to philosophers. The world has been accustomed to celebrate, with almost divine honors, Socrates, and chiefly because of the greatness of mind displayed by him when condemned to drink the cup of poison. I can tell you of thousands among the christians, among common and unlearned christians, who have met death in forms many times more horrible than that in which the Greek encountered it, with equal calmness and serenity. This they have been enabled to do, simply through the divine force of a few great truths which they have implicitly believed. Beside this, consider the many usages of the world, which, while others hold them innocent, the christians condemn them, and abstain from them. It is not to be denied that they are the reformers of the age. They are busy, sometimes with an indiscreet and violent zeal, in new-modeling both the opinions and practices of the world. But what then? Are they to be condemned if a single fault may be charged upon them? Must they be perfect because their religion is divine? This might be so, if it were of the nature of religion to operate with an irresistible influence upon the mind, producing an involuntary and forced obedience. A religion, for the reason it is divine, will, with the more certainty, make its appeals to a free nature. It will explain the nature and reveal the consequences of virtue and vice, but will leave the mind free to choose the one or the other. Christianity teaches that in goodness, and faithfulness to the sense of duty, lies the chief good; in these there is a heaven of reward, not only now, and on earth, but throughout an existence truly immortal. Is it not most evident, that with whatever authority this religion may propound its doctrines, men not being in a single power coerced, will not, though they may receive them, yield to them an equal observance? Hence, even among christians, there must be, perhaps ever, much imperfection.'

'Does not this appear to you, Fausta, and Piso,' said Julia, as the old man paused, 'just and reasonable? Can it be an objection to this faith that its disciples partake of the common weaknesses of humanity? Otherwise, religion would be a principle designed not so much to improve and exalt our nature, as to alter it.' 'We allow it readily to be both just and reasonable. But it seemed to us,' said Fausta, 'as we ascended the mountain, and were conversing, to be with certainty a proof of imperfection in your religion—pardon my freedom, we are come as learners, and they who would learn, must, without restraint, express their doubts—that it recommended or permitted a recluse and inactive life. Have your days, Father, been passed in this deep solitude? and has your religion demanded it?

'Your freedom pleases me,' replied the venerable man, 'and I wonder not at the question you propose. Not my religion, lady, but an enfeebled and decrepit frame chains me to this solitude. I have now outlasted a century, and my powers are wasted and gone. I can do little more than sit and ponder the truths of this life-giving book, and anticipate the renewed activity of that immortal being which it promises. It is not my religion that prescribes this manner of life, or permits it, but as the last refuge of an imbecility like mine. Christianity denounces selfishness in all its forms, and what form of selfishness more gross than to spend the last of one's days in solitary musing and prayer, all to secure one's own salvation? The founder of this religion led an active and laborious life. He did good not only to himself by prayer and meditation; he went about doing it to others—seeking out objects whom he might benefit and bless. His life was one of active benevolence, and the record of that life is the religious code of his followers. No condemnation could be more severe than that which the Prophet of Nazareth would pronounce upon such a life as mine now is, were it a chosen, voluntary one. But it never has been voluntary. Till age dried up the sources of my strength, I toiled night and day, in all countries and climates, in the face of every danger, in the service of mankind. For it is by serving others the law of Christ is fulfilled. Disinterested labor for others, constituted the greatness of Jesus Christ. This constitutes true greatness in his followers. Such is the doctrine of christianity. It utterly condemns, therefore, a life of solitary devotion. It is a mischievous influence which is now spreading outward from the example of that Paul, who suffered so much under [illegible] persecution of the Emperor Decius, and who, then, flying to the solitudes of the Egyptian Thebais, has there, in the vigor of his days, buried himself in a cave of the earth, that he may serve God by forsaking man. His maxim seems to be, "The farther from man, the nearer to God,"—the reverse of the christian maxim, "The nearer man, the nearer God." A disciple of Jesus has truly said, He who loves not his brother whom he hath seen, how shall he love God whom he hath not seen.

Upon Fausta's expressing a doubt that she should ever be a christian, the mind demanding so great an amount of evidence to believe its founder held direct communication with God, the hermit replies, Christianity, lady, asks no forced or faint assent. It appeals to human reason, and it blames not the conscientious doubter or denier.—When it requires you to examine, and constitutes you judge, it condemns no honest decision. The mind that approaches christianity must be free, and ought to be fearless. Hesitate not to reject that which evidence does not substantiate; but examine and weigh well the testimony. If, then, you would know [illegible] christianity be true, [illegible] is first of all needful that you read a[nd] ponder the christian books. These [illegible] prove themselves. The religion of [illegible] is felt to be true as you read the [illegible] in which it is recorded. [J]ust as [the wor]ks of nature prove to the contem[plative] mind the being of a God, so do the [illegible] the christians prove the truth of [illegible]. As you read the[m], as your m[illegible] and above all, the character of Christ, you involuntarily exclaim, "This must be true; the sun in the heavens does not more clearly point to a divine author, than do the contents of these books."

On the Historical Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Religion.

LECTURE I.—THE GENUINENESS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

BY G. M. LANG[illegible]THY.

[Continued.]

In the different pieces which make up the canon of the New Testament, we find the conditions of the first rule fulfilled; i. e., each author's name is found in that part attributed to him.

The second and third laws we shall find fulfilled in the following manner, viz: 1. Quotations from the books of the New Testament by contemporary and subsequent writers, who name the authors quoted. 2. Quotations introduced by the words, "As it is written," without naming the particular author quoted. 3. There are numerous allusions to the different parts of the New Testament in almost all the writings of the early fathers, in which there is no express citation, b[illegible]ontain the sentiment, and eve[illegible] of the New Testament, [illegible] and with such precisio[n] [illegible] no doubt that they were co[illegible] common original which w[illegible] high estimation at the time of [illegible]ting.

1. There is extant an epistle of Barnabas, the companion of Paul, in [which] may be found the following passag[e] [illegible] us, therefore, beware lest it come [illegible], as it is written, There are man[y] [called], few chosen." Now from the expression, "as it is written," we infer that there was, at the time in which Barnabas wrote, viz: soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, a book well known and highly esteemed among Christians which contained the phrase, "many are called, few chosen." B[y] inspecting the Gospel of Matthew, w[e find] this passage twice repeated, once in [chap.] 20, verse 16, and once in chap. 2[2, verse] 14; and it is a singular circumst[ance that] it is not to be found in any other b[ook] known, except it be found as a q[uotation]. It should not be forgotten, while lis[tening] to the testimony of Barnabas, that he was a Jew, and that the phrase, "as it is written," was the very form in which the Jews quoted their scriptures. It is probable, therefore, that the book from which he quoted, had obtained a scriptural authority. In the same epistle we find the following phrase, which is also found in Matthew v. 42: "Give to every one that asketh thee." Also this same Barnabas says, Christ chose as his apostles, who were to preach the gospel, men who were great sinners, that he might show that he came "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." See Matt. ix. 13.

2. St Clement, Bishop of Rome, who is by all ancient authors admitted to be the same whom Paul mentions in Phil. iv. 3, in a letter to the church of Rome, refers to Paul's epistle to that church: "Take into your hands the epistle of the blessed Paul, the apostle." This reference of Clement to Paul's epistle to the Romans, is very conclusive, as it furnishes us not only his direct evidence, but also the tacit acknowledgment of the whole Roman Church, that they were then in possession of Paul's epistles to that church. Would Clement have dared to refer them to an epistle of which they had never heard? And think you that this church, composed as it was of Jews, and Gentiles, would have become the dupes of so glaring an imposition as that of being recommended to an epistle in their possession, when there was no such document among them? No. Such sophistry would have opened their eyes, and roused their indignation against such subtile perpetrators of lies. Their receiving Clement's [illegible] then, is no more and no less tha[n] [illegible] [ackno]wledgment on their part that the[y] [illegible] then in their possession an epistle written by Paul. He also introduces in this same letter many passages which are found in Matt., and one in Paul's first epistle [to the] Corinthians. The following are some of his quotations:—"Be ye merciful that ye may obtain mercy;" "forgive, [illegible] may be forgiven unto you;" "[illegible] man by whom offenses co[me] [illegible] better for him that he had n[ot been born] than that he should offend o[ne of my elect]; it were better for him that a [millstone] be should be tied about his neck, and that he should be drowned in the sea, than that he should offend one of my little ones."

[3.] Ignatius, who be[came Bis]hop of Antioch about thirty-seve[n years aft]er the ascension of Christ, m[illegible]ted allusions to the gospels of [illegible] and John. He says, Christ was ba[ptized of] John, that all righteousness might b[e fulfille]d of him. See Matt. iii. 15 for this same expression. Again, he says, Be ye wise as serpents in all things, and harmless as doves. The same will be found in Matt. x. 16. Again, there is an obvious allusion to John iii. 8, in the following. Yet the Spirit is not deceived, being from God, for it knows whence it comes and whither it goes. Ignatius in one place speaks of St. Paul in terms of high respect, and mentions his epistle to the Ephesians by name, and in other places borrows words and sentiments from this same epistle without mentioning it, which shows that he was in the habit of using writings without giving credit for them, as was also others in those times.

4. Polycarp, who was conversant with the apostles, and who saw Christ, has one short epistle, which contains about forty allusions to the books of the New Testament. Among these are undoubted allusions to many of the writings of St. Paul, and to the gospels of Matthew, and Luke, which are too numerous to repeat.

5. Papias, a hearer of John, and companion of Polycarp, in a passage quoted by Eusebius, expressly ascribes to Matthew, and Mark, the gospels claimed to have been written by them. Proceeding upon the general notoriety of these gospels, he says, that Mark collected his account from Peter's preaching, and that Matthew wrote in Hebrew. Would Papias have made such an assertion as this, if there had not been at that time, extant, such works as the gospels of Matthew and Mark?

6. About twenty years later, we have the tes[timony] of Justin Martyn, who calls the bo[oks of th]e New Testament, "Memoirs composed by the apostles and their companions." He also makes between twenty [and] thirty quotations from the gospels and [Acts o]f the Apostles.

[7.] About the year 170, the churches of [Lyons] and Vienna, of France, sent to the [churche]s of Asia, and Phrygia, a relation [of th]e sufferings of their martyrs. And [what] carries the testimony of these two churches to an earlier date, is, that Pothinus their Bishop was about ninety years old, and, consequently, his early life extends back nearly to the time of the apostles. In the letter of these churches are exact references to the gospels of Luke and John, and to the Acts of the Apostles.

8. Irenæus succeeded Ponthinus as Bishop of Lyons. He was in his youth a disciple of Polycarp, and Polycarp was a disciple of John, so that Ireneus may be considered as only one step removed from the days of the apostles. His testimony is full and convincing. "We have not re[illegible]ceived the knowledge of the way of our salvation by any o[thers tha]n those by whom the gospel has [been brough]t to us. Which gospel they firs[t preached], and afterwards by the will of God committed to writing, that it might be for time to come the foundation and pillar of our faith. For after that, our Lord rose from the dead, and they were endowed from above with the power of the Holy Ghost coming down upon them, they received a perfect knowledge of all things. They then went forth to all the ends of the earth, declaring to men the blessings of heavenly peace, having all of them, and each alike, the gospel of God. Matthew [illegible] then, among the Jews, wrote a gos[pel i]n their own language, while Peter a[nd] Paul were preaching the gospel at R[ome], and founding a church there. A[nd] [illegible] ex[illegible]k, also the disc[iple and inter]preter of Peter, delivered [to us] in writing, the things that had been preached by Peter. And Luke, the companion of Paul, put down in a book the gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also leaned upon his breast, he hi[mself publi]shed a gospel while he dwelt [illegible] [A]sia."

[illegible] [g]oes to prove that the[illegible] or less tha[n] fou[r] [illegible] might be, his pos[illegible] at his time, neither [illegible] [tha]n four gospels which were [illegible] acknowledged. That these were the very identical gospels which are extant now, is manifest not only from what we have already quoted, but also from the following: He mentions how [illegible] begins his gospel, how Mark b[egins] an[d] ends his. He enumerates the se[veral] passages of Chr[illegible] which a[illegible] be fo[und] [illegible] de[illegible] [illegible]al dec[illegible] [illegible]e. He [illegible] Apostles in [illegible] understood, fo[r] [illegible] the whole of th[illegible] of that book. It stre[ngthens] [illegible] of the authors above quoted that they lived in different countries. It shows also that the historical writings of the New Testament were universally known as the productions of the disciples of Christ. Clement lived at Rome, Ignatius at Antioch, Polycarp at Smyrna, Justin in Syria, and Irenæus in France.

The following sentence was accidentally omitted last week in the second general head before the first division:—"This being premised, we may state the following as the conditions upon which any written document of antiquity may be confidently relied upon as being the production of its professed author."

[Concluded in [illegible].]

Children's Department.

From the Youth's [illegible]

TRYING TO THINK.

'Mother,' said Lucy, and then stopped for some time. 'Mother, do you not think it very difficult to be patient?'

'Yes, my dear, very difficult, but not impossible, as you once thought, you remember. So I hope you are really improving.'

'I hope I am, mother; but this morning I was very cross to Anne, because she could not find her bonnet when school was done. Oh, I kept scolding to myself till she came, and then I pinched her hard, so that she cried. I did not mean to pinch her exactly, but it would pinch. Do you think, mother, I shall ever be good and gentle?' continued Lucy in a very sad tone.

'It would pinch, Lucy; what do you mean? What would pinch? Your fingers did not pinch all of themselves, did they, my child?'

'Oh no, mother! I suppose it was my temper that made them; but I really did not mean to let Anne see me cross, for she is so little; but mother it would come out!'

'You must not feel cross, Lucy; the feeling must be subdued before you can expect to act right. Some people very foolishly imagine that it is no matter how much sin they have in their hearts provided they appear right; but, in fact, sinful conduct always flows from sinful feeling.'

'Mother, will you just tell me once again how I can feel right? Encourage me, mother. Do you not think I have improved some, a very, very little?'

'The first thing, my child, is, to ask the aid of the Almighty. Go to him, confess your sin, tell him how weak, and feeble, and unavailing your efforts are, and that you need his grace to assist you. When you have done this, try to banish this sin; you will then find it easier to do so. Whenever cross and impatient feelings are coming into the mind, try and turn your attention immediately to something else; banish them as quick as possible, by supplying their place with something cheerful and pleasant.'

'Yes, mother; now when I was cross to Anne, I should have considered how little she is, and that she did not mean to make me wait.'

'Exactly so, my dear; I see you understand how to correct your faults; and now, if knowing the right, you still pursue the wrong, I shall very much fear that you have not that strong desire for improvement which you say you have.'

Lucy sat in silence for some time until she finished her work, seemingly in deep thought upon what they had been conversing upon.

'Where is Anne?' inquired her mother—'she has been gone for some time. Run and find her, Lucy.'

'It is strange we did not miss her before, mother, but I guess she is in the garden.' Away Lucy went to the garden, whose alleys and walks she searched and searched, but in vain, for the little one was away. She called her name in the barn, the wood-house, the yard, and round the house, but no Anne appeared. It certainly was very strange where she could be. They concluded she must have fallen asleep. Lucy at last thought of going up stairs to her baby house, not that she expected that Anne could be there, for she never went up two pairs of stairs into the third story alone, where the baby house was. As Lucy approached the chamber, she thought she heard a slight chuckle of delight. Creeping along, she threw open the door, and there she saw, to her dismay, her sister sitting down in the middle of the floor, with Lucy's dearest and choicest doll in her hand, a doll which Lucy never permitted her to play with, but only to lay in her lap to see how pretty its face was. Lucy's wax doll! Lucy had never had one before, and wax dolls were very rare then.—The beautiful wax doll, which was only set up for show! It was too nice and handsome to touch. The wax doll in such a condition! one leg was on the floor at the side of Anne, and the other lay all crumpled up in her lap. [Its] beautiful eyes were gone, [for Anne] had pushed her little fingers into its [eyes to] make it wink. One arm was hanging down, and as Lucy entered, she held the body of the doll in one hand, and the broken arm in the other, high in the air, a[nd] [gre]atly gratified with the havoc she had made! What a scene for Lucy's impatience or forbearance!

'Oh Anne,' she screamed, 'you Anne!' and she flew towards the alarmed child, while rage distorted every feature of her fine face. Little Anne's frightened, surprised, beseeching, and still innocent look recalled Lucy to herself, before she had [illegible] her hands on her. She stopped, [illegible] at once the work of destruction, and ran out of the room. What a conflict [illegible] the little baby-house witness! — [illegible] up to a seat in her own chamber, and sat down upon a trunk, determined to stay there till she felt calm again. Rage, revenge, and impatience were fiercely contending with the better principles of heart. 'Anne did not mean any thing. Anne did not mean to hurt the doll,' she said once and again. 'She should be reprimanded by my [mother] at any rate; I am not the one who should strike her.' Lucy lifted up her heart in prayer and thankfulness; thankfulness that she was restrained at all, and prayer for renewed strength. It was an hour before Lucy appeared in the parlor, and the sweet and subdued expression on that [illegible] upon her face showed that her efforts had not been in vain. It was a hard struggle, but she had conquered.

Lucy's example, and it is a real example, teaches every child that it is in her power to eradicate her faults. Lucy was in earnest about being a better girl, and from being petulant, impatient, and angry, she grew to be gentle, forbearing, and lovely.

Religious Department.

From the [illegible] Reflector.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

We love the prayer meeting. We love to steal away from all conflicting scenes, and distracting associations, of this busy world, and mingle our better thoughts and feelings with the fervent aspirations of humble and devoted Christians. We love the seclusion, the simplicity, the variety, the sociability of the prayer-meeting. But sometimes that is called a prayer-meeting which does not deserve the name. It wants all the characteristics of social devotion. Whoever resorts to it expecting a "refreshing season," will return sick with disappointment. Prayers are offered—but they are cold as ice and tedious as winter. A hymn is sung—but is from five to seven stanzas long and is drawled out like the [illegible] of a [illegible]— An exhortation is made—but not having any warmth itself, it has no power to communicate warmth to those who hear it. A few are ready to [illegible], and those who do [illegible] impelled to exertion by the necessity of the case, and not by a "hidden fire" within. Every feeling seems attuned to the words (which most likely are sung)

[illegible]

There is no promptitude, no sympathy, no fervor, no faith. This is not the prayer-meeting which won us to the love of social devotion. It never won any body to the love or practice of any thing good. Meetings conducted with such a spirit, and in such a manner, are a dishonor to Christianity, and an offense to God.

The prayer-meeting that attracts and blesses—that answers the end for which seasons of social worship were designed—in the first place, commences at the hour appointed. Few of those who attend it enter after that hour. In the second place, the prayers are all short—never exceeding five or eight minutes. In the third place, they are simple and fervent. The petitioners speak like children, pleading with an affectionate father, and though their devotions are short, they seem to have imbibed the spirit which says, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." Each one has a particular and definite errand. Instead of praying for every thing they can think of, and for many things over and over again, one prays especially for the young, another for the church, another for the congregation, another for unconverted relatives, and another for a blessing on the preached word. These prayers are interspersed with brief and well-timed remarks—not a long and dry dissertation on some doctrinal point, but "a word of exhortation," short, pithy and pointed. The brethren who speak could occupy an hour, for their hearts are full, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth" is readily supplied; but they know better than thus to spoil the variety and harmony of the interview. All they utter is the single thought with which they are at the time most deeply impressed—the rich promise on which they have fed during the day—or the solemn truth, whose importance ought now most deeply to be felt—or a fact, the communication of which will produce joy, or stimulate to exertion. There is singing three or four times during the meeting; but only two or three stanzas are sung at once, and these are familiar and appropriate. The meeting is lively. No time is lost in waiting. It is various. Many are permitted to take part in its exercises. The most fastidious will not complain of it; for if some weak or illiterate brethren are heard, they are so short, that before any one has had time to get "nervous," they are through, and another is at prayer. Finally, the meeting itself is short—an hour and a quarter, at the longest. And so pleasantly has the time elapsed, that all are both surprised and sorry to hear the announcement, "it is time to close."

Such prayer-meetings will make a church like a well-watered garden. They form a central magnet of attraction, whose power is felt by every individual member. They suppress all jealousies and enmities among the brethren,

"And bind in gentlest bond each heart,
All blessing, and all blest."

In such a prayer-meeting the Savior loves to be. And never will any one [illegible] the exclamation there, "behold wh[illegible] riness it is;" but each brother and [illegible] profited and pleased, will, on returning, able to say—

> "How sweet and solemn is the place
> With Christ within the doors."

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, February 23, 1842.

Close of the Volume.

This week we send out the last num[illegible] of volume 2, and with it our unfe[illegible] gratitude to our subscribers for their [illegible]gence, and the promptness with whi[illegible] have come to the support of the R[illegible] Many of you know that we becam[illegible] sole conductor from necessity, and not [illegible] choice, and that we have conducted it under many discouragements, and we should not so much wonder if all had not been satisfied. For ourself, we have no complaint to make, but would take this occasion to express the pleasure we have felt in the co-operation of our friends in different ways. Those who have contributed to our columns may know that we have n[illegible] been insensible to the favor done us, while, at the same time, they have the satisfaction of thinking that they may hav[illegible] of service to our readers. Our c[illegible]umns will still be open for such as are a[illegible]e, and desirous to instruct or edify.

Our Patrons have our grateful ackn[illegible]edgments for the assistance they have rendered us in subscribing so freely, and paying so readily. And while we solicit their patronage for the future, we would simply say that we intend to make the paper so worthy of patronage, that for several times its price they would not do without it. From our correspondents and our exchanges, we hope to serve up some things weel[illegible], as an intellectual treat, or as a feast t[illegible] the pious soul. If we can not please [illegible]ll, we hope to displease but few.

Our agents have our thanks for the assistance rendered in obtaining s[illegible] and in collecting and remitting money. We have not asked their services as a gratuity. We hold ourselves in readiness with those with whom we have not arranged the matter, to make a reasonable compensation. We respectfully ask our agents to continue their agency, and do what they can to extend our patronage. Let all who are not subscribers have an invitation to become so.

Bi[illegible]

We have made out bills for what is due for the 1st and 2d Vols. of the Register, which we shall this week send out to most of those who are indebted. It is possible that in doing this, we have made some mistakes. If any should receive bills who are not indebted to the amount of the bill sent, or at all, we would, with pleasure, make the correction. We trust none will be offended by this course, as it is necessary for us at the close of the volume to have our accounts arranged as far as possible. W[illegible] find on examining our books tha[illegible] near $2,000 due [illegible]ns. Those who wis[illegible] make remittances can send by our agents, or by post masters, who are authorized to remit money from subscribers post free.

Volume Third.

We have sent o[illegible] our Prospectus for Vol. 3rd to our agents, and to some who have not acted for us before. If we have sent them to any that can not act for us, we would request them to hand it to some one that will make thorough work. It is important that we have returns soon as [illegible]venient. And recollec[illegible] that we as[illegible]ing as a gratuity; we a[illegible] willing [illegible] a fair compensation to th[illegible]se who as[illegible]

The Terms are [illegible] advance, or [illegible] months. There will be no addition[illegible] charge for a longer credit. We suppose as the sum is so small, that but few, if any, will need a longer credit.

The Suggestion.

One brother has informed us that he has commenced carrying into effect, in his own society, the suggestion of last week for raising money for our benevolent operations. Have others commenced? If there is a better way, let it be tried. At any rate, as christians, and stewards, of [illegible]hat God has entrusted to us, let us do wha[illegible] we can for the support of our Missiona[illegible]es, and the promotion of every thing th[illegible] has the go[illegible] of souls and the glory of God for its o[illegible]ject.

Temperance.

The cause of Total Abs[illegible] from all intoxicating liquors, is ga[illegible]ing rap[illegible] here and elsewhere. In this [illegible]ommu[illegible] several drunkards have taken [illegible] pledge, and bid fair to take their station in respectable society as useful members. The grand secret of the reform lies [illegible] taking the drunkard by the hand, and ass[illegible]sting him to gain command of himself. The drunkard is to be pitied, not despised. He is to [illegible] unfo[illegible] [illegible] to lay [illegible] his cups, [illegible] onward in his downward [illegible] or bitter reproach [illegible] keep the ball rolling [illegible] ar[illegible] [illegible]y drunkards to be s[illegible] M[illegible] 100,000 have al[illegible]y been sav[illegible] the [illegible]

Nature of the Moral Law.

The Decalogue, or what is common[illegible] [illegible] commandments, was [illegible] [illegible] on stone, and [illegible] to m[illegible] [illegible] conduct. This law [illegible]ply to all m[illegible] [illegible] is simply a [illegible] [illegible] and the cons[illegible] [illegible]on. Man sus[illegible] [illegible] and another to his [illegible] the moral law points out [illegible] duties of that rel[illegible] How s[illegible] application of the [illegible] M[illegible] the [illegible] of God [illegible] being [illegible] all its endearments. He[illegible] tible [illegible] conclusion [illegible] "T[illegible] have no other Gods [illegible] Th[illegible] nature teaches this [illegible] will be g[illegible]d. The same is equ[illegible] the 2, 3 & 4. Every man fr[illegible] tions of his own [illegible] would con[illegible] [illegible]clusion con[illegible] [illegible]ands, wh[illegible] of th[illegible] [illegible] that the [illegible] holy. If [illegible] 1st com[illegible] [illegible] taught to worship God, some time m[illegible] be d[illegible]voted to that service, but whether [illegible] should be [illegible] seventh or one [illegible] or any [illegible] was imposed [illegible] men to [illegible] 7th day [illegible] The[illegible] exception [illegible] 4th comm[illegible] as either of the others, [illegible] [illegible]ned the time, it would [illegible] moral act to violate th[illegible] as [illegible] first. Thus the first [illegible] Decalogue are founded on [illegible] man sustains to God. And so, as men sus[illegible] relation to God the[illegible] have d[illegible] and must ever [illegible] can n[illegible] on these [illegible] of the [illegible]

The [illegible] six [illegible] relations [illegible] exist among men [illegible] these m[illegible] [illegible] the 5th [illegible] instance [illegible] should [illegible] Wh[illegible] nature. Children [illegible] pendent [illegible] parents that [illegible] aid they [illegible] perish, and n[illegible] [illegible] dependent [illegible] The [illegible] existing [illegible] may be [illegible] to [illegible] They [illegible] p[illegible] that are inseparable from [illegible] is[illegible] Thus we have the conclu[illegible] s[illegible] law is the law of nature [illegible] f[illegible] the fitness [illegible] That [illegible] no more [illegible] nature's [illegible] law.

Who [illegible] that to violate the [illegible] four precepts of the Decalogue, is [illegible] against man's nature [illegible] tendencies [illegible] expose him to the [illegible] sake of He[illegible] [illegible] him [illegible] be an [illegible] is that the whole law [illegible] around man's interest [illegible] protection to his nature [illegible] law is [illegible] God [illegible] the go[illegible] no more [illegible] quirements of the law. [illegible] essence of the one are the [illegible] of the other. He [illegible] necessity [illegible] they are [illegible] in their nature and [illegible] gospel requires men to [illegible] God w[illegible] the l[illegible] The law re[illegible] no less [illegible] man to love his n[illegible] [illegible] requires the [illegible] A[illegible] Pure religion and u[illegible] before [illegible] and the F[illegible] is this, [illegible] fatherless [illegible] their affl[illegible] [illegible] ho[illegible] The [illegible] be that [illegible] moral law [illegible] that it is bind[illegible] ing in its a[illegible] all men so [illegible] them as [illegible] the relation [illegible] exist and ever [illegible] ever will [illegible] God and [illegible] between m[illegible]

A[illegible]

[illegible] of [illegible] bre[illegible] have co[illegible] Register for those w[illegible] for it themselves. W[illegible] ment so that others may do likewise if they have [illegible] that would be glad to rece[illegible] the Register.

W[illegible]at Intemperance Costs.

The [illegible]wing account we [illegible] Mr. Barker for publication [illegible] sured by Mr. B. and th[illegible]

Miss Sarah E. Carter, of Eaton Village, Madison county, aged 30 years, put an end to her life a few days since by throwing herself into a well. The jury attribute the act to temporary derangement.

William L. M'Kenzie has opened a law office in Rochester. He says—"Believing that my further interference in Canadian politics would be unavailing, and have more than fulfilled my solemn pledge to the gentleman of Lower Canada, where the revolt of 1837--8 began, and been [illegible] very severely, both in purse an[illegible] the action of the allied governm[illegible] devote myself to the study [illegible] so far as the exclusi[illegible] the bar of New Yo[illegible] to a[illegible] vocate the cause of t[illegible] the [illegible] jured."

On Monday evening, [illegible] 7 and [illegible] clock, Capt. Oliver Will[illegible] of the 6th [illegible] trict watch New York [illegible] at the hea[illegible] thirty-nine of his watch[illegible] walked bodily into the Washington T[illegible] Hall, corner of White and C[illegible] streets, and the whole forty signed the [illegible] in a body.

The great marble bu[illegible] in Wall st[illegible] erected by the United Stat[illegible] Bank [illegible] owned by the Bank of the [illegible] being split in two by means of the erection of a centre wall, and is to be hereafter occupied by the Bank of the State, and the Bank of Commerce.

A newspaper is published in Rockville, Ind., one page of which advocates Whig doctrines, and another Democratic. The paper is called the "Olive Branch." It has two editors, one Whig and one democrat.

Nine new steamboats are being finished at the wharves and eighteen others are on the stocks at Pittsburg, Penn., all to be ready for the spring trade. They are mostly of light tonnage, varying from 35 to 630 tons, intending mainly for low water.

The Concord (N. H.) Patriot, in alluding to the late firm of Wells and Greene, the great American bankers, gives the following account of the surviving partner: "In 1814, John B. Greene left Concord, and went to England. In 1815, he formed the partnership with Mr. Wells, in France, of the banking house at Paris and the commercial house at Havre. About the year 1819, he married the daughter of Mr. Beasley, Consul at that time, at Havre, from the U. States. By most untiring exertions and enterprise, Mr. Greene has amassed a large fortune.—He is the son of the late Hon. Peter Greene, of this town."

On Wednesday, 200 insolvents are said to have passed the Philadelphia insolvent court, and by their discharge, it is estimated that on an average each cancelled debts to the amount of $1000, making an aggregate of $200,000.

A suit is now pending in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts against the Boston and Worcester Rail Road Company, to recover a compensation for an injury sustained by a passenger on the collision of the cars on the rail road in June, 1841. Damages are laid at $15,000.

Mr. Hart, the Government Naval Ar[illegible] tect at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, has been ordered to Lake Erie, for the purpose of constructing a War Steamer. The [illegible] work is to be done at Pittsburgh.

A negro in New Orleans, who was advertised as a runaway slave, was taken up on the 26th ult. by one of the commissi[illegible] on the levee, while the constable was recording his name and offence, the black drew a knife and severed his own throat.

Side by side, in the New York papers, appears the list of managers of the Boz ball (tickets 5 dollars) and the list of applicants in bankruptcy, and several names appear in both.

N. Y. YEARLY BILL OF MORTALITY.—According to the annual report of the N. York City Inspector, there were last year 8531 deaths—white males, 9749; black, 513. The total exceeds the number of deaths the preceding year 520. The deaths by consumption were 1470, an increase of 174 over 1840. 135 were carried off by apoplexy; 123 by congestion of the brain; 385 by dropsy of the brain; 130 by diarrhœa; 154 by dropsy; 202 by erysipelas; 266 by scarlet fever; 144 by typhus fever; 605 by inflamation of the lungs; 113 by typhus fever; 605 by inflamation of the lungs; 113 by measels; 140 by old age; 209 by small pox; 55 by accident; 43 burned and scalded; 105 by drowning; 5 killed; 1 hanged; 10 by poison; 34 by suicide; 49 by suffocation; 4 by drinking cold water; and 12 by exposure.

Common Schools in New York.—The report of the acting Superintendent (S. S. Randall,) of Common Schools in this State, was made to the Legislature on the 6th of January. There are in the State, eight hundred and twenty eight towns, and nine cities comprising sixty wards. The whole number of school districts and parts of districts in the state, is 10,886; of which 10,588 had reported on the 1st of January. The increase of districts during the year was 117. No reports have been received from 239 districts.

The average period during which the schools were kept, was eight months.

The number of children instructed in the reported districts was 603,588, over the preceding year. The number of children residing in these districts, exclusive of N. Y. City, who were not instructed in the district schools, is 21,149.

The number of volumes in the several district libraries, on the 1st of January, 1841, was 630,125. During the year 98,903 dollars have been expended in the purchase of libraries.

The productive capital of the School Fund amounted, on the 29 of September last, to 2,036,625 dollars and 68 cents, being an increase of 2,817 dollars. The unproductive capital consists of [illegible] land, which is valued at [illegible]

The reven[illegible] last fiscal [illegible] an appro[illegible] come of the United States [illegible] 165,000 dollars; the bala[illegible] September 1840, was 114,104 [illegible] cents; total, 375,17[illegible] dollars [illegible]

The amount paid out of the [illegible] ring the same period was [illegible] cents, leaving a balance of [illegible] cents. The whole amount [illegible] ring the same time was [illegible] all of which has been exp[illegible] dollars 78 cents.

The total expenditure for the y[illegible] estimated by the superintend[illegible] dollars 60 cents.

There are twenty-three A[illegible] State, with which is conne[illegible] for the [illegible] of s[illegible]

Out[illegible]—W[illegible] formed [illegible] hood. [illegible] outrageous assault was [illegible] William M[illegible] Jefferson [illegible] Va. He [illegible] ded in Richmond [illegible] rage, he was met wh[illegible] visit an uncle, a[illegible] Charleston, by a[illegible] Crane, who stated [illegible] wished to have some co[illegible] M[illegible] that he'd [illegible] desire [illegible] have no inte[illegible] Crane drew a pistol, fir[illegible] down, a[illegible] passing through his body [illegible] young [illegible] steps [illegible]

It is said the[illegible] and when on his [illegible] a band of despe[illegible] to flight and s[illegible] It is hoped however [illegible] vertake him as well as the [illegible] instruments of his release.—Balt. Patriot.

Steam Battery or [illegible] for the defence of New York.—A [illegible] battery or vessel of this description [illegible] proposed to the U. S. Government by Mr. Robert L. Stevens. She is to be rendered shot and shell proof, by a series of wrought iron boiler plates, riveted togeth[illegible] placed upon each other, [illegible] 4 1-2 inches in thickness [illegible] proved sufficient [illegible] resist effectually the f[illegible] batteringcharges [illegible] distance of a yard. Her speed is to be great[illegible] than that of any vessel of war now [illegible] engine and propelling appar[illegible] that the latter, [illegible] whole engine [illegible] the enemy's [illegible] the port holes [illegible] able screens—[illegible] tons. She is to be [illegible] a peculiar [illegible] Stevens, hereto[illegible] secured from [illegible]

[illegible] a proper [illegible] for use—in actual se[illegible] not more than 150 [illegible] rigging and using anthra[illegible] in which fuel she could not be [illegible] visible by smoke or sparks, and wo[illegible] therefore attract the notice of an ene[illegible] vessel less, either by night or day, than any other vessel.—Charleston Courier.

Startling as well as Strange.—Virginia is divided by the Blue Ridge into [illegible] distinct sections, one occupied by planters with slaves, and the other mostly by an inte[illegible] of white population. A Washington correspondent says among the wonders of the d[illegible] Washington is the novel and [illegible] phenomenon presented in the n[illegible] petition from Virginia for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia! It is signed by ninety-three men in Lewi[illegible] county, w[illegible] is the most Northern part [illegible] the State—a free [illegible] district, wh[illegible] up lately with the [illegible] Northern [illegible] who have been emigrating thither from Pennsylvania.—Philadelphia Gazette.

Remains of the Steamer President.—[illegible] learn from Capt. Jepson, of the schr [illegible] kina, from the Cape de Verd Islands, that the stern boat of the ill-fated steamer President and also seve[illegible] water-casks, bearing her name, had [illegible] picked up and carried into St. Nichol[illegible] one of the [illegible] Capt. Jepson did not himself see [illegible] esting relics, (as he sailed from [illegible] and, Bonavista,) but was assu[illegible] by a respectable English gentlem[illegible] who had seen them. The latitude and longitude where they were picked up, we are unable to state. The boat, as well as the water casks, had the name President upon [illegible] This is the first trace which has been discovered of the wreck of that [illegible] ble steamer.

The Cape de Verds are situated about N. lat. 16 and W. lon. 2[illegible] If the casks and boat were picked up any where in that vicinity, they must have drifted a great distance from the place where the steamer foundered; which indeed was to be expected.—It is generally supposed that she went down during the gale which occurred on the second or third day after her departure from this port.

In connection with the above, we publish the following, from the log-book of the brig Poultney, Capt. Moult, of Baltimore, which arrived here a few days since from Smyrna: "July 21, 11 A. M. lat. 40 21 N. long. 39 16 W. from New York for Smyrna

[illegible] De Ruyter [illegible] Society will be held at [illegible] Church [illegible] day evening [illegible]

A general [illegible] our citizens is earnestly [illegible]

E. A. [illegible] Pres.

A. V. BENTLEY, Sec'y.

PROSPECTUS

OF

VOLUME III.

The 3rd Volume of the Seventh-day Baptist Register will be published [illegible] De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y. [illegible] imperial sheet, at $2 [illegible] payable in advance [illegible]

It will continue [illegible] Seventh-Day B[illegible] contend for [illegible] by them. It will [illegible] whole range [illegible] ties, and [illegible] of the d[illegible] all [illegible] those [illegible] us, we [illegible] evangelical paper [illegible] of a particular [illegible] of C[illegible] was o[illegible] umns w[illegible] open for [illegible] the doctrines advocate[illegible] bors we hope to be g[illegible] spirit of the Gospel, and if we [illegible] successful in promoting practical [illegible] induce men to love God, our highest wishes will be [illegible]

We are grateful for the approbation an[illegible] support of our read[illegible] to rece[illegible] their continued sup[illegible] will aid us in procuring [illegible] and making remittances, shall be [illegible] ded.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Liter[illegible] Science, Agriculture, and General [illegible]

THE NORTHERN LIGHT.

DEVOTED TO FRE[illegible] SION, AND TO THE

DIFFUSION OF USEFUL KN[illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS LIT[illegible]

GENERAL IN[illegible]

This publication [illegible] public for nearly [illegible] to well under [illegible] notice. [illegible]

LETTERS

Ready Pay.

GEO. W. [illegible] TTON.
WM. H. [illegible] NBY

J. M. LETTS.

W[illegible] for the patronage he has [illegible] his numerous friends and cus[illegible] to them that he has taken [illegible] Shop recently occupied by Dr [illegible] as a Druggist Store, together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call—He will as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

J. M. L. has engaged an experienced Journeyman who will pay particular attention to making up COATS, of every variety, in a neat and superior style. De Ruyter, June 23, 1841.

POETRY.

The Song of the Redeemed.

BY REV. JOHN PIERPONT.

We come ! we come, that have been held
In burning chains so long ;
We're up ! and on we come, a host
Full fifty thousand strong.
The chains we've snapped that held us round
The wine vat and the still ;
Snapped by a blow—nay by a word,
That mighty word, I will !

We come from Belial's palaces,
The tippling shops and bar ;
And as we march, those gates of hell
Feel their foundations jar.
The very ground, that oft has held
All night our throbbing head,
Knows that we're up—no more to fall,
And trembles at our tread.

From dirty den, from gutter foul,
From watch-house and from prison,
Where they, who gave the poisonous glass,
Had thrown us, have we risen ;
From garret high have hurried down,
From cellar stived and damp
Come up ; till alley, lane and street
Echo our earthquake tramp.

And on—and on—a swelling host
Of temperance men we come,
Contemning and defying all
The powers and priests of rum ;
A host redeemed, who've drawn the sword,
And sharpened up its edge,
And hewn our way through hostile ranks
To the teetotal pledge.

To God be thanks, who pours us out
Cold water from his hills,
In chrystal springs and babbling brooks,
In lakes and sparkling rills.
From these to quench our thirst we come
With freemen's shout and song,
A host already numbering more
Than fifty thousand strong.

Miscellaneous Department.

For the Register.

A Tale of 1841.

To the inhabitants of the village of E., the year 1841 was a year of great interest. It was distinguished by an unusual number of those impressive events by which a merciful God seeks to arrest the attention and affect the hearts of his thoughtless creatures. At the commencement of the year, there was nothing unusual in the state of things. It was a time of general health, business was prosperous, and we were enjoying the customary pleasures and festivities of the season. These pleasures and festivities were moderately enjoyed. The writer is not aware that they led to any open immorality, or any excessive rudeness. There was nothing to pain the heart of the Christian, but the general inattention to spiritual things. There were a few who wept in secret, and mourned together over this dangerous apathy, and God too was preparing to startle the slumbering community in a manner which none could have anticipated.

On the first day of the year, E. W., a young lady of the place, began to be unwell ; but her symptoms indicated nothing more than a severe cold. She grew rapidly worse, however, and in a few days the startling fact was announced by the unanimous voice of a council of physicians, that her disease was the small pox. Her disease was so far advanced before its nature was ascertained, that many had been exposed to the contagion. Several members of the village high school boarded in the same family ; they and others had watched with her, and most of the young ladies of the school had been by her bed-side. The whole community were of course greatly alarmed ; many had been directly exposed to the contagion, and almost none could feel sure that they had not been exposed in some degree. The schools were closed, the din of business was hushed in the streets, and the traveller turned aside, shunning to pass through the infected village. The disease made rapid work with its first victim, and in less than five days from the time when the nature of the disease was ascertaind, she was dead. Early upon the morning of the thirteenth day of the year, it was "whispered with white lips" through the village, "E. W. is dead." The news struck every heart with new terror, and all seemed to shrink from it, as if the very intelligence were charged with infection. A plain coffin was soon prepared, and four men who had previously had the disease, bore the lifeless remains of E. to the abode of the dead. It was a mild winter morning ; not a breeze was stirring, and all was so still and calm that it made us feel as though the pestilence might steal upon us more stealthily than if the loud winds were blowing ; and, as we looked from our windows to see the body of our youthful friend borne thus unattended to its "last rest," we almost feared to breathe, lest we should inhale the poison[illegible] of the pestilence. To her friends it was a painful sight to see her body borne thus to the grave, and not be permitted to follow to testify their respect, and drop [illegible] tear of affection upon her coffin as it was lowered into its dark resting-place. But to E. it was a matter of no importance— She would have slept no more sweetly, "laid in her darksome grave ;" it would have done her departed spirit no good, if the most pompous procession had followed her bier, and watered her grave with their tears.

The time had not yet come when the symptoms of the disease should be manifested in those who had received the contagion. The few succeeding days were days of painful suspense. The mother watched with the most intense anxiety every change in the complexion of her child ; the father often lifted the curls from the brow of his daughter to see if he could detect any signs of the ominous eruption ; and from many a heart went up the fervent prayer that the sword of the destroying [illegible] might be sheathed ere it fo[illegible] victim. In a few days another young lady began to feel the symptoms of the disease, and the dreadful spots began to appear, and soon another and another felt the fearful malady upon them, and many more were waiting with a painful solicitude, expecting to see the plague spots breaking out upon themselves or upon some beloved friend. By the blessing of God, however, upon the faithful and untiring efforts of the physicians to extend to all the benefits of vaccination, the contagion was prevented from spreading further than to those who had been directly exposed in the sick-room of the first victim ; and in many [illegible] the disease was entirely prevented, or its violence greatly mitigated by the more rapid operation of the vaccine disease.

At length, the alarm subsided. Business began to resume its wonted activity, schools reassembled, and the deserted sanctuaries were again opened for the worship of God. It was in the dwelling of one of the clergymen that E. W. had been living and had died ; and he with his family had for weeks been shut away, like lepers from the camp of the Hebrews. To him it was an interesting day, when his scattered flock first dared to meet him in their accustomed place of worship. To the teacher and pupils of the high school too, their first meeting was one of solemn interest. After a dispersion of three weeks, they were again assembled. They came timidly together, like a brood which some bird of prey had scattered. Many were yet absent, detained by fear, and some were still struggling in the embrace of the pestilence, which had selected most of its victims from that little flock. But all the sick seemed recovering, and the hope was indulged that they would soon return— Through the mercy of God, all save the first were restored ; and when they resumed their accustomed places in our social circles, the marks of the disease still lingering upon their countenances, we welcomed them as alive from the dead. Thus loudly in the beginning of the year, did the voice of God's providence thunder in our ears, "Prepare to meet your God ;" and scarcely had the voice begun to die away, when it was lifted again in accents hardly less emphatic. Among the physicians to whom, under God, we were so much indebted for the limited spread of the pestilence, there was one, who by many years of faithful service had made himself peculiarly dear to community, and whose skill secured the confidence of his numerous patients, and the reverence of his professional brethren. But disease was commissioned to prostrate him to whom the community had been wont to look to protect them from disease, and show them how powerless was medical skill to resist the commissioned messengers of God. A violent inflamation seized upon his lungs, and reduced him so low that his numerous medical attendants concurred in the opinion that their united skill could not save him from a speedy death. Many fervent prayers ascended for the continuance of his useful life. His life did continue beyond the expectation of all. He survived in great feebleness through the summer, and in autumn fearing to encounter the rigors of our northern winters, he embarked for St. Croix, hoping to return the next summer with comfortable health.— Since this narrative was commenced, intelligence has been received that he was suffering under an attack of pleurisy. We still hope and pray for his recovery ; but the fearful conviction forces itself upon us, that even now the warm sunshine of St. Croix may be causing the turf to grow green upon his grave. If so, the church has lost a beloved brother, the community an honored citizen.

Not long after the commencement of the sickness of the last mentioned individual, Mrs. F., the wife of a venerable deacon of the Baptist church, started in comfortable health upon a journey of only a few days. She was arrested by disease in the midst of her journey and before her family could reach her she was dead. Ver[illegible] In the midst of life we are in deat[illegible]

Other deaths occurred during the year, all of which were calculated to enforce upon us the exh[illegible] "Be ye also ready." The aged man and the youth, the matron and the infant were taken. But we pass by these, to notice two deaths wh[illegible] distinguished for their suddenn[illegible]

In the spring, a blessed rev[illegible] was enjoyed in which more [illegible] dred were hopefully conve[illegible] and with the two churches [illegible]

Of the con[illegible] the revival, was among th[illegible] who indulged a [illegible] in Christ, [illegible] united with the church [illegible] many others on the first Sabbath in [illegible] but he did no[illegible] survive till another co[illegible] ion season. He enlisted heartily [illegible] service of Chr[illegible] He was parti[illegible] engaged in the S[illegible] th school, and [illegible] last Sabbath [illegible] h he was al[illegible] present, the tears [illegible] e seen to flo[illegible] s cheeks as he [illegible] ht of his r[illegible] bility as a Sabbat[illegible] than two weeks he [illegible] the grave his spirit, we [illegible] h[illegible] Less than a year before [illegible] no had stood at the ma[illegible] altar, now his heart-stricken [illegible] nging [illegible] soon her bridal robes for [illegible] garments of widowhood, became a [illegible] monument of the instability of earthly hopes. But she and we are consoled by the thought that her husband "laid up his treasure in heaven."

Another, who united with th[illegible] May, was [illegible] C., and among [illegible] of E., probably no one co[illegible] fected with fairer pros[illegible] long and [illegible]

[illegible] useful life than [illegible] He was in all the vigor of early manhood. His erect and noble form, his dignified and manly bearing, his lofty [illegible]

[illegible] laid low in de[illegible] emn day when we assembled [illegible] tuary to attend his funeral. The [illegible] was thronged ; and there, under the sable pall, lay the lifeless body of C. Those graceful limbs, which so lately [illegible] so firm a step along the streets, [illegible] stiff and powerless ; that nobl[illegible] prostrate ; that broad manly bos[illegible] no more with the pulsations [illegible] heart was cold ; that countenan[illegible] illumined the social circle was p[illegible] the spirit which had dignified tha[illegible] given that countenance its loveliness and fled. We wept, as the choir of which he had been a member, poured on our ears the plaintive notes of music which he had loved to sing. We wept as we looked for the last time on his cold [illegible] we smiled through our tears as [illegible] on his glorified spirit. We followed the body of C. to the [illegible] on that tomb friendship strewed its [illegible] flowers, parental and fraternal affection unsealed their sacred fountains and poured forth their gushing tribute, and woman's earliest love deposited its purest offering. We turned away from the grave of C. [illegible] hearts bleeding with the rupture of [illegible] ous ties which had bound them to our beloved friend, and our thoughts dwelling upon the series of solemn events which had filled the year. N.

THE FLY AND POISONED TEA.

It is delightful to think that a God of infinite wisdom [illegible] the world [illegible] all events. [illegible] to see God's hand in all things, [illegible] we shall feel as well as say [illegible] for the best." They are the [illegible] who regard not the works of the [illegible] nor the operation of his hands.

Look [illegible] flies around [illegible] summ[illegible] How co[illegible] ber! [illegible] their [illegible] are he[illegible] on the [illegible] room [illegible] perhaps [illegible] open w[illegible] and disapp[illegible] amaz[illegible] greatness [illegible] who w[illegible] over the[illegible] ting manner in which [illegible] sults from seeming trifles [illegible] story I am going to tell you [illegible] the Poisoned Tea. A certain [illegible] had [illegible] excellent wife, was so wick[illegible] kill [illegible] ried [illegible] her in [illegible] had [illegible] fulfil[illegible] God [illegible] pair. [illegible] ge ev[illegible] towards her. He [illegible] not be [illegible] w[illegible] thing she [illegible] and at [illegible] [illegible] s mind to put poison [illegible] [illegible] son may be led to the [illegible] [illegible] yields to Satan's temptations a[illegible] c[illegible] es feelings of hatred.

After she had poured out the tea [illegible] night, he contrived to put some poison [illegible] her cup while she was attending to some [illegible] thing [illegible] W[illegible] with [illegible]

[illegible] The w[illegible] cup. She too[illegible] her cup—the pois[illegible] up, in [illegible] The man returned at [illegible] thout mistrusting the change, but [illegible] the effects of the poison [illegible]

"Did you change the cups [illegible] said [illegible] larm.

[illegible] she re[illegible]

[illegible] that G[illegible] pu[illegible] soon after [illegible]

[illegible] wise evil, even in [illegible] to punish you for [illegible]

Boston Recorder.

[illegible]UM TREMENS.

[illegible] SKETCH.

[illegible] tremens is one of th[illegible] sequences of intemp[illegible] wretched victim of u[illegible] ap[illegible] dulged to a certain [illegible] in his stimulant, his [illegible] brain [illegible] altitude [illegible] es, far [illegible] zed the [illegible] ne with s[illegible] is indescrib[illegible] rful. De[illegible] in all its Protean variet[illegible] er affe[illegible] me with such sensation[illegible] ve ex[illegible] enced when standing by [illegible] wretched ebriate, suffering with this terrible d[illegible] One case to wh[illegible] my mind [illegible] ched with ci[illegible] ances of [illegible] ire La[illegible] of exten[illegible] mber of the [illegible]

[illegible] To say [illegible] more than [illegible] praise or co[illegible]

To keep [illegible] ries, and w[illegible]

Not to [illegible] sleepy be[illegible]

To ma[illegible] and after [illegible]

[illegible] nce is [illegible]

To say a man is [illegible] subscribes to a[illegible]

To arrive [illegible] prised at a[illegible] fellow [illegible]

The s[illegible] of th[illegible] [illegible] the Archimedean lev[illegible] itical damagogues, to [illegible] well organized government [illegible] son and legit[illegible] breeze [illegible] form.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

[illegible] 2, 1842.

WORMS ! WORMS !

[illegible] ause a low [illegible]

[illegible] Ope[illegible]

[illegible] hoof-[illegible] the desk, galled [illegible] overreach, or [illegible] For which [illegible] cent for this [illegible]

WISKONSAN

[illegible] Goodrich, P. M.

Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

[illegible] TER, MADISON CO., N. Y.

BY

[illegible] BAILEY.

[illegible] village subscribers who have the [illegible] $2 25, in advance, or [illegible] of the year.

[illegible] subscribers, $2 if paid in advance [illegible] year. Subscriptions paid [illegible] authorised Agents within [illegible] receipt of the first number, [illegible] ance.

[illegible] involving facts and attend[illegible] paper, must be accompanied [illegible]

No subs[illegible] received for a less term than [illegible] months.

[illegible] subscr[illegible] ho do not give express notice [illegible] be considered as wishing to [illegible] subscription, and their paper will be [illegible] y. No paper will be discon[illegible] are paid except at the dis[illegible]

[illegible] serted on the most reason[illegible]

[illegible] communications to ensure at[illegible] to the publisher free [illegible]